The Articles of the second priuiledge deliuered to Laurence Chapman, which are to be annexed vnto the former priuiledge.

10 Item, that the merchants haue free libertie, as in their first priuiledge, to goe vnto Gilan, and all other places of his dominions, now or hereafter when occasion shall be giuen.

11 Item, if by misfortune any of their ships should breake, or fall vpon any part of his dominions on the sea coast, his subiects to helpe with all speed to saue the goods and to be deliuered to any of the sayd merchants that liueth: or otherwise to be kept in safetie vntill any of them come to demaund them.

12 Item, if any of the said merchants depart this life in any citie or towne, or on the high way, his gouernours there to see their goods safely kept, and to be deliuered to any other of them that shall demand them.

13 Item, the said merchants to take such camel-men as they themselves wil, being countrey people, and that no Rissell Wash do let or hinder them. And the said owners of the camels to bee bound to answere them such goods as they shal receiue at their hands, and the camel-men to stand to the losses of their camels or horses.

14 Item more, that the sayd Carriers do demaund no more of them, then their agreement was to pay them.

15 Item more, if they be at a pprice with any Carriers, & haue giuen earnest, the camel-men to see they keepe their promise.

16 Item, if any of the said merchants be in feare to trauel, to giue the one or more to go with them and see them in safetie with their goods, to the place they will goe vnto.

17 Item, in all places, to say, in all cities, townes or villages on the high way, his subiects to giue them honest rounge, and victuals for their money.

18 Item, the sayd merchants may in any place, where they shall thinke best, build or buy any house or houses to their owne vses. And no person to molest or trouble them, and to stand in any Carauan where they will, or shal thinke good.

The commodities which the merchants may haue by this trade into Persia are thought to be great, and may in time perhaps be greater then the Portugals trade into the East Indies, so much as by the way of Persia into England, the returne may be made euery yeere once: whereas the Portugals make the returne from Calicut but once in two yeeres, by a long and dangerous boiage all by sea: for where as the citie and Island of Ormus, lying in the gulf of Persia, is the most famous Hart towne of all East India, whither all merchandises of India are brought, the same may in shorter time and more safely be brought by land and riuers through Persia, euen vnto the Caspian sea, and from thence by the countreis of Russia or Moscouia by riuers, euen vnto the citie of Yeraslaue, and from thence by land 180 miles to Vologda, and from thence againe all by water euen vnto England.

The merchandises which be had out of Persia for the returne of wares are like of all sortes of colours, both raw and wrought. Also all maner of spices and drugs, pearles & precious stones, likewise carpets of diuers sortes, with diuers other rich merchandises. It was told me of them that came last from Persia, that there is more like brought into some one city of Persia, then is of cloth brought into the city of London. Also that one village of Armenia named Gilgat doeth carie yeerely fure hundred, and sometime a thousand mules laden with silke to Halepo in Soria of Turkie, being 4 dayes iourney from Tripoli, where the Venetians haue their continuall abiding, and send from thence silks which they returne for English karies and other clothes into all partes of Christendome.

The maner how the Christians become Busformen, and forsake their religion.

I haue noted here before that if any Christian wil become a Busforman, that is, one that hath forsaken his faith, and be a Mahumetan of their religion, they giue him many gifts, and sometime also a lining. The maner is, that when the deuill is entered into his heart to forsake his faith, he resorteth to the Soltan or gouernor of the towne, to whom he maketh protestation of his diuelish purpose. The gouernour appointeth him a horse, and one to ride before him on another horse, bearing a sword in his hand, and the Busforman bearing an arrow in his hand, and rideth in the citie, cursing his father and mother: and if euer after he returne to his owne religion, he is guilty of death, as is signified by the sword bozne before him. A yong man, a seruant of one of our merchants, because he would not abide the correction of his master for his faults, was minded to forsake his faith. But (as God would) he fell suddenly sicke and died, before he gaue himselfe to the deuill. If he had become a Busforman, he had greatly troubled the merchants: for if he would then haue said that halfe their goods had bene his, they would haue giuen credite vnto him. For the auoiding of which inconuenience, it was granted in the priuileges, that no Busforman, &c. as there appeareth. In Persia in diuers places oxen and kine beate the tents and household stuffe of the poore men of the countrey, which haue neither camels nor horses.

Of the tree which beareth Bombasin cotton, or Gossampine.

In Persia is great abundance of Bombasin cotton, & very fine: this groweth on a certaine little tree or byer, not past the height of a mans waste or little more: the tree hath a slender stalk like vnto a byer, or to a carnation gilliflowre, with very many branches, bearing on euery branch a fruit or rather a cob, growing in round forme, containing in it the cotton: and when this bud or cob commeth to the bignes of a walnut, it openeth and sheweth forth the cotton, which groweth still in bignes untill it be like a fleece of wooll as big as a mans fist, and beginneth to be loose, and then they gather it as it were the ripe fruit. The seeds of these trees are as big as pefason, and are blacke, and somewhat flat, and not round: they sowe them in plowed ground, where they grow in the fields in great abundance in many countreies in Persia, and diuers other regions.

The writing of the Persians.

A Rthur Edwards shewed me a letter of the Sophie, written in their letters backward, subscribed with the hands both of the Sophy & his Secretarie. The Sophies subscription was onely one word (his name I suppose was Shaugh) written in golden letters vpon red paper. The whole letter was also written on the same piece of red paper, being long & narrow, about y^e length of a foote, and not past three inches broad. The priuate signet of the Sophie was a round printed marke about the bignes of a roial, onely printed vpon the same paper without any ware or other seale, the letter seem so mishapen and disordered, that a man would thinke it were somewhat scribbled in maner at aduentures. Yet they say that almost euery letter with his picke or circumscore signifieth a whole word. Insomuch that in a piece of paper as big as a mans hand their writing doeth containe as much as doeth outs almost in a sheet of paper.

The fift voiage into Persia made by M. Thomas Banister, and master Geofrey Ducket, Agents for the Moscouie companie, begun from England in the yeere 1568. and continuing to the yeere 1574. following. Written by P.I. from the mouth of M. Lionel Plumtree.

 On the 3. day of July 1568. they embarked themselves at Yeraslaue, being accompanied with Lionel Plumtree, and some 12. English men more, in a Barke called the Thomas Bonauenture of the burden of 70. tunnes, taking also along with them of Russes to the number of 40. for their vse and imployments. It fell out in the way, before they came to Astracan by 40. miles, that the Nagaian Tartars, being a kind of thienish and cruel people, made an assault vpon them with 18. boates of theirs, each of them being armed, some with swords, some with speares, and some others with bowes and arrowes, and the whole number of them they discovered to be about 300. men. They for their partes, although they could haue wished a quiet voyage and iourney without blowes and violence, yet not willing to be spoiled with such Barbarians as they were, began to defend defend themselves against their assault, by means whereof a very terrible & fierce fight followed and continued hot & sharpe for two houres, wherein our men so well plaied their parts with their calivers, that they forced the Tartars to flee with the losse of 120. of them, as they were afterwards enforced by a Russe prisoner, which escaped from the Nagaians, and came to them to Astracan, at which towne they arrived the 20. of August.

In this towne of Astracan they were somewhat hindered of their iourney, and staid the space of six weekes by reason of a great army of 70000. Turkes and Tartars which came thither upon the instigation of the great Turke, hoping either to haue surpris'd it suddenly or by continuance of siege to win the same. But in the end by reason that the winter approached, as also, because they had receiued newes of a great expedition, which the Emperour of Russia was in prouiding for the defence of the said place, they were constrained to raise their siege, & to leaue the towne as they found it.

Astracan besieged by 70000. Turkes and Tartars.

Upon their departure our men had opportunity to proceed on their voyage, and vsing the occasion, they left Astracan, and came to Bilbil towards the end of October: from whence they went to Shauaran, where (as they lodged in their tentes) they were greatly molested with strange troopes of sholcaues or foxes, which were so busie with them that they tooke their meate and victuals out of their lodgings, and deuoured to the bare bones in one night a mighty wilde Boze that was sent vnto them for a present from the gouernour of the countrey.

Having staid here some three or foure daies in prouiding of cartages and other necessaries for their iourney, they departed thence and came to Shamaky, which is foure dayes iourney from the aforesayd Shauaran. In this towne of Shamaky their whole company spent out the Winter, and from thence in April folowing they tooke their iourney towards Ardouil a place of great account and much esteemed, by reason of the sepulchres of the Emperours of Persia, which for the most part lie there buried, and so is growen to bee a place of their superstitious deuotion. In this towne of Ardouil they sojourned the space of 5. or 6. moneths, finding some traffique and sales, but to no purpose, the towne being moze inhabited and frequented with gentlemen and noblemen then merchants.

The difference of religion bred great broiles in this towne whiles they remained there: for the hyether sought the destruction of the hyether, and the neereft kindred rose vp one against another, insomuch that one of their company Lionel Plumtree hath seene in one day sometimes 14. slaine in a garboile. And he being further desirous to see their maner of fight, or rather somewhat moze curious to behold, then mistrustful of their blowes, was like to haue borne a share in their bloodie tragedie, being twise wounded with their shot and arrowes, although not to the death.

At this towne the Shaw Thomas sent a messenger for our men to come to his presence at Casbin, to whom Thomas Banister failed not to goe, although master Ducket lay very sicke at Ardouil, and in such case that they almost despaired of his recouerie. Wee being come to the Shaugh was receiued and entertained of him with great fauour and speciall countenance, and had the most part of all his requests granted him, this onely excepted, that whereas he entreated a priuiledge or sufferance to transport and carry through his dominions certaine horses into India, the Shaugh seemed loth to yeeld thereunto, and yet did not altogether denie it, but referred it to some further time. As for the point of traffique, he could not make that motiō or request that was not so soone granted as it was preferred: and the Shaugh himselfe bought there of him many karkises, and made him as good payment as any man could wish, and oftentimes would send his money for the wares before the wares were deliuered, that he might be the surer of this honourable intended dealing.

One thing somewhat strange I thought good in this place to remember, that whereas hee purposed to send a great summe of money to Mecca in Arabia, for an offering to Mahomet their prophet, hee would not send any money or coyne of his owne, but sent to the English merchants to exchange his coyne for theirs, according to the value of it, yeelding this reason for the same, that the money of the merchants was gotten by good meanes, and with good consciences, and was therefore woorthie to be made for an oblation to their holy prophet, but his owne money was rather gotten by fraud, oppression and vn honest meanes, and therefore was not fit to serue for so holie a vse.

After six moneths spent in Casbin the sayde Thomas Banister departed towards the great citie of Tauris, where being arriued, he found M. Ducket well recovered of his sicknesse, whom he had left ill at Ardouil.

At this Citie the foresayd Master Ducket made sales of the English commodities, remaining there to that purpose the space of two yeeres and a halfe. And besides other kindes of merchandises of that countrey, he bought great store of gals which grow in great abundance at a place within within one dayes journey of the aforesayd Tauris.

The death of Thomas Banister and Laurence Chapman.

After this Thomas Banister departed from Tauris, and went to Shamaky to giue order for the transporting of those commodities which were bought for England. And having dispatched them away, he went thence to Arrash, a towne foure dayes iourney with camels from Shamaky for the buying of rawe silke. But there by reason of the unwholesomnesse of the aire, and corruption of the waters in the hote time of the yeere, he with Lawrence Chapman and some other English men unhappily died: which being knownen of M. Ducket, he immediately came from Tauris to Arrash, to take possession of the goods, for otherwise by the custome of the countrey, if there had bene no merchant or other friend of his to enter vpon that which he left, all had fallen into the Shaugh's hands, which goods notwithstanding could not bee recovered from the officers which had seized and sealed by the same, untill M. Ducket had bene in person with the Shaugh, and had procured his order for the deliuerie thereof.

Humphrey Green-sell burnt at Styrmus.

Lionel Plumtree, in the meane time that M. Ducket was at Casbin in sute for goods, vpon the perswasion of certaine Bogharians, made prouision for a iourney to Cathaia, with cariages and commodities, and hauing all things ready, departed secretly with a Carauan: but being gone for-wards on his way five dayes iourney, some fisey horsemen by the procurement of Humphrey Green-sell (who afterwards being at Ormus in the East Indies, was there cruelly burnt in the Inquisition by the Portugals) were sent after him in posse from Solcan Erasbec, the Shaugh's lieutenant, to fetch him backe againe, not suffering him to passe on so perillous and dangerous a iourney for feare of diuers inconueniences that might follow.

After this M. Ducket returned from Casbin to Shamaky againe, and immediately made preparation for a iourney to Cassan, being about foure dayes iourney from Shamaky, and caried with him foure mules laden with mony.

In the way of his trauel he passed through Persepolis, sometime the roiall seat of the Emperors of Persia, but now altogether ruined and defaced, whereof remaine to be scene at this day two gates onely that are distant one from the other the space of 12. miles, and some few pinnacles in the mountains and conueiances for fresh water.

The fozesaid Cassan is a towne that consisteth altogether of merchandise, and the best trade of all the land is there, being greatly frequented by the merchants of India.

Here our men bought great store of all manner of wrought likes, and some spices, and good store of Turkie stones.

The towne is much to be commended for the ciuil and good gouernment that is there vsed. An idle person is not suffered to liue amongst them.

The child that is but five yeeres old is set to some labour. No ill rule, disorder or riote by gaming or otherwise, is there permitted. Playing at Dice or Cards is by the law present death.

At this Cassan they remained about the space of tenne weekes, and then came downe againe to Skamaky, and after some time spent in diuers places of the countrey for buying of rawe silke and other commodities, they came at last to Shauaran againe, where their ship was in harbour, and then they shipped all their goods and embarked themselves also, setting sayle the eight day of May, in the yeere 1573. intending to fetch Astracan. By reason of the varietie of the windes and dangerous flats of the Caspian sea, they beat it vp and downe some 20. dayes. And the 28. day riding at anker vpon the flats, certaine Russe Cassaks, which are outlawes or banished men, hauing intelligence of their being there, and of the great wealth that they had with them, came to them with diuers boates vnder the colour of friendship, and entred their ship, but immediately they tooke their hatchets & slew diuers of the Russes that were of the ship vpon the hatchest. Whereupon master Ducket, Lionell Plumtree, William Smith, the master, a man of singular valure, and Amos Riall being vnder the Spardecke, did so well behaue themselves, that they skozed the hatchest, and slew 14. of the Cassaks gunners, and hurt and wounded about 30. more, being of them all in number 150. at the least, armed with caliuers and other weapons fit for so villainous a purpose.

M. Ducket notwithstanding and the rest aforesaid recelued diuers wounds from the enemy, and were so hurt, and withall so oppressed with the multitude and force of them, that they were at last constrained to make an agreement with the Cassaks by rendering the ship into their hands, hauing receiued first their othes (sworne by their crucifixes, not to do any further harme to their persons.

Thus the shippe being taken, and all the English grieuously hurt, the Cassaks immediately discharged the ship of them, putting them all into the ship boate with two or thre Persian targetes full of horse flesh and swines flesh, without further victuals or reliefe: they being in that case, made the best hast they could to get to Astracan: and being come to the towne, master Ducket made made great sute to the captaine to haue men and boates set out for the rescuing and reconering of the ship if it were possible: who immediately sent out his sonne with fortie boates and five hundred men to pursue the Pirats, and by good hap came to the place where they rid at anker with the ship, but by reason of their foolishnes in striking vp their drums befoze they were come neere them, the Cassaks discovering the boats, cut their gables and put out to sea, whereupon the boats not being able to folow them, returned againe to Astracan. After which, 60. boats more were lent out to pursue them againe the second time: & that second arny came to a place where they found many of those Cassaks and slew them, and found out the places where they had hid certaine parcels of their goods in the earth in the chests of the ship: all which they recouered againe for the English merchants, to the value of 5000. li. of 30. or 40. thousand pound, but all the rest the Cassaks in the ship had caried away.

In the same place they found further diuers of the Cassaks which the Englishmen had slaine, buried in the earth, and wrapt some in fortie or fifty yards of Satrin and Cassataes, and some in Turkie carpets cut & spoiled by those villanous Pirats, of whom afterwards as many as could be taken by the Persians who entirely loued the English merchants, were put to most cruell torments in all places according to their desertts.

But our men being thus spoiled of their goods, and wounded in their bodies, remained about two moneths at Astracan for their better recouerie: & hauing gotten some reasonable strength, they then prouided boates and went by the riuer of Volga to Cazan, with such goods as they had recouered from the Cassaks. From Cazan they went towards Yeraslaue, but in the way the ice intercepted them about the beginning of October, where suddenly in the night they were taken with a cruell and vehement frost, and there withall the waters so congeled, that their boates were crushed and cut in sunder with the ice, whereby they sustained both a further danger of life and losse of goods: but as much as they could preserue with much adoe, they conueyed ouer land in sleds to Vologda, and from thence sent much of it to Saint Nicholas to be laden in the ships for England.

But Gaffrey Ducket, Lionel Plumtree and Amos Riall went with some parcels to the Mosko, and there sold certaine quantities of it to the Emperour, who pitying the mightie losse that they had sustained by his owne rebellious people and subiects, bought himselfe as much as hee liked, and payed present money for the same. So that Winter being spent out in Mosko, and such wares prouided by them as serued for England, they departed to Saint Nicholas, and there embarked in the moneth of August: and hauing endured a very terrible passage in nine weekes and three dayes, with some hardnesse of victuals, contrary and furious windes, and other sea accidents, they arriued at London in the moneth of October, one thousand five hundred secentie and foure, and so made an ende of an vnsfortunate voyage: which if it had pleased God to prosper, that all things had come home as safely as they were carefully prouided, and painfully laboured for, it had proued the richest voiage and most profitable returne of commoditie, that had euer bene vndertaken by English merchants, who, notwithstanding all misfortunes, lost nothing of their principall aduenture, but onely the interest and game that might haue risen by the vse of their stocke in the meane time.

Further obseruations concerning the state of Persia, taken in the foresayd fift voyage into those partes, and written by M. Geffrey Ducket, one of the Agents employed in the same.

Hamaky is the fairest towne in all Media, and the chiefeest commoditie of that countrey is rawe silke, & the greatest plentie thereof is at a towne three dayes iourney from Shamaky called Arash: and within 3. dayes iourney of Arash is a countrey named Grosin, whose inhabitants are Christians, & are thought to be they which are other wise called Georgians: there is also much silke to be sold. The chiefe towne of that countrey is called Zegham, from whence is caried yeerely into Persia, an incredible quantitie of Wasseil nuts, all of one sort and goodnesse, and as good and thin shaled as are our Filberds. Of these are caried yeerely the quantitie of 4000. Camels laden.

Grosin of Georgia.

Of the name of the Sophy of Persia, & why he is called the Shaugh, and of other customes.

The king of Persia (whom here we call the great Sophy) is not there so called, but is called the Shaugh. It were there dangerous to call him by the name of Sophy, because that Sophy in the Persian tongue, is a begger, & it were as much as to call him, The great begger. He lieth at a towne called Casbin, which is situate in a goodly fertile valley of 3. or 4. daies iourny in length. The towne is but euil builded, and for the most part all of brick, not hardened with fire, but only dyed at the sunne, as is the most part of the building of all Persia. The king hath not come out of the compasse of his owne house in 33. or 34. yeeres, whereof the cause is not known, but as they say, it is vpon a superstition of certaine propheties to which they are greatly addicted: he is now about 80. yeeres of age, and very lusty. And to keepe him the more lusty, he hath 4. wiues alwayes, and about 300. concubines, and once in the yeere he hath all the faire maidens and wiues that may be found a great way about brought vnto him, whom he diligently peruseth, feeling them in all parts, taking such as he liketh, and putting away some of them which he hath kept before, & with them that he putteth away, he gratifieth some such as hath done him the best seruice. And if hee chance to take any mans wife, her husband is very glad thereof, and in recompense of her, oftentimes he giueth the husband one of his old stoze, whom he thankfully receiuerh.

gers are vsed.

If any stranger being a Christian shall come before him, he must put on a new paire of shoes made in that countrey, and from the place where he entreteth, there is digged as it were a causey all the way, vntil he come to the place where he shal talke with the king, who standeth alwayes aboue in a gallerie, when he talketh with any strangers: and when the stranger is departed, then is the causey cast downe, and the ground made euen againe.

Of the religion of the Persians.

Their religion is all one with the Turkes, sauing that they differ who was the right successor of Mahomet. The Turkes say that it was one Homer and his sonne Visman. But the Persians say that it was one Mortus Ali, which they would proue in this maner. They say there was a counsell called to decide the matter who should be the successor: and after they had called vpon Mahomet to reueale vnto them his will and pleasure therein, there came among them a litle Lizard, who declared that it was Mahomet's pleasure that Mortus Ali should be his successor. This Mortus Ali was a valiant man and slew Homer the Turkes prophet. He had a sword that hee fought withall, with the which hee conquered all his enemies, and killed as many as he stroke. When Mortus Ali died, there came a holy prophet, who gaue them warning that shortly there would come a white Camell, vpon the which he charged them to lay the body and sword of Mortus Ali, and to suffer the Camel to cary it whither he would. The which being performed, the said white camell caried the sword & body of Mortus Ali vnto the sea side, and the camell going a good way into the sea, was with the body & sword of Mortus Ali taken vp into heauen, for whose return they haue long looked in Persia. And for this cause the king alwayes keepeth a horse ready saddled for him, and also of late kept for him one of his owne daughters to be his wife, but she died in the yere of our Lord, 1573. And they say furthermore, y if he come not shortly, they shal be of our belief: much like the Jewes, looking for their Messias to come & reigne among them like a worldly king for euer, and deliuer them from the captiuitie which they are now in among the Christians, Turkes, and Gentiles.

The Shaugh or king of Persia is nothing in strength & power comparable vnto the Turke: for although he hath a great Dominion, yet is it nothing to be compared with the Turkes: neither hath he any great Ordnance or gunnes, or harquebusses. Notwithstanding his eldest sonne Ismael about 25. yeeres past, fought a great battell with the Turke, and slew of his armie about an hundred thousand men: who after his returne, was by his father cast into prison, and there continued vntil this day: for his father the Shaugh had him in suspition that he would haue put him downe, and haue taken the regiment vnto himselfe.

of Christ.

Their opinion of Christ is, that he was an holy man and a great Prophet, but not like vnto Mahomet: saying, that Mahomet was the last prophet by whom all things were finished, & was therefore the greatest. To proue that Christ was not Gods sonne, they say that God had neuer wife, and therefore could haue no sonne or children. They go on pilgrimage from the furthest part of Persia vnto Mecha in Arabia, and by the way they visite also the sepulchre of Christ at Ierusalem, which they now call Couch Kaly.

The most part of spices which cometh into Persia is brought from the Island of Ormus, situate in the gulf of Persia called Sinus Persicus, betweene the maine land of Persia and Arabia, &c. The Portingals touch at Ormus both in their voyage to East India and home ward againe, and from thence bring all such spices as are occupied in Persia and the regions thereabout: for of pepper they bring very small quantitie, and that at a very deare price.

The Turkes oftentimes bring pepper from Mecha in Arabia, which they sell as good cheape as

as that which is brought from Ormus. Silkes are brought from no place, but are wrought all in their owne countrey. Ormus is within two miles of the maine land of Persia, and the Portugals fetch their fresh water there, for the which they pay tribute to the Shaugh or king of Persia.

Within Persia they haue neither gold nor siluer mines, yet haue they coined money both of gold and siluer, and also other small moneys of copper. There is brought into Persia an incredible summe of Dutch dollars, which for the most part are there imployed in raw silke.

They haue few bookes and lesse learning, and are for the most part very brutish in all kind of good sciences, sauing in some kind of silke works, and in such things as pertain to the furniture of houses, in the which they are passing good.

Their lawes are as in their religion, wicked and detestable. And if any man offend the prince, he punisheth it extremely, not onely in the person that offendeth, but also in his childzen, and in as many as are of his kin. Theft and murther are often punished, yet none otherwise then pleaseth him that is ruler in the place where the offence is committed, and as the partie offending is able to make friends, or with money to redeeme his offence.

There is oftentimes great mutinie among the people in great Townes which of Mortus Ali his sonnes was greatest: insomuch that sometimes in the towne two or thier thousand people are together by the eares for the same, as I haue scene in the towne of Shamaky and Ardouil, and also in the great City of Teueris, where I haue scene a man coming from fighting, in a brauerie bringing in his hand foure or five mens heads, carrying them by the haire of the head: for although they shau their heads most commonly twise a weeke, yet leaue they a tuft of haire vpon their heads about 2. foote long. I haue enquired why they leaue the tuft of haire vpon their heads. They answer, that therby they may easiler be caried vp into heauen when they are dead.

For their religion, they haue certaine priests who are apparelled like vnto other men. They vse euery moorning and afternoone to go by to the tops of their churches, and tell there a great tale of Mahumer and Mortus Ali: and other preaching haue they none. Their Lent is after Christmas, not in abstinence from flesh onely, but from all meats and drincks, vntill the day be off the skie, but then they eate sometimes the whole night. And although it be against their religion to drinke wine, yet at night they will take great exesse thereof and be drunken. Their Lent beginneth at the new Moone, and they do not enter into it vntill they haue scene the same: neither yet doeth their Lent end, vntill they haue seen the next new Moone, although the same (through close weather) should not be seen in long time.

They haue among them certaine holy men whom they call Seres, counted holy for that they or any of their ancestors haue bene on pilgrimage at Mecha in Arabia, for whosoever goeth thither on pilgrimage to visite the sepulchre of Mahumer, both he and all his posteritie are euer after called Seres, and counted for holy men, and haue no lesse opinion of themselves. And if a man contrary one of these, he will say that he is a Saint, and therefore ought to be beleueed, and that hee cannot lie, although he lie neuer so shamefully. Thus a man may be too holy, and no pride is greater then spirituall pride of a man puffed vp with his owne opinion of holinesse. These Seres do vse to shau their heads all ouer, sauing on the sides a litle about the temples, the which they leaue vnshauen, and vse to braid the same as women do their haire, and to weare it as long as it will grow.

Euery moorning they vse to worship God, Mahumer, and Mortus Ali, & in praying turne themselves to ward the South, because Mecha lieth that way from them. When they be in trauell on the way, many of them will (as soone as the Sunne riseth) light from their horses, turning themselves to the South, and will lay their gownes before them, with their swords and beads, and so standing vp sight worship to the South: and many times in their prayers kneele downe and kisse their heads, or somewhat els that lieth before them.

The men or women doe neuer goe to make water, but they vse to take with them a pot with a spout, and after they haue made water, they flash some water vpon their priuy parts, and thus doe the women as well as the men: and this is a matter of great religion among them, and in making of water, the men do cower downe as well as the women.

When they earnestly affirme a matter, they will sweare by God, Mahumer, or Mortus Ali, and sometimes by all at ones: as thus in their owne language, saying, Olla, Mahumer, Ali. But if he will sweare by the Shaughs head, in saying Shaugham basshe, you may then beleuee him if you will.

The Shaugh keepeth a great magnificence in his court: and although sometimes in a moneth or six weekes none of his nobilitie or counsaile can see him, yet goe they daily to the court, and tary there a certaine time vntill they haue knowen his pleasure whether hee will commaund them them any thing or not. Hee is watched euery night with a thousand of his men, which are called his Curthes, who are they that hee vseth to send into the Countreys about his greatest affaires. When he sencerly any of them (if it be to the greatest of any of his nobilitie) he will obey them, although the messenger should beat any of them to death.

The Shaugh occupieth himselfe alwayes two dayes in the weeke in his Bathhouse, and when he is disposed to goe thither, he taketh with him five or sixe of his concubines, more or lesse, and one day they consume in washing, rubbing, and bathing him, and the other day in paring his nailes, and other matters. The greatest part of his life hee spendeth amongst his wiues and concubines. Hee hath now reigned about fiftie and foure yeeres, and is therefore counted a very holy man, as they euer esteeme their kings, if they haue reigned fiftie yeeres or more: for they measure the fauour of God by a mans prosperitie, or his displeasure by a mans misfortune or aduersitie. The great Turke hath this Shaugh in great reuerence, because he hath reigned king so long time.

The succession of a kingdom.

I haue sayd before that hee hath foure wiues, and as many concubines as him listeth: and if he chance to haue any children by any of his concubines, and be minded that any of those children shall inherite after him, then when one of his wiues dieth, the concubine whom hee so fauoureth, hee maketh one of his wiues, and the childe whom hee so loueth best, he ordaineth to bee king after him.

Circumcision.

What I heard of the maner of their mariages, for offending of honest consciences and chaste eares, I may not commit to writing: their fasting I haue declared before. They vse circumcision vnto children of seuen yeeres of age, as do the Turkes.

Their houses and maner of eating.

Their houses (as I haue said) are for the most part made of bricke, not burned but only dried in the Sunne: In their houses they haue but litle furniture of household stuffe, except it be their carpets and some copper worke: for all their kettles & dishes wherein they eate, are of copper. They eate on the ground, sitting on carpets crosse legged as do Tailors. There is no man so simple but he sitteth on a carpet better or worse, and the whole house or roume wherein he sitteth is wholly couered with carpets. Their houses are all with flat roofes couered with earth: and in the Sommer time they lie vpon them all night.

Bondmen and bondwomen.

They haue many bond seruants both men and women. Bondmen and bondwomen, is one of the best kind of merchandise that any man may bring. When they buy any maydes or yong women, they vse to feeble them in all partes, as with us men doe horses: when one hath bought a yong woman, if he like her, he will keepe her for his owne vse as long as him listeth, and then selleth her to an other, who doeth the like with her. So that one woman is sometimes sold in the space of foure or five yeeres, twelue, or twentic times. If a man keepe a bondwoman for his owne vse, and if hee find her to be false to him, and giue her body to any other, he may kill her if he will.

Women bought & sold, and let to hire.

When a merchant or trauceller commeth to any towne where he intendeth to tary any time, he hireth a woman, or sometimes 2. or 3. during his abode there. And when he commeth to an other towne, he doeth the like in the same also: for there they vse to put out their women to hire, as wee do here hackney horses.

Abundance of oyle issuing out of the ground.

There is a very great riuer which runneth through the plaine of Iauar, which falleth into the Caspian sea, by a towne called Bachu, neere vnto which towne is a strange thing to behold. For there issueth out of the ground a marueilous quantitie of oyle, which oyle they fetch from the uttermost bounds of all Persia: it serueth all the countrey to burne in their houses.

Oleum Petroleum.

This oyle is blacke, and is called Nefie: they vse to cary it throughout all the Countrey vpon kine & asses, of which you shall oftentimes meet with foure or five hundred in a company. There is also by the said towne of Bachu another kind of oyle which is white and very precious: and is supposed to be the same that here is called Petroleum. There is also not far from Shamaky, a thing like vnto tarre, and issueth out of the ground, whereof we haue made the ppoofe, that in our ships it serueth well in the stead of tarre.

Two sorts of kine.

In Persia are kine of two sorts: the one like vnto ours in these partes: the other are marueilous euill fauoured, with great bones and very leane, and but litle haire vpon them: their milke is walowish sweete: they are like vnto them which are spoken of in the Scripture, which in the dreame of Pharaos signified the seuen deare yeeres: for a leaner or more euill fauoured beast can no man see.

Foxes in great plenty.

In the countrey of Shiruan (sometime called Media) if you chance to lie in the fields neere vnto any village, as the twilight beginneth, you shall haue about you two or thre hundred foxes, which make a marueilous wawling or howling: and if you looke not well to your victuals, it shall scape them hardly but they will haue part with you.

The

The Caspian sea doeth neither ebbe nor flowe, except sometimes by rages of wind it swelleth by very high: the water is very salt, notwithstanding, the quantitie of water that falleth out of the great river of Volga maketh the water fresh at the least twentie leagues into the sea. The Caspian sea is marvellous full of fish, but no kind of monstrous fish, as farre as I could understand, yet hath it sundry sortes of fishes which are not in these parts of the world.

The mutton there is good, and the sheepe great, hauing very great rumpes with much fat upon them.

Rice and mutton is their chiefe victuall.

The copy of a letter sent to the Emperour of Moscouie, by Christopher Hodsdon and William Burrough, Anno 1570.

Most mightie Emperour, &c. Whereas Sir William Garrard and his fellowship the company of English merchants, this last Winter sent hither to the Narue three ships laden with merchandise, which was left here, and with it Christopher Hodsdon one of the sayd fellowship, and their chiefe doer in this place, who when hee came first hither, and vntill such time as hee had dispatched those ships from hence, was in hope of goods to lade twelue or thirteene sailes of good ships, against this shipping, wherefore he wrote vnto the sayd Sir William Garrard and his companie to send hither this spring the sayd number of thirteene ships. And because that in their comming hither wee found the freebooters on the sea, and supposing this yeere that they would be very strong, he therefore gaue the said Sir William and his Companie aduise to furnish the sayd number of ships so strongly, as they should bee able to withstand the force of the freebooters: whereupon they haue according to his aduise sent this yeere thirteene good ships together well furnished with men and munition, and all other necessities for the warres, of which 13. ships William Burrough one of the said fellowship is captaine generall, vnto whom there was giuen in charge, that if hee met with any the Daoske freebooters, or whatsoeuer robbers and thieues that are enimies to your highnesse, he should doe his best to appprehend and take them. It so hapned that the tenth day of this moneth the sayd William with his flecte, met with five ships of the freebooters nere vnto an Island called Turtee, which is about 50. versts from Narue, vnto which freebooters he with his flecte gaue chase, and tooke of them the Admirall, wherein were left but three men, the rest were fled to shoie in their boats amongst the woods vpon Turtee, on which ship he set fire and burnt her. He also tooke foure moze of those ships which are now here, and one ship escaped him: out of which foure ships some of the men fled in their boats and so escaped, others were slaine in fight, and some of them when they saw they could not escape, cast themselves willingly into the Sea and were drowned. So that in these five ships were left but 83. men.

The said Wil. Borough when he came hither to Narue, finding here Christopher Hodsdon afozenamed, both the said Christopher and William together, in the name of Sir William Garrard and the rest of their whole companie and fellowship, did present vnto your highnesse of those freebooters taken by our ships 83. men, which we deliuered here vnto Knez Voiuoda, the 13. of this moneth. One man of those freebooters we haue kept by vs, whose name is Haunce Snarke a captaine. And the cause why we haue done it is this: When wee should haue deliuered him with the rest of his felowes vnto the Voiuodas officers, there were of our Englishmen moze then 50. which fell on their knees vnto vs, requesting that he might be reserued in the ship, and caried back into England: and the cause why they so earnestly intreated for him, is, that some of those our Englishmen had bene taken with freebooters, and by his meanes had their liues saued, with great fauour beides, which they found at his hands. Wherefore if it please your highnesse to permit it, we will cary him home with vs into England, wherein we request your maiesties fauour: notwithstanding what you commaund of him shalbe obserued.

We haue also sent our seruant to your highnesse with such bestellings and wrytings as wee found in those shippes: whereby your Maiestie may see by whom, and in what order they were set out, and what they pretended, which wrytings wee haue commended vnto Knez Yorue your Maiesties Voiuoda at Plesco, by our seruant. And haue requested his furtherance for the safe deliuerie of them to your maiesties hands: which wrytings when you haue perused, we desire that they may be returned vnto vs by this our seruant, as speedily as may bee: for these ships which we now haue here will be soone dispatched from hence, for that we haue not goods to lade aboue the halfe of them. And the cause is, we haue this winter (by your maiesties order) bene kept from traffiquing to the companies great losse. But hoping your maiestie will hereafter haue consideration thereof, and that we may haue free libertie to traffique in all partes of your maiesties Countreies, according to the priuiledge giuen vnto vs, we pray for your maiesties health, with prosperous successe to the pleasure of God. From Nauie the 15. of Iuly, Anno 1570.

Your Maiesties most humble and obedient,
Christopher Houdson. William Berough.

A letter of Richard Vscombe to M. Henrie Lane, touching the burning of the Citie of Mosco by the Crimme Tartar: written in Rose Island the 5. day of

After Lane I haue me commended vnto you. The 27. of Iuly I arriued here with the Magdalene, and the same day and houre did the Swallow and Harry arriue here also. At our comming I found master Proctor here, by whom wee vnderstand very heauie newes. The Mosco is burnt euery sticke by the Crimme the 24. day of May last, and an innumerable number of people: and in the English house was smothered Thomas Southam, Tofild, Wauerley, Greenes wife and children, two children of Rafe, & more to the number of 25. persons were stifled in our Beere seller: and yet in the same seller was Rafe, his wife, Iohn Browne, and Iohn Clarke preserved, which was wonderfull. And there went into that seller master Glouer and master Rowley also: but because the heate was so great, they came to oorth againe with much perill, so that a boy at their heeles was taken with the fire, yet they escaped blindfold into another seller, and there, as Gods will was, they were preserved. The Emperour fled out of the citie, and many of his people were caried away by the Crimme Tartar: to wit, all the yong people, the old they would not meddle with, but let them alone, and so with exceeding much spoile and infinite prisoners, they returned home againe. What with the Crimme on the one side, and with his crueltie on the other, he hath but few people left. Commend me to mistress Lane your wife, and to M. Locke, and to all our friends.

Yours to command, Richard Vscombe.

A note of the proceeding of M. Anthonie Jenkinson, Ambassadour from the Queenes most excellent Maiesie, to the Emperour of Russia, from the time of his arriual there, being the 26. of Iuly 1571. vntill his departure from thence the 23. of Iuly 1572.

He said 26. day I arriued with the two good ships called the Swallow and the Harry in safetie, at the Baie of S. Nicholas in Russia aforesayd, and landed at Rose Island, from whence immediately I sent away my interppeter Daniel Siluester in post towards the Court, being then at the Mosco, whereby his maiestie might as well bee aduertised of my arriual in his Dominions, as also to know his highnesse pleasure for my further access. And remaining at the sayd Island two or three dayes, to haue conference with your Agent about your affaires, I did well perceiue by the wordes of the sayd Agent and others your seruants, that I was entred into great perill and danger of my life: for they reported to mee that they heard said at the Mosco, that the princes displeasure was such against me, that if euer I came into his countrey againe, I should loose my head, with other wordes of discouragement. Whereat I was not a little dismayd, not knowing whether it were best for me to proceed forwarde, or to returne home againe with the ships for the safeguard of my life. But calling to mind mine innocencie and good meaning, and knowing my selfe not to haue offended his Maiesie any manner of wayes either in word or deed, or by making former promises not performed, heretofore by mine enemies falsly surmised: and being desirous to come to the triall thereof, whereby to iustifie my true dealings, and to repproue my sayd enemies as well here as there, who haue not ceased of late by vntrue reports to impute the cause of the sayd Emperours displeasure towards you to proceed of my dealings, and promises made to him at my last being with him (although by his letters to the Queenes Maiesie, and by his owne wordes to me the contrary doeth appeare) I determined with my selfe rather to put my life into his hands, & by the prouidence of God to prosecute the charge committed vnto me, then to returne home in vaine, discouraged with the wordes of such, who had rather that I had taried at home, then to be sent ouer with such credite, whereby I might sift out their euil doings, the onely cause of your losse,

Wherefore,

Wherefore, leaving the said ships the nine and twentieth day of the moneth, I departed from the sea-side, and the first of August arrived at Colmogro, where I remained attending the returne of my said messenger with order from his Maestie.

But all the Countrey being soze visited by the hand of God with the plague, passage in euery place was shut by, that none might passe in paine of death: My messenger being eight hundredeth miles vpon his way, was stayed, and kept at a towne called Shasko, and might not bee suffered to goe any further, neither yet to returne backe againe, or sende vnto me: by meanes whereof in the space of foure moneths, I could neither heare nor know what was become of him, in which time my said messenger found meanes to aduertise the Gouvernour of the Citie of Vologda, as well of his stay, as of the cause of his comming thither, who sent him word that it was not possible to passe any neerer the Prince without further order from his Maestie, who was gone to the warres against the Sweethens, and that he would aduertise his highnesse so soone as he might conueniently: And so my said messenger was forced to remaine there still without answer. During which time of his stay through the great death (as aforesaid,) I found meanes to send another messenger, with a guide by an vnknown way through wildernesse, a thousand miles about, thinking that way he should passe without let: but it prooued contrary, for likewise hee being passed a great part of his tourney, fell into the handes of a watch, and escaped very hardly, that hee and his guide with their horses had not bene burnt, according to the lawe provided for such as would seeke to passe by indirect wayes, and many haue felt the smart thereof, which had not wherewith to buy out the paine: neither could that messenger returne backe vnto me.

And thus was I kept without answer or order from his Maestie, and remained at the saide Colmogro, vntill the 18. of January following, neither hauing a Gentleman to safegard me, nor lodging appointed me, nor allowance of victuals according to the Countrey fashion for Ambassadors, which argued his grievous displeasure towards our nation. And the people of the Countrey perceiuing the same, vsed towards mee and my company some discourtesies: but about the 28. day aforesaid, the plague ceased, and the passages being opened, there came order from his Maestie that I should haue posse horses, and bee suffered to depart from Colmogro to goe to a Citie called Peraslau neere to the Court, his Maestie being newly returned from the said warres. And I arrived at the said Peraslau the 3. of February, where I remained vnder the charge of a gentleman, hauing then a house appointed me, & allowance of victuals, but so straitly kept, that none of our nation or other might come or sende vnto me, nor I to them. And the 14. of March following, I was sent for to the Court, and being within thre miles of the same, a posse was sent to the Gentleman which had charge of me, to returne backe againe with mee to the said Peraslau, and to remaine there vntill his Maesties further pleasure, wherewith I was much dismayed, and marueiled what that sudden change ment, and the rather, because it was a troublesome time, and his Maestie much disquieted through the ill successe of his affaires, (as I did vnderstand.) And the twentieth of the same, I was sent for againe to the Court, and the 23. I came before his Maestie, who caused mee to kisse his hande, and gaue gracious audience vnto my Oracion, gratefully receiuing and accepting the Queenes Maesties princely letters, and her present, in the presence of all his nobilitie. After I had finished my Oracion, too long here to rehearse, and deliuered her highnesse letters, and present (as aforesaid) the Emperour sitting in royall estate stood vp and said, Now doth Queene Elizabeth my sister, is she in health: to whom I answered, God doth blesse her Maestie with health, and peace, and doeth with the like vnto thee Lord, her louing brother. Then his Maestie sitting downe againe, commaunded all his nobilitie and others to depart, and auoyde the chamber, leaving the chiefe Secretarie, and one other of the Counsell, and willing me to approach neere vnto him with my Interpreter, said vnto me these words.

Anthony, the last time thou wast with vs heere, wee did commit vnto thee our trustie and secret Message, to be declared vnto the Queenes Maestie herselfe thy Distresse at thy comming home, and did expect thy comming vnto vs againe at the time wee appointed, with a full answer of the same from her highnesse. And in the meane time there came vnto vs at severall times thre messengers, the one called Manly, the other George Middleton, and Edward Goodman, by the way of the Narue about the Merchants affaires: to whom wee sent our messenger to know whether thou Anthony, were returned home in safetie, and when thou shouldst returne vnto vs againe: but those messengers could tell vs nothing, and did miscall, and abuse with euil words, both our messenger and thee, wherewith wee were much offended. And vnderstanding that the said Goodman had letters about him, we caused him to be searched, with whom were found many letters, wherein was writtten much against our Princely estate, and that in our Empire were many vnlawfull things done, wherewith we were much grieved, & would suffer none of those rude messengers to haue access vnto vs: and shortly after wee were informed that one Thomas

Randolfe

Randolfe was come into our Dominions by the way of Dwina, Ambassadour from the Queene, and we sent a Gentleman to meete and conduct him to our Citie of Mosco, at which time we looked that thou shouldest haue returned vnto vs againe. And the said Thomas being arrived at our said Citie, wee sent vnto him diuers times, that hee should come and conferre with our Counsell, whereby we might vnderstand the cause of his coming, looking for answere of those our princely affaires committed vnto thee. But hee refused to come to our said Counsell: wherefore, and for that our said Citie was visited with plague, the said Thomas was the longer kept from our presence. Which being ceased, forthwith wee gaue him access and audience, but all his talke with vs was about Merchants affaires, and nothing touching ours. Wee knowe that Merchants matters are to bee heard, for that they are the stay of our Princely treasures: But first Princes affaires are to be established, and then Merchants. After this the said Thomas Randolfe was with vs at our Citie of Vologda, and wee dealt with him about our Princely affaires, whereby amitie betwixt the Queenes Maiestie and vs might bee established for euer, and matters were agreed and concluded betwixt your Ambassadour and vs, and thereupon wee sent our Ambassadour into England with him to ende the same: but our Ambassadour returned vnto vs againe, without finishing our said affaires, contrary to our expectation, and the agreement betwixt vs, and your said Ambassadour.

Thus when his Maiestie had made a long discourse, I humbly beseeched his highnesse to heare me graciously, and to giue me leaue to speake without offence, and to beleene those wordes to be true which I should speake. Which he graunted, and these were my wordes.

Most noble and famous Prince, the message which thy highnesse did sende by mee vnto the Queene her most excellent Maiestie touching thy Princely and secret affaires, immediately, and so soone as I came home, I did declare both secretly and truly vnto the Queenes Maiestie her selfe, word for word, as thou Lord diddest commaund mee. Which her highnesse did willingly heare and accept, and being mindefull thereof, and willing to answere the same, the next shipping after, her Maiestie did sende vnto thee, Lord, her highnesse Ambassadour Thomas Randolfe, whose approued wisdom and fidelitie was vnto her Maiestie well known, and therefore thought meete to bee sent to so worthy a Prince, who had Commission not onely to treat with thy Maiestie of Merchants affaires, but also of those thy Princely and secret affaires committed vnto mee. And the cause (most gracious Prince) that I was not sent againe, was, for that I was imployed in seruice vpon the Seas against the Queenes Maiesties enemies, and was not returned home at such time as Master Thomas Randolfe departed with the Shippes, to come into thy Maiesties Countrey; otherwise I had bene sent. And whereas thy Maiestie saith, that Thomas Randolfe would not treat with thy Counsell of the matters of his Legation, hee did (Lord) therein according to his Commission: which was: First to deale with thy Maiestie thy selfe, which order is commonly used among all Princes, when they send their Ambassadors about matters of great waight. And whereas the said Thomas is charged that hee agreed and concluded vpon matters at the same time, and promised the same should bee performed by the Queene her Maiestie: Whereupon (Lord) thou diddest send thy Ambassadour with him into England, for answere thereof: It may please thy Maiestie to vnderstand, that as the said Thomas Randolfe deeth confesse, that in deede hee had talke with thy highnesse, and counsell diuers times about princely affaires: euen so hee denieth that euer hee did agree, conclude, or make any promise in any condition or order, as is alleaged, otherwise then it should please the Queene her Maiestie to like of at his returne home, which hee did iustifie to thy highnes Ambassadors his face in England. Wherefore, most mighty Prince, it doth well appeare, that either thy Ambassadors did vntruly enforme thy Maiestie, or els thy princely minde, and the true meaning of the Queenes highnes her Ambassadors, for want of a good Interpreter, was not well vnderstood: and how thankefully the Queene her Maiestie did receiue thy highnes commendations, and letters sent by thy Maiesties Ambassadors, and how graciously shee gaue him audience sundry times, blingh in with such honour in all points for thy sake, Lord, her louing brother, as the like was neuer shewed to any Ambassadors in our Realme, and how honourably with full answere in all things, her Maiestie dismissed him, when hee had finished all thy princely affaires (as it seemed) to his owne contentation, it may well appeare by a true certificate lately sent with her highnes letter vnto thee Lord, by her messenger Robert Beatt, and her Maiestie did suppose that chat thy Ambassadors would haue made report accordingly, and that by him thy highnes would haue bene satisfied in all things: otherwise she would haue sent her Maiesties Ambassadors with him vnto thee Lord againe. But now her highnes perceiuing that thy Maiestie is not fully satisfied in thy Princely affaires, neither by Thomas Randolfe, her highnes Ambassadors, nor by thine owne Ambassadors Andrea Sauin, nor yet by her Maiesties letter sent by the said Andrea: and alfo vnderstanding thy great grieſe and diſpleaſure towarde ſir William Garret, and his company, merchants traffiking in thy Maieſties dominions, hath thought good to ſend mee at this preſent vnto thee Lord Emperour, and great duke, as wel with her highneſſe ſul mind, touching thy princely affaires, as alſo to know the iuſt cauſe of thy Maieſties ſaid diſpleaſure towarde the ſaid company of merchants: and hath commanded me to anſwere to all things in their behalfe, and according to their true meanings. For her highneſſe doth ſuppoſe thy Maieſties indignation to proceede rather vpon the euill, and vntue reports of thy late Ambaſſador in England, and of ſuch wicked perſons of our nation reſident here in thy highneſſe dominions, rebels to her Maieſtie, and their Councel, then of any iuſt deſerts of the ſaid merchants, who neuer willingly deſerued thy highneſſe diſpleaſure, but rather ſauour in all their doings and meanings. And ſince the firſt time of their traffiking in thy Maieſties dominions, which is now nineteene yerres, the ſaid merchants haue bene, and are alwayes ready and willing truly to ſerue thy highneſſe of all things meete for thy Treſurie, in time of peace and of warre in deſpite of all thy enemies: although the Princes of the Eaſt Seas were agreed to ſtoppe the ſound, and the way to the Narue, and haue brought, and do bring from time to time ſuch commoditie to thee, Lord, as her Maieſtie doeth not ſuffer to be tranſported forth of her Realme to no other Prince of the world. And what great loſſes the ſaid ſir William Garret, with his company hath ſuſtained of late yerres in this trade, as well by Shipwracke, as by falſe ſeruants it is maniſeſtly knowen: and what ſeruice the ſaid companies Ships did vnto thy Maieſtie againſt thy enemies, two yerres paſt in going to the Narue, when they fought with the king of Poles ſhippes Freebooters, and burnt the ſame and ſlew the people, and as many as were taken aliue deliuered vnto thy Captaine at the Narue. I truſt thy highneſſe doth not forget. Wherefore moſt mighty prince, the premies conſidered, the Queene her moſt excellent Maieſtie thy louing ſiſter, doeth requeſt thy highneſſe to reſtoze the ſaid ſir William Garret with his company into thy princely ſauour againe, with their priuiledges for free traffique with thy accuſtomed goodnes and iuſtice, to be miniſtered vnto them throughout all thy Maieſties dominions, as aforetime: and that the ſame may be ſignified by thy Princely letters, directed to thy officers in all places, any thy highneſſe commaundement or reſtraint to the contrary notwithstanding. And further that it will pleaſe thy Maieſtie, not to giue credite to falſe reports, and vntue ſuggeſtions of ſuch as are enemies, and ſuch as neither would haue mutuall amitie to continue betwixt your Maieſties, nor yet entercouſe betwixt your countries. And ſuch rebels of our nation, as Raſe Rutter, and others which Ipe lurking here in thy highneſſe dominions, ſeeking to ſolue diſſentions betwixt your Maieſties by falſe ſurmises, ſpending away their maſters goods riotouſly, and will not come home to giue by their accomplices, aduancing themſelues to be merchants, and able to ſerue thy highneſſe of all things fit for thy treſurie, whereas indeed they be of no credite, nor able of themſelues to do thy Maieſtie any ſeruice at all: the Queeneſs highneſſe requeſt is, that it would pleaſe thy Maieſtie to commaund that ſuch perſons may be deliuered vnto me to be caried home, leaſt by their remainyng here, and hauing practiſes and friendſhip with ſuch as be not thy highneſſe friends, their euill doing might be a cauſe hereafter to withdraue thy goodnes from ſir William Garret and his company, who haue true meaning in all their doings, and are ready to ſerue thy highneſſe at all times, vſing many other words to the aduancement of your credits, and the diſgracing of your enemies, and ſo I ended for that time.

Then ſayd his Maieſtie, We haue heard you, and will conſider of all things further, when wee haue read the Queene our ſiſters letters: to whom I anſwered, that I ſuppoſed his Maieſtie ſhould by thoſe letters vnderſtand her highneſſe full minde to his contentation, and what wanted in writing, I had credite to accompliſh in word. Wherewith his Maieſtie ſeemed to be wel pleaſed, and commaunded me to ſit downe. And after paſſing a while, his Maieſtie ſaid theſe words vnto me, It is now a time which we ſpend in faſting, and praying, being the weeke befoze Eaſter, and for that we will ſhortly depart from hence, towarde our borders of Nouogrod, wee can not giue you anſwere, nor your diſpatch here, but you ſhall goe from hence, and tary vs vpon the way, where wee will ſhortly come, and then you ſhall knowe our pleaſure, and haue your diſpatch. And ſo I was diſmiſſed to my lodging, and the ſame day I had a dinner ready dreſt ſent me from his Maieſtie, with great ſtoze of drinckes, of diuers ſorts, and the next day following, being the foure and twentieth of March aforeſayde, the chiefe Secretary to his Maieſty, ſent vnto mee a Gentleman, to ſignifie vnto mee, that the Emperours Maieſties pleaſure was, I ſhould immediatly depart towarde a Citie, called Orwer, thre hundred miles from the aforeſaid Sloboda, and there to tary his highneſſe comming vnto a place called Starys, thre ſcore miles from the ſayd Orwer.

Then I ſent my Interpreter to the chiefe Secretary, requeſting him to further, and ſhew his ſauour vnto our ſaide merchants in their lutes, which they ſhould haue occaſion to moue in my abſence:

seence: who sent me word againe, that they should be wel assured of his friendship, and furtherance in all their lutes. And forthwith post hoyses were sent me, with a Gentleman to conduct me. And so departing from the said Sloboda, I arrived at the said Otwer, the 28. of March aforesaid, where I remained til the eight of May following. Then I was sent for to come unto his Maiestie, to the said Starys, where I arrived the tenth of the same, and the twelfth of the same I was appointed to come to the chiefe Secretary, who at our meeting said unto me these words.

Our Lord Emperoz, and great Duke, hath not onely perused the Queene her highnes letters sent by you, and thereby doeth perceiue her minde, as well touching their princely affaires, as also her earnest request in the merchants behalfe, but also hath well pondered your words. And therefore his Maiesties pleasure is, that you let me vnderstand what lutes you haue to moue in the merchants behalfe, or otherwise, for that to morrowe you shall haue access againe vnto his highnes, and shall haue full answer in all things, with your dispatch away.

Then after long conference had with him of diuers matters, I gaue him in writing certaine brieue articles of requests, which I had drawn out ready, as followeth:

1 First the Queenes Maiestie her request is, that it would please the Emperors highnesse to let me know the iust cause of his great displeasure fallen vpon sir William Garrard, & his company, who neuer deserued the same, to their knowledge.

2 Also that it would please his highnes not to giue credite vnto false and untrue reports, by such as seek to sow dissention, and breake friendship betwixt the Queenes highnesse, and his Maiestie.

3 Also that it would please his Maiestie to receiue the said sir William Garrard, with his company into his fauour againe, and to restore them to their former priuiledges and liberties, for free traffike in, and through, and out of al his Maiesties dominions, in as ample maner as aforesaid, according to his princely letters of priuiledge, and accustomed goodnes.

4 Also it would please his highnes to graunt, that the said company of merchants may haue iustice of all his subiects, as well for money owing vnto them, as other their griefes and iniuries, throughout al his dominions suffered since the time of his displeasure, during which time, the merchants were forced by seuerer iustice to answer to al mens demands, but theirs could not be heard.

5 Also that his Maiestie would vnderstand, that much debts are owing to the said merchants, by diuers of his Nobilitie, whereof part are in durance, and some executed, and the said merchants know not howe to be paid, and answered the same, except his highnes pittie their case, and commaund some order to be taken therein.

6 Also it would please his highnes to commaund that the saide merchants may be payde all such summe or summes of money as are owing, and due vnto them by his Maiestie, for wares, as well English, as Shamaki, taken into his highnes treasury by his officers in sundry places, the long forbearing whereof hath bene, and is great hinderance to the said company of merchants.

7 Also it would please his Maiestie to vnderstand, that at this present time there are in Persia of English merchants, Thomas Banister, and Geoffrey Ducker, with their company, & goods, ready to come into his Maiesties countrey of Astracan, and would haue come the last yeere, but that the ship, without merchants and mariners appointed to goe for them, were stayed at Astracan by his highnes Captaine there, to the great hinderance of the said merchants. Wherefore it may now please his Maiestie to direct his princely letters vnto his Capitaines and rulers, both at Astracan and Cazan, not onely to suffer our people, as well merchants as mariners, quietly and freely to passe and repasse with their shippes, barkes, or other vessels downe the riuer Volga, and ouer the Mare Caspium, to fetch the sayd English merchants, with their company and goods, out of the sayd Persia, into his Maiesties dominions, but also that it would please his highnes straightly to commaund, that when the sayd Thomas Banister, and Geoffrey Ducker, with their charge, shall arrive at the sayd Astracan, his Maiesties Captaine there, and in all other places vpon the riuer Volga, shall so ayde and assist the sayd merchants, as they may be safely conducted out of the danger of the Crimmes, and other their enemies.

8 Also it may please his highnes to vnderstand, that lately our merchants comming from Shamaki, haue bene ill vsed by his Maiesties Customers, both at Astracan and Cazan, at both which places they were forced to pay custome for their wares, although they solde no part thereof, but brought the same into his highnesse treasury at Sloboda: and the sayd Customers did not only exact, and take much more custome then was due by his Maiesties lawes, but also for want of present money, tooke wares much exceeding their exacted custome, and doe keepe the same as a pawnc. It may therefore please his highnes to direct his princely letters to the said Customers, to signifie vnto them his great goodnes againe restored vnto the said English merchants, as also to commaund them to send the said merchants their said goods to detained, vp to the Molco, they paying paying such custome for the same, as shall be by his Maiestie appointed.

9 Also that it would please his highnesse to grant, that sir William Garrard with his companie may establish their trade for merchandise at Colmogro in Dwina, and that such wares as shall be brought out of our Countrey fit for his treasure might be looked upon, and received by his officers there: and that his Maiesties people trafficking with our merchants may bring downe their commodities to the saide Colmogro, by meanes whereof the saide English merchants auoyding great troubles and charges; in transporting their goods so farre, and into so many places of his dominions, may sell the same better cheape, to the benefite of his Maiesties subiects.

10 Also if it seemed good to his highnes, that the whole trade likewise from Persia, Boghar, and all other those Countreys beyond the Mare Caspium, might be established at Astracan, the ancient Parte towne in times past, which would be both for the great honour and profite of his Maiesty, and subiects, as I am well able to pprooue, if it will please his highnesse to appoint any of his counsell to talke with me therein.

11 Also forasmuch as it pleased his Maiestie, immediately after the burning of the Mosco, to command that the said English merchants should giue in a note into his Treasury, for their losses sustained by the said fire, which was done by William Rowly, then chiefe Agent for sir William Garrard and his company, and the particulars in the same note consumed with the said fire did amount to the summe of 10000. rubbles and aboue: It may please his highnes of his accustomed goodnes and great clemencie to consider of the same, and to giue the said company so much as shall seeme good vnto his Maiestie, towards their said losses.

12 Also that it will please his highnesse to vnderstand that the Queenes most excellent Maiestie, at the earnest sute and request of Andrea Sauin his Maiesties Ambassadour, did not onely pardon and forgiue Thomas Glouer his great and grieuous offences towards her highnesse committed, onely for his Maiesties sake, but also commanded sir William Garrard with his company, to deale fauourably with the said Glouer in his accomptes, to whom he was indebted greatly, and being their seruant, detained their goods in his hands a long time: whereupon the said sir William Garrard with his company counted with the said Glouer, and ended all things euen to his saide contentation, and was found to be debter to the said company 4000. rubbles and aboue, and bound himselfe both by his solemne othe, and his hand-writing, to pay the same immediately after his returne into Russia with the said Andrea Sauin, vnto Nicholas Proctor chiefe Agent there, for the said company of merchants. But although it is now twoyceres past, since the said agreement, and that the said Nicholas hath diuers and sundry times requested the said money of the said Thomas, yet will he not pay the same debt, but maketh delay from time to time, allcading that his Maiestie oweth him a great summe of money, without the payment whereof he cannot be able to pay the said merchants his due debt long forborne, to their great hinderance. In consideration of the premises, It may please his highnesse to giue order that the said Glouer may be payd, and that he may discharge his debt to the said company of merchants, and the rather for that hee found such mercie and fauour in England, onely for his Maiesties sake.

13 Also forasmuch as Ralfe Rutter a rebell to the Queenes Maiestie, and an enemy to his Countrey, and to sir William Garrard and his company, hath of long time remained here, liuing of the spoiles and goods of the said merchants, which he wrongfully detained in his handes, riotously spending the same, during the time that he was their seruant, and would not come home when he was sent for, and also for that the Queenes Maiestie both vnderstand, that the said Ralfe, with other his adherents, doe seeke by all false meanes to sowe dissention, and breake amitie betwixt their Maiesties, and to ouerthrowe the trade of the said merchants: Her highnes request is, that the said Ralfe with his complices may be deliuered vnto me, to be caried home, and none other of her Maiesties subiects, not being of the societie of the said Sir William Garrard and his company, to be suffered to traffike within his highnes dominions, but to be deliuered to their Agent to bee sent home: for that the said merchants with great charges and losses, both by shipwracke, and riotous seruants, did first finde out this trade, and haue continued the same these 19. yeeres, to their great hinderance.

14 Also whereas diuers masters and artificers of our Nation are here in his Maiesties seruice, and do finde themselves grieved that they cannot haue licence to depart home into their native Countrey at their will and pleasure: the Queenes Maiesties request is, according to her highnes writing in that behalfe, that not onely it will please his Maiestie to permitt and suffer such artificers here resident in the seruice of his highnes, to haue free libertie to depart, and go home with me, if they request the same, but also all other the like, which shall come hereafter to serue his Maiesty, to haue free libertie to depart likewise, without any let or stay.

15 Also it may please his Maiesty to vnderstand that during the time of my long being at Colmogro, Colmogro, attending his highnesse pleasure for my further accesse, I with my company haue not onely bene ill vsed and intreated there, and likewise the merchants there, by one Besson Myselfe his Maiesties chiefe officer, who hath dishonoured me, and smitten my people, and oweth the saide merchants much money, and will not pay them: but also the saide Besson hath spoken wordes of dishonour against the Queenes Maiestie. Wherefore it may please his highnesse to send downe with me to Colmogro, a Gentleman, as well chiefly to search forth his euil behauiour towards her Maiestie, as towards me her highnesse Ambassadoz, and to punish him accordingly: and also that it would please his Maiestie to sende downe his letter of iustice, by vertue whereof the saide Besson may be forced to pay all such money as he oweth to the sayd merchants, without delay.

These articles being deliuered to the chiefe Secretary, as aforesayde, and our talke ended for that time, I departed to my lodging, accompanied with certaine Gentlemen. The next day, being the 13. of May aforesaid, I had warning early in the morning, to prepare my selfe to be at the Court, betwixt the houres of 10. and 11. of the clocke, where I should haue accesse vnto the presence of the Prince, as well to receiue answer of all things, as to bee dismissed to goe home. At which houres I was sent for to the Court, and brought into the Chamber of presence, where his Maiestie did sit apparelled most sumptuously, with a riche Crowne vpon his head, garnished with many pretious stones, his eldest sonne sitting by him, and many of his Nobilitie about him: and after my duetie done, his highnesse commanded me to approach very nere vnto him, and sayde vnto me these wordes.

Anthony, the Queene our louing sister her letters wee haue caused to be translated, and doe well vnderstand the same, and of all things as well therein contained, as by worde of mouth by you to vs declared wee haue well considered, and doe perceiue that our secret message vnto you committed, was done truly according to our minde (although wee were aduertised to the contrary) and now wee are by you fully satisfied. And when wee did sende our Ambassadour into England, about those our great and waighy affaires, to conclude the same with the Queene our sister, our Ambassadour coulde ende nothing for want of such assurance as was requisite in princely affaires, according to the maner of all Countreys, but was dismissed vnto vs againe, with letters of small effect, touching the same, and no Ambassadour sent with him from the Queene: which caused vs to thinke, that our princely affaires were set aside, and little regarded, wherewith wee were at that time much grieved: for the which cause, and for the euil behauiour of your merchants, resident in our dominions (who haue diuers wayes transgressed and broken our lawes, liuing wilfully in al their doings) we did lay our heauie displeasure vpon them, and did take away from them their priuiledge, commaunding that the same throughout all our dominions, should be voyd, and of none effect: and therupon did write to the Queene our sister, touching our griefes.

And now her highnesse hath sent vnto vs againe, you her Ambassadour, with her louing letters, and full minde, which we doe thankfully receiue, and are thereby fully satisfied. And for that our princely, and secret affaires were not finished to our contentation at our time appointed, according to our expectation, we doe now leaue of all those matters, and set them aside for the time, because our minde is now otherwise changed, but hereafter when occasion shall moue vs to the like, wee will then talke of those matters againe. And for that it hath pleased the Queene our louing sister, to sende vnto vs at this present, and doeth desire to continue in friendship with vs for euer (which wee doe gratefully accept, and willingly agree to the same) wee of our goodnesse for her highnesse sake, will not onely from hence forth put away, and forget all our displeasure towards the same Sir William Garrard and his company (as though they had neuer offended vs) but also will restore them to their priuiledges, and liberties, in, and throughout all our dominions, and will signifie the same by our letters, in all Townes and Cities, where the saide merchants do traffique, and we will shewe them fauour as aforesaid, if they deserue not the

the contrary, And if the Queene our sister had not sent thre Anthony vnto vs at this present, we should knoweth what we should haue done to the said merchants, or whether we would haue called back our indignation.

Then I humbly beseeched his Maiestie, to let me know the particular offences committed by the said merchants, and the offenders names, to the intent I might make report thereof, vnto the Queenes Maiestie, my mistres; accordingly, that the said offenders might receiue iust punishments for their deserts: but he said, I should not know them, because he had cleerely remitted all offences: and further, that it was not princely to forgive, and after to accuse the parties, where-by her Maiesties displeasure might fall vpon them at home, notwithstanding I did after understand some part thereof, by other meanes.

Then his Maiestie proceeding in talke, said: As touching the articles of request, concerning the merchants affaires, which you did yesterday deliuer vnto our Secretary, we haue not onely read the same our selfe, but also haue appointed our said Secretary to declare vnto you our mind; and answer to the same. And for that we are now vpon our iourney towards our borders, and will depart from hence shortly, we will dismisse you to y^e Queene our louing sister, your mistres, with our letters, & full mind by word of mouth, touching all your requests, & will send a gentleman one of our household with you to safeconduct you to your ships: and of our goodnes will giue you victuals, boates, men, and post horses, so many as you shall neede. And therewith his Maiestie standing vp, and putting off his cappe, said vnto me these words. Doe our hearty commendations vnto our louing sister, Queene Elizabeth, vnto whom we wish long life, with happie success: and therewith his highnes extended his hand to me to kisse, and commended his sonne, sitting by him, to send the like commendations, which he did, whose handlike wise I kissed. And then his Maiestie caused me to sit downe; and commaunded wine and drincke of diuers sorts to be brought, whereof he gaue me to drinke with his owne hand, and so after I departed.

Then the next day, being the 14 of May aforesaid, I was sent for to come to the chief Secretary, & one other of the counsell with him, who at our meeting said vnto me these words: We are appointed by the Emperors his maiesty, to giue you answer from his highnes, touching your requests deliuered in writing, which his Maiestie himselfe hath perused, & answered as followeth.

1 To the first request it is answered, that all his Maiesties griefes and displeasure (now put away from the merchants) did grow, because the Queenes Maiestie did not accomplish and endue with his ambassador, his secreete and waighiey affaires, according to his expert action, and the promise made by Thomas Randolph, at his being here: and also of the ill behaviour of your merchants resident here in our Countrey, as his Maiestie did himselfe yesterday declare vnto you.

2 To the second, his Maiesty willet you to vnderstand, that he hath not, nor will not hereafter be moued to breake friendship with the Queenes Maiesty, without good and iust cause.

3 To the thirde, you are answered by the Emperors Maiestie himselfe, that his great goodnes and fauour againe vnto the merchants shall be restored, and the same to be knownen by his gracious letters of priuilege now againe granted.

4 To the fourth, his maiesty hath commaunded, that your merchants here resident shall exhorte, and put in writing vnto me his Maiesties Secretarie, all their griefes, and complaints; as well for debts, as other iniuries offered them since the time of his highnes displeasure, and they shall haue iustice truly ministred throughout all his Maiesties dominions without delay.

5 To the fifth, his maiesty doth not know of any debts due vnto the merchants, by any of his Noblemen, as is allaged: and whether it be true or no, he knoweth not: the truth whereof must be tried out, and thereupon answer to be giuen: and hereafter his maiesty would not haue the merchants to trust his people with too much.

6 To the sixth, it is answered, that his maiesty hath commaunded search to be made what money is owing to the merchants, for wares receiued into his treasury, as in the article: (the most of the booke of accompt being burnt in the Mosco) and such as is due, & found meete to be paid, shall be paid forthwith to the merchants, their factors or seruants, which shall come for the same. And for payment of the rest, his maiesties further pleasure shall be signified hereafter.

7 To the 7 his Maiesties answer is, that letters shall be written forthwith to his capitaines of Astracan, and Cazan, and other his officers, vpon the riuer Volga, to whom it appertaineth, not onely to suffer your people, both merchants, & mariners, to passe with their ships, or barkes, from Astracan, ouer the Mare caspium, to fetch Thomas Baniller, and Geofrey Ducker, with their company, and goods out of Persia, but also when they shall arriue within his Maiesties dominions, to aide and assist them, and see them safely conducted by the riuer Volga, from danger of enemies.

8 To the eight, his maiesty hath commaunded letters to be written to the Customers, both of Astracan and Cazan, to make restitution to the English merchants of their goods so detained by them for custome, & to take custome for the same, according to his Maiesties letters of priuilege.

 9 10 To the ninth and tenth articles, his Maiestie will consider of those matters, and hereafter will signifie his princely pleasure therein.

11 To the eleuenth, as touching an inuentorie giuen into the treasury, what goods the merchants had buent in the Mosco, in their houses there, his Maiesties pleasure was to vnderstande the same, to the intent he might know the losses of all strangers at that present, but not to make restitution, for that it was Gods doing, and not the Emperours.

12 To the twelfth, concerning Thomas Glouer, his Maiestie was enformed by his Ambassador of the Queenes great mercy and clemencie towards the said Thomas, for his sake, which his Highnes received in good part, but what agreement or dealings was betwixt the said Sir William Garrard, & his company, & the said Glouer, or what he doth owe vnto the said merchants, his Maiestie doth not know. And as for the money which the said Thomas saith is owing vnto him by the Emperour, his Maiesties pleasure is, that so much as shall be found due, & growing vpon wares deliuered vnto the treasury, out of the time of his Maiesties displeasure, shall be paid forthwith to the said Thomas, and the rest is forfeited vnto his Maiestie, and taken for a fine, as appertaining to Rutter and Benner, accompted traitors vnto his Highnes, during the time of his displeasure.

13 To the thirteenth article, concerning Rutter to be deliuered vnto you, to be caried home, the answer was, that as his Maiestie will not detain any English man in his Countrey, that is willing to go home, according to the the Queenes request: euen so will he not force any to depart, that is willing to tary with him. Yet his Highnes, to satisfie the Queenes Maiesties request, is contented at this present to send the said Ralfe Rutter home with you, and hath commanded that a letter shall be writtten vnto his chiefe officer at the Mosco, to send the said Rutter away with speed, that he may be with you at Vologda, by the fine of May, without faile: and touching the rest of your request in the said article, his Maiesties pleasure shall be signified in the letters of priuilege, granted to the said merchants.

14 To the fourteenth, touching artificers, his Maiestie will accomplish all the Queenes Highnes request in that behalfe, and now at this present doth licence such and so many to depart to their native countrey as are willing to goe.

15 To the 15, touching Besson Messeriuicy, the Emperours maiestie is much offended with him, and will send down a gentleman with you to inquire of his ill behauior, as wel for speaking of vnder decent words against the Queenes maiestie as you haue alleaged, as also against you, and the merchants for his outrages mentioned in the article, & the said Besson being found guilty, to be imprisoned & punished by seuerer iustice accordingly, and after to put in sureties to answer the Emperours high displeasure, or els to be brought vpon like a prisoner by the said gentleman to answer his offences before his Maiestie. And his highnes doth request that the Queenes highnes would doe the like vpon Middleton and Manlie her messengers sent thither two yeres past, and of all others for their ill behauiour towards his maiestie, as may appeare by letters sent by Daniel Siluester from his highnes, lest by the bad demeanour of such lewd persons, the amity and friendship betwixt their maiesties might be diminished.

16 To the 16 and last article, touching the coyne brought into the Emperours dominions by the merchants, his maiestie doth greatly commend them for so wel doing, and hath commanded to giue you a letter forthwith in their behalf, directed to his officers of Diuina, to suffer the said merchants to sell their coyne, by measure great or small at their pleasure without custome.

Thus I receiued a full answer from his maiestie by his chiefe Secretarie & one other of his counsel, to the 16 articles afoze rehearsed, by me exhibited in writing touching your affaires, with his letter also sent by me to the Queenes maiestie. Which being done, I requested that the new letters of priuilege granted by his highnes vnto you might be forthwith dispatched, to the intent I might carie the same with me. Also I requested that such money due to you, which it had pleased his maiestie to command to be payd, might be deliuered to me in your behalfe.

Touching the letters of priuilege, the Secretary answered me, it is not possible you can haue them with you, for they must be first writtten and shewed vnto the Emperour, and then thence to be writtten of one tenour according to your request, which cannot be done with speede, for that his maiesties pleasure is, you shall depart this night before him, who remooueth himselfe to morrow towards Nouogrod: but without faile the said letters shall be dispatched vpon the way, and sent after you with speede to Colmogro. And as touching the money which you require, it cannot be paid here because we haue not the bookes of accounts, for want whereof we know not what to paie: wherfore the best is that you send one of the merchants after the Emperour to Nouogrod, & let him repaire vnto me there, and without faile I will paie all such money as shall be appointed by his maiestie to be paid after the bookes seene.

But forasmuch as there was none of your seruants with me at that present (although I had earnestly writtten vnto your Agent Nicholas Proctor by Richard Pingle one of your owne seruants, one moneth before my comming to Starices, where I had my dispatch, that he should not faile to come himselfe, or send one of your seruants to mee hither, to follow all such suites as I should commence in your behalfe, which he neglected to doe to your great hinderance) I requested the said Secretarie that I might leaue Daniel my interpreter with him, aswell for the receipt of money, as for the speedy dispatch of the letters of priuiledge, but it would not be granted in any wise that I should leaue any of mine own companie behind me, and thereupon I did take my leaue with full dispatch, and departed to my lodging, and forthwith there came vnto me a gentleman who had charge as well to conduct me, and provide boates, men, post horses and victuals for me all the way to the sea side, being a thousand and thre hundred miles, as also to doe iudice of the sayd Bessone, as aforesaid. And he said vnto me, the Emperours pleasure is, that you shall presently depart from hence, and I am appointed to goe with you. And that night I departed from the said Starices, being the fourteenth of May aforesaid. And passing a great part of my iourney, I arriued at the citie of Vologda the last of the sayd May, where I remained fve daies as well expecting a messenger to bring vnto me the new letters of priuiledge, as the coming of Rutter, whom the Emperours maiestie himselfe commanded before my face should be sent vnto me without faile, and I did see the letters writtten to the chiefe officers of the Mosco for the same. Neuerthelesse the said Rutter did not come, neither could I heare of him after, nor know the sudden cause of his stay contrary to the princes owne word and meaning, as I suppose. But I could not help the matter being farre from the prince, neither could I tell how to haue redresse, because by absence I could not complaine. Notwithstanding I vled my indeuour, and sent a messenger Iohn Norton one of your seruants from Vologda to Nouogrod, where the court then lay, expressely with letters, as well to aduertise his maiestie that the sayd Rutter was not sent vnto me according to his highnes commandement & order, as also about the dispatch of the said letters of priuiledge and receipt of your money, with straight charge that he should in any wise returne vnto me againe before the departing of the ships. And the first day of June I departed from the said Vologda by water towards Colmogro, where I arriued the 21 of June aforesaid, and remained there vntill the 23 of July, looking for the said Iohn Norton to haue returned vnto me in at that time, which had respit full enough in that space both to go to the court to dispatch his busines, and to haue returned againe vnto me, but he came not, for it was otherwise determined before his going, as I did after vnderstand, and can moze at large by woide of mouth declare vnto your worthships the occasion thereof.

Neuerthelesse, I am well assured before this time your Agent hath receiued into his hands the sayd letters of priuiledges, and shall haue dispatch with expedition in all things touching your affaires, according to his maiesties grant by me obtained, and as he hath writtten to the Queenes maiestie at this present, wishing that as now by my going the Emperour hath withdrawen his grieuous displeasure from you, and restored you againe into his fauour, so your Agent and others your seruants there resident may behaue, & endeuour themselves to keepe & augment the same, whose euill doings haue bene the onely occasion of his indignation now remitted.

The names of such countries as I Anthony Ienkinson haue trauelled vnto, from the second of October 1546, at which time I made my first voyage out of England, vntill the yeere of our Lord 1572, when I returned last out of Russia.

First, I passed into Flanders, and trauelled through all the base countries, and from thence through Germanie, passing ouer the Alpes I trauelled into Italy, and from thence made my iourney through Piemont into France, throughout all which realme I haue thoroughly iournied. I haue also trauelled through the kingdomes of Spaine and Portingal, I haue sailed through the Leuant seas euery way, & haue bene in all the chiefe Islands within the same sea, as Rhodes, Malta, Sicilia, Cyprus, Candie, and diuers others.

I haue bene in many partes of Grecia, Morea, Achaia, and where the olde citie of Corinth stood.

I haue trauelled through a great part of Turkie, Syria, and diuers other countries in Asia minor.

I haue passed ouer the mountaines of Libanus to Damaasco, and trauelled through Samaria, Galile, Philistine or Palestine, vnto Ierusalem, and so through all the Holy land.

I haue bene in diuers places of Affrica, as Algiers, Cola, Bona, Tripolis, the gollet within the gulfes of Tunis.

I haue sailed farre Northward within the Mare glaciale, where we haue had continuall day, and sight of the Sunne ten weekes together, and that nauigation was in Norway, Lapland, Samogitia, and other very strange places.

I haue trauelled thzough all the ample dominions of the Emperour of Russia and Moscouia, which extende from the North sea, and the confines of Norway and Lapland, euen to the Mare Caspium.

I haue bene in diuers countries neere about the Caspian sea, Gentiles, and Pa hoimans, as Cazán, Cremia, Rezan, Cheremish, Mordouiti, Vachin, Nagaia, with diuers others of strange customes and religions.

I haue sailed ouer the Caspian sea, & discouered all the regions thereabout adiacent, as Chircassi, Comul, Shascál, Shiruan, with many others.

I haue trauelled 40 daies iourney beyond the said sea, towards the Oriental India, and Cathaia, thzough diuers deserts and wilbernesses, and passed through 5 kingdomes of the Tartars, and all the land of Turkeman and Zagaray, and so to the great citie of Boghar in Bactria, not without great perils and dangers sundry times.

After all this, in An. 1562, I passed againe ouer the Caspian sea another way, and landed in Armenia, at a citie called Derbent, built by Alexander the great, & from thence trauelled through Media, Parthia, Hircania, into Persia to the court of the great Sophie called Shaw Tamasso, vnto whom I deliuered letters from the Queenes maiestie, and remained in his court 8 moneths, and returning homeward, passed thzough diuers other countries. Finally I made two voyages moze after that out of England into Russia, the one in the yeere 1566, and the other in the yeere 1571. And thus being weary and growing old, I am content to take my rest in mine owne house, chiefly comforting my selfe, in that my seruice hath bene honourably accepted and rewarded of her maiestie and the rest by whom I haue bene imployed.

A letter of Iames Alday to the Worshipfull M. Michael Lock, Agent in London for the Moscouie company, touching a trade to be established in Lappia, written 1575.

He maruelled the company do not referre to him of Lappia.

I haue in remembrance (worshipful Sir) the talke we had when I was with you, as touching the trade in Lappia: And certainly I haue somethyng maruelled that in all this time the right wor. your societie haue not giuen order that some little conference (by you, or with some other) might haue bin had with me touching those parts, considering they know (as I thinke) that I remained there one whole yere & moze, by which meanes reason would that I should haue learned somethyng. But the cause why they haue not desired to conferre with me (as I iudge) resteth only in one of these 4 causes, that is to say, either they thinke themselves so thzoughly certified of that trade, as moze neede not be spoken thereof, or that they haue no lust moze to deale that waies, or that they hold mee so vntrusty to them that they dare not open their minds, for feare or doubt, I should beare moze affectio to others then to them, & so discouer their secrets: or els they think me of so simple vnderstanding, that I am not worthy to be spoken with in these matters. To which 4 causes I answer as followeth: First, if they think themselves so thzoughly certified as moze need not to be spoken: certainly I somethyng maruel by whom it should be: for in y^e winter past there lay but 5 English persons there, v. Christopher Colt, Roger Leche, Adam Tunstall cooper, one lad, & I: for Henry Cockledge was the whole winter at Mosco. And of these persons, as touching Colt, I thinke him (if I may without offence speake my conscience) the most simple person that was there, (as touching the vnderstanding of a marchant) although indeed he tooke vpon him very much to his owne harme & others I doubt, for he vsed himselfe not like a marchant, neither shewed diligence like a worthy seriant or factor, but lay still in a den al y^e whole winter, hauing wares lying vpon his hand, which he would not imploy to any vse; although sundry waies there were that he might haue put his wares in ready money with gaine, & no great aduenture, which money would haue bin moze acceptable to the poore Lappes & fishermen at the spring, then any kind of wares: but his fond head did as he that had the talent in the Gospel, & yet he had counsel to the contrary which he disdaind, so that men perceiuing his capitious head, left not only to counsell him, but also some, in as much as they might, kept him from knowledge of the trade that might be in that countrey, the winter time, which is better peraduenture then most men think of. Wherefoze if Colt haue written or said any thing touching those countreies, it is doubtful whether it toucheth the effect or not, considering he lay still all the winter without trial of any matter. And for Henry Cockledge assuredly speaking so much as I do perfectly know, I must needs say, that he is a very honest yong man, & right carefull of his business.

sines, and in that respect worthy to be praised. But yet he being absent in the winter other then by heare say he could not learne, so that his instructions may be something doubtful. And like as of the lad nothing can be learned, so am I sure that Tunkal the Cooper hath not yet bene spoken with, so that of those parts certaine knowledg cannot as yet be learned, except by Roger Leche, of whom I confesse knowledg may be had, for indeed there is no English man living that hath like knowledg in those countries as he hath, nor that is able to do so much with the people as he may: he in the winter travailed one waies & other nere 300 miles: he of a litle made something, and learned not only the maners, conditions & customs of the people, but also he learned of all kind of commodities in those regions how they may be bought at the most advantage, that gaine may be made of them: So that I confesse, if he hath given intelligence to the right Mo: company, then have they no neede to speake with me or any other for to learne of those countries (except it be to heare mine opinion) which in truth I will alwaies open unto them. But the effect of y^e beneficial secrets of that countrey is to be inquired of him, & in mine opinion worthy to be learned, except, as in the second case, they list no more to deale that waies. To which I answered, that if they deale not that waies, & that with speede they seeke not to prevent others y^e mean to deale there, although not English men, let them then not thinke long to have any profitable trade in Russia: for the greater part of that benefit will be wiped from them, or 5 yeere to an end, as I will shew good reason, if I be demanded the question. Therefore if they will maintaine the Russia trade with advantage, then ought they to looke to this in time, and so may they keepe the Russia trade as it is, and likewise make a trade in Lappia more profitable then that, and therfore this is to be considered, rather then to prohibite Englishmen fro the trade of Vedagoba, for if they looke not to this, and that in time, they may belikened (if it might be without offence) to two dogs that strine for the bone whiles the third run away with it: and yet meane I not otherwise, but in such order, as not Englishmen only, but also Hollanders, Brabanders, & others may be instly and utterly put from the trade in Lappia, and the company to keepe the whole trades to themselves without interruption of any, to their great benefit, which I wish to them from the bottome of my heart, as ever I wished wealth to mine own person: And thereby hold me excused in the third case I write of. And for the fourth as touching my iudgement, as I confesse it is not very deepe, so I thanke God I am not bitterly without understanding (although I be pooze) & therfore peradventure holden out of reputation, yet God doth distribute his gifts as it pleaseth him: I have seen wise men pooze in my time, & foolish men rich, and some men have more knowledg then they can utter by speech, which fault was once obiected against me by a great learned man of this realme: but surely how weak soever my utterance is, my meaning is faithfull and true, and I wish in my heart to your laudable company al the gaine that may be, or els I pray the Lord God to confound me as a false dissembler. It greiveth me to see how of late they have bin brought to great charges, beating the bush, as the old terme is, & other men taking the birds: this last yere having in Lappia 2 ships, as I am partly informed, they both brought not much above 300 barrels of traine oyle, yet am I sure there was bought besides them of the Russes, Tozels, & Lappes, 1183 barrels, besides 27 barrels Cole sold to Jacob the Hollander, at two barrels for one 120thorne dozen. And yet there is a greater inconvenience springing, which if it take a litle deeper roote it will be (I feare) too hard to be pulled up, which for loue & good will (God is my witnes) I write of, wishing as to my deare friends that they should looke to it in time, if they meane to keepe the trade of Russia or Lappia. And thus loue hath compelled me to write this aduertisement, which I wish to be accepted in as good part, as I wish good will have written it.

The request of an honest merchant to a friend of his, to be advised and directed in the course of killing the Whale, as followeth. An. 1575.

I pray you please me in getting me perfect information of the matter hereunder specified.

For the provision and furniture for a shippe of 200 tunnes, to catch the Whale fish in Russia, passing from England. How many men to furnish the ship.

How many fishermen skilful to catch the Whale, & how many other officers and Coopers.

How many boats, and what fashion, and how many men in each boate.

What wages of such skilfull men and other officers, as we shall neede out of Biskay.

How many harping irons, speares, cordes, ares, hatchets, knives, and other implements for the fishing, and what sort and greatnes of them.

How many kettles, the greatnesse and maner of them, and what mettall, and whether they be set on triuers or on furnaces for boiling of the traine oyle, and others.

What quantitie of caske, and what sort of caske, and what number of hoopes and twigges, and how much thereof to be staved for the traine.

What quantitie of victuals, and what kinde of victuals for the men in all the ship for 4 moneths time.

For the common mariners and officers to gouerne the ship, we shall not neede any out of Biskae, but onely men skilful in the catching of the Whale, and ordering of the oile, and one Cooper skilfull to set vp the staued caske.

Also what other matters are requisite to be knowen, and done for the said voyage to catch the Whale, not here noted nor remembred.

These requests were thus answered, which may serue as directions for all such as shall intend the same voyage, or the like for the Whale.

A proportion for the setting forth of a ship of 200 tunne, for the killing of the Whale.

There must be 55 men who departing for Wardhouse in the moneth of April, must bee furnished with 4 kintals and a halfe of bread for euery man.

150 hogsheds of Cedar.

6 kintals of oile.

500 of Tella.

Item, gunpowder & matches for harquebushes as shalbe needfull.

Item, there must be caried from hence 5 pinnacles, fve men to strike with harping irons, two cutters of Whale, 5 coopers, & a purser or two.

A note of certaine other necessarie things belonging to the Whalefishing, receiued of master W. Burrough.

A sufficient number of pullies for tackle for the Whale.

4 furnaces to melt the Whale in.

A thousand of nailes to mend the pinnacles.

500 great nails of spikes to make their house

3 paire of bootcs great and strong, for them that shall cut the Whale.

8 calue skins to make aprons or barberans.

The deposition of M. William Burrough to certaine Interrogatories ministred vnto him concerning the Narue, Keger, &c. to what king or prince they doe appertaine and are subiect, made the 23 of Iune, 1576.

These articles seeme to haue bene ministred vpon the quarel between Alderman Bond the elder, and the Moscouie company, for his trade to the Narue without their consent.

The first Interrogatorie.

First, whether the villages or townes vulgarly called the Narue, Keger, Pechingo and Cola, and the portes of the same townes, as well at the time of the grant of the letters of priuilege uilege by the Emperour to our merchants, as also in the yeeres of our Lord, 1566, 1567, 1568, 1569, 1570, 1571, 1572, 1573, 1574, and 1575. respectiue were (as presently they be) of the iurisdiction, and subiect to the mightie prince the Emperour of Russia: and whether the saide Emperour of Russia, by all the time aforesaide, was chiefe lord and gouernour respectiue of the saide places, and so vulgarly known, had, and reputed: and whether the saide towne and places, and either of them be situated towards the North and North-east or North-west, and between the North and the East point: and be the same places whereunto by force of the saide priuilege, it is forbidden to any other subiect to haue traffike, sauing to the societie aforesaid.

To this Interrogatorie the deponent saith, that it is true that the villages, townes and places vulgarly called the Narue, Keger, Pechingo and Cola, and the portes thereof, at the time of the grant of the saide priuilege (as he iudgeth) were reputed respectiue to be vnder the iurisdiction, & subiect to the Emperour of Russia, and so from the time of the saide grant, vnto the yeere, 1566, and that in the yeeres of our Lord, 1566, 67, 68, 69, 70, 71, 72, 73, 74, and 1575. respectiue they were (as presently they be) of the iurisdiction, and subiect vnto the mightie prince the Emperour of Russia, and the same Emperour of Russia, by all the time aforesaid, was chiefe gouernour respectiue of the saide places, and so vulgarly known, had and reputed. And that all the saide places are situated from London Northwards, betweene the East and the North, and within the grant of the letters patents, and priuileges of the saide companie of merchants for the discouery of new trades, and the same places whereunto by force of the saide letters patents, it is forbidden to any other subiect to haue traffike sauing to the societie aforesaid.

The deponent's answer.

Notwithstanding the Deponent saith, that he hath heard it credibly reported by diuers, that the king of Denmarke of late yeeres, or euery yeere once, hath had one of his subiects or more by him selfe, or with his guide a Lappian, that hath at the places Cola, Keger, and diuers other places in Lappia, taken of the Lappies certain tribute or head pence, which the saide Lappies haue willingly giuen to winne fauour of the saide prince, and to liue quietly by his subiects, the people of Finmarke which border vpon their countrey, whereof Wardhouse is the strongest hold, & bordereth neere vnto them. Hee hath also heard that in the time of peace betweene the saide Emperour of Russia, and the kings of Sweden, there was yeerely for the king of Sweden one or more that came into Lappia vnto diuers places, in maner as the king of Denmarkes seruant useth to doe, and did demaund of them some tribute or duetie which they willingly paide: but since the late warres betweene the saide Emperour and king of Sweden, hee hath not heard of any thing that hath bene paide by them to the king of Sweden: such is the simplicitie of this people the Lappies, that they would rather giue tribute to all those that border vpon their countrey, then by denying it haue their ill willes.

But the trueth is, as this Deponent saith, that the saide mightie prince the Emperour of Russia is the chiefe lord and gouernour of the saide countrey of Lappia, his lawes and orders are obserued by them, hee takes toll and custome &c. of them. They are infidels, but if any of them become Christians it is after the Russe law. If there happen any controuersie betweene those people, such as cannot be ended amongst themselves, or by the Emperours deputies in that countrey, they repaire to the Mosko as their highest Court, and there haue it ended. Betweene the place specified Keger, and the confines of Finmarke aforesaid in Lappia, is the monasterie Pechingo, which are monks, and vse the Russe lawe, the chiefe or head of that abbey is alwayes appointed by the cleargie in Mosko.

Also in the yeere of our Lord 1557. the saide Deponent was at the place Keger, in the moneth of June, the 29. day being S. Peters day, at which time was a great assembly of people at a mart there, the Russes, Kerils and Lappians on the one side subiects to the saide mightie prince the Emperour of Russia, and the Norwegians or Norles and people of Finmarke subiects to the king of Denmarke on the other part, they did barter and exchange fish for other commodities. The deputie for the Russe had the chief gouernment of the saide Mart, and tooke toll of those people & were subiect to his master, and the captaine of Wardhouse had then the gouernment of the people subiect to his master the king of Denmark. He saith also, that betweene the abbey Pechingo, and the abbey of S. Nicholas in Russia, vpon the border of the saide coast of Lappia, he hath bene vpon the shore at diuers places, where fresh riuers fall into the Sea, where are commonly taken fresh salmons, all which places he doth know for certaine, that they were farmed out to the subiects of the saide Emperour, and he the saide Emperour receiued yeerely the rent for them. And further he saith that it hath bene further credibly reported vnto him, that there is not any such riuer or creek of fresh water which falleth out of the saide countrey of Lappia into the sea, between the saide abbey Pechingo, and the bay of S. Nicholas, but they are all and euery of them farmed out, and the Emperour receiueh the rent for them.

Item,

The second
rie.

Item, whether as well before, as also within the memorie of men, till the time of the graunt of the said letters patents any of the English merchants (sauiing the merchants of the said societie) subiects of this realme of England, haue commonly exercised or frequented businesse or trade in the said villages or townes called the Narue, Keger, Pechingo, and Cola, or in any of them, or in any ports or territories of the said Emperour of Russia.

The depos-nents answer.

To this Interrogatorie the Deponent answereth, that the subiects of this realme before the graunt of the said letters patents did not commonly exercise, neither frequent or trade to any of the said places called the Narue, Keger, Pechingo or Cola, or to any of them,

Certaine reasons to disswade the vse of a trade to the Narue aforesaide, by way through Sweden.

The merchandise of the Narue are grosse wares, viz. flaxe, hempe, ware, tallow and hides. The traffique at that place standeth vpon the agreement and liking of the Emperour of Russia, with the king of Sweden: for all these merchandises that are brought thither come from Plescoue, Nouogrod, and other parts of the Emperours dominions.

If or transporting those merchandises from Narue to Stockholm, or what other place shall bee thought conuenient in Sweden, it must be in vessels of those countries, which will be of smal force to resist freebooters, or any other that shall make quarell or offer violence against them.

When the goods are brought into Sweden, they must be discharged, and new laden into smaller vessels, to cary the same by riuer or lake a part of the way, and againe to be unladen and transported by land to Newles.

So as the ordinary charges for transporting of goods from Narue to Newles by way as afore said, besides the spoile by so often lading and unlading, cariage by land, and the dangers of the seas, pirates, &c. will be such as when it shall be so brought to Newles it will be as deare to the merchants in that place as it shall be worth to be sold in London, wherefore the trade that wayes cannot be profitable to our nation.

Note.

Moreover, when the goods shall be in Newles, it may bee thought doubtfull to bring it thence quickly without disliking or forcible resistance of the king of Denmarke, soasmuch as he maketh quarell, and alleageth damage vnto him in his tolles of the Sound by our trade to S. Nicholas, how much more will he now doe by this way, and with how much greater aduantage may he perforce it: The danger that may grow in our trade to Russia by way of S. Nicholas, though the displeasure that the Emperour may conceiue by our trade with the Sweden to Narue is also to be considered.

A remembrance of aduise giuen to the merchants, touching a voyage for Cola abouesaid. 1578.

Whereas you require my counsell after what order the voyage for Cola is to be set forth, I answer that I know no better way then hath bene heretofore vsed, which is after this maner. First of all we haue hired the ship by the great, giuing so much for the wearing of the tackle and the hull of the shippe, as the ship may be in bignesse: as if thee bee about the burden of an hundred tonnes, we pay fourescore pound, and so after that rate: and thereunto we doe victual the ship our selues, and doe ship all our men our selues, shipping no more men, nor giuing them more wages then we should doe if they went of a merchants voyage, for it hath bene a great helpe to our voyage hitherto, to haue our men to fish with one boate, & colling vs no more charges then it should do, if our men should lie & doe nothing sauing the charges of salt, & of lines, which is treble paid for againe. For this last yere past our men killed with one boat betwixt 9, or 10. thousand fish, which peeled to vs in money with the oile that came of it, about 15, or 16. score pounds, which is a great helpe to a voyage. And besides al this, our ship did take in so much oile and other commodities as we bestowed 100. whole clothes in. But because, as I doe suppose, it is not the vse of London to take ships to freight after that order before prescribed, neither I think that the mariners wil take such paines as our men will: Therefore my counsell is, if you thinke good, to freight some ship of Hull or Newcastle, for I am sure that you may haue them there better cheape to freight, then here at London. Besides al this, one may haue such men as wil take paines for their merchants. And furthermore when it shall please God that the ship shall returne to come to discharge at Hull, which will be the most for your profit for the sales of all such like commoditie as comes from that place, as for fish, oyle, and Salmon chiefly, hee that will seeke a better market for the sales then at Hull, he must seeke it out of England, for the like is not in England. This is the best way that I can deuise

Hull the best market of England for sale of

deuise, and most for your profite, and if you will, I will also let you downe all the commodities that are necessarie for such a voyage, and which way also that the Hollanders may within two or three yeeres be forced to leaue off the trade of Cola which may easily be done. For if my abilitie were to my will, I would vse the matter so that they should either leaue off the trade, or els carry light ships with them home againe.

A dedicatorie Epistle vnto the Queenes most excellent Maiestie, written by Master William Burrough late Comptroller of her Highnesse nauie, and annexed vnto his exact and notable mappe of Russia, briefly containing (amongst other matters) his great trauailes, obseruations, and experiments both by sea and land, especially in those Northeasterly parts.

To the most high and renowned Princeesse ELIZABETH, by the grace of God Queene of England, France and Ireland, &c.

My minde earnestly bent to the knowledge of nauigation and Hypozographie from my youth (most excellent my dread Soueraigne) hath eftsouenes beene moued by diligent studie to search out the chiefe points to them belonging: and not there with sufficed hath also sought by experience in diuers discoueries and other voyages and trauailes to practise the same. I was in the first voyage for discouerie of the partes of Russia, which begun in anno 1553. (being then sixteene yeeres of age) also in the yeere 1556. in the voyage when the coastes of Samoced and Noua Zembla, with the straighes of Vaigatz were found out: and in the yeere 1557, when the coast of Lappia, and the bay of S. Nicholas were more perfectly discouered. Since which time, by my continuall practise in the voyages made yeerely to S. Nicholas in Russia, or to the Narue, and to some other countreys also by Sea: as likewise in passing from S. Nicholas to Mosco, and from Mosco to Narue, and from thence backe againe to S. Nicholas by land, in the yeeres 1574. and 1575. (being then Agent in those countreys for the companie of English merchants for discoueries of new trades) setting downe alwayes with great care and diligence, true obseruations & notes of all those countreys, Islands, coastes of the sea, and other things requisite to the artes of Nauigation and Hypozographie: and with like diligence gathering exact notes and descriptions of the wayes, riuers, cities, towne, &c. as I passed by land: I finde my selfe sufficiently furnished to giue report vnto your Maiesty, and to make description of those 20th parts of the world in forme and maner of euery leagues distance that I haue passed & seene in all those my trauels. The places herein described, which I haue not seene and cried my selfe, I haue set downe by the best authorities that I could finde, and therein may erre with the learned Gerardus Mercator, Abraham Ortelius, and the rest: but for the maine part which is from Rochel in France hither to London, and from hence Eastward to Narue by sea, and from thence to Mosco and to S. Nicholas by land: also from hence Northwards & Northeastwards by Sea to Saint Nicholas, and to the straight of Vaigatz (first crauing humbly your highnesse pardon) I dare boldly affirme (and that I trust without suspect of arrogancie, since truly I may say it) I haue here set it open to the view, with such exactnesse and truely, and so placed euery thing aright in true latitude and longitude, (acomputing the longitudes from the meridian of London, which I place in 21. degrees) as till this time no man hath done the like: neither is any man able by learning onely, except he trauaileth, as I haue done. For as it may be truely saide of nauigation and Hypozographie, that no man can be cunning in the one which wanteth conuenient knowledge in the other: and as neither of them can be had without the helpes of Astronomie and Cosmographie, much lesse without these two groundes of all artes, Arithmetike and Geometrie: so none of the best learned in those sciences Mathematicall, without conuenient practise at the sea can make iust prooffe of the profite in them: so necessarily dependeth art and reason vpon practise and experience. Albeit there are diuers both learned and vlearned, litle or nothing experienced, which in talke of nauigation will enter deceply and speake much of and against errorrs vsed therein, when they cannot reforme them. Such also haue written therof, pretending singular great knowledge therein, and would so be accompted of, though in very deepe not worthy the name of good and sufficient pilots. To whom I thinke it shall not be amisse in defence of rules builded vpon reason, and in practise allowed, thus much to say for answer. It is so, that there are rules vsed in nauigation which are not perfectly true: among which the straight lines in sea-cardes; representing the 32. points of the compasse or windes, are not holden to be the least, but noted of such talkers for principall, to condemne the occupiers thereof for ignorant: yet hath the famous and learned Gerardus Mercator vsed them in his vniuersal mappe. But such as condemne them for false, false, and speake most against their vse cannot giue other that should serue for navigation to better purpose and effect. Experience (one of the keyes of knowledge) hath taught mee to say it. Wherein with my abilitie, together with some part of my studie, I am the rather moued (in this my plot) to make some triall vnto you maiestie: for that I perceiue that such attempts of newe discoveries (whereunto this noble Island is most aptly situated) are by your royall maintenance so willingly furthered: beseeching your highnesse so to accept of these my trauailes, as a pledge of my well willing to my countrey, and of my loyall service to your maiestie, whose healthfull happie life and reigne God continue which is Almightye. Amen.

Your Maiesties most humble subject
William Burrough.

Lizabeth by the grace of God Queene of England, France and Ireland, defender of the faith, &c. To the most noble and invincible Emperour of Persia, King of Shiruan, Gilan, Grofin, Corassian, and great governour even vnto the Indies, sendeth greeting. Most noble and invincible Prince, it is now threene peeres since, or thereabouts, wherein (after the honourable ambassade of the noble man Anthony lenkinson our welbeloued subiect, to your most noble and invincible father performed) we laboured to bring to passe by Thomas Bannister and Gesserey Ducker merchants, our subiects, that throughout all the kingdomes subiect to his empire, free power might be giuen to Will. Garrard, Thomas Osley, William Chester knights, Rowland Haiward, Lionel Ducker, William Allen, Thomas Bannister, Gesserey Ducker, Lawrence Chapman Merchants, and vnto their societie, to enter into his lands and countreys at al times when they would and could, there to exercise & vse their trade of merchandise, and from thence likewise after exchange or sale made of those wares, which they should bring with them with his like good leaue and fauour, to carie from thence those things wherewith his dominions do abound & with vs be scant. Which our petition the most noble prince your father took so thankfully and in such good part, that he not onely graunted franke and commodious leaue, as was desired: but the same he would to bee vnto them most free and beneficiall, and to haue continuance for many peeres and times. The benefite of the which his wonderfull liberality, our subiects did enioy with such humanitie & freedome as there could be no greater, till the time that by reason of wars moze and moze increasing in those partes, by the which our subiects were to make their iourney into Persia, they were debarred and shut from that voyage & traffique. The which traffique the said societie being eftsoones desirous to renew to the weale and commoditie of both our dominions they haue now sent into Persia their factozs & Agents Arthur Edwards, William Turnbull, Matthew Tailbois, Peter Gerrard merchants, with their associats, whom we beseech your invincible maiesty to entertaine with that fauour wherewith your father did imbrace Tho. Bannister & Gesserey Ducker, and to enfranchise their whole societie with that freedome, that neither they through any their misdeameanours towards your subiects, may thereof seeme vnto you (as we hope they will not) neither we our selues other wise enioy them, then with the perpetuall remembrance of your good affection towards vs, and with the like fauourable inclination of our part towards you. The matter is selfe & tract of time shall sufficiently proue the foresaid manner of traffike vnpofitable to neither of vs. For so hath one God the chiefe gouernor of all things disposed of our affaires on earth, that ech one should neede other. And as for our people & subiects of the English nation, in verie deed your maiesty shal find them made and fashioned so pliant to the performance of all duties of humanity, that it can neuer repent you to haue graunted them this franke traffike, nor shame vs to haue obtained it for them at your hands. That therefore it may please your maiesty to peeke vnto them this at our request, most earnestly we beseech you. And we (as it wel becometh a prince) if euer hereafter we may, will shew our selfe not to bee vnmindfull of so great a benefite. We wish your maiesty wel & prosperously to fare. Given at our palace of Westminster the 10. day of June, in the yere of our Lord 1579. and of our reigne the 21.

Aduertisements and reports of the 6. voyage into the parts of Persia and Media, for the companie of English merchants for the discoverie of new trades, in the yeeres 1579. 1580. and 1581. gathered out of sundrie letters writen by Christopher Burrough, seruant to the saide companie, and sent to his vnclie Master William Burrough.

First it is to be understood, that the ships for the voyage to S. Nicholas in Russia, in which the factors and merchandise for the Persian voyage were transported, departed from Grauesend the 19. of June, 1579. which arrived at S. Nicholas in Russia the 22. of July, where the factors and merchants landed, and the merchandise were discharged & laden into doshnikes, that is, barks of the countrey, to be caried from thence by the riuer vnto Vologda. And the 25. day of the said Iulie, the doshnikes departed from Rose Island by S. Nicholas by the riuer Dwina, Peremene, that is to say, in poste, by continual sailing, rowing, setting with poles, or drawing of mē, which came to Colmogro the 27. day, and departed thence the 29. of Iulie by the said riuer Dwina, and came to Vityoug (which is at the head of the riuer Dwina, and mouth of Sughano) the 9. of August, where they stayed but a small time, providing some victuals, and shifting certaine of their cassacks or barkmen, & so departed thence the same day by the riuer Sughano, and came to Torina (which is counted some what more then halfe the way from Vityoug) the 15. day, where they shifted some of their cassacks, and departed thence the same day, and came to the citie Vologda the 19. of August, where they landed their goods, and staid at that place till the 30. of the same. Having provided at Vologda, Telegas, or wagons, whercupon they laded their goods, they departed thence with the same by land towards Yeraslaue the said 30. of August at eight of the clocke in the morning, and came to the East side of the riuer Volga ouer against Yeraslaue, with 25. Telegas laden with the said goods the seuenth of September at five of the clocke afternoone. Then the three stroogs or barks provided to transport the saide goods to Astracan (where they should meete the ship that should carie the same from thence into Persia) came ouer from Yeraslaue vnto the same side of the riuer Volga, and there tooke in the said goods. And hauing prepared the said barks ready with all necessary furniture they departed with them from Yeraslaue downe the riuer of Volga on the 14. day of September at nine of the clocke in the morning, and they arrived at Niznouogrod the 17. day at three of the clocke afternoone, where they shewed the Emperors letters to passe free without paying any custome, and taried there about three houres to provide necessaries, and then departing, arrived at Cazan (or neere the same towne) on the 22. of September at five of the clock afternoone, where (throug contrarie windes, and for providing new cassacks in the places of some that there went from them) they remained till the 26. day, at what time they departed thence about two of the clocke after noone, and arrived at Tetushagorod, which is on the Crim side of Volga, and in latitude 55. degrees 22. minutes, the 28. day at ten in the forenoone, where they anchored, and remained about 3. houres, and departing thence came to Oueak, which is on the Crims side (on the Westerne side of Volga) the fift of October about five of the clocke in the morning. This place is accounted halfe the way betweene Cazan and Astracan: and heere there groweth great store of Licoris: the soile is very fruitfull: they found there apple trees, and cherrie trees. The latitude of Oueak is 51. degrees 30. minutes. At this place had bene a very faire stone castle called by the name Oueak, & adioyning to the same was a towne called by the Russes, Sodom: this towne & part of the castle (by report of the Russes) was swallowed into the earth by the iustice of God, for the wickednesse of the people that inhabited the same. There remaineth at this day to be seene a part of the ruines of the castle, and certaine tombs, wherein as it seemeth haue bin laid noble personages: for vpon a tombe stone might be perceued the forme of a horse and a man sitting on it with a bow in his hand, and arrowes girt to his side: there was a piece of a scutchion also vpon one of the stones, which had characters grauen on it, whereof some part had bene consumed with the weather, and the rest left imperfect: but by the forme of them that remained, we iudged them to be characters of Armenia: and other characters were grauen also vpon another tombe stone. Nowe they departed from Oueak the said fift of October at five of the clocke after noone, and came to Perauolok the 10. day about eleuen or twelue of the clocke that night, making no abode at that place, but passed alongst by it. This worde Perauolok in the Russe tongue doeth signifie a narrow straight or necke of land betweene two waters, and it is so called by them, because from the riuer Volga, at that place, to the riuer Don or Tanais, is counted thirty versts, or as much as a man may well trauell on foote in one day. And seuen versts beneath, vpon an Island called Tzaritsna the Emperour of Russia hath fiftie gunners all the summer time to keepe watch, called by the Tartar name Carawool. Betweene this place and Astracan are fure other Carawools or watches,

Astracan,

Peter Garrard,

The 16. of October they arrived at Astracan, with their three stroogs in safetie about nine of the clock in the morning, where they found the ship provided for the Persia voyage in good order & readinesse. The 17. day the foure pincipal factors of the company, Arthur Edwards, William Turnbull, Matthew Talbois, and Peter Garrard, were invited to dine with the chiefe diake or secretary of Astracan (Vassil Pheodorovich Shelepin) who declared then unto them the troubles that were in Media and Persia: and how the Turke with helpe of the Crims had conquered, and did possesse the greatest part of Media: also he laid before them that Winter was at hand, & if they should put out with their ship to the sea, they should bee constrained to take what hazards might happen them by wintiring in the parts of Media, or els where, for backe againe to that place there was no hope for them to returne: whereupon the said factors determined to stay there all Winter to learne further of the state of those countreys.

Ice at Astracan for foure mo-neths.

The 19. of November the winde being Northerly, there was a great frost, and much ice in the river: the next day being the 20. of November the ice stood in the river, and so continued untill Easter day.

Anno 1580.

The 22. of December departed this life John Moore the gunner of the ship.

Thursday the 7. of January betweene 8. and 9. of the clocke at night there appeared a crosse proceeding from the moone, with two galles at the South and North end thereof.

The 6. of January being Twelke day (which they call Chreshenia) the Russes of Astracan brake a hole in the ice upon the river Volga, & hallowed the water with great solemnity according to the manner of their countrey, at which time all the souldiers of the towne shot off their small pieces upon the ice, and likewise to gratifie the captaine of the castel being a Duke, whose name is Pheodor Michalovich Troiocouria, who stood hard by the ship, beholding them as they were on the river, was shot off all the ordinance of our ship being 15. pieces, v. z. 2. faulcons, 2. faulconets, 4. fowlers, 4. fowlers chambers, and 3. other small pieces made for the stroogs to shoote halfe-stones, and afterwards the great ordinance of the castle was shot off.

On the 31. of January there happened a great eclipse of the moone, which began about 12. of the clocke at night, and continued before she was cleare an houre and a halfe by estimation, which ended the first of February about halfe an houre past one in the morning: she was wholly darkned by the space of halfe an houre.

The 26. of February the towne of Nagay Tartars, called the Yourt, which is within 3. quarters of a mile of the castle of Astracan, by casualty was set on fire about 10. of the clock at night, & continued burning til midnight, whereby one halfe of it was burnt, and much cattell destroyed. The Nagayes that inhabit that towne, are the Emperour of Russia his vassals: It is supposed there are of them inhabiting that place of men, women, and childzen, the number of seven thousand. That night the Allarum was made in the castle and towne of Astracan. The captaine thereof had all his souldiers in very good order and readinesse, being of them in number two thousand gunners and cassaks, that is to say, a thousand gunners, which are accounted meere souldiers, and are not put to any other service then the use of their pieces, watch, &c. as souldiers which alwaies keepe the castle, and the cassaks also bring their pieces, do keepe the towne, and are commonly set to all kind of labours.

Astracan situate upon an Island.

The 7. of March 1580, the Nagayes and Crims came before Astracan to the number of one thousand foure hundred horsemen, which incamped round about, but the neerest of them were two Russes versts and a halfe off from the castle and town: some of them lay on the Crims side of Volga, and some on the Nagay side, but none of them came vpon the Island that Astracan standeth on. It was said that two of the pince of the Crims his somes were amongst them. They sent a messenger on the eight day to the captain of Astracan, to signifie that they would come and visit him: who answered, he was ready to receive them: and taking a great shot or bullet in his hand, willed the messenger to tel them that they should not want of that geare, so long as it would last. The ninth day newes was brought that the Crims determined to assault the towne or castle, and were making of sagots of reede, to bring with them for that purpose. The tenth day two Russes that were captives, and two of the Tartars bondmen ranne away from the Nagayes, and came into Astracan. The same day word was brought to the Duke of two Nagayes which were scene at Gostinehouse, supposed to be spies, but were gone againe from thence before they were suspected.

ſuſpected. This Goſtine houſe is a place a litle without the towne where the Tiſſiks (or Perſian merchants) do uſually remaine with their merchandize. The 11. day the ſaid Nagayes, and one more with them, came againe to that houſe early in the morning, where they were taken by the Ruſſes, and brought to the capitaine of the caſtle, and being examined, confeſſed that their coming was onely to ſeek two of their bondmen that were runne from them: whereupon their bondmen were delivred to them: which ſavour the ſaid capitaine commonly ſheweth if they be net Ruſſies, and they were ſet at libertie. The 13. day they brake up their camps, and marched to the Northwards into the countrey of Nagay.

The 17. of April the variation of the compaſſe obſerved in Aſtracan was 13. deg. 40. min. from North to Weſt. This ſpring there came newes to Aſtracan that the queene of Perſia (the king being blind) had bene with a great army againſt the Turks that were left to poſſeſſe Media, and had given them a great overthrow: yet notwithstanding Derbent, & the greateſt part of Media were ſtill poſſeſſed and kept by the Turks. The factors of the company conſulting upon their affaires, determined to leaue at Aſtracan the one halfe of their goods with Arthur Edwards, and with the other halfe the other three factors would proceed in the ſhip on their purpoſed voyage to the coaſt of Media, to ſee what might be done there: where, if they could not find ſafe traffike, they determined to proceed to the coaſt of Gilan, which is a province nere the Caſpian ſea bordering upon Perſia: and thereupon appointed the ſaid goods to be laden aboard the ſhip, and tooke into her alſo ſome merchandize of Tiſſiks or Perſian merchants.

The variation of the compaſſe in Aſtracan was

The 29. of April Amos Riall, and Anthony Marſh, the companies ſervants were ſent from Aſtracan by the ſaid factors, by the river Volga to Yeraſlaue, with letters of adviſe to be ſent for England, and had order for ſtaying the goods in Ruſſia that ſhould come that yeere out of England for mainteining the trade purpoſed for Perſia, untill further triall were made what might be done in thoſe parts.

The firſt day of May in the morning, having the ſhippe in readineſſe to depart, the factors invited the duke Phedor Micalouich Proioroorow, and the principall ſecretary Vaſili Phedorouich Shelepin, with other of the chiefeſt about the duke to a banquet aboard the ſhip, where they were intertained to their good liking, and at their departure was ſhot off all the ordinance of the ſhip, and about nine of the clocke at night the ſame day they weyed anchor, and departed with their ſhip from Aſtracan, and being but litle winde, towed her with the boat about three verſts, & then anchored, having with them a pauos or lighter to helpe them at the flats. The ſecond day at foure of the clocke in the morning they weyed & plyed downe the river Volga toward the Caſpian ſea. The ſeventh of May in the morning they paſſed by a tree that ſtandeth on the left hand of the river as they went downe, which is called Mahomet Agarch, or Mahomet's tree, & about three verſts further, that is to ſay, to the Southwards of the ſaid tree is a place called Vchoog, that is to ſay, the Ruſſe weare: (but Ochoog is the name of a weare in the Tartar tongue) where are certain cotages, and the Emperour hath lying at that place certaine gunners to gard his fiſhermen that keepe the weare. This Vchoog is counted from Aſtracan 60. verſts: they proceeded downe the ſaid river without ſtaying at the Vchoog. The ninth and tenth dayes they met with ſhoald water, and were forced to lighten their ſhip by the pauos: the 11. day they ſent backe to the Vchoog for another pauos: This day by miſchance the ſhippe was bilged on the grapnell of the pauos, whereby the company had ſuſtained great loſſes, if the chiefeſt part of their goods had not bene layde into the pauos: for notwithstanding their pumping with 3. pumps, heaving out water with buckets, and all the beſt ſhifts they could make, the ſhippe was halfe full of water ere the leake could be found and ſtopt. The 12. day the pauos came to them from the Vchoog, whereby they lighted the ſhippe of all the goods. The 13. day in the morning there came to them a ſmall boat, ſent by the capitaine of Aſtracan, to learne whether the ſhippe were at ſea cleere of the flats. The 15. day by great induſtry and trauell they got their ſhip cleare off the ſhoales and flats, wherewith they had bene troubled from the ninth day untill then: they were forced to paſſe their ſhippe in three foot water or leſſe. The 16. day they came to the Chetera Bougori, or Iſland of foure Hillocks, which are counted forty verſts from Vchoog, and are the furtheſt land towards the ſea. The 17. day they bare off into the ſea, and being about twelue verſts from the foure hillocks, riding in five foot and a halfe water about eleven of the clocke in the forenoone, they tooke their goods out of the pauoſes into the ſhippe, and filled their ſhippe with all things neceſſary. The 18. day in the morning about ſeven of the clock, the pauoſes being diſcharged departed away towards Aſtracan, the winde then at Southeaſt, they rood ſtill with the ſhippe, and obſerving the elevation of the pole at that place, found it to be 45. degrees 20. minuts. The 19. day, the wind Southeaſt, they rood ſtill. The 20. day the winde at Northweſt they ſet ſaile about one of the clocke in the morning, & ſteered thence South by Weſt, & Southſouthweſt, about 3. leagues, and then anchored in 6. foot and a halfe a halfe water, about nine of þ clocke before noone, at which time it fell calme: the elevation of the pole at that place 45. degrees 13. minutes. The 21. hauing the winde at North-west, they set saile, and stered thence South by West, and South untill eleuen of the clocke, and had then nine foote water: and at noone they obserued the latitude, and found it to be 44. degrees 47. minutes: then had they three fathoms and a halfe water, being cleare of the flais. It is counted from the foure hills lockes to the sea about fiftie versts. From the said noonetide untill foure of the clocke they sayled South by East five leagues and a halfe: then had they five fathoms and a halfe and whachish water: from that till twelue at night they sayled South by East halfe a league, East tenne leagues: then had they eleuen fathome, and the water salter. From that till the 22. day three of the clocke in the morning they sayled three & fifty leagues, then had they sixtene fathome water: from thence they sayled untill noone South and by West seuen leagues and a halfe, the latitude then obserued 43. degrees 15. minutes, the depth then eight and twentie fathoms, and shallow ground: from that untill eight of the clocke at night, they sayled South by East five leagues and a halfe, then had they three and forty fathoms shallow ground. From thence till the 23. foure a clocke in the morning, they sayled South four west three leagues and a halfe: then could they get no ground in two and fiftie fathoms deepe. From thence untill noone they sayled South nine leagues, then the latitude obserued was 42. degrees 20. minutes. From that till the 24. day at noone they sayled South by West seuentene leagues and a halfe, then the latitude obserued was 41. degrees 32. minutes. From noone till seuen of the clocke at night, they sayled South south west foure leagues, then had they perfect sight of high land or hills, which were almost couered with snow, and the mids of them were West from the ship, being then about twelue leagues from the nearest land: they sounded but could finde no ground in two hundred fathoms. From thence they sayled South west untill midnight: about three leagues from thence till the 25. day four of the clocke in the morning, they sayled West three leagues, being then litle winde, and nere the land, theyooke in their sayles, and lay hailing: at noone the latitude obserued, was 40. degrees 54. minutes: they sounded but could get no ground in two hundred fathoms. At four of the clocke in the afternoon, the winde North west, they set their sayles, & from thence till the 26. day at noone they sayled East south east foure leagues. From thence they sailed till eight of the clocke at night South west three leagues, the winde then at North. From thence they sailed untill the 27. day two of the clocke in the morning, West south west eight leagues, the winde blowing at North very much. From the sayd two till foure of the clocke they sailed South by West one league: then being day light, they saw the land plaine, which was not past three leagues from them, being very high ragged land. There were certaine rocks that lay farre off into the sea, about five leagues from the same land, (which are called Barmake Tash, they sayled betweene those rocks and the land, and about five of the clocke they passed by the porte Bilbil, where they should haue put in but could not: and bearing longt the shoare about two of the clocke afternoon, they came to Bildih in the countrey of Media or Sheruan, against which place they anchored in 9. foot water. Presently after they were at anker, there came aboard of them a boat, wherein were seuen or eight persons, two Turkes, the rest Persians, the Turkes basia's, which bade them welcome, and seemed to be glad of their arrival, who told the factours that the Turke had conquered all Media, or the countrey Sheruan, and how that the Turkes Basna remained in Derbent with a garrison of Turkes, and that Shamaky was wholly spoyled, and had few or no inhabitants left in it. The factours then being desirous to come to the sperch of the Basna, sent one of the Tiskies (or merchants that went out with them from Astracan, passengers) and one of the companies seruants Robert Golding, with those souldiours, to the capitaine of Bachu, which place standeth hard by the sea, to certifie him of their arrival, and what commodities they had brought, and to desire friendship to haue quiet and safe traffike for the same. Bachu is from Bildih, the place where they roade, about a dayes journey, on foote easily to be trauelled, which may be five leagues the next way ouer land: it is a walled towne, and strongly fortified. When the sayd messenger came to the capitaine of Bachu, the said capitaine gaue him very friendly entertainment, and after he vnderstood what they were that were come in the shippe, and what they had brought, he seemed to reioyce much therat: who gaue the said Golding licence to depart backe the next day, being the eight and twentieth day: and promised that he would himselfe come to the shippe the next day following: with which and were the said Golding returned and came to the shippe the sayd eight and twentieth day about nine of the clocke at night. The nine and twentieth day in the morning the factours caused a tent to be set vp at shoare near the shippe, against the coming of the sayd capitaine: who came thither about three of the clocke after noone, and brought about thirtie souldiers, that attended on him, in shirts of male, and some of them had gaunclets of silver, others of Steele, and very faire. The factours met him at their tent, and after very friendly salutations passed betweene them, they gaue him for apresent a garment of cloch of velvet, and another of scarlet, who accepted the same gratefully. After they had talked together by their interpreters, as well of the state of the voyage and cause of their coming thither, as also learned of the sayd captaine the state of that countrey, the factours in ade request vnto him, that he would helpe them to the speech of the Basna, who answered that their demand was reasonable, and that he would willingly shew them therein what pleasure he could, and sayd, because the way to Derbent, where the Basna remained, was dangerous, he would send thither, and certifie him of their arrivall, and what commodities they had brought, and such commodities as they would desire to exchange or barter the same for he would procure the said Basna to promise for them: and therefore willed the factours to consule together, and certifie him what they most desired, and what quantitie they would have provided: so whilst the factours were consulting together thereupon, the captaine talked with a Tisike merchant that came ouer in the ship with them from Astracan, which Tisike, among other matters in talke, certified the captaine, that the night before, the factours & their company were determined to haue returned backe againe to Astracan, and that they were about to wey their ankers, which in deed was true, but the maister of the barke Thomas Hudson of Limehouse perswaded them that the wind was not good for them to depart, &c. Then the factours came againe to talke with the captaine, they desired to goe to the Basna, and that he would safely conduct them thither: he granted their requests willingly, desiring them to goe with him to a village hard by, and there to abide with him that night, and the next day they should go to Bachu, and from thence proceede on their journey to Derbent. They were unwilling to go that night with him, because their promise for the way was not in readinesse, but requested that they might stay til the morning. Thereupon the captaine sayd it was reported vnto him, that they ment the night before to haue gone away: and if it should so happen, he were in great danger of loosing his head: for which cause he requested to haue some one for a pledge: wherefore M. Garrard one of the factours offered himselfe to go, who, because he could not speake the Russe tongue, tooke with him Christopher Burrough, and a Russe interpreter: that night they rood from the seaside, to a village about ten miles off, where at supper time the captaine had much talke with M. Garrard of our countrey, demanding where about it did lie, what countreys were neare vnto it, and with whom we had traffike, for by the Russe name of our countrey he could not coniecture who we should be: but when by the situation he perceived we were Englishmen, he demanded if our prince were a mayden Queene: which when he was certified of, then (quoth he) your land is called Englikerra, is it not? and whereof he was very glad when he knew the certaintie. He made very much of them, placing M. Garrard next to himselfe, and Christopher Burrough, with the Russe interpreter for the Turkie tongue hard by. There was a Gillan merchant with him at that present, of whom he seemed to make great account: him he placed next to himselfe on the other side, and his gentlemen sat round about him talking together. Their sitting is vpon the heeles, or crosse legged.

Supper being brought in, he requested them to eate. After their portage (which was made of rice) was done, and like wise their boyled meat, there came in platters of rice sodden thicke, and hony mingled withall: after all which, came a sheepe roasted whole, which was brought in a tray, and set before the captaine: he called one of his seruitors, who cut it in pieces, and laying thereof vpon diuers platters, set the same before the captaine: then the captaine gaue to M. Garrard and his company one platter, and to his gentlemen another, and to them which could not well reach he cast meat from the platters which were before him. Diuers questions he had with M. Garrard and Christopher Burrough at supper time, about their diet, inquiring whether they eat fish or flesh voluntarily, or by order. Their drinke in those partes is nothing but water. After supper (walking in the garden) the captaine demanded of M. Garrard, whether the vse was in England to lie in the house or in the garden, and which he had best liking of: he answered, where it pleased him, but their vse was to lie in houses: whereupon the captaine caused beds to be sent into the house for them, and caused his kinsman to attend on them in the night, if they chanced to want any thing: he himselfe with his gentlemen and souldiers lying in the garden.

In the morning very early he sent horse for the rest of the company which should go to Derbent, sending by them that were come thence for the shippe. In that village there was a Stoue, into which the captaine went in the morning, requesting M. Garrard to go also to the same to wash himselfe, which he did. Shortly after their coming out of the Stoue, whilst they were at breakfast, M. Turnbull, M. Tailboyes, and Thomas Hudson the M. of the shippe, came thither, and when they had all broken their fasts, they went to Bachu: but Christopher Burrough returned to the ship, for that he had hurt his leg, and could not well endure that trauell. And from Bachu they proceeded towards Derbent, as it was by the captaine promised, being accompanied on their way for their safe conduct, with a gentleman, and certaine souldiers, which had the captaine of Bachu his letters to the Bascha of Derbent, very friendly written in their behalfe. In their journey to Derbent they forooke the ordinarie wayes, being very dangerous, and trauelled through woods till they came almost to the towne of Derbent: and then the gentleman road before with the captaines letters to the Bascha, to certifie him of the English merchants comming, who receiuing the letters, and vnderstanding the matter, was very glad of the newes, and sent forth to receiue them certaine souldiers gunners, who met them about two miles out of the towne, saluting them with great reuerence, and afterwarde road before them: then againe met them other souldiours, some what neerer the castle, which likewise hauing done their salutations road before them, and then came footly noble men, captaines, and gentlemen, to receiue them into the castle and towne. As they entered the castle, there was a shot of twentie pieces of great ordnance, & the Bascha sent M. Turnbull a very faire horse with furniture to mount on, & seemed to be worth an hundred markes, and so they were conueyed to his presence: who after he had talked with them, sent for a coate of cloth of golde, and caused it to be put on M. Turnbules backe, and then willed them all to depart, and take their ease, for that they were wearie of their journey, and on the morrow he would talke further with them. The next day when p factozs came againe to the presence of the Bascha, according to his appointment, they requested him that he would grant them his priuilege, whereby they might traffike safely in any part and place of his countrey, offering him, that if it pleased his Maiestie to haue any of the commodities that they had brought, and to write his mind thereof to the captaine of Bachu, it should be deliuered him accordingly. The Baschaes answer was, that he would willingly giue them his priuilege: yet for that he regarded their safetie, hauing come so farre, & knowing the state of his countrey to be trouble some, he would haue them to bring their commodity thither, & there to make sale of it, promising he would prouide such commodities as they needed, and that he would be a defence vnto them, so that they should not be iniured by any: whereupon the factozs sent Thomas Hudson backe for p ship to bring her to Derbent, and the Bascha sent a gentleman with him to the captaine of Bachu, to certifie him what was determined, which message being done, the captaine of Bachu, and the Baschaes messenger, accompanied with a dozen souldiours, went from Bachu with Thomas Hudson, & came to the ship at Bildih the 11. day of Iune. After the captaine and his men had bene aboard and seene the ship, they all departed presently, but the gentleman, messenger from p Bascha, with three other Turks, remained aboard, and continued in the ship till she came to Derbent: the latitude of Bildih by diuers obseruations is 40. degrees 25. minutes: the variation of the compasse 10. degrees 40. minutes from North to West. After the returne of Thomas Hudson backe to Bildih, they were constrained to remaine there with the shippe through contrary windes untill the 16. day of Iune foure of the clocke in the morning, at which time they weped anker, set saile and departed thence towards Derbent, and arrived at anker against Derbent Cast and by South from the sayd castle in foure fathome and a halfe water, the 22. day of Iune at ten of the clocke in the morning: then theyooke up their ordnance, which before they had stowed in hold for ealing the shippe in her rowling. In the afternoone the Bascha came downe to the waterside against the shippe, and hauing the said ordnance placed, and charged, it was all shotte off to graetise him: and presently after his departure backe, he permitted the factozs to come aboard the shippe. The 29. day their goods were unladen and carried to the Baschaes garden, where he made choyce of such things as he liked, taking for custome of euery fine & twenty karlies, or whatsoeuer, one, or after the rate of foure for the hundred. The factozs after his choyce made, determined to send a part of the rest of the goods to Bachu, for the speedier making sale thereof, for which cause they obtained the Baschaes letter to the captaine of Bachu, written very fauourably in their behoofe: and thereupon was laden and sent in a small boat of that countrey in merchandize, to the value (very neere) of one thousand pound sterling: videlicet, one hundredth pieces of karlies, seuen broad clothes, two barrells of corhenelio, two barrells of tinne, foure barrells of shaffe. There went with the same of the companies seruants William Winckle, Robert Golding, and Richard Relfe, with two Russies, whereof one was an interpreter, besides foure barkemen. They departed from Derbent with the said barke the 19. of Iuly, and arrived at Bildih the 25. day: their passage and carriage of their goods to Bachu was chargeable, although their sales when they came thither were small: they had great friendship shewed them of the captaine of Bachu, as well for the Baschaes letter, as also for the factozs sakes, who had dealt friendly with him, as before is declared. Robert Golding desirous to vnderstand what might be done at Shamaky, which is a daies iourney from Bachu, went thither, from whence returning, he was set on by the eues, and was shot into the knee with an arrow, who had very hardly escaped with his life & goods, but that by good hap he killed one of the theues horses with his caluer, and shot a Turke through both cheeks with a dag. On the sixt day of August the factozs being aduertised at Derbent that their ship was so rotten & weake, that it was doubtfull the

would not carry them backe to Astracan, did therupon agree and bargin at that place with an Armenian, whose name was Iacob, for a barke called a Bussle, being of burden about 35. tunnes, which came that yere from Astracan, and was at that instant riding at an Island called Zere, about three or foure leagues beyond or to the Eastwardes of Bildih, which barke for their moze safety, they ment to haue with them in their returne to Astracan, and therupon wrote vnto Wincoll and the rest at Bachu, that they should receiue the same Bussle, and lade in her their goods at Bildih to be returned to Derbent, and to discharge their first boate, which was obserued by them accordingly. When all their goods were laden aboord the sayd Bussle at Bildih, and being ready to haue departed thence for Derbent, there arose a great storme with the winde out of the sea, by force whereof the cables and halsters were broken, and their bestell put a shoare, and broken to pieces against the rocks: euery of them that were in her saued their liues, and part of the goods. But there was a Carobia or chestte, wherein were dollers, and golde, which they had receiued for the commodities of the company, which they sold at Bachu, which at the taking out of the Bussle, fell by the barkes side into the water amongst the rocks, and so was lost. The parkes of cloth which they could not well take out of the Bussle were also lost, other things that were moze profitable they saued.

The 18. of August, the Factors receiued from the Bashha 500. Batmans of raw silke, par cell of the bargain made with him, who bade them come the next day for the rest of the bargain.

The 19. day the Factors went to the Bashha according to his appointment, but that day they could not speake with him, but it was deliuered them as from him, that they should looke and consider whether any thing were due vnto him or not, which grieved the Factors: and thereupon W. Turnebull answered, that their heads & all that they had were at the Bashhaes pleasure: But then it was answered there was no such matter in it: but that they should cast by their reckonings, to see how it stood betweene them. The 20. day they cast by their reckonings. The 21. they went to haue spoken with the Bashha, but were denied audience.

The 22. day they heard newes by a Bussle that came from Astracan, that Arthur Edwards (whom the Factors left at Astracan with the moitie of the goods) was dead, who departed this life the of died at Astracan.

The 23. day the Factors receiued moze from the Bashha 500. Batmans of silke. The 4. of September newes was brought to Derbent, that Golding comming from Shamaky was set on by the cues (Turkes) and had hurt one of them.

September.

The 5. Tobias Atkins the gunners boy died of the fure, who was buried the 6. day 2. miles to the Southward of the Castle of Derbent, where the Armenian Christians do usually bury their dead. About the 20. of September newes came to Derbent, that the Bussle which they had bought of Iacob the Armenian as before, was cast away at Bildih, but they receiued no certaine newes in writing from any of our people.

The 26. of September was laden aboord the ship 40. bales of silke. From the 26. till the 2. of October, they tooke into the ship, bread, water, and other necessary prouision for their sea stoe: the said 2. day of October, the Factors were commanded vpon the sabbath to auoide their house, and gett them with their prouision out of the towne: Whereupon they were constrained to remoue and carry their things to the sea side against the ship, and remained there all the night. The cause of this sudden auoyding them out of the towne (as afterwards they perceined) was for that the Bashha had receiued newes of a supplie with treasure that the Turke had sent, which was then neare at hand comming toward him.

The 3. day of October all things were brought from the shoare aboord the ship: and that day the Factors went to the Bashha to take their leaue of him, vnto whom they recommended those the Companies seruants, &c. which they had sent to Bachu, making accompt to leaue them behinde in the Countrey: who caused their names to be written, and promised they should want nothing, nor be iniured of any. After this leaue taken, the Factors went aboord purposing presently to haue set saile and departed towards Astracan, the winde seruing well for that purpose at South Southeast: And as they were ready to set saile, there came against the ship a man, who warned: wherupon the boate was sent a shoare to him, who was an Armenian sent from William Wincoll, with his writing tables, wherein the said Wincoll had written briefly, the mishap of the losse of the Bussle, and that they were comming from Bildih towards Derbent, they, and such things as they saued with a small boate, forced to put a shoare in a place by the sea side called the Armenian village: Whereupon the Factors caused the shippe to stay, hoping that with the Southerly winde that then blew, they would come from the place they were at to the ship, but if they could not come with that winde, they ment to saile with the shippe, with the next wind that would serue them, against the place where they were, & take them in, if they could: which stay and losse of those Southerly windes, was a cause of great troubles, that they after wardes sustained through yce, &c. entering the Volga as shalbe declared.

The 4. day the winde South Southeast, the shippe rode still: This day Christopher Burrow was sent to hope to Derbent to provide some necessaries for the voyage, & with him a Tisike or two, which should goe in the shippe passengers to Astracan. And being on shoate he saw there the coming in of the Turkes treasure, being accompanied with 200. souldiers, and one hundred pioners, besides Captaines and Gentlemen: the Bashha with his Captaines and souldiers very gallantly apparelled and furnished went out from Derbent about thre or foure miles, to meete the said treasure, and received the same with great ioy and triumph. Treasure was the chiefe thing they needed, for not long before the souldiers were readie to breake into the Court against the Bashha for their pay: there was a great mutinie amongst them, because hee had long differed and not payed them their due. The treasure came in seven wagons, and with it were brought tenne pieces of yasse.

In the parts of Media where they were, there was no commoditie to be bought of any value, but rawe silke, neither was that to be had but at the Bashhaes hands: who shortly after their coming thither taxed the Countrey for that commoditie. His dealing with our Marchants as it was not with equitie in all points according to his bargain, so it was not extreme ill. Of the commodities they carried hee tooke the chiefeest part, for which he gaue but a small price in respect of the value it was there worth, and because he had provided such quantitie of commoditie for them, which otherwise they could not haue had, the Countrey bring so troublesome, and troublefull by land so dangerous, he vsed them at his pleasure.

The newes that was reported vnto them at Astracan touching the warres betweene the Turkes & Persians differed little from the truth: For the Turkes armie with aide of the Crims, (being in number by information of two Spaniards that serued in those wars, about 200000) invaded and conquered the Countrey of Media in Anno 1577. When the great Turke understood of the conquest, he appointed Osman Bashha (the said Bashha, and now Captaine of Derbent) gouernour of the whole Countrey, who settled himselfe in Shamaky the chiefe Citie of Media, and principall place of traffike, vnto whom was sent from the great Turke, in signification of the gratefull acceptance of his seruice and the great conquest, a word of great value.

Osman Bashha.

After the said Bashha had brought the Countrey in order to his liking, and placed garrisons where he thought convenient, the armie was dissolved and sent backe: When the Persians understood that the Turkes armie was dissolved and returned, they gathered a power together, and with the Queene of their Countrey as chiefe, they entered the Countrey of Media, and ouerranne the same with fire and sword, destroying whatsoeuer they found, as well people, cattell, as whatsoeuer els, that might be commodious to the Turkes. And after they had so ouerrunne the Countrey, they came to Shamaky, where the said Bashha Lieutenant generall of the great Turke was settled, and besieged it: whereupon the Bashha seeing hee could not long indure to withstande them, fled thence to Derbent where he now remaineth.

Derbent built by Alexander the great.

Derbent is a strong Castle which was built by Alexander the great, the situation whereof is such, that the Persians being without Oppinance, are not able to winne it but by famine. When the Turkes were fled from Shamaky, the Persians entered the same and spoiled it, leaving therein neither living creature nor any commoditie, and so returned backe into Persia, and settled themselves about Teueris, where there grew some question among them for the kingdome. Afterwards the Persians hauing intelligence of an armie from the Turke coming into Media, gathered themselves together in a great armie and encountering the said Turkes, set vpon them on the sudden, and vanquished them, putting them all to the sword. This overthrow of the Turkes grieved the Bashha of Derbent, and made him to haue the more care for his owne safetie. Whereupon newes was brought vnto him that the Kisel Bashhaes, (that is to say the nobles and Gentlemen of Persia) were minded to set vpon him, and that neere vnto Bachu there lay an army readie to besiege it. Whereupon the Bashha oftentimes would ride about the Castle of Derbent viewing the same, and the springs that did come to it, and where he saw any cause of reformation, it was amended.

The latitude of Derbent 41. deg 52. min.

The variation of the Compass.

The latitude of Derbent (by diuers obseruations exactly there made) is 41. deg. 52. min. The variation of the Compass at that place about 11. degrees from North to West. From Derbent to Bildih by land 46. leagues. From Derbent to Shamaky by land, 45. leagues. From Shamaky to Bachu about 10. leagues, which may be 30. miles. From Bachu to Bildih five or six leagues by land, but by water about 12. leagues. From the Castle Derbent Eastwards, they reach two stone wals to the border of the Caspian sea, which is distant one English mile. Those wals are 9. foote thicke, and 28. or 30. foote high, and the space betweene them is 160. Geometricall tricall paces, that is 800 foot. There are yet to be perceived at the ruine of these walls, which do now extend into the sea about halfe a mile : also from the castle Westward into the land, they did perceiue the ruines of a stone wall to extend, which wal, as it is reported, did passe from thence to Pontus Euxinus, and was built by Alexander the great when the castle Derbent was made.

The 5 of October about noone the winde Northnortheast all they wayed ancre, and set saile from Derbent, being alongst the coast to the Southwards to seeke their men: but as they had saild about foure leagues the winde scanted Easterly, so that they were forced to ancre in thye fathom water.

The 6 day they wayed ancre, and bare further off into the sea, where they ancred in seuen fathom water, the ship being very leake, and so rotten abast the maine mast, that a man with his nailes might scrape thozow her side.

The 7 day about 7 of the clocke in the morning, they set saile, the winde Southwest. They considered the time of the pere was far spent, the ship weake, leake and rotten, and therefore determining not to tary any longer for Wincoll and his fellowes, but to leaue them behinde, bent themselves directly towards Astracan : and sailing Northnortheast vniill midnight about 16 leagues, the winde then came to the Northnortheast, and blew much, a very storme, which caused them to take in all their sailes, sauing the fore corse, with which they were forced to steere before the sea, South by West, and Southsouthwest. And on the 8 day about two of the clocke in the morning their great boat sinke at the ships sterne, which they were forced to cut from the ship to their great griefe and discomfote : for in her they hoped to saue their lynes if the ship should haue miscaried. About 10 of the clocke before noone they had sight of the land about 5 leagues to the South of Derbent, and bare longst the coast to the Southeastwards vnto Nezaouo, where they came at ancre in thye fathoms, and blacke oze, good ancre holbe, whereof they were glad, as also that the winde was shifted to the Northwest, and but a meane gale. Wincoll and the rest of his fellowes being in the Armenian village, which is about 18 versts to the Westwards of Nezaouo, the place whereagainst they rode at ancre, saw the ship as she passed by that place, and sent a man in the night following alongst the coast after her, who came against the ship where she rode, and with a firebrand in the top of a tree made signes, which was perceiued by them in the shippe, whereupon they hoisted out their skiffe, and sent her ashore to learne what was meant by the fire : which returned a letter from Wincoll, wherein he wrote that they were with such goods as they had at the Armenian village, and prayed that there they might with the same goods be taken into the ships. The 9 day it was litle winde, they wayed and bare a litle further off into the sea towards the said village, and ancred. The 10 day they sent their skiffe to the Armenian village to fetch those men and the goods they had, with order that if the winde serued, that they could not returne to fetch the ship, they of the ship promised to come for them, against the said village. This day it was calme.

Nezaouo.

The 11 day the winde Northwest they rode still. The 12 day the winde Southeast they wayed ancre, & bare against & nere to the Armenian village where they ancred, and then the skiffe came aboard and tolde them that our people at thoz were like to be spoiled of the Tartars, were it not that the gunners defended them : then was the skiffe sent backe againe to charge them at any hand they should haften aboard the ship whatsoeuer it cost them. Whereupon, all the company came aboard the same day sauing Richard Relfe and two Russes, but alsoone as the skiffe was returned aboard the ship, the winde blew at Southeast, and the sea was growen, so as they were forced to take in their skiffe into the ship, and rode still till the 13 day, and then being faire weather, early in the morning the skiffe was hoisted out of the ship, and sent to thoz to fetch the said Relfe and the two Russes, which were ready at the thoz side, and with them two Spaniards that were taken captiues at the Goleta in Barbary, which serued the Turke as souldiers. Those Spaniards (of Christian charity) they brought also aboard the ship to redeeme them from their captivity, which were brought ouer into England, and set free and at liberty here in London, in September 1581. The winde this day at Northnortheast, faire weather. The 14 day they sent the skiffe to thoz, and filled fresh water. The 15 day they rode still, being litle winde and fog. The 16 day the winde Eastsoutheast, they wayed ancre and set saile, bearing Northwards towards Astracan, and the same night they ancred in ten fathoms water, about fise miles from the thoz of the Shalkaules countrey, which place is eight leagues Northnortheast from Derbent. The 17 day the winde at North very stormy, they rode still all that day and night. The 18 the winde all Southeast about one of the clocke afternoone, they wayed ancre, and sailed thence till foure of the clocke Northnortheast fise leagues, then they might see the land Northwest about tenn leagues from the winde Southeast : from thence they sailed til midnight Northnortheast twelue leagues. From thence till the 19 day seuen a clocke in the morning they sailed Northnortheast eight eight leagues: the winde then Eastsoutheast, a faire gale, they sounded and had 17 fathoms, and saund, being (as the Master iudged) about the head of Shedy: from thence till 12 of the clocke at noone they sailed North 5 leagues, the winde then at East a faire gale, they sounded and had 5 fathoms. From thence till 8 of the clocke at night, they sailed North 7 leagues, the winde then at North-east with small raine, theyooke in their sailes, and ancred in 3 fathoms water and soft oze, where they rode still all night, and the 20 day and night the winde North-east, as befoze with small raine.

The 21 day the winde North-west, they likewise rode still. The 22 day about 3 of the clocke in the afternoone, they wayed ancre, the winde Westnorth-west, and sailed from thence till five of the clocke at night North 4 leagues, then they ancred in 2 fathoms and a halfe soft oze, the winde at West a small breath.

The 23 day about 7 of the clocke in the morning, they wayed ancre, and set saile, bring little winde Easterly, and sailed till 2 of the clocke after noone North-west in vith the shoze about five leagues, and then ancred in 6 foot water, hauing perfect sight of the low land (sand hilles) being about 3 miles from the nearest land. This place of the land that they were against, they perceived to be to the Westwards of the 4 Islands (called in the Russe tongue Chetera Bougori) and they found it afterwards by due prooff, to be about 50 versts, or 30 English miles to the Southwest, or Southwest by South, from the sayd Chetera Bougori.

The 24 day the winde at East, and by South, a Sea winde called Gillauar, caused them to ride still. The 25 day they thought good to send in their skiffe Robert Golding, and certaine Russes, to row him alongst Northwards by the shoze, to seeke the foure Islands, and so to passe vnto the Vchooge, and there to land the sayd Robert Golding to proceed to Astracan, to deliuer Amos Riall a letter, wherein he was required to prouide Pauoses to meet the shippe at the sayd Islands, and the skiffe with the Russes were appointed to returne from the Vchooge with victuals to the shippe, which skiffe departed from the shippe about nine of the clocke in the forenoone. The 26, 27, 28, and 29 dayes, the windes Easterly and North-east, they rode still with their ship. The 30 day the winde Southeast, they wayed, and set saile to the North-eastwards: but the ship fell so on the side to the shoze wards, that they were forced els soone to take in their saile, and ancre againe, from whence they neuer remoued her. That day they shared their bread: but in their want God sent them two couies of partridges, that came from the shoze, and lighted in and about their ships, whereby they were comforted, and one that lay sicke, of whose life was small hope, recovered his health.

A strange accident of pious Men for their reliefe.

Remember.

The 4 of Nouember the skiffe returned to the ship with some victuals, and certified that the foure Islands were about 60 versts from them to the North-eastwards. When Robert Golding came to Astracan, and deliuered there the Factors letters to Amos Riall, the duke, capitaine of that place, was done to vnderstand of the ships arrivall, & of the state they were in, and their request for Pauoses, who was very glad to heare of their safe returne, and appointed to be sent with all speed two Pauoses and a Stroog, with gunners to gard and to defend them. With the which Stroog and Pauoses, Amos Riall went downe to the Chetera Bougori, or 4 Islands aforesayd, where he stayed with those barks, according to the Factors appointment. The 5 day they purposed to send from the ship their skiffe with the carpenter, and 4 Russes to row him to the 4 Bougeries, to request Amos Riall to come from thence with the Pauoses to the shippe with all possible speed. The skiffe with those men departed from the ship in the morning, and within one houre they met with a small boat with Russes, rowing towards the ship, which came from the Ouchooge with a wilde swine and other victuals to sell: with the same boat the skiffe returned backe to the ship after the Russes had receiued and were satisfied for the victuals they brought: the same day they returned with their boat backe toward the Ouchooge, and with them in the same boat was sent the Carpenter of the shippe to the Chetera Bougori, which were in their way, to declare vnto Amos Riall the message befoze appointed him. From the 5 vntill the 9 day the ship rode still with contrary winds Easterly. The same 9 day came to the shippe certaine Russes in a small boat, which brought with them some victuals sent by Amos Riall, and declared that he with the Pauoses and Stroog had remained at the Chetera Bougori five dayes, expecting the comming thither of the ship. The 10 day being doubtfull of the Pauoses comming, they sent Thomas Hudson Master of the ship in the skiffe (and with her went the foresayd skiffe boat) towards the Chetera Bougori to the Pauoses to bring word whether they would come to the ship or not, the wind then at North-east with fogge. The 11 day the winde North-eastly with fogge, the ship rode still. The 12 day Amos Riall, Christopher Fawcett, and a new gunner came to the ship, and with them the M^r Thomas Hudson returned; but the Stroog with the gunners remained at the Chetera Bougori; and from thence (when it began to freese) returned to Astracan, Amos Riall declared that he sent the carpenter carpenter backe from the Chetera Boogori in a small boat on the 10 day, and martelied that he was not come to the shippe (but in the fogge the day before as afterwards they learned) missed the shippe, and overshot her, and afterwards returning backe, he found the ship at ancre, and nothing in her but the Russes that were left to keepe her, and then he departed thence, and went to the Vchooge, and there stayed. Presently vpon the comming of the Pauoles to the ship they vsed as much speed as might be, to get the goods out of the shippe into them, and after the goods were laden in, they tooke in also of the shippes ordinance, furniture and provision, as much as they could.

The 13 day in the morning Amos Riall was sent away in a small boat towards Astracan, to provide victuals and cariages to relieue and helpe them, who could passe no further then the foure Islands, but was there overtaken with yce, and forced to leaue his boat, and from thence passed posse to Astracan, finding at the Vchooge the Carpenter returned from his ill iourney, very ill handled with the extremity of the colde. The same day they departed also in those lighters with the goods towards the Chetera Bougori, leauing the ship at ancre, and in her two Russes, which with three more that went in the Pauoles, to provide victuals for themselves and the rest, & therewith promised to returne backe to the ship with all speed, had offered to vnder take for twenty rubbles in money to cary the ship into some harborow, where she might safely winter, or els to keepe her where she rode all winter, which was promised to be giuen them if they did it: and the same day when with those lighters they had gotten sight of the foure Islands being about eight versts South-west from them, the winde then at North-east, did freeze the sea so as they could not row, guide, stirre or remoue the said lighters, but as the winde and yce did force them. And so they continued driving with the yce, South-east into the sea by the space of forty houres, and then being the sixteenth day the yce stood. Whiles they droue with the yce, the dangers which they incurred were great: for oftentimes when the yce with the force of winde and sea did breake, pieces of it were tossed and diuen one vpon another with great force, terrible to beholde, and the same happened at sometimes so neere vnto the lighters, that they expected it would haue ouerwhelmed them to their vtter destruction: but God who had preserved them from many perils before, did also saue and deliuer them then.

Within three or foure dayes after the first standing of the yce, when it was firme and strong, they tooke out all their goods, being forty and eight bales or packes of raw silke, &c. layd it on the yce, and couered the same with such provisions as they had. Then for want of victuals, &c. they agreed to leaue all the goods there vpon the yce, and to go to the shore: and thereupon brake vp their Chests and Corobias, wherewith, and with such other things as they could get, they made sledges for euery of them to draw vpon the yce, whercon they layd their clothes to keepe them warme, and such victuals as they had, and such other things as they might conveniently cary, and so they departed from the said goods and Pauoles very earely about one of the clocke in the morning, and traauailing on the yce, directed their way North, as neere as they could iudge, and the same day about two of the clocke in the afternoone, they had sight of the Chetera Babbas (foure hillocks of Islands so called) vnto the same they directed themselves, and there remained that night.

The goods and Pauoles which they left on the yce they iudged to be from those Chetera Babbas about 20 versts.

And the next morning departed thence Eastwards, and came to the Chetera Bougories (or foure Islands before spoken of) before noone (the distance betwene those places is about 15 versts) where they remained all that night, departing thence towards Astracan: the next morning very early they lost their way through the perswasion of the Russes which were with them, taking too much towards the left hand (contrary to the opinion of M. Hudson) whereby wandering vpon the yce foure or five dayes, not knowing whether they were entered into the Crimme Tartars land or not, at length it fortuned they met with a way that had bene traauailed, which cross backwards towards the sea: that way they tooke, and following the same, within two dayes traualle it brought them to a place called the Crasnoyare (that is to say in the English tongue) Redcliffe, which diuers of the company knew.

There they remained that night, hauing nothing to eat but one loafe of bread, which they happened to finde with the two Russes that were left in the ship to keepe her all the Winter (as is aforesaid) whom they chanced to meet going towards Astracan, about five miles before they came to the said Crasnoyare, who certified them that the ship was cut in pieces with the yce, and that they had hard scaping with their liues.

In the morning they departed early from Crasnoyare towards the Ouchooge, and about 9 of the clocke before noone, being within 10 versts of the Vchooge, they met Amos Riall, with the the carpenter, which he found at Ouchooge, and a gunner newly come out of England, and also 65 hoyses with so many Cassacks to guide them, and 50 gunners for gard, which brought provision of victuals, &c. and were sent by the Duke to fetch the goods to Astracan. The meeting of that company was much joy unto them.

December.

The Factors sent backe with Amos Riall and the sayd company to fetch the goods, Thomas Hudson the Master, Tobias Paris his Mate, and so they the sayd Factors and their company marched on to the Vchooge, where they refreshed themselves that day, and the night following. And from thence proceeded on towards Astracan, where they arrived the last day of November. These that went for the goods after their departure from the Factors traailed the same day untill they came within 10 versts of the Chetera Babbas, where they rested that night. The next morning by the break of the day they departed thence, and before none were at the Chetera Babbas, where they stayed all night; but presently departed thence Thomas Hudson with the Carpenter and gunner to seeke where the goods lay: who found the same, and the next day they returned backe to their company at the Chetera Babbas, and declared unto them in what sort they had found the sayd goods.

to Astracan.

The 3 day early in the morning they departed all from the 4 Babbas towards the said goods, and the same day did lade all the goods they could find upon the said sleds, and with all convenient speed returned backe towards Astracan. And when they came to the Chetera Bougori, where they rested the night, in the morning very early before the break of day, they were assailed by a great company of the Nagays Tartars horsemen, which came shouting and halloving with a great noise, but our people were so inured with the sleds, that they durst not enter upon them, but ranne by, and shot their arrows amongst them, and hurt but one man in the head, who was a Russe, and so departed presently. Yet when it was day, they shewed themselves a good distance off from our men, being a very great troope of them, but did not assault them any more. The same day our men with those carriages, departed from thence towards Astracan, where they arrived in safety the 4 of December, about 3 of the clocke in the afternoon, where our people greatly rejoiced of their great good happe to have escaped so many hard cuents, troubles and miseries, as they did in that voyage, and had great cause therefore to praise the Almighty, who had so mercifully preserved and delivered them. They remained the Winter at Astracan, where they found great favour and friendship of the duke, capitaine, and other chiefe officers of that place: but that Winter there happened no great matter worth the noting.

The breaking up of the yce.Morgan Hubble-thorne dier sent unto Persia.

In the spring of the yeere 1581, about the mids of March, the yce was broken up, and cleare gone before Astracan, and the ninth of Aprill, having all the goods that were returned from the parts of Media, laden into a Stroog, the Factors, William Turnebull, Matthew Taileboyes, Giles Crow, Christopher Burrough, Michael Lane, Laurence Proufe gunner, Randolfe Foxe, Tho. Hudson, Tobias Parris, Morgan Hubblethorne the dier, Rich. the surgeon, Rob. Golding, Ioh. Smith, Edw. Reding carpenter, and William Perrin gunner, having also 40 Russes, whereof 36 were Cassacks to row, the rest merchants passengers, departed from Astracan with the sayd Stroog and goods by the Volga towards Yeraslaue. They left behinde them at Astracan, with the English goods & merchandise there remaining, Amos Riall, W. Wincoll, and Richard Relfe, and appointed them to sell & barter the same, or so much thereof as they could to the Tisiks, if there came any thither that spring, and to others as they might, & the rest with such as they should take in exchange to returne by to Yeraslaue that Summer, when the Emperors carriage should passe by the Volga. The 21 day they came with their Stroog to the Peraulok, but made no stay at that place: for they had bene much troubled with yce in their coming from Astracan. The 3 of May about noone they came to Oucak, and from thence proceeding by the riuer, on the 17 day William Turnebull departed from the Stroog in a small boat, and went before towards Tetusha to provide victuals, and send downe to the Stroog, from which place they were then about 230 versts. The 23 day they met a boat with victuals, which William Turnebull sent from Tetusha, and the same day they arrived with their Stroog at Tetusha, where they stayed all night, and the next morning betimes departed thence, but W. Turnebull was gone in the small boat before to Cazan, to provide necessities from thence, and to make way for their dispatch. The 26 day they arrived with their Stroog at Cazan, where they remained till the fourth of June: the Factors sent Giles Crow from Cazan to the Mosco, with their letters the 30 of May. The 4 day of June they departed from Cazan with their Stroog, and arrived at Yeraslaue the 22 day about 5 of the clocke in the morning.

May.

The 23 day they provided Telegos, to carry the goods to Vologda. The 24 day having the goods laden upon Telegos, they departed with the same towards Vologda, and remained there five versts from Yeraslaue,

The

The 29 day they came to Vologda, with all their goods in safety, and good order. The same 29, William Turnbull and Peter Garrard departed from Vologda post by water towards Colmogro, the third of July, having their goods laden in a small boshnik, they departed with the same from Vologda towards Role Island by S. Nicholas, where they arrived in safety the 16 of July, and found there the Agents of Russia, and in the rode the ships sent out of England, almost laden ready to depart.

The 25 day departed for England (out of the rode of S. Nicholas) the ship Elizabeth.

The 26 day departed thence the Thomas Allen and Mary Susan, and in the Thomas Allen went William Turnbul, Mathew Tailboys, Thomas Hudson, and others. The goods returned of the Persia voyage were laden into the ship, William and John, whereof was Daffer, William Bigat, and in her with the same goods came Peter Garrard and Tobias Parris.

The 11 of August, the same ship being laden and dispatched departed from the rode of S. Nicholas, and with her in company another of the companies freighted ships, called the Tomasin, whereof was D. Christopher Hall. In their returne homewards they had some foule weather, and were separated at the sea, the William and John put into Newcastle the 24 of September: from whence the sayd Peter Garrard and Tobias Parris came to London by land, and brought newes of the arrivall of the ship.

The 25 of September both the sayd ships arrived at the port of London in safety, and anchored before Limehouse and Wapping, where they were discharged, 1581.

Certaine

Certaine directions giuen by M. Richard Hakluit of the Middle Temple, to M. Morgan Hubblethorne, Dier, sent into Persia, 1579.

1 For that England hath the best wool & cloth of the world, and for that the clothes of the realme haue no good vent, if good dying be not added: therefore it is much to be wished, that the dying of forren countreys were scene, to the end that the arte of dying may be brought into the Realme in great & excellency: for thereof will follow honour to the Realme, and great and ample vent of our clothes: and of the vent of clothes, will follow the setting of our poore on worke, in all degrees of labour in clothing and dying: for which cause most principally you are sent ouer at the charge of the city: and therefore for the satisfiing the lords, and of the expectation of the merchants and of your company, it behooues you to haue care to returne home with more knowledge then you caried out.

2 The great dearth of clothes is a great let in the ample vent of clothes, and the price of a cloth, for a fifth, sixth and seventh part riseth by the colour and dying: and therefore to deuise to die as good colours with the one halfe of the present price were to the great commodity of the Realme, by sauing of great treasure in time to come. And therefore you must haue great care to haue knowledge of the materials of all the countreys that you shall passe thorow, that may be used in dying, be they beeches, weeds, barks, gummes, earths, or what els soener.

3 In Persia you shall finde carpets of course thymmed wooll, the best of the world, and excellently coloured: those cities & townes you must repaire to, and you must vse meanes to learne all the order of the dying of those thymmes, which are so died as neither raine, wine, nor yet vinegar can staine: and if you may attaine to that cunning, you shall not need to feare dying of cloth: For if the colour holde in yarne and thymme, it will holde much better in cloth.

4 For that in Persia they haue great colouring of silks, it behooues you to learne that also, for that cloth dying & silke dying haue a certaine affinity, and your merchants mind to bying much raw silke into the Realme, and therefore it is more requisite you learne the same.

5 In Persia there are that staine linnen cloth: it is not amisse you learne it if you can: it hath bene an olde trade in England, whereof some excellent clothes yet remaine: but the arte is now lost, and not to be found in the Realme.

6 They haue a cunning in Persia to make in buskins of Spanish leather flowers of many kindes, in most liuely colours, and these the Courtiers do weare there: to learne which arte were no harme.

7 If any Dier of China, or of the East parts of the world, be to be found in Persia, acquaint yourselfe with him, and learne what you may of him.

8 You shall finde Anile there, if you can procure the herbe that it is made of, either by seed or by plant, to cary into England, you may do well to endeuour to enrich your countrey with the same: but withall learne you the making of the Anile, and if you can get the herbe, you may send the same by into England, for possibly it groweth here already.

9 Returne home with you all the materials and substances that they die withall in Russia, and also in Persia, that your company may see all.

10 In some litle pot in your lodging, I wish you to make daily trials in your arte, as you shall from time to time learne ought among them.

11 Set downe in writing whatsoeuer you shall learne from day to day, lest you should forget, or lest God should call you to his mercy: and by ech returne I wish you to send in writing whatsoeuer you haue learned, or at the least keepe the same safe in your coffer, that come death or life your countrey may enioy the thing that you goe for, and not lose the charge, and trauell bestowed in this case.

12 Learne you there to fire and make sure the colour to be giuen by logge wood: so shall we not need to buy wood so deare, to the enriching of our enemies.

13 Enquire of the price of leckar, and all other things belonging to dying.

14 In any wise set downe in writing a true note from whence euery of them doe come, and where, and in what countrey ech of them both grow, I meane where the naturall place of ech of them is, as how neere to such a city, or to such a sea, or to such a portable riuer in Russia, Persia, or elsewhere.

15 If before you returne you could procure a singular good workman in the arte of Turkish carpet making, you should bying the arte into this Realme, and also thereby increase worke to your company.

Commission giuen by sir Rowland Hayward knight, and George Barne, Aldermen and gouernours of the company of English Merchants, for discouery of new trades, vnto Arthur Pet, and Charles Iackman, for a voyage by them to be made, for discouery of Cathay, 1580. in forme following.

In the Name of God Almighty, and euermlasting, Amen. This writing for commission Tripartite, made the twentieth day of May Anno Dom. 1580. and in the 22. yeere of the reigne of our Souereigne Lady Elizabeth by the grace of God, Queene of England, France and Ireland, defender of the faith, &c. Betwene sir Rowland Hayward knight, and George Barne, Aldermen of the Citie of London, and gouernours of the company of English Merchants, for discouery of new trades, for the behoofe, and in the name of the said company, on the first partie, and Arthur Pet of Ratcliffe, in the Countie Middlesex, Captaine, Master, and chiefe ruler of the good barke, called the George of London, of the burthen of 40. tunnes, or thereabouts, on the second partie, and Charles Iackman of Popler, in the said Countie of Middlesex, Captaine, Master and ruler of the good barke, called the William of London, of the burthen of 20. tunnes, or thereabouts, (which barcks are now riding at anker in the riuer of Thames against Limehouse) on the third partie: witnesseth, that the said Gouernours, and company haue hired the saide Arthur Pet, to serue in the said barke, called the George, with nine men and a boy: And likewise the said Charles Iackman, to serue in the said barke, called the William, with nine men and a boy, for a voyage by them to be made by Gods grace, for search and discoueries of a passage by sea from hence by Boroughs streights, and the Island Vaigats, Eastwards, to the countreys or dominions of the mightie Prince, the Emperour of Cathay, and in the same vnto the Cities of Cambalu and Quinsay, or to either of them.

streets.

The which passage (vpon authoritie of writers, and great reason) is conteinued to bee from the Vaigats Eastwards, according to the description in plat of spirall lines, made by master William Burrough, whereof either of the saide Arthur Pet, and Charles Iackman, haue one deliuered vnto them, and also one other sailing carde, and a blanke plat for either of them. But if it should not be in all points, according to that description, yet we hope that the conteinued or firme land of Asia doth not stretch it selfe so farre Southwards, but that there may be found a sea passeable by it, betwene the latitude of 70. and 80. degrees. And therefore we haue appointed you with these two barcks to make triall of the same: wishing you both to ioyne in friendship together, as most deere friends and brothers, to all purposes and effects, to the furtherance and orderly performing of the same voyage. And likewise order your companies, that they of the one barke may haue such loue and care, to helpe and succour them of the other, as most deere friends and brothers would doe: so as it may appeare, that though they be two barcks, and two companies, (which is so appointed for your greater comfort and assurance) yet that you are wholly of one minde, and bend your selues to the bettermost of your powers, to performe the thing that you are both employed for.

Doe you obserue good order in your dayly seruice, and pray vnto God, so shall you prosper the better.

We would haue you to meete often together, to talke, conferre, consult, and agree how, and by what meanes you may best performe this purposed voyage, according to our intents. And at such meeting we thinke it requisite, that you call vnto you your mates, and also Nicholas Chanceler, (whom wee doe appoint as merchant, to keepe account of the merchandize you shall buy or sell, barter or change) to the ende that whatsoeuer God should dispose of either of you, yet they may haue some instructions and knowledge howe to deale in your place, or places. And of all your assemblies and consultations together, and the substance of matter you shal at euery time agree vpon, we would haue you to note them in the paper bookes that wee giue you for that purpose, vnto each barke one. We do appoint Arthur Pet in the George, as Admirall, to meate the flagge in the maine top, and Charles Iackman in the William, as Viceadmirall. For good orders to be taken for your good and orderly keeping of company together, which we wish may be such, as you should neuer lose sight the one of the other, except by both your consents, to discouer about an Island, or in some riuer, when and where you may certainly appoint to meete together againe, wee referre the same to your discretions.

And now for your good direction in this voyage, we would haue you with the next good winde and weather, that God shall send thereunto meete and conuenient, after the 22. day of this present moneth of May, saile from this riuer of Thames, to the coast of Finmarke, to the North Cape there, or to the Wardhouse, and from thence direct your course to haue sight of Willoughbies land, and from it passe along to the Noua Zemla, keeping the same landes alwayes in your sight on your starboordside (if conveniently you may) to the ende you may discover, whether the same Willoughbies land be continent and firme land with Noua Zembla, or not: notwithstanding we would not haue you to entangle your selues in any Bay, or otherwise, so that it might hinder your speedy proceeding to the Island Vaigats.

The land of Samocda.

And when you come to Vaigats, we would haue you to get sight of the maine land of Samocda, which is ouer against the South part of the same Island, and from thence with Gods permission, to passe Eastwards alongst the same coast, keeping it alwayes in your sight (if conveniently you may) vntill you come to the mouth of the riuer Ob, and when you come vnto it, passe ouer the said riuers mouth vnto the border of land, on the Eastside of the same (without any stay to be made for searching inwardly in the same riuer) and being in sight of the same Easterly land, doe you in Gods name proceed alongst by it, from thence Eastwards, keeping the same alwayes on your starboordside in sight, if you may, and follow the tract of it, whether it incline Southerly or Northerly (as at times it may do both) vntill you come to the Countrey of Cathay, or the dominion of that mightie Emperour.

And if God prosper your voyage with such good successe, that you may attaine to the same, doe you seeke by all meanes you can to arriue to the Cities Cambalu, and Quinsay, or to the one of them. But if it happen that you cannot conveniently come to either of those places, or shalbe driuen to remaine & winter in some other port or place of his dominion, do you seeke by all meanes possible to winne fauour and liking of the people, by gifts and friendly demeanes towards them, and not to offer violence, or do wrong to any people or nation whatsoeuer, but therein to be innocent as doves, yet wilie as serpents, to auoid mischief, and defend you from hurt. And when you shall haue gotten friendship through your discrete ordering of your selues, towards the people, doe you learne of them what you can of their Prince, and shewe them one of the Queenes Maiesties letters, which she sendeth with you (by either of you one, made of one substance and effect, for ech of you particularly) written in Latine, whereunto her Maiestie hath subscribed, and caused her signet scale to be set, the effect of the same letters you haue also written in English, for your owne vnderstanding thereof.

The same her Maiesties letters you shall procure to deliuer vnto the same mightie Prince, or Gouvernour, with some present to be giuen, such as you shall thinke meete and conuenient, vnto your selues in all points according to the effect of the same letters, and procure againe from the same Prince, his letters accordingly.

And if God so prosper your voyage, that you may this Summer passe the Streights, and compass about the Northernmost land of Asia, vnto the countrey of Cathay, or dominion of that mightie Prince, and wintering in it, may obtaine from him his letters of priuiledge against the next yeeres spring, you may then after your first setting forth, search and discover somewhat further then you had discovered before your wintering, so farre as you shall thinke conuenient, with regard had, and alwayes provided, that you may returne home hither, to giue vs aduise of your proceedings the same Summer, or before the sharpenes or extremitie of winter ouertake you.

And if it happen you cannot this Summer attaine to the border of Cathay, and yet find the land beyond the Ob, to stretch it selfe Easterly, with the sea adioynning vnto it nauigable, doe you then proceed on your discovery (as before said) alongst the same continent, so farre as you can this Summer, hauing care in the trauel to finde out some conuenient harborow and place, where you may winter: and when you thinke it conuenient, put your selfe to wintering, where if you happen to finde people, you shall deale with them, as we haue before aduised you to do with the people of Cathay, &c. And if you can learne that they haue a prince or chiefe gouernour, do you procure to deliuer vnto the same Prince or gouernour one of the Queenes Maiesties letters, as before said, and seeke to obtaine againe his letters accordingly. If you so happen to winter & obtaine letters of priuiledge, finding the countrey and people, with the commodities to be such, that by vnting trade thither with the people, and for the commodities, it may be beneficial vnto vs (as we hope you may) the same wil be some good liking vnto vs: notwithstanding we would haue you the next Summer (by the grace of God) at your first setting out of your wintering harborow, proceed alongst that tract of land to Cathay, if you see likelihood to passe it (for that is the Countrey that we chiefly desire to discover) and seeing you are fully victualed for two yerres and upwards, which you may very wel make to serue you for two yerres and a halfe, though you finde no other help, you may therefore be the bolder to aduenture in proceeding vpon your discovery: which if you do, we doubt not, but you shall attchieue the Countrey of Cathay, & deliuer to the prince there, one of her Maiesties letters, bringing from thence the same princes letters answerable: and so in the yeere of our Lord 1582. returne home with good newes, and glad tidings, not onely vnto vs the aduenturers in this voyage, but also to our whole Countrey and nation, which God graunt you may do, Amen.

But

But if it happen that the land of Asia, from beyond the river Ob, extend it selfe Northwards to 80. degrees, or neerer the pole, whereby you finde it to leade you into that extremitie, that small or no hope may be looked for, to saile that way to Cathay, doe you notwithstanding followe the tract of the same land, as farre as you can discover this Summer, having care to finde out by the way a convenient place for you to Winter in, the which (if you may discover the same lande of Asia this Summer to extend it selfe to 80. degrees of latitude, and upwards or to 85. degrees) we wish then that the same your wintering place may be in the river of Ob, or as neere the same river as you can, and finding in such wintering place, people, be they Samoeds, Yowgorians, or Molgomzes, &c. doe you gently entreat with them as aforesaide, and if you can learne that they haue a prince or chiefe gouernour amongst them, doe you deliuer him one of her Maiesties letters, and procure thereof an answer accordingly: do you procure to barter & exchange with the people, of the merchandise and commodities that you shall carry with you, for such commodities as you shall finde them to haue, &c.

The Quenes
letters.

If you so happen to winter, we would haue you the next Summer to discover into the river Ob, so farre as conveniently you may: And if you shall finde the same river (which is reported to be wide or broad) to be also navigable and pleasant for you, to trauell farre into, happely you may come to the citie Siberia, or to some other towne or place habited vpon or neere the border of it, and thereby haue liking to winter out the second winter: vse you therein your discretions.

Siberia.

But if you finde the said river Ob to be sholde, or not such as you may conveniently trauell in with your barkes, do you then the next summer returne backe through Boroughs streights: And from that part of Noua Zembla, adioyning to the same streights, doe you come alongst the tract of that coast Westwards, keeping it on the starboord side, and the same alwayes in sight, if conveniently you may, until you come to Willoughbies land, if outwards bound you shall not happen to discover and trie whether the said Willoughbies land ioyne continent with the same Noua Zembla, or not. But if you shall then proue them to be one firme and continent, you may from Noua Zembla direct your course vnto the said Willoughbies land, as you shall thinke good, and as you may most conveniently: and from Willoughbies land you shall proceed Westwards alongst the tract of it, (though it incline Northerly) euen so farre as you may or can trauell, having regard that in convenient time you may returne home hither to London for wintering.

land.

And for your orderly passing in this voyage, and making obseruations in the same, we referre you to the instructions giuen by M. William Burrough, whereof one copie is annexed vnto the first part of this Indenture vnder our seale, for you Arthur Pet, another copie of it is annexed to the second part of this Indenture, vnder our seale also, for you Charles Iackman, and a third copy thereof is annexed vnto the third part of this Indenture, remaining with vs the saide companie, sealed and subscribed by you the said Arthur Pet, and Charles Iackman.

And to the obseruing of all things contained in this Commission (so neere as God will permit me grace thereunto) I the said Arthur Pet doe couenant by these presents to performe them, and euery part and partcell thereof. And I the said Charles Iackman doe for my part likewise couenant by these presents to performe the same, and euery part thereof, so neere as God will giue me grace thereunto.

And in witnes thereof these Indentures were sealed and deliuered accordingly, the day and yeere first aboue written. Thus the Lorde God Almighty sende you a prosperous voyage, with happie successe and safe returne, Amen.

Instructions and notes very necessary and needfull to be obserued in the purposed voyage for discovery of Cathay Eastwards, by Arthur Pet, and Charles Iackman: giuen by M. William Burrough. 1580.

When you come to Orfordnesse, if the winde doe serue you to goe a seaboard the lands, doe you set off from thence, and note the time diligently of your being against the saide Nesse, turning then your glasse, whereby you intende to keepe your continuall watch, and appoint such course as you shall thinke good, according as the wind seruethe you: and fro that time forwards continually (if your ship be lose, vnder saile, a hull or tric) do you at the end of euery 4. glassees at the least (except calme) sound with your diuclin lead, and note diligently what depth you finde, and also the ground. But if it happen by swiftnes of the shippes way, or otherwise, that you cannot get ground, yet note what depth you did proue, and could finde no ground (this note is to be obserued all your voyage, as well outwards as homewards.) But when you come vpon any coast, or doe finde any sholde bank in the sea, you are then to vse your leade oftener, as you shall thinke it requisite, noting diligently the order of your depth, and the deeping and sholding. And so likewise doe you note the depths into harboroughs, rivers, &c.

ning, and other observations.

And in keeping your dead reckoning, it is very necessary that you doe note at the ende of every fourre glasses, what way the shippe hath made (by your best proofes to be used) and howe her way hath benethrough the water, considering withall for the sagge of the sea, to leeward, according-ly as you shall finde it growen: and also to note the depth, and what things worth the noting hap-pened in that time, with also the winde vpon what point you finde it then, and of what force or strength it is, and what sailes you beare.

But if you should omit to note those things at the end of every fourre glasses, I would not haue you to let it slip any longer time, then to note it diligently at the end of every watch, or eight glasses at the farthest.

Doe you diligently obserue the latitude as often, and in as many places as you may possible, and also the variation of the Compasse (especially when you may bee at shoare vpon any land) noting the same obseruations truely, and the place and places where, and the time and times when you do the same.

For noting the shape and view of the land at first discovery, &c.

When you come to haue sight of any coast or land whatsoeuer, doe you presently set the same with your sailing Compasse, howe it beares off you, noting your iudgement how farre you thinke it from you, drawing also the forme of it in your booke, howe it appeares vnto you, noting dili-gently how the highest or notablest part thereof beareth off you, and the extreames also in sight of the same land at both ends, distinguishing them by letters, A. B. C. &c. Afterwards when you haue sailed 1. 2. 3. or 4. glasses (at the most) noting diligently what way your barke hath made, and vpon what point of the Compasse, do you againe set that first land seene, or the parts thereof, that you first obserued, if you can well perceiue or discern them, and likewise such other notable points or signes, vpon the land that you may then see, and could not perceiue at the first time, distinguishing it also by letters from the other, and drawing in your booke the shape of the same land, as it appeareth vnto you, and so the third time, &c.

And also in passing alongst by any and every coast, doe you drawe the maner of biting in of euery Bay, and entrance of euery harborow or rivers mouth, with the lying out of euery point, or headland, (vnto the which you may giue apt names at your pleasure) and make some marke in drawing the forme and border of the same, where the high cliffs are, and where lowe lande is, whether sande, hills, or woods, or whatsoeuer, not omitting to note any thing that may be sensible and apparant to you, which may serue to any good purpose. If you carefully with great heede and diligence, note the obseruations in your booke, as aforesaid, and afterwards make demon-stration thereof in your plat, you shall thereby perceiue howe farre the land you first sawe, or the parts thereof obserued, was then from you, and consequently of all the rest: and also how farre the one part was from the other, and vpon what course or point of the Compasse the one lieth from the other.

For obseruing of tides and currents.

And when you come vpon any coast where you find floods and ebs, doe you diligently note the time of the highest and lowest water in euery place, and the flake or still water of full sea, and lowe water, and also which way the flood doeth runne, how the tides doe set, how much water it birt, and what force the tide hath to driue a ship in one houre, or in the whole tide, as neere as you can iudge it, and what difference in time you finde betwene the running of the flood, and the ebbe. And if you finde vpon any coast the current to runne alwayes one way, doe you also note the same duely, how it setteth in euery place, and obserue what force it hath to driue a ship in one houre, &c.

places within compasse of

Item, as often and when as you may conueniently come vpon any land, to make obseruation for the latitude and variation, &c. doe you also (if you may) with your instrument, for trying of di-stances, obserue the platfoyme of the place, and of as many things (worth the noting) as you may then conueniently see from time to time. These orders if you diligently obserue, you may there-by perfectly set downe in the plats, that I haue given you your whole trauell, and description of your discovery, which is a thing that will be chiefly expected at your hands. But withall you may not forget to note as much as you can learne, vnderstand or perceiue of the maner of the soile, or fruitfulness of euery place and countrey you shall come in, and of the maner, shape, attire and disposition of the people, and of the commodities they haue, and what they most couet and de-sire of the commodities you carry with you. It behoueth you to giue trifling things vnto such peo-ple as you shall happen to see, and to offer them all courtellie and friendship you may or can, to winne their loue and fauour towards you, not doing or offering them any wrong or hurt. And though you should be offered wrong at their handes, yet not to reuenge the same lightly, but by all meanes possible seeke to winne them, yet alwayes dealing wisely and with such circumspection that you keepe your selues out of their dangers.

Thus I beseech God Almighty to blesse you, and prosper your voyage with good and happie successe, and send you safely to returne home againe, to the great ioy and reioyning of the aduenturers with you, and all your friends, and our whole countrey, Amen.

Certaine briefe aduises giuen by Master Dee, to Arthur Pet, and Charles Iackman, to bee obserued in their Northeasterne discoverie,

Anno 1580.

IF we reckon from Wardhouse to Colgoiue Island 400. miles for almost 20. degrees difference onely of longitude very neere East and West, and about the latitude of 70. degrees and two thirde parts: from Colgoiue to Vaigats 200. miles for 10. degrees difference onely in longitude, at 70. degrees of latitude also: from Vaigats to the promontorie Tabin 60. degrees difference of longitude (the whole course, or shortest distance being East and West) in the latitude likewise of 70. degrees, maketh 1200. miles: then is summa totalis from Wardhouse to Tabin 600. leagues, or 1800. English miles. Therefore allowing in a discovery voiage for one day with another but 50. English miles, it is euident that from Wardhouse to Tabin, the course may be sailed easily in sixe and thirtie dayes: but by Gods helpe it may be finished in much shorter time, both by helpe of winde prosperous, and light continuall for the time requisite thereunto.

When you are past Tabin, or come to the longitude of 142. degrees, as your chart sheweth, or two, three, foure, or five degrees further Easterly, it is probable you shall finde the land on your right hand runne much Southerly and Eastward, in which course you are like either to fall into the mouth of the famous riuer Oecharides, or some other, which yet I coniecture to passe by the renowned Citie of Cambalu, and the mouth to be in latitude about 50. or 52. degrees, and within 300. or 400. miles of Cambalu it selfe, being in the latitude of 45. degrees Southerly of the said riuers mouth, or els that you shall trend about the very Northerne and most Easterly point of all Asia, passing by the prouince Ania, and then to the latitude of 46. degrees, keeping still the land in view on your right hand (as neere as you may with safetie) you may enter into Quinsay haue, being the chiefe citie in the Northern China, as I terme it for distinctions sake, from the other better known.

And in or about either or both of these two warme places, you may to great good purpose bee occupied the whole winter, after your arriuall in those quarters, as sometime by sea, sometime in notable fresh riuers, sometime in discreet view and noting downe the situation of the Cities within land, &c. and euer assaying to come by some charts or maps of the countrey, made and printed in Cathay or China, and by some of their booke likewise for language, &c. You may also haue opportunity to saile ouer to Iapan Island, where you shall finde Christian men, Iesuits of many countreys of Christendome some, and perhaps some Englishmen, at whose handes you may haue great instruction and aduise for you affaires in hand.

Notes in writing, besides more priuie by mouth, that were giuen by M. Richard Hakluyt of Eiton in the Countie of Hereford, Esquire, Anno 1580: to M. Arthur Pet, and to M. Charles Iackman, sent by the Merchants of the Moscouie companie for the discovery of the Northeast straight, not altogether vnfit for some other enterprises of discovery, hereafter to be taken in hand.

What respect of Islands is to be had, and why.

WHEREAS the Portugals haue in their course to their Indies in the Southeast, certaine ports and fortifications to thrust into by the way, to diuers great purposes: so you are to see what Islands, and what ports you had neede to haue by the way in your course to the Northeast. For which cause I with you to enter into consideration of the matter, and to note all the Islands, and to set them downe in plat, to two ends: that is to say, That we may deuise to take the benefit by them, And also foresee how by them the Sauages or ciuill Princes may in any sort annoy vs in our purposed trade that way.

And for that the people to the which we purpose in this voyage to go, be no Christians, it were good that the masse of our commodities were alwayes in our owne disposition, and not at the will of others. Therefore it were good that we did seeke out some small Island in the Scythian sea, where we might plant, fortifie, and staple safely, from whence (as time should serue) wee might feed those heathen nations with our commodities without cloying them, or without venturing our whole masse in the bowels of their countrey.

And to which Island (if neede were, and if wee should thinke so good) wee might allure the Northeast naue, the naue of Cambalu to resort with their commodities to vs there planted, and stapling there.

And if such an Island might be found so standing as might shorten our course, and so standing, as that the naue of Cambalu, or other those parties might conveniently saile vnto without their dislike in respect of distance, then would it fall out well. For so, besides lesse danger and more safety, our ships might there unlade and lade againe, and returne the selfe same summer to the ports of England or of Norway.

And if such an Island may be for the stapling of our commodities, to the which they of Cambalu would not saile, yet we might, having ships there, imploy them in passing betwene Cambalu and that stapling place.

Respect of hauens and harborowes.

And if no such Islands may bee found in the Scythian sea toward the firme of Asia, then are you to search out the ports that be about Noua Zembla, all along the tract of that land, to the end you may winter there the first yere, if you be let by contrary winds, and to the end that if we may in short time come vnto Cambalu, and unlade and set saile againe for returne without venturing there at Cambalu, that you may on your way come as farre in returne as a port about Noua Zembla: that the summer following, you may the sooner be in England for the more speedy vent of your East commodities, and for the speedier discharge of your Mariners: if you cannot go forward and backe in one selfe same Summer.

And touching the tract of the land of Noua Zembla, toward the East out of the circle Arctike in the more temperate Zone, you are to haue regard: for if you finde the soyle planted with people, it is like that in time an ample vent of our warme wollen clothes may be found. And if there be no people at all there to be found, then you shall specially note what plentie of whales, and of other fish is to be found there, to the ende we may turne our newe found land fishing or Island fishing, or our whale fishing that way, for the ayde and comfort of our nexte trades to the Northeast to the coasts of Asia.

Respect of fish and certaine other things.

And if the aire may be found vpon that tract temperate, and the soile yeelding wood, water, land and grasse, and the seas fish, then we may plant on that maine the offalls of our people, as the Portugals do in Brasill, and so they may in our fishing in our passage, and diuers wayes perceiue commoditie to England by harbouring and victualling vs.

And it may be, that the inland there may yeeld masts, pitch, tarre, hempe, and all things for the Naue, as plentifully as Eastland doth.

The Islands to be noted with their commodities and wants.

To note the Islands, whether they be hie land or low land, mountaine or flat, grauelly, clay, chalkie, or of what soile, woody or not woody, with springs and riuers or not, and what wilde beastes they haue in the same.

And whether there seeme to be in the same apt matter to build withall, as stone free or rough, and stone to make lime withall, and wood or reafe to burne the same withall.

To note the goodnesse or the badnesse of the hauens and harborowes in the Islands.

If a straight be found, what is to be done, and what great importance it may be of.

And if there be a straight in the passage into the Scythian seas, the same is specially and with great regard to be noted, especially if the same straight be narrow and to be kept. It say it is to be noted as a thing that doeth much import: for what prince soeuer shall be Lord of the same, and shall possesse the same, as the king of Denmarke doth possesse the straight of Denmarke, he onely shall haue the trade out of these regions into the Northeast parts of the world for himselfe, and for his priuate profit, or for his subiects onely, or to enioy wonderfull benefit of the toll of the same, like as the king of Denmarke doth enioy of his straights, by suffering the merchants of other Princes to passe that way. If any such straight be found, the eleuation, the high or lowe land, the hauens neere, the length of the straights, and all other such circumstances are to be set downe for many purposes: and all the Mariners in the voyage are to be sworn to keepe close all such things, that other Princes perceiue vs not of the same, after our returne vpon the disclosing of the Mariners, if any such thing should hap.

Which way the Sauage may bee made able to purchase our cloth and other their wants.

If you find any Island or maine land populous, and that the same people hath need of cloth, then are you to deuise what commodities they haue to purchase the same withall.

If they be poore, then are you to consider of the soile, and how by any possibilitie the same may be made to enrich them, that hereafter they may haue something to purchase the cloth withall.

If you enter into any maine by portable riuers, and shall find any great woods, you are to note what kind of timber they be of, that we may know whether they are for pitch, tarre, mallets, deal-board, clapboard, or for building of ships or houses, for so, if the people haue no vse of them, they may be brought perhaps to vse.

Not to venture the losse of any one man.

You must haue great care to preserve your people, since your number is so small, and not to venture any one man in any wise.

To bring home besides merchandize certaine trifles.

Bring home with you (if you may) from Cambalu or other ciuill place, one or other yong man, although you leaue one for him.

Also the fruites of the Countreys if they will not of themselves dure, drie them and so preserve them.

And bring with you the kernels of peares and apples, and the stones of such stonefruits as you shall find there.

Also the seeds of all strange herbs & flowers, for such seeds of fruits and herbs comming from another part of the world, and so far off, will delight the faulcie of many for the strangenesse, and for that the same may grow, and continue the delight long time.

If you arrive at Cambalu or Quinsay, to bring thence the mappe of that countrey, for so shall you haue the perfect description, which is to great purpose.

To bring thence some old printed booke, to see whether they haue had print there before it was deuised in Europe as some write.

To note their force by sea and by land.

If you arrive in Cambalu or Quinsay, to take a speciall view of their Maie, and to note the force, greatnesse, maner of building of them, the sailes, the tackles, the ankers, the furniture of them, with ordinance, armour, and munition.

Also, to note the force of the walls and bulwarks of their cities, their ordinance, and whether they haue any caliuers, and what powder and shot.

To note what armour they haue.

What swords.

What pikes, halberds and bills.

What horses of force, and what light horses they haue.

And so throughout to note the force of the Countrey both by sea and by land.

Things to be marked to make coniectures by.

To take speciall note of their buildings, and of the ornaments of their houses within.

Take a speciall note of their apparell and furniture, and of the substance that the same is made of, of which a Merchant may make a gesse as well of their commoditie, as also of their wants.

To note their Shoppes and Warehouses, and with what commodities they abound, the price also.

To see their Shambles, and to view all such things as are brought into the Markets, for so you shall soone see the commodities, and the maner of the people of the inland, and so give a gesse of many things.

To note their fields of graine, and their trees of fruite, and how they abound or not abound in one and other, and what plenty or scarcitie of fish they haue.

Things

Things to be caried with you, whereof more or lesse is to bee caried for a shew of our commodities to be made.

KArticles of all orient colours, specially of stamell, broadcloth of orient colours also.

Points of all sorts of silke, threed, and leather, of all maner of colours.

Shooes of Spanish leather of diuers colours, of diuers length, cut and vncut.

Shooes of other leather.

Veluet shooes and pantophles.

These shooes and pantophles to be sent this time, rather for a shew then for any other cause.

Purses knit, and of leather.

Nightcaps knit, and other.

A garnish of pewter for a shew of a bent of that English commoditie, bottles, flagons, spoones, &c. of that mettall.

Glasses of English making.

Venice glasses.

Looking glasses for women, great and faire.

Small dials a few for prooffe, although there they will not hold the order they do here.

Spectacles of the common sort.

Others of Christall trimmed with siluer, and otherwise.

Power glasses.

Combes of bore.

Combes of Tuozie.

Combes of hozie.

Linnen of diuers sorts.

Handkerchiefs with silke of seuerall colours wrought.

Glazen eyes to ride with against dust.

Knives in sheaths both single and double, of good edge.

Needles great and small of euery kind.

Buttons greater and smaller, with moulds of leather and not of wood, and such as be durable of double silke, and that of sundry colours.

Bores with weights for gold, and of euery kind of the coine of gold, good and bad, to shew that the people here vse weight and measure, which is a certaine shew of wisdom, and of certaine government settled here.

All the seuerall silver coyne of our English monies, to be caried with you to be shewed to the gouernours at Cambalu, which is a thing that shall in silence speake to wise men more then you imagine.

Locks and keyes, hinges, bolts, halpes, &c. great and small of excellent workmanship, whereof if bent may be, hereafter we shall set our subiects in worke, which you must haue in great regard. For in finding ample vent of any thing that is to be wrought in this realme, is more woorth to our people besides the gaine of the merchant, then Christchurch, Wyndwell, the Sauoy, and all the Hospitals of England.

For banketting on shipboord persons of credite.

First, the sweetest perfumes to set vnder hatches to make y place sweet against their coming aboard, if you arrive at Cambalu, Quinsy, or in any such great citie, & not among Sauages.

¶ Armelade,

Parmelade.

Sucker.

Comfets of diuers kinds made of purpose by him that is most excellent, that shal not dissolue.

Pyunes damaske.

Dried peares.

Smallnuts.

Olives to make them taste their wine.

The apple Iohn that dureth two yeres to make shew of our fruits.

Pullocke.

} } Sacke.

Vials of good sweet waters, and casting bottels of glasses to besprinkle the ghesks withall, after their coming aboard.

Suger to vse with their wine if they will.

The sweet oyle of Zante, and excellent french vineger, and a fine kind of Bisket steeped in the same do make a banquetting dish, and a little Sugar cast in it cooleth and comforteth, and refresheth the spirits of man.

Cynamom water

} is to be had with you to make a shew of by taste, and also to comfort your } sticke in the voyage.

Imperiall water

With these and such like, you may banquet where you arriue the greater and best persons.

Or with the gift of these Parmelades in small boxes, or small vials of sweet waters you may gratifie by way of gift, or you may make a merchandize of them.

The Mappe of England and of London.

Take with you the mappe of England set out in faire colours, one of the biggest foze I meane, to make shew of your countrey from whence you come.

And also the large Mappe of London to make shew of your Citie. And let the riuer be drawen full of Ships of all foyses, to make the more shew of your great trade and traffike in trade of merchandize.

Ortelius booke of Mappes.

If you take Ortelius booke of Mappes with you to marke all these Regions, it were not a misse: and if need were, to present the same to the great Can, for it would be to a Prince of marvellous account.

The booke of the attire of all Nations.

Such a booke caried with you and bestowed in gift would be much esteemed, as I perswade my selfe.

Bookes.

If any man will lend you the new Verball and such Bookes as make shew of herbes, plants, trees, fishes, foules and beasts of these regions, it may much delight the great Can, and the nobilitie, and also their merchants to haue the view of them: for all things in these partes so much differing from the things of those regions, since they may not be here to see them, by meane of the distance, yet to see those things in a shadow, by this meane will delight them.

The booke of Rates.

Take with you the booke of Rates, to the ende you may picke all those commodities there specified, that you shall chance to find in Cambalu, in Quinsay, or in any part of the East, where you shall chance to be.

Parchment.

Rowles of Parchment, for that we may vent much without hurt to the Realme, and it keth in small rounge.

Glew.

To carie Glew, for that we haue plentie and want vent.

Red Oker for Painters.

To seeke vent because we haue great mines of it, and haue no vent.

Sope of both kinds.

To try what vent it may haue, for that we make of both kinds, and may perhaps make more.

Saffron.

Saffron.

To try what vent you may haue of Saffron, because this realme yeelds the best of the world, and for the tillage and other labours may set the poore greatly in worke to their reliefe.

Aquauiua.

By new deuises wonderful quantities may be made here, and therefore to seeke the vent.
Blacke Conies skins.

To try the vent at Cambalu, for that it lieth towards the North, and for that we abound with the commoditie, and may spare it.

Threed of all colours,

The vent thereof may set our people in worke.

Copper Spurres and Hawkes bels.

To see the vent for it may set our people in worke.

A note and Caueat for the Merchant.

That before you offer your commodities to sale, you indeuour to learne what commodities the countrey there hath. For if you bring thither velvet, taffeta, spice, or any such commoditie that you your selfe desire to lade your selfe home with, you must not sell yours deare, least hereafter you purchase theirs not so cheape as you would.

Seeds for sale.

Care with you for that purpose all sorts of garden seeds, as well of sweete strawing herbs and of flowers, as also of pot herbes and all sorts for roots, &c.

Lead of the first melting.

Lead of the second melting of the slags.

To make triall of the vent of Lead of all kinds.

English iron, and wier of iron and copper.

To try the sale of the same.

Brimstone.

To try the vent of the same, because we abound with it made in the Realme.

Antimonie a Minerall.

To see whether they haue any ample vse there for it, for that we may lade whole nauies of it and haue no vse of it vntill it be for some small portion in founding of bels, or a litle that the Alchymists vse: of this you may haue two sortes at the Apothecaries.

Tinder boxes with Steele, Flint & Matches and Tinder, the Matches to be made of Iuniper to auoid the offence of Brimstone.

To trie and make the better sale of Brimstone by shewing the vse.

Candles of Waxe to light.

A painted Bellows.

For that perhaps they haue not the vse of them.

A pot of cast iron.

To try the sale, for that it is a naturall commoditie of this Realme.

All maner of edge tooles.

To be sold there or to the lesse ciuill people by the way where you shall touch.

What I would haue you there to remember.

To note specially what excellent dying they vse in these regions, and therefore to note their garments and ornaments of houses: and to see their Die houses and the Materials & Simples that they vse about the same, and to bring musters and shewes of the colours and of the materials, for that it may serue this clothing realme to great purpose.

To take with you for your owne vse.

All maner of engines to take fish and foule.

To take with you those things that be in perfection of goodnesse.

For as the goodnesse now at the first may make your commodities in credit in time to come: so false and Sophisticate commodities shall drawe you and all your commodities into contempt and ill opinion.

A letter of Gerardus Mercator, written to M. Richard Hakluyt of Oxford, touching the intended discouerie of the Northeast passage, An. 1580.

Itera tua (vir humanissime) 19. Iunij demum mihi reddite fuerunt: vehementer dolui visis illis tantam, non modo temporis, sed multo magis tempestiua instructionis iacturam factam esse. Oportuit: Arthurum Pet de quibusdam nou leuibis ante suum discessum pramonitum fuisse. Expeditissima sane per Orientem in Cathaiaum est nauigatio: & saepe miratus sum, eam scilicet inchoatam, desertam fuisse, velis in Occidentem translatis, postquam plus quam dimidium itineris vestri iam notum haberent. Nam post Insulam Vaigats, & Noua Zembla continuo ingens sequitur Sinus, quem ab ortu Tabin immane promontorium complectitur. In hunc medium maxima illabuntur flumina, quae vniuersam Regionem Sericam perluentia, utque existimo, in intima continentis usque magnis nauigijs peruia, facillimam ratione exhibent qualibet merces ex Cataio, Mangi, Mien, caeterisque circumfusus regnis contrahendi, atque in Angliam deportandi. Caeterum cum non temere eam nauigationem intermissam crederem, opinabar ab Imperatore Russorum & Moscouiae obstaculum aliquod interiectum fuisse. Quod si verum cum illius gratia vltior illac nauigatio detur, suaderem profecto non primum Tabin promontorium quare, atque explorare, sed Sinum hunc atque flumina, in istis; portum aliquem commodissimum, stationemque Anglicis Mercatoribus deligere, ex quo deinceps maiore opportunitate, minoribusque periculis Tabin promontorium, & totius Cathai circumnauigatio indagari posset. Esse autem ingens in Septentrionem excurrentis promontorium Tabin, non ex Plinio tantum, verum & alijs scriptoribus, & tabulis aliquot (licet rudius depictis) certum habeo. Polum etiam Magnetis haud longe vltra Tabin situm esse, certis Magnetis obseruationibus didici: circa quem & Tabin plurimos esse scopulos, difficiliumque & periculosam nauigationem existimo: difficiliorem tamen ad Cathaiaum accessum fore opinor, ea qua nunc via in Occidentem tentatur. Propinquior enim fiet haec nauigatio polo Magnetis, quam altera, ad quem propius accedere non puto tutum esse. Quia vero Magnes alium quam Mundi polum habet, quo ex omni parte respicit: quod propius ad eum acceditur, eo directorium illud Nauticum magnetis virtute imbutum, magis a Septentrione deniar, nunc in Occidentem, nunc in Orientem, prout quis vel orientior, vel occidentior est illo Meridiano, qui per vtrumque polum Magnetis, & Mundi ducitur. Mirabilis est haec varietas, & quae nauigantem plurimum fallere potest, nisi hanc Magnetis inconstantiam norit, & ad poli eleuationem per instrumenta subinde respiciat. In hac re si non sit instructus D. Arthurus, aut ea sit dexteritate, ut deprehenso errore eum inuenire & castigare possit, timeo ne deuias faciat ambages, tempus illum fallat, & semper acto negotio, a gelu praecipietur: Aiunt enim Sinum illum fortius quorannis congelari. Quod si contingat: hoc quod consultius mihi visum fuit, proximum illi erit refugium, vt in eo sinu, istique fluminibus quae dixi, portum quaerat, & per Legatum aliquem, cum magno Cathai, nomine Serenissimae Reginae notitiam, amicitiamque contrahat: quam opinor Maximo orbis Imperatori gratam, imo gratissimam fore propter remotissima commercia. Opinor ab ostijs Bautisi & Oechardi fluminum maximorum, usque ad Cambalu Regiam summam Chami, non vltra 300. miliaria Germanica esse, & iter sumendum per Ezinam urbem regni Tangur, quae 100. tantum miliarijs Germanicis ab ostijs distare videtur, & paret Magno Chai.

Valde optarem cognoscere, quam alte communiter exurgat aestus maris in eo Moscouiae portu, quem vestri pro statione habent, & in alijs versus orientem locis usque ad Tabin. Item, an mare in hoc districtu semper in vnam partem, videlicet Orientem, aut Occidentem fluat, an vero pro ratione aestuum fluat, & resuat, in medio inquam canali, hoc est, an ibi sex horis occasum, & iterum sex in ortum fluat, an vero semper in eandem partem: aliae enim speculationes non parum vtilis hinc dependent. Idem optarem a D. Frobiscero in occidentem obseruari. The same in English.

SIR, I receiued your letters the 19. of June: it grieved me much that vpon the sight of them the time being spent, I could not giue any conuenient instructions: I wish Arthur Pec had bene informed befoze his departure of some speciall points. The voyage to Cathaio by the East, is doubtlesse very easie and short, and I haue oftentimes marvelled, that being so happily begun, it hath bene left off, and the course changed into the West, after that more then halfe of your voyage was discovered. For beyond the Island of Vaigars and Noua Zembla, there foloweth presently a great Bale, which on the left side is inclosed with the mightie promontorie Tabin. Into the mids hereof there fall great riuers, which passing through the whole countrey of Serica, and being as I thinke nauigable with great vessels into y heart of the continent, may be an easie means whereby to traffique for all maner of merchantize, and transport them out of Cathaio, Mangi, Mien, and other kingdoms thereabouts into England. But considering with my selfe that that navigation was not intermitted, but vpon great occasion, I thought that the Emperoz of Russia and Hoscouitz had hindered the proceeding thereof. If so be that with his grace and fauour a further navigation may be made, I would counsell them certainly not first to seeke out the promontorie Tabin, but to search this baie and riuers aforesayd, and in them to picke and chuse out some conuenient port and harborough for the English merchants, from whence after ward with more opportunitie and lesse perill, the promontorie Tabin and all the coast of Cathaio may bee discovered. And that there is such a huge promontorie called Tabin, I am certainly perswaded not onely out of Plinie, but also other writers, and some Maps (though some what rudely drawn:) and that the pole of the Loadstone is not farre beyond Tabin, I haue learned by the certaine obseruations of the Loadstone: about which pole and Tabin I thinke there are very many rockes, and very hard and dangerous sailing: and yet a more hard and difficult passage I thinke it to bee this way which is now attempted by the West, for it is neerer to the pole of the Loadstone, to the which I thinke it not safe to appoach. And because the Loadstone hath another pole then that of the world, to the which from all parts it hath a respect, the neerer you come vnto it, the more the needle of the Compass doeth varie from the North, sometimes to the West, and sometimes to the East, according as a man is to the Eastward or to the Westward of that Meridian, that passeth by both the poles of the Magnes and the World.

This is a strange alteration and very apt to decciue the Sailer, vntlesse hee know the vncertainty and variation of the Compass, and take the eleuation of the pole sometimes with his instruments. If master Arthur be not well provided in this behalfe, or of such dexteritie, that perceiving the error he be not able to correct the same, I feare least in wandering by and downe he lose his time, and be ouertaken with the ice in the midst of the enterprise. For that gulfes, as they say, is frozen euery yere very hard. Which if it be so, the best counsel I could giue for the ir best safetie, were to seeke some harborough in that baie, and those riuers whereof I haue spoken, and by some Ambassadors to make friendship and acquaintance with the great Can, in name of the Queenes maiestie, which I beleue will be gratefull to the mightiest Emperour in the world, yea most excellent for the length of the traffique, and great distance of the places. I thinke from the mouthes of the mighty riuers Baufisus and Oecharthus to Cambalu the chiefeest seat of the prince the Can, there are not past 300. Germane miles, and to passe by Ezina a citie of the kingdom of Tangut, which seemeth to be but 100. Germane miles from the mouthes of the sayd riuers, and is subiect to the great Can.

I would gladly know how high the sea doeth flowe commonly in the port of Hoscouia where your men do harborow, and in other Easterly places vnto Tabin. And also whether the sea in this streight do flow at waies one way to the East or to the West, or whether it do ebbe and flow according ding to the maner of the tides in the middle of the chanel, that is to say, whether it flow there six houres into the West, and as maye backe againe to the East, for hereupon depend other speculations of importance, I wroth with M. Frobisher to obserue the same Westwards. Concerning the gulfe of Merosio and Canada, and new France which are in my mappes, they were taken out of a certaine sea card drawn by a certaine priest out of the description of a Frenchman, a Pilot very skilfull in those partes, and presented to the worthy prince George of Austria, bishop of Liege: for the trending of the coast, and the eleuation of the pole, I doubt not but they are very neere the truth: for the Charte had, beside a scale of degrees of latitude passing through the middelt of it, another particularly annexed to the coast of New France, wherewith the errour of the latitudes committed by reason of the variation of the compasse might be corrected. The histozie of the voyage of Iacobus Cnoyen Buschoducensis throughout al Asia, Affrica, and the North, was lent me in time past by a friend of mine at Anwerpe. After I had bled it, I restored it againe: after many yeeres I requiered it againe of my friend, but hee had forgotten of whom hee had borrowed it. The writings of Gulielmus Tripolitanus, and Ioannes de Plano Carpini I neuer saw: onely I found certaine pieces of them in other written hand booke. I am glad the Epitomie of Abilsfada is translated, I would we might haue it shortly.

Upon the observations of the tides depend great speculations.

Thus much Sir I thought good to answer your letters: if there bee any thing els that you would require of me, I will most willingly communicate it with you, craving this likewise of your curtesie, that whatsoeuer obseruations of both these voyages shall come to your hands, you would impart them to me, they shall all remaine with mee according to your discretion and pleasure, and whatsoeuer I gather of them, I will faithfully signifie unto you by letters, if happily they may yeeld any helpe or light unto this most excellent enterpryse of nauigation, and most profitable to our christian common wealth. Fare you well most learned friend. At Duisburg in Clucland, 28. of Iulie, the yeere, 1580.

At Arthur his returne I pray you learne of him the things I haue requested, and whether any where in his voyage, he found the sea fresh, or not very salt: for I suppose the Sea betwene Noua Zembla and Tabin to be fresh.

Yours wholly to my power to be commanded,
Gerardus Mercator.

The discouerie made by M. Arthur Pet, and M. Charles Jackman, of the Northeast parts, beyond the Island of Vaigatz, with two Barkes: the one called the George, the other the William, in the yeere 1580.

Written by Hugh Smith.

Vpon Sunday the 30. of May, we departed from Harwich in the afternoone, the winde being at South, and to the Eastward. The ebbe being spent we could not double the pole, and therefore were constrained to put in againe untill the next day in the morning, being the last of May: which day wee wayed our ankers about 3. a clocke in the morning, the wind being West south west. The same day we passed Orfordnesse at an East Sunne, and Stamford at a West Sunne, and Yarmouth at a West north west sunne, and so to Winterton, where we did anker at night: it was then calme, and the flood was come.

May.

The next day being the first of Iune, we set saile at 3. a clocke in the morning, and set our course North, the wind at the South west, and at South south west.

The 10. day about one of the clocke in the afternoone, wee put into Norway to a place where one of the headlands of the sound is called Borel: the other headland is called Moile. There is also an Island called Kene. Heere I did find the pole to be eleuated 62. deg. it doeth flowe there South, and it hieth 7. or 8. foor, not aboue.

Kene an Island of Norway.

The 11. day in the morning the winde came to the South and to the Southeast: the same day at five in the afternoone we set saile, and bare along the coast: it was very foule weather with raine and fogge.

The 22. day the wind being at West, we did hall the coast East north east, and East. The same day at 6. in the morning we did double the north cape. About 3. in the afternoone we past Skires beare nesse, and hald along the coast East, and East south east, and all the same night wee halled Southeast, and Southeast by East.

The North cape doubled.

The 23. day about 3. in the morning we came to Wardhouse, the wind at the North west. The cause of our comming in was to seeke the William, whose companie wee lost the 6. day of this moneth, and to send letters into England. About one of the clock in the after noone the William also came into Wardhouse to vs in good safetie, and all her company in good health.

The 24. the wind came to the East North-east. This day the William was hald a ground, because she was somewhat leake, and to mend her sterage. This night about 12. of the clocke she did hale a floc againe.

The 25. day the wind was at East north-east.

The 26. day the Toby of Harwich departed from Wardhouse for London, Thomas Greene being master, to whom we deliuered our letters.

The 27. day the wind was at South southeast, and the 28. also.

The 29. day about 6. in the afternoone, the wind came to the West north-west for the space of one houre, and presently to the East againe, and so was variable all the same night.

The 30. about five in the morning, the winde came to East southeast, and continued so all the same day.

July.

The first of July about 5. in the afternoone, the wind was at North-north-west: and about 7. of the clocke we set saile from Wardhouse East and by South.

The second day about 5. in the morning, the wind was East, and East southeast, and we did lie to the shorewards. And about 10. in the morning the wind came to South southeast, and we laid it to the Eastward: sometime we lay East by South, sometime East southeast, and sometimes East by North. About 5. in the afternoone we bare with the William, who was willing to goe with Keger, because we thought her to be out of trie, and sailed very ill, where we might mend her sterage: whereupon master Pet not willing to go into harborough said to master Jackman, that if he thought himselfe not able to keepe the sea, he should doe as he thought best, and that he in the meane time would beare with Willoughbies land, for that it was a parcel of our direction, and would meete him at Veroue Ostroue, or Vaigars, and so we set our curre East north-east, the winde being at Southeast.

Willoughbies land.

50. leagues from Keger.

The 3. day the winde at Southeast we found the pole to be eleuated 70. degrees, 46. minutes. The same night at 12. of the clocke we sounded, but had no ground, in 120. fathoms, being fifty leagues from the one side by our reckoning East north-east from Keger.

The 4. day all the morning was calme. This day we found the pole to be eleuated 71. degrees 38. minutes. This day at 9. in the afternoone the wind at North-east with a gentle gale, we hald along Southeast by East.

The 5. day the wind at North-west, we hald East and East by South: this day we saw land, but we could not make it, the wind being North-erly, so that we could not come neere to it.

The 6. day about 2. in the afternoone, the wind at North north-west, we halde East southeast with a faire and gentle gale: this day we met with ice. About 6. in the afternoone it became calme: we with saile and oares laide it to the North-east part, hoping that way to cleare vs of it: for that way we did see the head part of it, as we thought. Which done, about 12. of the clocke at night we gate cleere of it. We did thinke it to be ice of the bay of Saint Nicholas, but it was not, as we found afterwards.

A sight of perfect land.

The seventh day we met with more yce, at the East part of the other yce: we halde along a weather the yce to finde some ende thereof by East north-east. This day there appeared more land North from vs being perfect land: the ice was betweene vs and it, so that we could not come neerer to it.

The same morning at five of the clocke wee put into the ice to finde some way through it, wee continued in it all the same day and all the night following, the winde by the North North-west. Wee were constrained to goe many pointes of our compasse, but we went most an Easterly course.

The eight day the winde at North north-west, we continued our course, and at five in the morning we sounded, and had 90. fadoms red oze. This day at foure in the afternoone we sounded againe, and had 84. fadoms oze, as before. At five in the after noone we cleared our selues of the ice, and hald along Southeast by South: we sounded againe at 10. a clocke at night, and had 43. fathom sandy oze.

The 9. day at 2. in the morning, we sounded againe, and had 45. fadoms, then there appeared a shadow of land to vs East North-east, and so we ran with it the space of 2. houres, and then perceiving that it was but fogge, we hald along Southeast.

70. deg. 3. min.

This day at 2. in the afternoone wee sounded and had fiftie fadoms blacke oze. Our latitude was 70. degrees three minutes. At tenne a clocke at night wee sounded againe, and had fiftie fadoms blacke oze.

The tenth day the wind being at North north-west, we halde East and by North, which course we we set, because at ten of the clocke afore noone wee did see land, and then wee sounded hauing 35. fadoms blacke oze. All this day there was a great fogge, so that wee durst not heare with the land to make it, and so we kept an outwardly course. This day at 6. in the afternoone we espied land, wherewith we halloed, and then it grew calme: we sounded and had 120. fadoms blacke oze: and then we sent our boat a land to sound and proue the land. The same night we came with our ship within an Island, where we rode all the same night. The same night wee went into a bay to ride neere the land for wood and water.

An Island.

The 11. day the wind came to the East southeast: this day about a league from vs to the Eastwards, we saw a very faire sound or riuer that past very farre into the countrey with 2. or 3. bayes with an Island in the midst.

The maine land.

The 12. of July the wind was East Southeast. This day about 11. a clocke in the morning, there came a great white beare down to the water side, and tooke the water of his own accord, we chased him with our boate, but for all that we could doe, he got to land and escaped from vs, where we named the bay Bearebay. This day at 7. in the after noone we set saile, for we had good hope that the winde would come Westterly, and with saile and oars we gate the sea. All the night it was calme with fogge.

Bearebay.

The 13. day in the morning the wind was very variable with fog, and as it cleared up wee met with great store of ice, which at the first shewed like land. This ice did vs much trouble, and the more because of the fog, which continued untill the 14. day, 12. of the clocke.

The 14. day in the morning we were so imbayed with ice, & we were constrained to come out as we went in, which was by great good fortune, or rather by the goodnesse of God, otherwise it had bene impossible, and at 12. of the clock we were cleere of it, the wind being at South and South by West. The same day we found the pole to be eleuated 70. degrees, 26. minutes: we lay along the coast North-west, thinking it to be an Island, but finding no end in rowing so long, we supposed it to be the maine of Noua Zembla. About 2. in the afternoone we laide it to the Southward to double the ice, which wee could not doe vpon that boorde, so that we cast about againe and lay West along under the ice. About seuen in the afternoone we got about the greatest part thereof. About 11. a clock at night we brought the ice Southeast of vs, and thus we were ridde of this trouble at this time.

The supposed maine of Noua Zembla.

The 15. day about 3. in the morning, the wind was at South south-west: wee cast about and lay to the Eastwards: the winde did Westter, so that wee lay South south-west with a flawne there, and so we ranne all the same day. About 8. in the after noone we sounded, and had 23. fadoms small grey sand. This night at twelue of the clocke we sounded againe, and had 29. fadoms sand, as afore.

The 16. day vnto 3. in the morning we had along East Southeast, where we found 18. fadoms red sand, then we had along North-east. In these soundings wee had many ouerfalls. This day at 10. of the clocke we met with more ice, which was very great, so that we coulde not tell which way to get cleere of it. Then the winde came to the South Southeast, so that we lay to the Northwards. We thought that way to cleare our selues of it, but that way we had more ice. About 6. in the afternoone, the wind came to the East. Then we lay to the Southwards that wee had 30. fadoms blacke oze. This day we found the pole to be eleuated 69. deg. 40. minutes, and this night at 12. a clocke we had 41. fadoms red sand.

Many ouerfalls.

The 17. day at 3. in the morning, we had 12. fadoms. At 9. we had 8. and 7. all this day we ran South and South by West, at the depth afore said, red sand, being but shallow water. At eight in the afternoone, the winde with a showre and thunder came to the South-west, and then wee ranne East North-east. At 12. at night it came to the South and by East, and all this was in the bay of Pechora.

The bay of Pechora.

The 18. day at 7. in the morning we bare with the headland of the bay, where wee found two Islands. There are also ouerfalls of water or tides. We went between the maine and the Island, next to the head, where we had about 2. fadoms and a halfe. We found the pole eleuated 69. deg. 13 minutes. This day we had sight of Vaigatz: the land of the maine of Pechora did trend South-east, we had East southeast, and had 10. fadoms oze all the same day untill 4. in the after noone, then being calme, we ankered in 10. fadoms all the same night.

They had sight of Vaigatz.

The 19. day at two in the morning we set saile, and ran South and South south-west all the same day at 8. 7. and 6. fadoms, this was off the South part of Vaigatz, this part of the land lieth North and South. This day at 4. in the afternoone we found shallow water sometime 4. fadoms, sometime 3. and 2. and a halfe, and one fadome and a halfe: there we ankered and sent our boate away to sound, and all to leeward we had 4. foote and 3. foote, and 2. foot, there was not water for the boate betweene Vaigatz & the other liue: finding no more water, there was no other way but to goe backe as we came in, hauing the wind Northwest, so at twelue at night we let saile.

The 20. day we plied to the Northwards, and got deepe water againe 6. and 7. fadoms.

The 21. day the winde by the Northwest, we had along the coast North and North north-west, we had 8. and 9. and 10. fadoms.

On Island ha-uiling store of wood & water.

The 22. day the winde came to the Southwest, wee bare along the coast of Vaigatz, as we found it to lie North and by West, and North north-west, and North. The winde blew very much with great fogge, we lacking water and wood bare within an Island where wee founde great store of wood and water, there were three or foure goodly sounds. Under two points there was a crosse set vp, and a man buried at the foote of it. Upon the said crosse Master Pet did graue his name with the date of our Loyde, and likewise vpon a stone at the foote of the crosse, and so did I also, to the end that if the William did chaunce to come thither, they might haue knowledge that wee had bene there. At eight in the afternoone the winde came to the North north-west, we set saile and turned out of the Bay. The same night the winde came to the West, so that wee lay North along the land.

6. faire Islands.

The 23. day at five in the morning, the wind came to the Southwest, a Sea boord we sawe a great number of faire Islands, to the number of sixe: a sea boord of these Islands, there are many great ouersals, as great streames or rides: we halde Northeast and East northeast as the lande did trend. At eight aforesnoone the winde came to the Southeast with very much wind, raine and fogge, and very great store of ice a sea boorde: so we lay to the Southwest to attaine to one of the Islands to harbour vs if the weather did so extremely continue, and to take in our boate, thinking it meete so to doe, and not to towe her in such weather. About twelue of the clocke it became very calme vpon the sudden, and came by to the West Northwest, and Northwest by West, and then we tooke in our boate, and this done, there came downe so much winde, as we were not able to steere afoze it, with coyle and bonnets of each, we halde South with the land, so the land did trend. This day all the afternoone we sailed vnder a great land of ice, we sailed betwene the land and it, being not able to crosse it. About twelue at night we found the ice to stretch into the land, that we could not get cleare to the Eastward, so we laide it to the shore, and there we founde it cleare hard aboord the shore, and we found also a very faire Island which makes a very good harbour, and within are 12. fadoms.

On Island to the East of Vaigatz 4. or 5. leagues.

This Island is to the Eastwards of Vaigatz, 4. or 5. leagues. This land of the maine both trend Southeast, and Southeast by East. It is a very faire coast, and even and plaine, and not full of mountaines nor rocks: you haue but shallow water of 6. or 7. fadoms, about a league from the shore, all this morning we halled East southeast. This day we found the pole to be eleuated 69. degrees 14. minutes. About 12. a clocke we were constrained to put into the ice to seeke some way to get to the Northwards of it, hoping to haue some cleare passage that way, but there was nothing but whole ice. About nine in the afternoone we had sight of the William, and when wee sawe her, there was a great land of ice betwene her and vs, so that we could not come one to the other, but as we came nere to her, we sounded our trumpet and shot off two muskets, and she put out her flag vpon her foretopmasse in token that she did see vs: all this time wee did shorten our sailes, and went with our foresaile & mainetopsaile, seeking the best way through the broken ice, she making away the best that she could to follow vs, we put out our flagge to answer her again with the like: thus wee continued all the afternoone till about 12. a clocke at night, and then we moored our ship to a piece of ice to tarie for the William.

The William and the George

The 25. day about five in the morning, the William came to vs, being both glad of our meeting. The William had her sterne post broken, that the rudder did hang clean besides the sterne, so that she could in no wise port her helme, with all hands she did lighten her sterne, and trimme her head, and when we had brought her forward all that we could, wee brought a cable vnder her sterne, and with our capstaine did wind by her sterne, and so we made it as well as the place would giue vs leaue, and in the ende wee brought her to steere againe. Wee acknowledge this our meeting to be a great benefite of God for our mutuall comfort, and so gaue his maiestie thanks for it. All the night after we tooke our rest being made fast vpon a piece of ice: the winde was at West Northwest, but wee were so inclosed with ice that we coulde not tell which way to passe. Windes wee haue had at will, but ice and fogge too much against our willes, if it had pleased the Lord God our wife.

The 26. day the wind was at West Northwest: we set saile to the Northwards, to seeke if we could finde any way cleare to passe to the Eastward, but the further we went that way, the more and thicker was the ice, so that wee coulde goe no further. So about foure in the afternoon we were constrained to moore vpon another piece of ice. I thinke we sailed in all a league this day, here we had 15. fadoms oze, and this oze is all the chancellouer. All the same day after foure of the the clocke, and all the night we tarried there, being without all good hope, but rather in despair. This day Master Iugman did see land East North-east from vs, as he did thinke, whether it were land or no, I cannot tell well, but it was very like land, but the fogges haue many times deceiued vs.

The 27. day the winde was at North-west. This day at nine in the morning we set saile to seeke the shore. Further into the ice we could not goe, and at seuen in the afternoone we moared to a piece of ice, and the William with vs, here we had 14. fathoms oze. At three in the afternoone we warpt from one ice to another. At nine in the afternoone we moared againe to a piece of ice untill the next day. All this night it did snow with much wind, being at West North-west, and at North-west, and by West.

The 28. day the winde came to the South-west, and South-south-west: this day was a very faire day. At one in the afternoone master Pet and master Iackman did conferre together what was best to be done considering that the windes were good for vs, and we not able to passe for ice, they did agree to seeke to the land againe, and so to Vaygatz, and there to conferre further. At 3. in the afternoone we did warpe from one piece of ice to another to get from them if it were possible: here were pieces of ice so great, that we could not see beyond them out of the toppes. Thus we warped untill 9. in the afternoone, and then we moared both our shippes to a great and high piece of ice, untill the next morning.

The current

The nine and twentie day the winde came to the South-west, we set saile at five in the morning to plie into the shore if it were possible, we made many turnes among the ice to small purpose, for with the winde doeth the current runne. This day by misfortune a piece of ice strooke of our greype afoze at two afozenoone, yet for all this we turned to doe our best. The William being incumbered with ice, and perceiuing that shee did litle good, tooke in all her sailes, and made her selfe fast to a piece of ice, and about foure in the afternoone she set saile to followe vs. We were afraide that shee had taken some hurt, but she was well. At seuen afoze noone we tooke in all our sailes to tarie for the William, and made our shippe fast to a piece of ice: the William before she came to vs tooke in all her sailes, and moared to another piece of ice, and thus we continued untill the next morning.

The current runneth with the winde.

The 30. day the winde at Southeast, and by South, and at 9. in the morning we set saile, and sooner would haue done if the William had bene by vs, but we did tary for her to know whether all was well with her: But as soone as we made saile, shee did the like. All this day wee did our best to seeke our way as the ice would giue vs leaue, sometime we lay South, sometime West, and sometime East, and thus we continued untill eight at night, and then being calme, wee made our ship fast to a piece of ice, and went to supper. In the meane time the wind with a faire gentle gale came vnto the East, and East and by South, but there came downe a shewre of raine with it, which continued the space of one houre: which being done, it became calme againe, so that wee could doe no good all that night, butooke our rest untill the next day.

The 31. the winde being at South-west, we set saile to turne to windward at thre a clock in the morning. In this turning we did litle good, for the current would not giue vs leaue. For as the winde is, so is the current. We did our best untill ten of the clocke, and then perceiuing that we did no good, and being inclosed with ice, wee made our ships fast to a piece of ice: All this day the William lay still, and did as much good as we that did labour all the forenoone. Thus we took our rest all the same day.

In the afternoone we set saile, the winde being at South & by East, we lay to the Westwards, as South-west and South-west and by South, and sometime to the Westward as wee might. Thus we continued untill 9. at night, and then we could go no further for ice: so we with the William were constrained to make our ship fast to a piece of ice at the same night. This day we found the pole eleuated 69. degrees 20. minutes, and here we had 17. fathoms oze.

The first day of August was very calme in the morning, the winde being at West North-west. About twelue the winde came to the West, and continued so all the same night with great fogge.

The second day the winde was at South-west all day with rayne and fogge. All this day wee were inclosed with ice, so that we were forced to lye still. Here we had one and twentie fathoms oze. At sixe in the afternoone the winde was at West with very much foule weather, and so continued all the same night.

The third day the winde was at West, and West by North, and West North-west, this day we lay still inclosed with ice, the weather being darke with fogge: thus abiding the Lords leisure, we continued with patience. And sounding we found 21. fathoms.

The fourth day we lay still inclosed with ice, the winde being at West North-west, this ice did euery day increase vpon vs, yet putting our trust in God, we hoped to be deliuered out of it in good time.

The fift day all the morning it rained with very much wind, being at South Southeast: about 3. in the after noone we set saile, and presently it became calme for the space of one houre, then the wind came to the North Northeast, and here we had 33. fathoms: thus we made way among the yce Southwell, and Southsouthwest, & West, as we might finde our way for the space of 3. houres: then we met with a whole land of yce, so that we could go no further: here we moored our ship to carie for a further opening. Here we found 45. fathoms oze, and all the night was very darke with fogge.

The sixt day hauing no opening of the yce wee lay still, the winde being at West, and West by South: here we had sixty three fathoms oze: all the same night the winde was at the West Northwest.

The 7. day the winde was at West, and West and by North all day. And all this day we lay still being inclosed with yce, that we could not stirre, labouring onely to defend the yce as it came vpon vs. Here we had 68. fathoms oze.

The 8. day was very faire & calme but foggy. This day towards night there was litle winde by the South Southwest: then the yce began a litle to open, and here we had 70. fathoms oze: all the night was foggy.

Frost.

The appearing of the starres, signe of Winter.

The 9. day the winde was at North west, and by West, all the afternoone we lay still because of the yce, which did still inclose vs. This day we found the pole eleuated seventy degrees, 4. minutes, we had 63. fathoms oze: this night was a very fayre night, but it freezed: in the morning we had much adoe to goe through the same: and we were in doubt that if it should haue freezed so much the night following, we should hardly haue passed out of it. This night there was one star that appeared to vs.

Such snow.

The tenth day the winde was at East Northeast with a very small gale. Wee with saile and oares made way through the yce: about five in the morning we set saile: sometime wee laye Southwest, and sometime South, and sometime West, as we might best finde the way. About thre in the afternoone the gale began to fresh: about five in the afternoone the winde was at Northeast with fogge. Here we had eighty eight fathoms: we bare saile all the same night, and it snowed very much.

The eleuenth day we were much troubled with yce, and by great force we made our way through it, which we thought a thing impossible: but extremity doth cause men to doe much, and in the weakenesse of man Gods strength most appeareth. This day we had 95. fathoms. At thre in the afternoone the winde came to the Southwest, we were forced to make our shippe fast to a piece of yce, for we were inclosed with it, and taried the Lordes leasure. This night we had 97. fathoms.

The 12. day the wind was at the Southeast not very much but in a maner calme: at a 11. of the clocke the winde came to the West Southwest: all the day was very darke with snowe and fogge. At 6. in the afternoone we set saile the winde being at the North Northeast: all this night we bare away Southwest, and Southsouthwest, as well and as neere as the yce would giue vs leaue: all this night we found the yce somewhat fauourable to vs, more then it was before, whereupon we stood in good hope to get out of it.

The 13. day at 7. in the morning, the winde was at the Northeast, and Northeast and by East: all this day we were much troubled with the yce, for with a blow against a piece of yce we brake the stocke of our ancre, and many other great blowes we had against the yce, that it was maruelous that the ship was able to abide them: the side of our boate was broken with our ship which did recule backe, the boate being betwixt a great piece of yce, and the ship, and it perished the head of our rudder. This day was a very hard day with vs: at night we found much broken yce, and all this night it blew very much winde, so that we lay in drift with the yce, & our drift was South, for the winde was at North all this night, and we had great floe of snowe.

The 14. day in the morning wee made our shippe fast to a piece of yce, and let her driuie with it. In the meane time wee mended our boate and our sterage: all this day the winde continued Northerly, and here wee had threescore and two fathoms. Thus wee lay a drift all the same night.

The 15. day we set saile at 6. in the morning, the winde being at Northeast. At 9. afoze noon we entred into a cleare Sea without yce, whereof wee were most glad, and not without great cause, and gaue God the praise. We had 19. fathoms water, and ranne in Southwest all the morning untill we came to 14. fathoms, and thence we halled West, til we came to 10. fathoms, and then we went Northwest, for so the land doeth trend. At 12. of the clocke we had sight of the the land, which wee might haue had sooner, but it was darke and foggie all the same day: for when wee had sight of the lande, wee were not passing three leagues from it. This day we had the pole eleuated 69 degrees 49 minutes. All day we ran along the coast in ten and nine fadoms, pepered land. It is a very goodly coast and a bolde, and faire soundings off it, without sandes or rocks.

The 16 day the winde was at East: this day we were troubled againe with ice, but we made great shift with it: for we gotte betweene the shoare and it. This day at twelue of the clocke we were thwart of the Southeast part of Vaigats, all along which part there was great store of ice, so that we stood in doubt of passage, yet by much adoe we got betwixt the shoare and it: about 6 in the afternoone was found a great white beare vpon a piece of ice: all this day in the afternoon it was darke with fogge. And all the night we haled North and North by West, and sometime North and by East, for so doth the land trend.

There are thwart against Vaigats.

The 17 day in the morning we haled West, for so doth the land lie. The wind was at South-east, and it was very darke with fogge, and in running along the shoare we fell a ground, but God be praised without hurt, for wee came presently off againe. The William came to an anchor to stay for vs, and sent some of their men to help vs, but before they came we were vnder saile, and as we came to the William we did stowe our boates, and made saile, we went within some of the Islands, and haled Westsouthwest.

Sands.

The Islands.

About two of the clocke in the afternoone, we set our course South-west and by South: so we ranne South-west vntill twelue at night, the wind came to the North-northeast, and then we haled West.

The 18 day at 6 in the morning we had 16 fadoms red sand: at 6 in the morning 13 fadoms. At 10, 14 fadoms, and we haled Westnorthwest. At 12 a clocke the winde came to the East, and East by South, we haled West and by North all the same day and night. At 6 in the afternoone we had 17 fadoms red sand.

The 19 day the wind was at East-northeast: at 6 in the morning we had 19 fadoms red sand: at 12 of the clocke the wind blew North and North by East, we had 17 fadoms of water: at 3 in the afternoone 15.

The 20 day the wind was at Northeast, and North-northeast: at 7 in the morning we had 30 fadomes blacke oze: at twelue of the clocke we were vpon the suddaine in shoale water, among great sandes, and could find no way out. By sounding and seeking about, we came aground, and so did the William, but we had no hurt, for the wind was off the shoare, and the same night it was calme: all night we did our best, but we could not haue her ashore. These shoales doe lie off Colgoyue: it is very flat a great way off, and it doth not high about 2 or 3 foote water: it floweth Northeast, and Southwest.

Shoales off Colgoyue.

The 21 day the wind was at Southwest, and being very faire weather we did lighten our ships as much as was possible for vs to doe, by reason of the place. The same high water, by the helpe of God, we got both a floate, and the wind being at the Southwest did help vs, for it caused it to flow the more water.

This day we found the pole to be eleuated 68 degrees 40 min. In the afternoone we both set saile to seeke way to get out of these sandes, our boate a head sounding, hauing 6, 7, and 8 fadomes all within the land which was without vs. We bare to the Southward, and the William bare more to the Eastwards, and night being at hand the wind came to the Southeast, whereupon we layd it to the Southwards, lying Southwest, and South and by West, and ran to 19, and 12 and 14 fadoms, and presently we had but sixe fadoms, which was off the lands head, which we were a ground vpon the day before. Then we cast about to the Eastwards for deepe water, which we presently had, as 10, 15, and 20 and so to 23 fadoms.

The 22 day at 8 in the morning, we cast about to the Southward, and this day in the morning we saw the William vnder our lee as far as we could see her, and with a great fogge we lost the sight of her, and since we haue not seene her. Thus we ranne till we came to thirtie fadomes blacke oze, which we had at twelue of the clocke, and at three in the afternoone we had twenty and three fadoms, and then we ranne Westnorthwest, and West by North, all the same night following.

The 23 day we had at 6 in the morning 27 fadoms, at 8 a clocke 28 fadoms: at 9 the winde being at East-southeast, we haled Westnorthwest: this day we had sight of the land of Hugri side. At twelue of the clocke we had thirtie two fadoms sand. This day we ranne West and by North, and came to five fadoms off the bay of Morzouers. Then we layd it to the Northwards, so that we lay North-northeast off. The wind after came to the North, and North by East, and we lay East and East by North, then we layd it to the Westward againe: and thus we lay till we came to to fortye fadoms, and then we went Northwest till wee came to fourteene fadoms, and so to tenne fadoms. Then we cast about to the Eastwards and lay East, and East by North all the same night.

The 24 day at 8 in the morning we had 32 fadoms. We ran Northwest till we came to 11 fadoms, then we lay to the Northwards till 12 at night, and then we came to forty fadoms, then the wind at Northeast we lay to the Westwards, and haled Northwest along.

The 25 at 4 in the morning we had 37 fadoms, wee ranne Northwest, the winde at Northeast very much.

The 26 day we ran with the same winde, and found the pole to be eleuated 70 deg. 40 min.

The 27 at 7 in the morning we saw land, which we made to be Keger, then we haled Northwest, and North by West to double the North Cape.

The 28 day at 3 in the morning we ran Northwest, and so all day. At night the wind came to the Southwest, and we ran Northwest all that night.

The towne of Hungon.

The 29 day we put into a sound called Tane, and the towne is called Hungon: we came to an ancre at 5 in the afternoone, at 25 fadoms very faire land. This sound is very large and good, and the same night we got water aboord.

The 30 day in the morning the winde at Northeast, and but litle, we set saile, and with our boate on head we got the sea about 12 of the clocke: the wind with a faire gale came to the East Southeast, and all this day and night we ran Westnorthwest.

They double the North Cape in their returne.

The 31 day at 12 of the clocke we doubled the North Cape, the wind being at Eastsoutheast, we haled West all the same day, and at night we ran Westsouthwest.

The 1 day of September the wind was at Northeast with very much fogge: all this day we ran Westsouthwest: at 2 in the afternoone the wind came North.

Fowlness.

The second day at 3 in the morning we doubled Fowlness, a the wind was this day variable at all parts of the Compasse. In the afternoone we made but litle way: at 6 a clocke the winde came to the Southwest, and we went Northwest. At 9 in the night there came downe so much winde by the Westsouthwest, that we were faine to lay it a hull, we haled it to Northwards for the space of 2 houres, and then we layd her head to the Southwards, and at the break of day we saw land, which is very high, and is called by the men of the countrey Fowlness. It is within full of small Islands, and without full of rocks very farre out, and within the rockes you haue saye land at 20 fadoms.

Lowfoote.

The 3 day in the morning we bare with the sound aforesaid: Within it is but shoale water, 45 and 3 fadoms, sandie ground, the land is very high, and the Church that is seene is called Helike Kirke. It doeth high here not aboue 8 or 9 foote.

The 12 day at 3 in the afternoone, we put into a sound by Lowfoote, where it doeth flowe Southwest, and by South, and doth high 7 or 8 foote water.

The 13 day much wind at West: we had a ledge of rocks in the wind of vs, but the road was reasonable good for all Southerly and Westerly winds. We had the maine land in the winde of vs: this day was stormie with raine.

The sound of Romefal.

The 23 day at foure of the clocke in the afternoone we put into Norway, into a sound called Romefal, where it floweth Southsoutheast, and doth high 8 foote water: this place is full of low Islands, and many good sounds without the high mountaine land. Here is great store of wood growing, as firre, birch, oke, and hawell: all this night the wind was at the South, very much winde, with raine and fogge.

The 28 day in the morning the wind being at Eastnortheast we set saile at 8 of the clocke, and haled out of the bay Westsouthwest, and Southwest, hauing a goodly gale vntill one of the clocke, and then the wind came to Southeast, and to the South with raine and fogge, and very much winde: at five of the clocke we came into a very good rode, where we did ride all the same night in good safetie.

The 29 day we put into a good sound, the wind by the Southwest: at three in the afternoone there came downe very much wind by the South, and all night with vehement blastes, and raine.

The 30 day all day the wind was at Westsouthwest. And in this sound the pole is eleuated 63 deg. 10 min.

October.

The first day of October the winde was at South with very much winde, and vehement blastes.

The 7 day we set saile: for from the first of this moneth vntill this 7 day, we had very foule weather, but specially the fourth day when the wind was so great, that our cables brake with the very storme, and I do not thinke that it is possible that any more wind then that was should blow:

for after the breaking of our cable, we did vize a league, befoze our ankers would take any hold : but God be thanked the storme began to slacke, otherwise we had bene in ill case.

The 7 day at night we came to an anker vntill the next day, which was the 8 day of the moneth, when as the winde grew great againe, with raine, whereupon we set saile and returned into the sound againe : and at our first comming to an anker, presently there blew so much winde, that although our best anker was out, yet the extremitie of the storm vzeue vs vpon a ledge of rocks, and did bruse our ship in such sort, that we were constrained to lighten her to saue her, and by this meanes (by the helpe of God) we got off our ship and stopped our leakes, and moored her in good safety abiding for a wind. We rid from this day by reason of contrary winds, with fogge and raine vntill the 24 day, which day in the morning the wind came to the North-east, and at 8 of the clocke we set saile. This sound is called Moore sound, where it higheth about 5 foote water, & floweth South-south-east. The next day being the 25 day wee put into a sound which is called Vlar sound, where was a ship of the king of Denmark put into another sound there by, being 2 leagues to the southwards of vs, that came out of Island: þ wind was contrary for vs at South-south-west.

The 12 day of November we set saile the wind being at the East South-east, and past through the sound where the kings ship did lie : which sound is called Sloure sound. But as we did open the sound, we found the wind at the South-west, so that we could doe no good, so that we moored our ship betwene 2 Islands vntill the 18 day, and then the weather being faire and calme, we set saile, & went to sea hoping to find a faire wind, but in the sea we found the wind at the South-west, and South-south-west, so that we were constrained to returne into the same sound.

The next day being the 19 the kings ship came out also, because she saw vs put to sea, & came as farre out as we, and moored where we did moore afoze : And at our returne backe againe, we moored our ship in another sound called Scorpe sound, because the kings ship was without viduals, and we did not greatly desire her company, although they desired ours. In this sound the pole is eleuated 62 deg. 47 min. Thus we lay til for a wind vntill the 1 of December, which day we set saile at 6 a clocke in the morning, & at 4 in the afternoone we laid it to the inwards.

The 9 day we had sight of the coast of Scotland which was Buquhaninesse.

The 10 day we were open off the Frith.

The 11 day at 4 in the morning we werethwart of Barwike : at 6 we were thwart of Bamburg : the same day at 10 at night we were shot as farre as Hollyfoore. Then the wind came to the South and South-east, so that we lay still vntill the next day in the morning, and then we were constrained to put with Timmouth. The same day at night wee haled aground to stoppe a leake, which we found to be in the skarfe afoze. The wind continued by the South-east & South-south-east vntill the 20 day, and then we set saile about 12 at night, bearing along the coast.

The 22 day by reason of a South-east wind, we thought we should haue bene put into Humber, but the wind came to the West, so that we haled South-east: and at 3 in the afternoone we haled a sea boord the sands, and had shoale water off Lymery and Owry, and were in 4 fadomes off them. The next day we haled as we might to seafe Orfordnesse.

The 24 day we came thwart of the Nase, about 8 in the morning.

The 25 day being the Natiuitie of Christ, we came to an anker betweene Olohausen, and Tilberie hope. The same day we turned as high as Porther.

The 26 day we turned as high as Ratcliffe, and praised God for our safe returne. And thus I ende, 1580.

The William with Charles Jackman arrived at a port in Norway betweene Tronden and Rosstock in October 1580, and there did winter : And from thence departed againe in February following, and went in company of a ship of the King of Denmarke toward Island: and since that time he was neuer heard of.

Instructions made by the company of English merchants for discovery of new trades, vnto Richard Gibs, William Biggat, John Backhouse, William Freeman, John Haly, and James Woodcock, &c. masters of the 9 ships, and one barke that we had freighted for a voiage with them to be made (by the grace of God) from hence to S. Nicholas in Russia, and backe againe: which ships being now in the riuer of Thames are presently ready to depart vpon the said voyage, with the next apt winds that may serue therunto: and with this Fleet afterwards was ioined M. Christopher Carlisle with the Tyger. The 1 of Iune 1582.

Inasmuch as the number of shippes which we purpose to send in this flete together for Saint Nicholas in Russia is greater then at any time heretofore we haue sent thither, as also for that some speeches are giuen out that you shall be met withall by such as with force & violence will assault you as enemies, to the end that good order may may be established among you for keeping together in company, and uniting your forces, as well for the better direction to be had in your navigation, as also for your more safety and strength against the enemy, we have thought good to appoint among you an Admirall and Viceadmirall, and that all of you and every one particularly shall be bound in the summe of one hundred pounds to keepe company together.

2 Because the Salomon is the biggest ship, best appointed, and of greatest force to defend or offend the enemy, we doe therefore appoint that ship Admirall, which shall weare the flag in the maine top.

3 The Thomas Allen being a good ship and well appointed, and for that the master of her is the ancientest master of the Fleet that hath taken charge that way, we doe appoint the same ship to be Viceadmirall, and to weare the flag in the foretop.

4 And for that the master of the Prudence is of great experience, and knowledge in that voyage, we doe appoint that he with the master of the Admirall and Viceadmirall shall conferre, consult and agree vpon the courses and directions that shall be vsed in this voyage, and it shall be lawfull vnto the master of the Admirall, with the consent of M. Gibs, and M. Biggar, or one of them to make his courses and directions from time to time during the whole voyage, and all the fleet are to follow and obserue the same without straying or breaking of company at any time vpon the penalty before specified.

5 The appointing of the ships for Admiral and Viceadmiral, and those men to consult and agree vpon the courses and directions of the voyage, as aforesaid, hath bene done by the consents and with the liking of you all, and therefore we doubt not but that you will all carefully and willingly obserue the premises.

6 Item, we have thought good to put you in mind, that at such times as you may conveniently from time to time, you do assemble and meete together, to consider, consult, and determine vpon such articles as you shall think necessary to be propounded touching your best safety and defence against all forces that may be offered you in this voyage, as well outwards bound, and while you shall remaine in the roade and bay of S. Nicholas, as also homewards bound, and that which you shall agree vpon, or that which most of you shall consent vnto, cause it to be set down in writing for record, which may serue for an acte amongst your selues to binde you all to obserue the same.

7 We haue appointed James Woodcock in the smal barke to attend vpon you, & to receiue his directions from you. You are therefore to remember well what conference and talke hath bene had with you here before your going touching y^e sayd barke, to what purposes she may best serue, and the maner how to imploy her, and thereupon to giue your order and direction vnto him, as the time and place shall require.

Berozoua Vstia,

8 Item, if you shall vnderstand as you are outwards bound, that the enemy is gone before you to S. Nicholas, remember what aduise hath bene giuen you for your stay at Berozoua Vstia, till you haue by espials viewed and vnderstood the forces, and the maner of their abode at that place.

9 And if in the sea either outwards or homewards, or in the time of your abode at anker at Saint Nicholas, you shall be assaulted by force of any, as enemy whatsoeuer, you are to defend your selues with such forces as you may or can: trust not too farre, neither giue place to inconvenience.

10 You will not forget what conference we had touching your passing outwards bound by Wardhouse, to view and vnderstand what you can at that place, and to shew your selues, to see if there be any there that haue a mind to speake with you, for that we thinke it better then, & thereabout, then afterwards or els where.

11 While you shall remaine in the roade at S. Nicholas, be circumspect and carefull to haue your ships in readinesse, and in good order alwaies, and vpon all suddens. The greatest danger vnto you in that place will be while you shall shift your ships: therefore you are to consider of it, but the fittest time for you to doe the same, will bee when the winde is Southerly off the shoare, or calme, and at such time you may the better doe it without danger. You must take such order among you, that your companies may be alwaies willing and ready to helpe one the other, and appoint among your selues such ships to shift first, and such after, in such sort and soyme as you shall thinke best and most conuenient. And while they shall be in discharging, shifting, and lading, let the rest of your companies which haue not then to doe in lading or discharging, helpe those ships that shall haue labour to doe, as well for carrying the barkes from ships to the shoare, or from shoare to the ships with your boates, as also for any other helpe that they shall haue neede of.

12 Remember what hath bene said vnto you touching the mozing of your ships, &c. toz vling auantage against the enemie, if you shall be assaulted in that place.

13 See that you serue God, abolish swearing and gaming, be carefull of fire and candles, &c.

14 You are to consult and agree among your selues vpon signes, tokens, and good orders for the better keeping of company together, and also the maner how and by what meanes, rescue, ayde, or helpe may be giuen by one to the other in fight, if you happen to come to it.

Thus we pray God to send you a prosperous voyage and safe returne.

Whereas you request me to perswade the company not to send their shippes from hence before the fine of May, I do not thinke the same so good a course for them to obserue: for you know that the sooner wee sende them hence, the sooner we may looke for their returne. If wee sende them in the beginning of May, then may they be at Saint Nicholas by the fine of the same moneth: and by that time the greatest parte of your lading of necessitie must bee come downe, especially the flaxe: but if it should fall out so lateward a breaking by of the riuer of Duyna, that by the ende of May the goods cannot be brought to Saint Nicholas, yet this is alwayes to be accounted for certaine, that before our ships can come thither, the goods may be brought downe to that place: and if through ice the shippes be kept backe any time, the losse and charge of that time toucheth not the companie at all, but the owners of the shippes, and yet will the Owners put that in aduenture, rather then carie longer time before their going hence.

The Russian fleet best to be set forth in the beginning of May.

Now seeing by sending our shippes hence in the beginning of May, their arriual at S. Nicholas may be at the ende of the same moneth, and remaining thirtie dayes there, they may bee laden and come thence by the last of June, and returne home hither by the 10 of August with commodities to serue the market then, it cannot bee denied but we should reape thereby great commoditie.

But it may be objected, that if all our shippes be sent then to returne as aforesaid, you shall not be able to send vs in so much cordage, Ware and Dyles, as otherwise you should doe if they remained a moneth longer, neither could you by that time perfect your accounts to be sent in them as you would doe.

For answer thereunto this is my meaning: though I wish the greatest part of our shipping to go as aforesaid, yet would I haue one good ship or two at the most well furnished in all points that should depart alwaies from hence, betwene the beginning and the 10 day of June: and the same to be conditioned withall to remaine at S. Nicholas from the first arriual there vntill the middest of August, or to be dispatched thence sooner, at the will and liking of our factors for the same: by this order these commodities following may ensue.

1 You may haue our commodities there timely to send by the riuer before it waxe shallow, to be dispersed in the countrey at your pleasure.

2 The greatest part of our goods may be returned hither timely to serue the first markets.

3 Our late ships remaining so long here may serue to good purpose, for returning answer of such letters as may be sent ouer land, and receiued here before their departure.

4 Their remaining so late with you shal satisfie your desire for perfecting your accounts, and may bring such cordage, Ware, Dyle, & other commodities, as you can prouide before that time: and chiefly may serue vs in stead to bring home our goods that may be sent vs from Persia.

Now seeing it may be so many wayes commodious to the company to obserue this order, without any charge vnto them, I wish that you put to your helping hand to further the same.

Elizabeth by the grace of God, Queene of England, France, and Ireland, defender of the Faith, &c. to the most excellent Prince and Lord, Iohn Basilwich, by the same grace of God, King and great Duke of all Russia, Volodomer, Moscouie, and Nouogrod, King of Cazani and Astracan, Lord of Pleasco, and great Duke of Smolensco, of Tuer, Vgor, and Permie, Viarska, Bolhar, and others, Lord and great Duke of Nouogrod in the lowe countrey, of Cherniga, Rezani, Polotsko, Rostoue, Iaroslau, Bealozera, Lisländ, Oudor, Obdor, and Condensa, and Gouernour of all the land of Siberia, and of the North parts and others, her dearest brother and friend, Salutations.

Most excellent Prince, most deare brother and friend, by those things which the worthy ambassador of your excellency declared vnto vs, we haue vnderstood how kindly it would be taken, if we should send to your excellency an ambassadoꝝ from vs, with commandement and instructions, In which matter your honourable request hath so much pleased vs, that we could not any maner of way satisfie our selues, except we performed the same. And hauing purposed with our selfe so to doe, we thought of, and remembred Jerome Bowes Knight, a gentleman of qualitie of our householde, a man very much beloued of vs, whom at this present we send vnto your Maiestie, and to whose wisdom and faithfulness we haue committed all, whatsoeuer we take to appertene to the advancement of both our honoꝝ indifferently. In the discharge of which seruice, we doubt not but that all care and diligence shall be vsed on his part, so that we intreat your Maiestie to giue him credence in the prosecuting of those things which he hath from vs in commandement, no lesse then to our selfe, if we were present. And whereas Robert Jacob doctoꝝ of physicke is a man very deare vnto vs, whom the last yere we sent vnto your excellency, we desire that he may haue that fauor and estimation with you, which good princes thinke a most honest and vertuous man woorthy of: for had we not caried great respect to our mutual friendship, and endeavour to gratifie your Maiestie, we should in no case haue parted with him. And seeing we continue still the same good will towards your excellency, we doe euen promise to our selfe your honourable kindnesse towards him: and we pray the almighty God to preserve your Maiestie in good safetie and health. Given at our pallace of Greenewich the 19 day of June, in the yere of our Lord 1583, and of our reigne the fife and twentieth.

Doctoꝝ Jacob.

A brieue discourse of the voyage of Sir Jerome Bowes knight, her Maiesties ambassadour to Iuan Vasilinich the Emperour of Musconia, in the yere 1583.

The Emperour of Russia that then liued, by name Iuan Vasilinich, hauing deliberately considered how necessary it were for the strengthening of his estate, that a sure commerce and entercourse of merchants should be againe renewed betweene him and her sacred Maiestie of England, with such further immunities and priuileges for the honoꝝ and weill of both their dominions, and subiects of the same, as vpon mutuall treatie of persons interposed on both sides, might be assented vnto: sent ouer into this realme, in the yere of our Lord 1582, as his ambassadour for that purpose, an ancient discreet gentleman of his householde called Pheodor Andreuich Phisemsky, accompanied with one of his Secretaries, for his better assistance in that expedition: and besides his many other directions, whereof part were to be deliuered by word of mouth, and the rest set downe in a letter vnder the Emperours signature, addressed to her Maiestie: he had in speciall charge to sollicite her Maiestie to send ouer with him to his maister an ambassadoꝝ from her, to treat and contract of such affaires of importance as concerned both the realmes, which was the principall end of his imployments hither. Whereupon her Maiestie very graciously inclining to the Emperours motion, and at the humble sute of the English merchants trading those countreys being caried with the same princely respects, to satisfie his demands in that behalfe, made choise of Sir Jerome Bowes, a gentleman of her Court, ordinarily attending vpon her Maiesties person, towards whom was apparantly expessed her princely opinion and fauor by the credit of this negociation.

Pheodor Andreuich Phisemsky the Emperours ambassadour.

After he had receiued his commission, with other speciall letters to the Emperour, with all other instructions appertaining to his charge, and that the sayd Russe ambassadour was licenced to returne home to his maister, being honoꝝably entertained and rewarded, the English ambassadoꝝ being attended vpon with forty persons at the least, very honourably furnished, whereof many were gentlemen, and one M. Humfrey Cole a learned preacher, tooke his leaue of her Maiestie at the Court at Greenewich the eighteenth of June, and with the other ambassadour, with their severall companies, embarked themselves at Harwich the two and twentieth of the same, and after a stormy voyage at the Sea, they arrived both in safetie in the roade of S. Nicholas the three and twentieth of July next following.

The Russe ambassadoꝝ lodged himselfe at the abbey of S. Nicholas: and the English ambassadoꝝ was lodged and well intertaines by the English merchants, at their house at S. Nicholas, standing in an Island called Rose Island.

The Russe ambassadoꝝ hauing reposed himselfe one whole day, tooke his leaue of the English ambassadoꝝ, and departed towards Mosco.

The English ambassadour abode yet at S. Nicholas foure or fife dayes, when hauing made provision of boats, and meanes to that purpose, he went forward vpon his journey towards Mosco, Mosco, to a towne called Colmogro, about foure score miles distant from S. Nicholas.

You must here understand that before the English ambassadoys going into Russia, there were divers strangers, but especially certeine Dutch merchants, who had intruded themselves to trade into those countreys, notwithstanding a priuilege of the sole trade thither was long before granted to the English merchants. These Dutch men had already so handled the matter, as they had by chargeable meanes wooonne three of the chiefeest counsellors to the Emperour to be their assured friends, namely, Mekira Romanouich, Bodan Belskoy, and Andrew Shalkan the chancelloz: for besides dayly gifts that they bestowed vpon them all, they tooke so much money of theirs at interest at five and twenty vpon the hundred, as they payd to some one of them five thousand marks yearly for the vse of his money, and the English merchants at that time had not one friend in Court.

The Hollanders intrude into our trade.

The ambassadoz hauing now spent five weeks at S. Nicholas and at Colmogro, there came to him then a gentleman sent from the Emperoz to enterteine him, and had in charge to conduct him by the riuers towards Mosco, and to deliuer him provision of all kinde of victuals necessary.

This gentleman being a follower of Shalkan the chancelloz, was by him (as it seemed) foisted into that seruice of purpose, as after ward appeared by the course he tooke, to offer discourtesies, and occasions of mislike to the ambassadoz: for you must understand that the chancelloz and the other two great counsellors (spoken of as friends to the Dutchmen) had a purpose to oppose themselves directly against her Haelsties ambassage, especially in that point, for the barring of all strangers from trading into the Emperozs countrey.

This gentleman conducted the English ambassadoz a thousand miles by the riuers of Dwina and Soughana, to a citie called Vologda, where receiued him another gentleman sent from the Emperoz, a man of better countenance then the other, who presented the ambassadoz from the Emperoz with two faire geldings well furnished after their maner.

At a citie called Yeraslaue vpon the riuier Volga there met the ambassadoz a duke well accompanied, sent from the Emperoz, who presented him from the Emperoz a coach and ten geldings for the more easie conueying of him to Mosco, from whence this citie was distant five hundred miles.

Two miles on this side Mosco there met the ambassadoz foure gentlemen of good account, accompanied with two hundred horse: who after a litle salutation, not familiar, without imbarcing, tolde him that they had to say to him from the Emperoz, and would haue had him light on foot to haue heard it, notwithstanding themselves would still haue sit on horsebacke: which the ambassadoz soone refused to doe, and so they stood long vpon termes, whether both parties should light or not: which afterwards agreed vpon, there was yet great nicenesse whose foot should not be first on ground.

Their message being deliuered, and after hauing embraced each other, they conducted the sayd ambassadoz to his lodging at Mosco, a house builded of purpose for him, themselves being placed in the next house to it, as appointed to furnish him of all provisions, and to be vsed by him vpon all other occasions.

The ambassadoz hauing bene some dayes in Mosco, and hauing in all that time bene very honorably vsed from the Emperoz (for such was his will) though some of his chiefeest counsellors (as is sayd) had another purpose, and did often times cunningly put it in vse: He was sent for to Court, and was accompanied thither with about forty gentlemen honorably mounted, and sumptuously arrayed, & in his passage from his lodging to the court, were set in a ward five or six thousand shot, that were of the Emperozs gard. At the entry into the court there met him foure noble men apparelled in cloth of gold, and rich furrer, their caps embroidred with pearle and stone, who conducted him towards the Emperoz, till he was met with foure others of greater degree then they, who guided him yet further towards the Emperoz, in which passage there stood along the walles, and late vpon benches and founnes in row, seuen or eight hundred persons, said to be noblemen and gentlemen, all apparelled in garments of coloured satins and cloth of golde.

These foure noblemen accompanied him to the Emperozs chamber doore, where met him the Emperozs herald, whose office is there held great: and with him all the great officers of the Emperozs chamber, who all conducted him to the place where the Emperoz late in his state, hauing three crownes standing by him, viz. of Moscouia, Cazan, and Astrakan, and also by him 4 young noblemen of about twenty yeres of age, of each side twaine, cosly apparelled in white, holding vpon their shoulders each of them a brode are, much like to a Galloglas are of Ireland, thin and very sharpe, the scale or handle not past halfe a yard long, and there late about the chamber vpon benches and other low seats, about an hundred noblemen richly apparelled in cloth of golde.

The ambassadoz being thus brought to the Emperoz to kisse his hand, after some complements and inquiry of her Maiesties health, he willed him to goe sit downe in a place provided for that purpose, nigh ten paces distant from him, from whence he would haue had him to haue sent him her Maiesties letters and present, which the ambassadour thinking not reasonable stept forward towards the Emperour: in which passage the chancelloz came to meet him, and would haue taken his letters: to whom the ambassadour sayd, that her Maiesty had directed no letters to him; and so went on, and deliuered them himselve to the Emperours owne hands.

And after, hauing thus deliuered her Maiesties letters and what he had els to say at that time, he was conducted to the Councell chamber, where hauing had conference with the councell of matters of his ambassage, he was soone after sent for againe to the Emperour, where he dined in his presence at a side table, nere vnto him, and all his company at another boord by, where also dined at other tables in the same place, all the chiefe noble men that were about the Court, to the number of an hundred. And in the time of this dinner, the Emperour vnto many fauours to the ambassadour and about the midst of dinner (standing by) dranke a great carouse to the health of the Queene his good sister, and sent him a great bowle full of Rhenish wine and sugar to pledge him.

The ambassadour after this, was often called to Court, where he had conference both with the Emperour and his councell of the matters in question, touching both ambassages, which diuers times raised many iarres: and in the end, after sundry meetings, the Emperour finding himselve not satisfied to his liking, for that the ambassadour had not power by his commission to yeeld to euery thing that he thought fit, as a man whose will was selborne wonted to be gainsayd, let loose his passion, and with a sterne and angry countenance tolde him that he did not reckon the Queene of England to be his fellow: for there are (quoth he) that are her betters.

The ambassadour greatly mistliking these speeches, & being very vnwilling (how dangerous soeuer it might be done to his owne person) to giue way to the Emperour, to derogate ought from the honour and greatnesse of her Maiesty: and finding also that to subiect himselve to the angrie humour and disposition of the Emperour was not the meanes to winne ought at his hands, with like courage and countenance to answer his, tolde him that the Queene his Mistresse was as great a prince as any was in Christendome, equall to him that thought himselve the greatest, well able to defend herselfe against his malice who soeuer, and wanted no meanes to offend any that either thee had, or should haue cause to be enemy vnto. Yea (quoth he) How sayest thou to the French king, and the king of Spaine? Hary (quoth the ambassadour) I holde the Queene my Mistresse as great as any of them both. Then what sayest thou (quoth hee) to the Emperour of Germany? Such is the greatnesse of the Queene my Mistresse (quoth the ambassadour) as the King her father had (not long since) the Emperour in his pay, in his warres against France.

This answer mistliked the Emperour yet so much more, as that he tolde the ambassadour, that were he not an ambassadour, he would throw him out of the doozes. Whereunto he answered that he might doe his will, for he was now fast within his countrey: but he had a Mistresse who (he doubted not) would be reuenged of any iniury that should be done vnto him. Whereupon the Emperour in great sudden hede him get him home. And he with no more reuerence then such vantage required, saluted the Emperour, and went his way.

All this notwithstanding, the ambassadour was not much sooner out of the chamber, and the Emperours cholar somewhat settled, but he deliuered to his councell that stood about him many commendations in the fauor of the ambassadour, for that he would not indure one ill word to be spoken against his Mistresse, and therewithall withed himselve to haue such a seruant.

The ambassadour had not bene much more then one houre in his lodging, but the Emperour imagining (as it seemed) by the extraordinary behauior of the ambassadour (for he wanted not wit to indge) that he had found what was the Emperours case, sent his principall secretary vnto him, to tell him, that notwithstanding what had past, yet for the great loue that he bare to the Queene his sister, he should very shortly be called againe to Court, and haue a resolution of all the matters in question: and this Secretary was now further content to impart, and sayd to the ambassadour that the Emperour was fully resolued to send a greater noble man home with him in ambassage to the Queene his sister, then euer he yet at any time sent out of his countrey: and that he determined also to send to the Queene a present worth three thousand pounds, and to gratifie himselve at his departure with a gift that should be worth a thousand pounds: and tolde him also that the next day the Emperour would send a great noble man vnto him, to conferre with him of certaine abuses done him by Shalkan the chancelloz, and his ministers.

And so the day following he sent Bodan Belskoy the churcheest counsellor that he had, a man most in credit with him: this man examined all matters wherewith the ambassadour had found himselve grieved, and supplied him with what hee wanted, and righted him in all things wherein hee had bene wronged.

He obtained like leaue for Richard Elmes an Englishman one of the Emperours surgeons.

He also got leaue for Iane Ricards the widow of Doctor Bomelius a Dutchman, and physitian to the Emperour, who for treason practised with the king of Pole against the sayd Emperour, was rosted to death at the city of Mosco, in the yere 1579.

These following he obtained for the behoofe of the merchants.

HE procured for the merchants promise of recompense for certaine goods taken from their factors by robbery upon the Volga.

He obtained likewise the payment of five hundred marks, which was payd for ten yeeres before his going into Russia (into the Emperours receit) for a rent of a house that they had at Vologda.

He also got granted for them the repayment of fiftene hundred marks, which had bene exacted of them the two last yeres before his comming thither.

He got also for them order for the repayment of an olde and desperate debt of thre thousand marks, a debt so desperate, as foure yeeres left out of their accounts, and by the opinion of them all, not thought fit to be dealt with, for too much offending the Emperour, or impeaching his other businesse, which was thought at least otherwise sufficient, and was therefore left out of his instructions from her Maiesty.

He obtained that all strangers were forbidden to trade any more into Russia, and that the passage and trade to all the Emperours Northzen coasts and countreies, from the Wardhouse to the river of Ob should be onely free to the English nation.

Lastly, of a great desire he had to do the merchants good, without motion either of themselves here, or their Agents there, or any other of them, he obtained of the Emperour the abatement of all their custome which they had long before payd, and agreed still to continue, which custome the Dutchmen and strangers being remooued, as now it was agreed, amounted to two thousand pounds yerely.

All these were granted, some already payd before his comming from Mosco, the olde privilege ratified, newly written, signed and sealed, and was to be deliuered to the ambassadour at his next comming to Court, before when the Emperour fell sicke of a surfer, and so died.

After whose death the case was woondrously altered with the ambassadour: for whereas both in his owne conceit, and in all mens opinion els, he was in great forwardnes to haue growen a great man with the Emperour, what for the loue he bare to her Maiesty, and the particular liking he had of himselfe, he now fell into the hands of his great enemies, Mekita Romanouich and Andre Shalkan the chancellor, who, after the death of the Emperour, tooke the speciall gouernment upon themselves, and so presently caused the ambassadour to be shut up a close prisoner in his owne house, for the space of nine weeks, and was so straightly guarded and badly vsed by those that attended him, as he dayly suspected some further mischief to haue followed: for in this time there grew a great vyroze in Mosco of night twenty thousand persons, which remembryng that his enemies reigned, somewhat amazed the ambassadour, but yet afterwards the matter fell out against that great counsellor Bodan Belskoy, whom I noted before to be a special man in the old Emperours favour: who was now not withstanding so outragiously assaulted, as that he was forced to seeke the Emperours chamber for his safety, and was afterwards sent away to Cazan, a place he had in gouernment, five hundred miles from Mosco, where he hath remained euer since, and neuer as yet called againe to court, at which time the ambassadour expected some such like measure, and prepared himselfe as well as he could, for his defence: yet happily after this, was sent for to court, to haue his dispatch, and to take his leaue of the Emperour: whither being conducted (not after the wonted manner) and brought to the counsell chamber, came to him onely Shalkan the chancellor and a brother of his, who without more adoe, tolde him for the summe of his dispatch, that this Emperour would not treat of further amity with the Queene his mistresse, then such as was betwene his late father and her, before his comming thither: and would not heare any reply to be made by the ambassadour, but presently caused both himselfe and all his company to be disarmed of their weapons, and go towards the Emperour. In which passage there were such outrages offered him, as had he not vsed more patience then his disposition afforded him, or the occasion required, he had not in likelihood escaped with life, but yet at length was brought to the presence of the Emperour, who sayd nothing to him, but what the chancellor had already done, but offered him a letter to carry to her Maiesty, which the ambassadour (for that he knew it contained nothing that did concerne his ambassage) refused till he saw his danger grow too great: neither would the Emperour suffer the ambassadour to reply ought, nor well he could, for they had now of purpose taken taken away his interpreter, being yet unwilling (as it seemed, and suspecting the ambassadours purpose) that the Emperour and other should know how dishonourably he had been handled: for there was at that time, in that presence a noble brave gentleman, one Boris Theodorovich Godenoe, brother to the Emperour that now is, who yet after the death of the Emperour did alwayes use the ambassadour most honourably, and would very willingly haue done him much more kinde- nesse, but his authority was not yet, till the coronation of the Emperour: but notwithstanding he sent often vnto him, not long before his departure, and accompanied his many honourable fauours with a present of two faire pieces of cloth of golde, and a rymber of very good sables: and desired that as there was kindeesse and brotherhood twixt the Emperour and her Maiestie, so there might be loue and brotherhood twixt him and the ambassadour, Sauiug from this man, there was now no more fauour nor friendship left for the ambassadour in Moscouia: for the chancellor Shalkan had now sent him word that the English Emperour was dead: he had now nothing offered him but dangers and disgraces too many, and a hasty dispatch from the Mosco, that he might not tary the coronation of the new Emperour: offences many in his preparation for his long iourney, onely one meane gentleman appointed to accompany him to the sea side, expecting daily in his passage some sudden reuenge to be done vpon him, for so he vnderstood it was threatned before his coming from the Mosco, & therefore with resolution prouided by all the meanes he might, by himselfe and his seruants for his defence (for now was his danger knowne such, as the English merchants did altogether leaue him, although he commanded them in her Maiesties name to accompany him) that if any such thing should happen to be offered him, as many of them as he could that should offer to execute it, should die with him for company: which being perceiued was thought to make his passage the safer. So after ward being diuene to disgest many iniuries by the way, at length he recouered S. Nicholas, where remembering his vnfortunate losse of the old Emperour, and his ill vsage since then at the Mosco, he being forced to take a bare letter for the summe of his dispatch, contempning nothing of that he came for, and the poore and disgracefull present sent him (in the name of the Emperour) in respect of that that was meant him by the old Emperour, knowing all these to be done in disgrace of her Maiestie and himselfe, determined now to be discharged of some part of them in such sort as he could, and so prouiding as he might to pruenue his danger, in getting to his shippe, furnishing and placing his men to answere any assault that should be offered him, after he had bidden farewell to the vncourteous gentleman that brought him thither, by thre or foure of the valiantest and discreetest men he had, he sent to be deliuered him or left at his lodging, his maisters weake letter, and worse present, and so afterwards happily (though hardly) recouered his ship in safetie, although presently afterwards, there was great hurly burly after him, to force him to receiue the same againe, but failed of their purpose. So came the ambassadour from S. Nicholas the twelfth day of August, and arrived at Grauesend the twelfth of September following, and attended her Maiestie at the court at Ouelands, where, after hauing kissd her Maiesties hands, and deliuered some part of the successe of his ambassage, he presented her an Elke or Loshe, the Red deere of the countrey, and also a brace of Raine deare, Buck and Doe, both bearing very huge hornes: they in her Maiesties presence dyed a fled and a man vpon it, after the manner of the Samoeds, a people that inhabite in the North east from Russia, and were that yere come ouer the sea in the winter season vpon the yce, in their sleds, drawn with these deere into Russia, where the ambassadour bought of them seuentene, whereof he brought nine aliue into Kent.

A letter of M. Henrie Lane to the worshipfull M. William Sander-son, containing a briebe discourse of that which passed in the North-east discouery for the space of three and thirtie yeeres.

After Sander-son, as you lately requested mee, so haue I sought, and though I cannot finde things that heretofore I kept in writing, and lent out to others, yet perusing at London copies of mine old letters to content one that meaneth to pleasure many, I haue briefly and as truly as I may, drawn out as followeth: The rough heaving may be planed at your leisure, or as pleaseth him that shall take the paines.

First the honourable attempt to discover by sea North-east and North-west named for Cathay, being chiefly procured by priuiledge from king Edward the first, and other his nobilitie, by and at the cost and lute of M. Sebastian Cabota, then gouernor for discoueries with sir Andrew Iudde, sir George Barnes, sir William Garrard, M. Anthony Huffle, and a companie of merchants, was in the last yeere of his Patenties reigne 1553. The generall charge whereof was committed to one sir Hugh Willoughbie knight, a goodly Gentleman, accompanied with sufficient number of Pilots, Maisters, Merchants and Mariners, hauing three shippes well furnished, to wit, The Bona Speranza, the Edward Bonadventure, and the Confidentialia. The Edward Bonadventure, Richard Chancellor being Pilot, and Steuen Burrough Maister, hauing discovered Ward-house vpon the coast of Finmark, by storme or fogge departed from the rest, found the bay of S. Nicholas now the chiefe port for Russia; there wintred in safetie, and had ayde of the people at a village called Newnox.

The other two shippes attempting further Northwards (as appeared by pamphlets found after written by sir Hugh Willoughbie) were in September encountred with such extreame colde, that they put backe to seeke a wintring place: and missing the saide baye fell vpon a deserte coast in Lappia, entering into a Riuer immediately frozen by, since discovered, named Arzina Reca, distant East from a Russian Monastery of Monkes called Pechingho, from whence they neuer returned, but all to the number of 70. persons perished, which was for want of experience to haue made caues and stoues. These were found with the shippes the next Summer Anno 1554. by Russe fishermen: and in Anno 1555. the place sent vnto by English Merchants as hereafter appeareth.

Anno 1554. the sayd shippe Edward Bonadventure (although robbed homewards by flerings) returned with her company to London, shewing and setting forth their entertainments and discouery of the countreys euen to the citie of Mosco, from whence they brought a priuiledge written in Russe with the Kings or great Dukes seale, the other two shippes looked for and unknown to them where they were.

An. 1555. the said company of Merchants for discourie vpon a new supply, sent thither againe with two shippes, to wit, the Edward Bonadventure, & another bearing the name of the King and Queene, Philip and Marie, whose Patenties by their letters to the said Poleonite, recommended sundry their subiects then passing, whereof certaine, to wit, Richard Chancellor, George Killingworth, Henry Lane, and Arthur Edwards, after their arrivall at the Bay, and passing by Dwina to Vologda, went first by to Mosco, where, vpon knowledge of the said letters, they with their traine had speciall entertainment, with houses and diet appointed, and shortly permitted to the the princes presence, they were with gentlemen brought through the citie of Mosco, to the castle and palace, replenished with numbers of people, and some gunners. They carried sundry rocmes, furnished in shew with ancient graue personages, all in long garments of sundry colours, golde, tisse, balbekin, and violet, as our bestments and copes haue bene in England, suitable with caps, iewels, and chaines. These were found to be no courtiers, but ancient Polcouites, inhabitants, and other their merchants of credite, as the maner is, furnished thus from the Wardrobe and Treasurie, waiting and wearing this apparell for the time, and so to restore it.

Then entering into the presence, being a large roome floored with carpets, were men of more estate, and richer shew, in number aboute an hundred set square: who after the said English men came in, doing reuerence, they all stood vp, the prince onely sitting, and yet rising at any occasion, when our King and Queenes names were read or spoken. Then after speeches by interpretation, our men kissing his hande, and bidden to dinner, were stayed in another roome, and at dinner brought through, where might be seene massie siluer and gilt plate, some like and as bigge as kilderkins, and walshbowles, and entering the dining place, being the greater roome, the prince was set bare headed, his crowne and rich cappe standing vpon a pinnaele by. Not farre distant late his Metropolitane, with diuers other of his kindred, and chiefe Tartarian Captaines: none late ouer against him, or any, at other tables, their backs towards him: which tables all furnished with ghests set, there was for the Englishmen, named by the Russes, Ghoski Carabelski, to wit, strangers or merchants by ship, a table in the middle of the roome, where they were set direct against the prince: and then began the seruice, brought in by a number of his peong Lordes and Gentlemen, in such rich attire, as is aboute specified: and still from the Princes table (notwithstanding their owne furniture) they had his whole messes set ouer all in masse fine golde, deliuered euery time from him by name to them, by their severall Christian names, as they late, viz. Richard, George, Henry, Arthur. Like wise bread and sundry drinckes of purified mead, made of fine white and clarified honic. At their rising, the prince called them to his table, to receiue each one a cup from his hand to drinke, and tooke into his hand Master George Killingworths beard, which reached ouer the table, & pleasantly deliuered it the Metropolitane, who seeming to blesse it, sayd in Russe, this is Gods gift. As in deede at that time it was not onely thicke, broad, and yellow coloured, but in length five foot and two inches of assize. Then taking leaue, being night, they were accompanied and followed with a number, carrying pots of drinke, and dishes of meate dressed, to our lodging.

Mr. Killingworths beard of a marvellous length.

This yeere the two shippes, with the dead bodies of Sir Hugh Willoughbie, and his people, were sent vnto by Master Killingworth, (which remained there in Mosco Agent almost two yeeres) and much of the goods and victuals were recovered and saued.

Anno 1556. The company sent two shippes for Russia, with extraordinary masters and saylers to bring home the two shippes, which were frozen in Lappia, in the riuer of Arzina aforesaid. The two shippes sent this yeere from England sailing from Lapland to the Bay of S. Nicholas, tooke in lading with passengers, to wit, a Russe ambassadoe, named Ioseph Napea, and some of his men shipped with Richard Chancellor in the Edward. But so it fel out that the two which came from Lappia, with all their new Masters and Mariners, neuer were heard of, but in foule weather, and wrought seas, after their two yeeres wintering in Lapland, became, as is supposed, vnsanch, and sunke, wherein were drowned also diuers Russes merchants, and seruants of the ambassadour. A third shippe the Edward aforesaid, falling on the North part of Scotland, vpon a rocke was also lost, and Master Chancellor, with diuers other, drowned. The said Russe ambassadour hardly escaping, with other his men, mariners, & some goods saued, were sent for into Scotland, from the King, Queene, and Merchants (the messenger being M. Doctoe Laurence Huffle, and others:) And then, as in the chronicles appeareth, honorably entertained and receiued at London.

This yeere also the company furnished and sent out a pinnesse, named the Serchthrift, to discover the harborowes in the North coast from Norway to Wardhouse, and so to the Bay of S. Nicholas. There was in her Master and Pilot, Stephen Burrough, with his brother William, and eight other. Their discovery was beyond the Bay, towarde the Samoeds, people dwelling neare the riuer of Ob, and found a sound of sea with an Island called Vaigars, first by them put into the Carde of Happe. In that place they threw snowe out of their said pinnesse, with shouels in August, by which extremitie, and lacke of time, they came backe to Russia, and wintered at Colmogro.

Anno 1557. The company with foure good shippes, sent backe the said Russe ambassadour, and in company with him, sent as an Agent, for further discovery, Master Anthony Ienkinson, who after ward anno 1558, with great fauour of the prince of Moscouia, and his letters passed the riuer river Volga to Cazan, and meaning to seeke Cathay by land, was by many troupes and companies of vnciuil Tartarians encountred, and in danger: but keeping company with merchants of Baetria, or Boghar, and Vrgeme, traouelling with camels, he with his company, went to Boghar, and no further: whose entertainment of the king is to be had of master Ienkinson, which returned anno 1559, to Mcscouie. And in anno 1560, he, with Henry Lane, came home into England: which yeere was the first safe returne, without losse of shipwarke, or dead freight, & burnings. And at this time was the first traffike to the Narue in Liouonia, which confines with Lituania, & all the dominions of Russia: and the markets, faires, commodities, great towne & rivers, were sent vnto by diuers seruants: the reports were taken by Henry Lane, Agent, and deliuered to the companie, 1561. The trade to Rie, and Reuel, of old time hath bene long since frequented by our English nation, but this trade to the Narue was hitherto concealed from vs by the Danskers and Lubeckers.

Anno 1561. the said Master Anthony Ienkinson went Agent into Russia, who the next yeere after, passing all the river of Volga to Astracan, and ouer the Caspian sea, arrived in Persia, and opened the trade thither.

Also betwene the yeeres of 1568, and 1573, sundry voyages after Master Ienkinsons, were made by Thomas Alcock, Arthur Edwards, Master Thomas Bannister, and Master Geoffrey Ducket, whose returne (if spoule neere Volga had not prevented by rousing the reues) had altogether salued and recovered the companies (called the olde companies) great losse, charges, and damages: but the saying is true, By vnicie small things grow great, & by contention great things become small. This may be understood best by the company. The frowardnesse of some few, and euill doing of some briuist factozs, was cause of much of the euill successe.

Arthur Edwards was sent againe 1579, and died in the voyage at Astracan. About which matters, are to be remembred the voyages of Master Thomas Randolph Esquire, Ambassadoz, anno 1567, And late of Sir Ierome Bowes, anno 1583, both tending and treating for further discoueries, freedomes, and priuileges, wherewith I meddle not. But in conclusion, for their paines and aduentures this way (as diuers do now adapes other wayes) as worthy Gentlemen sent from princes, to doe their countrey good, I put them in your memozie, with my hearty farewell. The most solemne, and magnificent coronation of || Pheodor Iuanowich, Emperour of Russia &c. the tenth of Iune, in the yeere 1584.
scene and obserued by Master Ierom Horsey gentleman, and seruant to her Maiesly, a man of great trauell, and long experience in those parts: wherewith is also ioyned the course of his iourney ouer land from Mosco to Emden.

The death of Iuan Vasiluich
1584. May. 18.

I. Boris adopted as the Emperors third sonne.

When the old Emperour Iuan Vasiluich died, (being about the eighteenth of April, 1584, after our computation) in the citie of Mosco, hauing reigned 54. yeeres, there was some tumult and vpproze among some of the nobilitie, and cominaltie, which notwithstanding was quickly pacified. Immediately the same night, the Prince Boris Pheodorowich Godonoua, Knez Iuan Pheodorowich, Mesthis Slafsky, Knez Iuan Petrowich Susky, Mekita Romanowich & Bodan Iacoulewich Belskoy, being all noble men, and chiefest in the Emperours Will, especially the Lord Boris, whom he adopted as his third sonne, & was brother to the Emperesse, who was a man very well liked of all estates, as no lesse worthy for his valure & wisdom: all these were appointed to dispose, & settle his sonne Pheodor Iuanowich, hauing one swozne another, and all the nobilitie, and officers who soeuer. In the morning the dead Emperour was layd into the Church of Michael the Archangel, into a heuen sepulchre, very richly decked with vestures fit for such a purpose: and present proclamation was made, (Emperour Pheodor Iuanowich of all Russia &c.) Throughout all the citie of Mosco was great watch and ward, with souldiers, and gunners, good orders established, and officers placed to subdue the tumulters, and mainteine quietnes: to see what speede and policie was in this case vsed was a thing worthy the beholding. This being done in Mosco, great men of birth and account were also presently sent to the bordering Townes, as Smolensko Vobsko, Kaban, Nouogorod &c. with fresh garrison, and the old sent vp. As vpon the 4. of May a parliament was held, wherein were assembled, the Metropolitane, Archbishops, Bishops, Priors, and chiefe clergie men, and all the nobilitie whatsoeuer: where many matters were determined not pertinent to my purpose, yet all tended to to a new reformation in the gouernment: but especially the terme, and tunc was agreed vpon for the solemnizing of the new Emperors coronation. In the meane time y^e Emperesse, wife to the old Emperour, was with her childe the Emperors sonne, Charlewich Demetrie Iuanowich, of one yeres age or there abouts, sent with her father Pheodor Pheodorowich Nagay, & that kindred, being 5. Brothers, to a towne called Ouglers, which was giuen vnto her, and the young Prince her sonne, with all the lands belonging to it in the shire, with officers of all sorts appointed, hauing allowance of apparell, iewels, diet, horse &c. in ample maner belonging to the estate of a prince. The time of mourning after their vse being expired, called Sorachyn, or fortye orderlie dayes, the day of the solemnizing of this coronation, with great preparations, was come, being vpon the 10. day of Iune, 1584. and that day then Sunday, he being of the age of 25. yeres: at which time, Maister Ierom Horsey was orderly sent for, and placed in a fit roome to see all the solemnitie. The Emperour coming out of his Pallace, there went before him, the Metropolitane, Archbishops, Bishops, and chiefeest Monkes, and Clergie men, with very rich Copes, and Priestes garments vpon them, carrying pictures of our Ladie &c. with the Emperours Angell, banners, censers, and many other such ceremonious things, singing all the way. The Emperour with his nobilitie in order entred the Church named Blaueshina, or Blessednes, where prayers, and seruice were vsed, according to the maner of their Church: that done, they went thence to the Church, called Michael the Archangell, and there also vsed the like prayers, and seruice: and from thence to our Lady Church, Prechista, being their Cathedral Church. In the middelt thereof was a chaire of marbelle placed, wherein his Ancestors vsed to sit at such extraordinarie times: his robes were then changed, and most rich and vnualluable garments put on him: being placed in this Princely seate, his nobilitie standing round about him in their degrees, his imperi- all Crowne was set vpon his head by the Metropolitane, his Scepter globe in his right hand, his sword of Justice in his left of great riches: his 6. Crownes also, by which he holdeth his king- domes were set before him, and the Lord Boris Pheodorowich was placed at his right hand: then the Metropolitane read openly a booke of a small volume, with exhortations to the Emperour to minister true Justice, to inioy with tranquillitie the Crowne of his aunccestors, which God had giuen him, and vsed these wordes following:

The old Em-
peresse, her fas-ther, and her young sonne sent to Ouglers.

coronation.

Through the will of the almighty & without beginning God, which was before this world, whom we glorifie in the Trinitie, one onely God, the Father, the Sonne, and the holy Ghost, maker of all things; worker of all in all euery where, fulfiller of all things, by which will, and working, he both liueth, and giueth life to man: that our only God which enspireth euery one of vs his only children with his word to discerne God through our Lord Iesus Christ, and the holy quickning spirit of life, now in these perilous times establish vs to keep the right Scepter, and suffer vs to raigne of our selues to the good profit of the land, to the subduing of the people, together with the enemies, & the maintenance of vertue. And so the Metropolitane blessed and layd his crosse vpon him. After this, he was taken out of his chaire of Marbelle, hauing vpon him an upper robe adorne with precious stones of all sorts, orient pearles of great quantitie, but all wayes augmented in riches: it was in waight two hundred pounds, the traine, and parts thereof borne by 6. Dukes, his chiefe imperi- all Crowne vpon his head very precious: his staffe imperi- all in his right hand of an unicornes horne of three foot and a halfe in length beset with rich stones, bought of Merchants of Ausburge by the old Emperour in An. 1581. and cost him 7000. Markes sterling. This Jewell M. Horsey kept sometimes, before the Emperour had it. His scepter globe was caried before him by the prince Boris Pheodorowich, his rich cap be set with rich stones and pearles was caried before him by a Duke: his 6. Crownes also were caried by Demetrius Iuanowich Godonoua, the Emperors vncle, Mekira Romanowich the Emperors vncle, Stephan Vasilowich, Gregory Vasilowich, Iuan Vasilowich brothers of the blood royal. Thus at last the Emperour came to the great Church doore, and the people cried, God saue our Emperour Pheodor Iuanowich of al Russia. His horse was there ready most richly adorne, with a couering of imbrodered pearle and precious stones, saddle, and all furniture agreeable to it, reported to be worth 300000. markes sterling.

There was a bridge made of 150. fadome in length, thre maner of waies, thre foote about ground and two fadome broad, for him to goe from one Church to the other with his Princes and nobles from the presse of the people, which were in number infinite, and some at that time pressed to death with the throng. As the Emperour returned out of the Churches, they were spread vnder foot with cloth of gold, the porches of the Churches with red velvet, the bridges with scarlet, and stammeit cloth from one church to another: and as soone as the Emperour was passed by, the cloth of gold, velvet and scarlet was cut, and taken of those that could come by it, euery man desirous to haue a picce, to reserve it for a monument: silver and gold coppe, then imprinted of purpose was cast among the people in great quantitie. The lord Boris Pheodorowich was sumptuously, and richly attired, with his garments decked with great orient pearle, beset with all sorts of precious stones. In like rich manner were appareled all the family of the Godonouacs in their degrees, with the rest of the princes, and nobilitie, whereof one named Knez Iuan Michalowich Glynsky, whose robe, horse, and furniture, was in register found worth one hundred thousand markes sterling, being of great antiquitie. The Emperesse being in her pallace, was placed in her chaire of State also before a great open window: most precious, and rich were her robes, and shining to behold, with rich stones, and orient pearle beset, her crowne was placed upon her head, accompanied with her Princesses, and Ladies of estate: then cried out the people, God preserve our noble Emperesse Irenia. After all this the Emperour came into the Parliament house which was richly decked: there he was placed in his royall seat adorned as before: his 6. crownes were set before him upon a table: the basin, and ewer royall of gold held by his knight of guard with his men standing two on each side in white apparell of cloth of silver, called Rindry, with scepters, and battle axes of gold in their hands: the Princes, and nobilitie were all placed according to their degrees all in their rich robes.

The Emperour after a short oration, permitted every man in order to kisse his hand: which being done, he removed to a princely seate prepared for him at the table: where he was served by his nobles in very princely order. The three out rooms being very great, and large were beset with plate of golde, and silver round, from the ground up to the vaults one upon the other: among which plate were many barrels of silver and golde: this solemnitie, and triumph lasted a whole week, wherein many royall pastimes were shewed and used: after which the chiefe men of the nobilitie were elected to their places of office, & dignitie, as the Prince Boris Pheodorowich was made chiefe Counsellor to the Emperour, Master of the horse, had the charge of his person, Lieutenant of the Empire, and Warlike engins, Gouvernor of Lieutenant of the Empire of Cazan, and Astracan and others: to this dignitie were by Parliament, and gift of the Emperour given him many reuenues, and rich lands, as there was given him, and his for ever to inherit a province called Vaga, of 300. English miles in length, and 250. in breadth, with many townes and great villages populous and wealthy, his yearly reuenue out of that province, is 35. thousand markes sterling, being not the 5. part of his yearly reuenue. Further, he and his house be of such authoritie, and power, that in 40. dayes warning they are able to bring into the field 100. thousand Souldiers well furnished.

The conclusion of the Emperours Coronation was a peale of ordinance, called a peale royall two miles without the citie, being 170. great pieces of brass of all sorts, as faire as any can be made; these pieces were all discharged with shot against bulwarkes made of purpose: 20. thousand hargubusers standing in 8. rankes two miles in length, appareled all in velvet, coloured like & stammels, discharged their shot also twice over in good order: and so the Emperour accompanied with all his princes and nobles, at the least 50. thousand horse departed through the City to his pallace. This royall coronation would aske much time, and many leaues of paper to be described particularly as it was performed: it shal suffice, to understand that the like magnificence was neuer seene in Russia.

The coronation, and other triumphes ended, at the nobilitie, officers, and merchants according to an accustomed order every one in his place, and degree brought rich presents unto the Emperour, wishing him long life, and joy in his kingdome.

The same time also Master Ierom Horsey aforesaid, remayning as servant in Russia for the Queenes most excellent Maestie, was called for to the Emperour, as he sat in his imperiall seat, and then also a famous Merchant of Netherland being newly come to Mosco, (who gaue him selfe out to be the king of Spaines subiect) called Iohn de Wale, was in like sort called for. Some of the nobilitie would haue preferred this subiect of the Spaniard before Master Horsey servant to the Queene of England, whereunto Master Horsey would in no case agree, saying, he would haue his legges cut off by the knees, before he would yeeld to such an indignitie offered to his Soueraigne the Queenes Maestie of England, to bring the Emperour a present, in course after the King of Spaines subiect, or any other whatsoever. The Emperour, and the Prince Boris Pheodorowich perceiving the controuersie, sent the Lord Treasorer Peter Iuanowich Galayun, and Vasil Shalkan, both of the Counsell, to them, who deliuered the Emperour backe, Master Horsey speech: whereupon he was first in order (as good reason) admitted and presented the Emperour in the behalfe of the English Merchants trading thither, a present wishing him joy, and long to raigne in tranquillitie, and so kissed the Emperours hand, he accepting the present with good liking, and anonching, that for his sisters sake Queene Elizabeth of England, he would be a gracious Lord to her Merchants, in as ample manner as euer his father had ben: and being dismissed, he had the same day sent him 70. dishes of sundry kinds of meats, with 3. carts laden with all sorts of drinkes very bountifullly. After him was the Ruzelays subiect of the Spanishe king admired with his present, whom the Emperoz willed to be no lesse faithfull and seruiceable unto him, then the Queene of Englands subiects were & had bene, and then the king of Spaines subiects should receiue fauour accordingly.

All these things thus in order perfozmed, praises were sung in all the churches. The Emperoz and Emperesse very deuoutly resorted on foote to many principal Churches in the Citie, and vpon Trinitie Sunday betooke themselves to a progresse in order of procession, to a famous monastrie called Sergius and the Trinitie, 60. miles distant from the Citie of Mosco, accompanied with a huge armie of Noblemen, Gentlemen and others, mounted vpon goodly horses with furniture accordingly.

The Emperesse of deuotion tooke this iourney on foot all the way, accompanied with her princesses and ladies, no small number: her guard and gunners were in number 20000. her chiefe counsellor or attendant, was a noble man of the blood Roial her vncle of great authoritie called Demetri Iuanowich Godonoua. All this progresse ended, both the Emperoz and Emperesse returned to Mosco: shortly after the Emperoz by the direction of the prince Boris Pheodorowich, sent a power into the land of Siberia, where all the rich Sables & Furses are gotten. This power conquered in one yeere and a halfe, 1000. miles. In the performance of this warre, there was taken prisoner the Emperoz of the countrey called Chare Sibersky, and with him many other dukes and noble men, which were brought to Mosco with a guard of souldiers and gunners, who were receiued into the citie in very honorable maner, and do there remaine to this day.

Whereupon the corrupt officers, Judges, Iustices, captains and lieutenants through the whole kingdom were remoued, and more honest men substituted in their places, with expresse commandement, vnder severe punishment to surcease their old vrbing & extortion which they had vsed in the old Emperors time, and now to exercise true iustice without respect of persons: and to the end that this might be the better done, their lands and yearly stipends were augmented: the great taskes, customes, and duties, which were before layd vpon the people in the old Emperors time, were now abated, and some wholly remitted, and no punishments commanded to be vsed, without sufficient and due prooffe, although the crime were capitall, deseruing death: many Dukes and noble men of great houses, that were vnder displeasure, and imprisoned 20. yeeres by the old Emperoz, were now set at libertie and restored to their lands: all prisoners were set at libertie, and their trespasses forgiuen. In summe, a great alteration vniuersally in the gouernment folowed, and yet all was done quietly, ciuilly, peaceably, without trouble to the Prince, or offence to the Subiect: and this bred great assurance and honour to the kingdom, and all was accomplished by the wisdom especially of Irenia the Emperesse.

These things being reported and caried to the eares of the kings and princes that were borderers vpon Russia, they grew so fearefull and terrible to them, that the Monarch of all the Scythians called the Crimme Tartar or great Can himselfe, named Sophet Keri Alli, came out of his owne countrey to the Emperoz of Russia, accompanied with a great number of his nobilitie well horsed, although to them that were Christians they seemed rude, yet they were personable men, and valiant: their coming was gratefull to the Emperoz, and their entertainment was honorable. The Tartar prince hauing brought with him his wiues also, receiued of the Russe Emperoz entertainment, and princely welcome according to their estates.

Not long after, 1200. Polish gentlemen, valiant souldiours, and proper men came to Mosco offering their seruite to the Emperoz, who were all entertained: and in like sort many Chirkasses, and people of other nations came and offered seruice. And as soone as the report of this new created Emperoz was spread ouer other kingdoms of Europe, there were sent to him sundry Ambassadors to wish him ioy and prosperitie in his kingdom: thither came Ambassadors from the Turke, from the Persian, the Bogharian, the Crimme, the Georgian, and many other Tartar princes. There came also Ambassadors from the Emperoz of Almaine, the Pole, the Swethen, the Dane, &c. And since his coronation no enemy of his hath prevailed in his attempts.

It fell out not long after, that the Emperoz was desirous to send a message to the most excellent Queene of England, for which seruice he thought no man fitter then M. Ierome Horsey, supposing that one of the Queenes owne men and subiects would be the more acceptable to her. The summe of which message was, that the Emperoz desired a continuance of that league, friendship, amitie and intercourse of traffique which was betweene his father and the Queens maiestie and her subiects, with other priuate affaires besides, which are not to be made common.

Torhook, to great Nouogrod, to Vobsky, and thence to Nyhouse in Liouonia, to Wenden, and so to Riga: (where he was beset, and brought forthwith before a Cardinall called Rageuil, but yet suffered to passe in the end :) From thence to Mito, to Golden, and Libou in Curland, to Memel, to Koningsburgh in Prussia, to Elbing, to Dantzike, to Steine in Pomerland, to Rostock, to Lubeck, to Hamborough, to Breme, to Emden, and by sea to London. Being arriued at her maiesties roiall court, and hauing deliuered the Emperors letters with good fauour, and gracious acceptance, he was forthwith againe commaunded to repasse into Russia, with other letters from her maiestie to the Emperoz, and prince Boris Pheodorowich, answering the Emperors letters, and withall requesting the fauour and friendship, which his father had peised to the English merchants: and hereunto was he earnestly also solicited by the merchants of London themselves of that company, to deale in their behalfe. Being thus dispatched from London by sea, he arriued in Mosco, the 20. of April 1586. and was very honorably welcommed. And for 8 merchants behoofe, obtained all his requests, being therein specially fauoured by 8 noble prince Boris Pheodorowich, who alwayes affected M. Horsey with speciall liking. And hauing obtained priuileges for the merchants, he was recommended from the Emperoz againe, to the Queene of England his mistresse, by whom the prince Boris, in token of his honorable and good opinion of the Queens maiestie, sent her highnesse a roiall present of Sables, Luzarns, cloth of gold and other rich things. So that the Companie of English merchants, next to their thankfulness to her maiestie, are to account M. Horseyes paines their speciall benefit, who obtained for them those priuileges, which in twentie yeeres before would not be granted.

The maner of M. Horseyes last dispatch from the Emperoz, because it was very honorable, I thought good to record. He was freely allowed post horses for him and his seruants, victuals and all other necessities for his long iourney: at every towne that he came vnto from Mosco to Vologda, which is by land five hundred miles, he receiued the like free and bountifull allowances, at the Emperors charge. New victuall and prouision were giuen him vpon the riuer Dwina at every towne by the kings officers, being one thousand miles in length. When he came to the new castle called Archangel, he was receiued of the Duke Knez Vasilie Andrewich Isuenogorodsky by the Emperors commission into the Castle, gunners being set in rankes after their vse, where he was sumptuously feasted: from thence hee was dispatched with bountifull prouision and allowance in the Dukes boat, with one hundred men to rowe him, and one hundred Gunners in other boats to conduct him, with a gentleman capitaine of the Gunners. Comming to the road where the English, Dutch, and French ships rode, the gunners discharged, and the ships shot in like maner 46. pieces of their ordinance, & so he was brought to his lodging at the English house vpon Rose Island.

And that which was the full and complete conclusion of the fauour of the Emperoz and Boris Pheodorowich toward M. Horsey, there were the next day sent him for his further prouision by the sea by a gentleman and a capitaine the things following.

16. live oxen.	2. swans.
70. sheepe.	65. gallons of mead.
600. hens.	40. gallons of Aquauitz.
25. fitches of Bacon.	60. gallons of beere.
80. bushels of meale.	3. pong beares.
600. loaves of bread.	4. hawkes.
2000. eggs.	Stoie of onions and garlike.
10. geese.	10. fresh salmons.
2. cranes.	A wild boze.

All these things were brought him downe by a Gentleman of the Emperors, and another of prince Boris Pheodorowich, & were receiued in order by Iohn Frese seruant to M. Horsey, together with an honorable present and reward from the prince Boris, sent him by M. Francis Cherry an Englishman: which present was a whole very rich piece of cloth of gold, & a faire paire of Sables. This Gentleman hath obserued many other rare things concerning those partes, which hereafter (God willing) at moze conuenient time and laisure shall come to light.

Through the wil of the almightie, and without beginning God, which was before this world, whom we glorifie in 8 Trinitie, one only God the father, the sonne, and the holy ghost, maker of all things, worker of all in all euery where, fulfiller of all things, by which will and working, he both loueth and giueth life to man, That our onely God, which which inspireth euery one of vs his onely chylozen with his word, to discern God through our Lord Iesus Christ, and the holy quickning spirit of life now in these perillous times, Establish vs to keep the right Scepter, and suffer vs of our selues to raigne to the good profite of the land, and to the subduing of the people, together with the enemies, and to the maintenance of vertue.

The Pheodor the offspring of Iohn, the great Lord, Emperour, king and great prince of all Russia, of Volodeimeria, Moscouia and Nouogrod, king of Cazan, king of Astracan, Lord of Plesko, and great prince of Smolensko, of Tuer, Yougoria, Permia, Viatsko, of Bolghar and others, lord and great prince of the land of the lower Nouogrod, Chernigo, Rezan, Polotsko, Rostow, Yeraslaue, the White lake, Licland, Oudor, Condensa, and Ruler of all Siberia, and all the North-se, and lord of many other countries.

I haue gratified the merchants of England, to wit, sir Rowland Haiward, and Richard Martin Aldermen, sir George Barnes, Thomas Smith esquire, Ierome Horsey, Richard Saltonstall, with their fellowes.

I haue licensed them to saile with their shippes into our dominion the land of Dwina, with all kind of commodities to trade freely, and vnto our kingdom and the citie of Mosco, and to all the cities of our empire of Moscouia.

And the english merchants sir Rowland Haiward & his societie desired vs, that we would gratifie them to trade into our kingdom of Moscouia, and into our heritage of great Nouogrod and Plesko, and into all parts of our kingdom, to buy and sell with their wares without custome.

Therefore we for our sisters sake Queene Elizabeth, & also because that they allege that they had great losse and hinderance by the venture of the sea, and otherwise, haue gratified the said English merchants sir Rowland Haiward and his societie, freely to come into our kingdom of Moscouia, and into al our dominions with al kind of commodities, to trade, & traffique freely, & at their pleasure with all kind of their commodities: also I haue commanded not to take any manner of custome for their goods, nor other customs whatsoeuer: That is to say, neither for passing by any place by water, nor for lanching, neither for passing through any place by land, neither for the vessels of boats, nor for their heads, nor for passing ouer bridges, nor for ferrying ouer at any place, neither for acknowledgement at any place where they shall come, nor any manner of custome or dutie, by what name soeuer.

Only they shal not bring with them into our dominions, neither recarie out of our dominions, or father any other mens goods but their owne, neither sell them nor barter them away for them.

Also our naturall people shal not buy and sell for them, or from them, neither shal they retaine or keepe any of our naturall subiects goods, or patunes by them to colour them.

Also they shal not send any of their Russe seruants about into any citie to ingrosse, or buy up commodities, but into what citie they themselves shal come, they shal buy and sel, and shal sel their owne commodities and not ours.

And when they shal come into our inheritance of great Nouogrod and Plesko, and through all our dominions with their commodities, then our noblemen and captains, and euery one of our officers shal suffer them to depart according to this our letter, & shal take no custom at all of them, for any of their commodities, neither for passing through or passing by, nor for passage ouer any bridges, nor shal take of them any other dutie whatsoeuer name they haue.

Also into what places of our dominion, or when they shal happen to come, and to proceed to buy or sell, and where soeuer they shal passe through with goods not buying of any commodities, neither will sell their owne, then in those cities and townes they shal take no maner of custome or dutie of them, accordingly as before.

And I haue gratified them and giuen them free leaue to traffique throughout all the dominions of our kingdom in all cities with their goods, to buy and sell all maner of commodities, without any dutie or custome whatsoeuer.

And the English merchants where they are desirous to buy or sell, or barter their wares with our merchants, whole wares for wares, they shal sell their commodities whole, and not by retails: That is to say, neither by small weight nor by the yarb, to sell or barter in their owne houses, and they shal sel and barter their wares wholly, Cloth by the packe, and by the whole Cloth, and Damaske and veluet by the piece and not by the yarb, and al maner of commodities that are to be sold by weight, not to sell by the small weights, as by the pound and ounce, but by whole sale: also they shal sel wines by the pipe: and by the gallon, quart or scoope they shal not sell.

And they shal buy, sell and exchange their owne commodities themselves, and the Russe merchants shal not make sales or exchange for them or from them any of their commodities, neither shal they themselves conuey or carry through any other mans goods at no place in stead of their owne: and which of the English merchants will at any time sell his commodities at Colmogro or Vologda or Yeraslaue, they may, and of their commodities throughout all our cities and dominions, our noblemen, captains, and euery of our officers shall take no maner of custome, according as it is wittien in this our gracious letter: and throughout all our dominions and cities they shall hire carriers and vessels with men to labour, at their owne charge, to transport their goods.

So likewise, whensoever the English merchants are disposed to depart out of our kingdom into any other countrey or into their owne land, if our pleasure be, they shall take our goods with them from our Treasurie, and shall sell them, and exchange them for such commodities as is commodious for our kingdom, and shall deliuer it into our Treasurie, and with those our commodities, our Noblemen and captains, and euery of our officers shall let them passe through all our cities also without custome according to these our letters.

Also whensoever the English merchants shall haue sold their owne goods & bought themselves commodities, & wil depart out of Mosco, then they shall manifest themselves to our chiefe Secretarie Andrew Sholkouie, in the office where the Ambassadors are alwayes dispatched.

And if the English merchants comming, haue had any mischance by the sea, inso much that the ship be broken, or if that ship do come to any part of our countrey: then we will cause the goods to be sought out in true Justice, and to be giuen to the English people, which at that time shall bee here resident in our countrey: and if so be that it so fall out that at that time there be no Englishmen within our realme: then wil we cause the goods to be laid by in a place together, and when the people of England shall come into our realme, then we will command all those goods to be deliuered to the sayd English people.

Also we haue gratified all the English merchants with the house of one Vrie here in the Mosco right ouer against S. Maximes church behind the market, and they shall dwell in the same house according as before time, and they shall keepe one alwayes in the house to keepe it, either a Russe, or one of their owne people.

Also the English merchants shall possesse their houses, to wit, at Yeraslaue, Vologda, Colmogro, and the house at the hauens of the sea, & they shall dwell in those houses, according as our goodnes hath bene to them heretofore: and we haue commanded, that there shall not be taken of them no peecely rent, nor no maner of custome, tare, rent or any other dutie whatsoeuer for those houses, neither shall they pay any dutie or tare with any of the townsmen of those places, & in euery one of those houses, to wit, at Yeraslaue, Vologda, and Colmogro, they shall haue men to keepe their houses, two or thre of their owne countrey people, strangers or els Russes, men of the meanest sort, which shall be no merchants, that they may lay their goods in those houses, and they may sell the commodities out of those their houses to whom they please, according to this our gracious letter: and those that keepe their houses shall not sell or buy no part of their commodities, except they be there or giue order, whereby they be not deceiued by them.

So likewise I haue gratified them with their house at the sea hauens, at the mouth of Podelzemy, & we haue commanded that they shall not cary their goods from thence to the new castle S. Michael the archangel, but shall arriue, and doe as they haue done heretofore with their wares at that their house, and shall vnlade their commodities out of their ships, and shall lade them againe with Russe commodities, euen there at that their house without interruption: onely they shall permit our officers of Colmogro & two or three men to write by those commodities, both the commodities of England, and those of Russe land, what the merchants shall declare themselves, & no otherwise, but they shall not ouerlook their commodities, neither shall they vnbind any of their packs.

And when the English merchants are disposed to send into their owne countrey, to wit, any of their owne people on land through any other kingdom whatsoeuer, they shall not send their people without our kingly knowledge and commandement, and which of their people so euer they do meane to send out of our kingdom into their owne countrey, then they shall send those their people, not without our kingly maiesties knowledge, to wit, those that go of pleasure without carying any commodities with them, and they shall haue a letter of passe giuen vnto them, out of the office where the Ambassadors haue alwayes their dispatch.

And whosoever hath any thing to doe with them in matters of controuersie, either concerning merchandize or iniuries, then they are to be iudged by our treasurers and Secretarie of the Ambassadors office to do iustice between both parties, & to seek out the truth of matters in all things, and whatsoeuer cannot be found out by the Law, shall be tried by othe and lots: whose lot soeuer is taken forth, him to haue right.

And in what place of all our kingdom, in what citie soeuer they or their people shall bee, and that there happen any matter of controuersie, either concerning merchandize, iniuries or otherwise, that they haue occasion to set vpon any man by lawe, or that any seeke vpon them, concerning what matter soeuer in all our kingdom and cities, then our lieutenants, captains, and our our officers shall giue them Justice, and shall minister all true iustice betweene them, seeking out the truth: and what cannot be truly sought by law, shall be sought out by othe and lot: whole lot sooner is taken out, him to haue right: according as before, and the Judges or Iudices shall take of them no kind of dutie, for matters of law no where throughout all our realmes. This letter is giuen in our princely palace within the citie of Mosco, in the yeere from the foundation of the world, seuen thousand fourscore and fiftene in the month of February.

The Ambassage of M. Giles Fletcher, Doctor of the Ciuil Law, sent from her Maiestie to Theodor the Emperour of Russia, Anno 1588.

In the yeere 1588, was sent Ambassader from her highnesse into the countrey of Russia, Giles Fletcher Doctor of the Ciuil Lawe, as well to treat with the new Emperour Pheodor Iuanowich, about league and amitie, in like maner as was before with his father Iuan Vasilowich, as also for the reestablishing and reducing into order the decayed trade of our Englishmen there. Who notwithstanding at his first arriuaall at the Mosco, found some parts of hard entertainment, by meanes of certaine rumors concerning the late nauall victorie which was there reported to haue fallen on the Spanish side, as also for some dislike conceiued against the priuiledged trade of our English merchants. Yet in the end he obtained of the Emperour many good & equall conditions, and was courteously and honourably dismissed by him. The principall points which he entreated of, and were granted vnto him by the said Emperour, were these:

1 A continuation of league and amitie betweene her Highnesse and the sayd Emperour Pheodor Iuanowich, in like maner as was before with his father Iuan Vasilowich.

2 A confirmation and reestablishment of the former priuileges of the Companie of our English merchants, which were infringed and annulled in the principal points, with diuers necessary additions to the same, for the better ordering of their trade in those countreys hereafter, viz. That the state of the priuilege granted before in the names of some priuate and particular men, be altered in that point, and the same granted by the name and stile of their incorporation, viz. To the fellowship of English merchants for the discouerie of new trades,

3 That vpon euery summe and light quarell, the said priuilege be not reuoked and annulled, as before time it hath bene.

4 That iustice shall be administred to the said Companie and their Agent without delay, vpon such as shall offer them any despite or iniurie, or shall exact or impose vpon them any payment, taxation or imposition whatsoeuer, contrary to the freedome of the said grant.

5 That the goods & commodities of the said Companie, be not forcibly taken as before time they had bene by the Emperours officers or people of authoritie, either for the vse of the said Emperour or of his officers, But in case they haue need of the said commodities, the same to be taken at reasonable prices, and for ready money.

6 That the said Companie be not charged hereafter with the answering of such debts as are made by any Englishman not being of the societie.

7 That the Emperours authorized people shall not hereafter repute any Englishman resident in that countrey, to be any factor, seruant, or dealer in the said Companies affaires, but such as the Agent shall inregister by name, within the offices where custome is entered in all such places of the land where the sayd Companie haue residencies to traffike.

8 That the names of such as shall to be inregistred be no longer continued in record, nor themselves reputed as factors or dealers for the said Companie, then the Agent shall thinke good, But in case the said Agent in his discretion shall thinke meet to strike out of the Register any name of such as haue bene imployed in the Companies seruice, the said person to be held as priuate, & whose acte in bargaining or otherwise, shall not charge the said Companie.

9 That if any Englishman within the countrey of Russia be suspected for any notorious crime, as felony, treason, &c. the same be not straightwaies set vpon the *Pudkey, nor otherwise tormented, till such time as he shall be conuicted by plaine and euident proofes: which being done, the whole proceeding to be sent ouer to the Queene of England.

10 That the said priuilege with the additions, shall be published in all townes and partes of the Emperours dominions, where the said Companie haue traffike.

11 That the said Companie shall be permitted to vse a sole trade through the Emperours countries, by the riuer Volga into Media, Persia, Bogharia, and the other the East countries.

12 Whereas there was claimed of the said Companie the summe of 23553. markes of debt, made by certaine of their factors for the said company, for paiement whereof, their whole stocke was in danger of arrest, by publike authoritie: Further also 2140. roubles for custome and houserent, he obtained a rebatement of eighteene thousand, one hundred fiftie and three marks of the sayd debt.

The said Ambassadoꝝ W. Giles Fletcher, as I understand, hath drawn a booke intituled, Of the Russe Common wealth, containing:

First, a Cosmographical description of the countrey, which hath these chapters.

- 1 Of the length and bredth of the countrey of Russia, with the names of the shires.
- 2 Of the soile and climate.
- 3 Of the native commodities of the countrey.

Secondly, a description of their policie contained in these Chapters, viz.

- 1 Of the constitution or state of the Russe Common wealth.
- 2 Of their Parliaments, and maner of holding them.
- 3 Of the Russe Nobilitie and meanes whereby it is kept in an vnder proportion agreeable to that state.
- 4 Of the maner of governing their prouinces or shires.
- 5 Of the Emperours priuie counsell.
- 6 Of the Emperours customs & their reuenues, with the practises for the increase of them.
- 7 Of the Russe communaltie and their condition.
- 8 Of their publike iustice and maner of proceeding therein.
- 9 Of the Emperours forces for his warres, with the chiefe officers, and their salarie or pay.
- 10 Of their maner of mustering armour, and prouision for victuall.
- 11 Of their ordering, marching, charging, and their martiall discipline.
- 12 Of their colonies and policie in maintaining their purchases by conquest.
- 13 Of their borderers with whom they haue most to doe in warre and peace.
- 14 Of their church offices and degrees.
- 15 Of their liturgie or forme of Church seruice.
- 16 Of their maner of administering the Sacraments.
- 17 Of the doctrine of the Russe church.
- 18 Of the maner of solemnizing their mariages.
- 19 Of the other ceremonies of the Russe church.

Thirdly, the Oeconomie or priuate behaviour of the Russe containing these chapters.

- 1 Of the Emperours household officers, and order of his house.
- 2 Of the priuate behaviour and maner of the Russe people.

The description of the countrey of Russia, with the bredth, length, and names of the Shires.

RUssia was sometimes called Sarmatia. It changed the name (as some do suppose) for that it was parted into diuers small, and yet absolute gouernments, not depending, nor being subiect the one to the other. For Russe in that tongue doeth signifie as much as to part, or deuide. The Russe reporteth that foure brethren, Trubor, Rurico, Sinees, and Varius deuided among them the North parts of the countrey. Like wise that the South parts were possessed by 4. other, Kio, Scieko, Choranus, and their sister Libeda: each calling his territorie after his own name. Of this partition it was called Russia, about the yere from Christ 860. As for the coniecture which I find in some Cosmographers, that the Russe nation borrowed the name of the people called Roxellani, & were the very same nation with them, it is without all good probability, both in respect of the etymologie of the word (which is very far set) and especially for the seat and dwelling of that people, which was betwixt the two riuers of Tanais and Boristhenes, (as Strabo reporteth) quite another way from the countrey of Russia.

When it bare the name of Sarmatia, it was deuided into two chiefe parts: the White and the Black. The white Sarmatia was all that part that lieth towards the North, & on the side of Lief-land: as the prouinces now called Dwina, Vagha, Vltiug, Vologda, Cargapolia, Nouogrodia, &c. whereof Nouogrod velica was the Metropolitane or chiefe citie. Black Sarmatia was all that countrey that lieth Southward towards the Euxin or Black sea: as the dukedome of Volodemer, of Mosco, Rezan, &c. Some haue thought that the name of Sarmatia was first taken from one Sarmates, whom Moses & Iosephus call Asarmathes sonne to Ioktan, & nephew to Heber, of the posteritie of Sem. But this seemeth to be nothing but a coniecture take out of the likenes of the name Asarmathes. For the dwelling of all Ioktans posteritie is described by Moses to haue bene betwixt Mescha or Masius (an hil of the Ammonites) & Sephace, nere to the riuier Euphrates: which ma-keth it very unlikely that Asarmathes should plant any colonies so far off in þe North & north-west countries. It is bounded northward by the Lappes & the North Ocean, On the Southside by the Tarrars called Crimmes. Eastward they haue the Nagaian Tartar, that possesseth all the countrey on the East side of Volga towards the Caspian sea. On the West and South-west border lieth Lituania, Liouonia and Polonia.

Ioseph. 1. ca. 14.

of Russia.

The whole Countrey being now reduced vnder the gouernment of one, containeth these chiefe Provinces or Shires. Volodemer, (which beareth the first place in the Emperours Title, because their house came of the Dukes of that Countrey) Mosco, Nisnouogrod, Plesko, Sino-lensko, Nouogrod velica (or Nouogrod of the low Countrey) Rostoue, Yaruslaue, Bealozera, Rezan, Duyna, Cargapolia, Meschora, Vagha, Vltuga, Ghalersa. These are the naturall shires pertaining to Russia, but farre greater and larger then the shires of England, though not so well peopled. The other Countreys or provinces which the Russe Emperours haue gotten perforce added of late to their other dominion, are these which followe, Twerra, Youghoria, Permia, Vadska, Boulghoria, Chernigo, Oudoria, Obdoria, Condora, with a great part of Siberia: where the people though they be not naturall Russes, yet obey the Emperour of Russia, and are ruled by the Lawes of his Countrey, paying customes and tares, as his owne people doe. Besides these he hath vnder him the kingdomes of Cazan and Astracan, gotten by conquest not long since. As for all his possession in Lituania (to the number of 30. great Townes and more,) with Narue and Dorp in Liouonia, they are quite gone, being surprised of late yeeres by the Kings of Poland and Sweden. These Shires and Provinces are reduced all into foure Iurisdictions, which they call Chesfyrd (that is) Terrarchies, or Fourthparts.

The Shires
of Russia.

The Provinces of Countreys
conquest.

The whole Countrey is of great length and breadth. From the North to the South (if you measure from Cola to Astracan which bendeth somewhat Eastward) it reacheth in length about 4260. verst, or miles. Notwithstanding the Emperour of Russia hath more territorie Northward, farre beyond Cola vnto the Riuer of Troinschua, that runneth a hundred verst, weinigh beyond Pechinga, neere to Wardhouse, but not intire nor clearely limited, by reason of the kings of Sweden and Denmarke, that haue diuers Townes there, as well as the Russe, plotted together the one with the other: euery one of them clayming the whole of those North parts as his owne right. The breadth (if you go from that part of his territorie that lyeth farthest Westward on the Narue side, to the parts of Siberia Eastward, where the Emperour hath his garisons) is 4400. verst or thereabouts. A verst (by their reckoning) is a 1000. pases, yet lesse by one quarter then an English mile. If the whole dominion of the Russe Emperour were all habitable, and peopled in all places, as it is in some, he would either hardly holde it all within one regiment, or be ouer mightie for all his neighbour Princes.

Of the Soile and Climate.

The soyle of the Countrey for the most part is of a sleight sandie mould, yet very much different one place from another, for the yeeld of such things as grow out of the earth. The Countrey Northwards towards the parts of S. Nicholas and Cola, and North-east towards Siberia, is all very barren, and full of desert woods by reason of the Climate, and extremitie of the colde in Winter time. So likewise along the Riuer Volgha betwixt the Countreys of Cazan, and Astracan: where (notwithstanding the soyle is very fruitfull) it is all uninhabited, sauing that vpon the riuer Volgha on the Westside, the Emperour hath some fewe Castels with garisons in them. This happeneth by meanes of the Crimme Tartar, that will neither himselte plant Townes to dwel there, (liuing a wild and vagrant life) nor suffer the Russe (that is farre off with the strength of his Countrey) to people those parts. From Vologda (which lyeth almost 1700. verst from the port of S. Nicholas) downe towards Mosco, and so towards the South part that bordereth vpon the Crimme, (which containeth the like space of 1700. verst or thereabouts) is a very fruitfull and pleasant Countrey, yeelding pasture, and corne, with woods and waters in very great plentie. The like is betwixt Rezan (that lyeth Southeast from Mosco) to Nouogrod and Vobsko, that reach farthest towards the North-west. So betwixt Mosco, and Smolensko (that lyeth Southwest towards Lituania) is a very fruitfull and pleasant soile.

The whole Countrey differeth very much from it selfe, by reason of the yeere: so that a man would maruelle to see the great alteration and difference betwixt the Winter, and the Summer Russia. The whole Countrey in the Winter lieth vnder snow, which falleth continually, and is sometime of a yard or two thicke, but greater towards the North. The Riuers and other waters are all frozen by a yard or more thicke, how swift or broade soeuer they bee. And this continueth commonly five moneths, viz. from the beginning of Nouember till towards the ende of March,

Russia.

March, what time the snow beginneth to melt. So that it would beede a frost in a man to looke abroad at that time, and see the Winter face of that Countrey. The sharpnesse of the aire you may iudge of by this: for that water droppeth downe or cast vp into the aire congealeth into yce befoze it come to the ground. In the extremitie of Winter, if you holde a pewter dish or pot in your hand, or any other mettall (except in some chamber where their warme stoues bee) your fingers will friele fast vnto it, and drawe off the skinn at the parting. When you passe out of a warme roome into a colde, you shall sensibly feeke your breath to ware sharke, and euen kissing with the colde, as you drawe it in and out. Diuers not onely that trauell abroad, but in the very markets, and streetes of their Townes, are mortally pinched and killed withall: so that you shall see many drop downe in the streetes; many travellers brought into the Townes sitting dead and stiffe in their Sieds. Diuers lose their noses, the tips of their eares, and the bals of their cheekes, their toes, feete, &c. Many times (when the Winter is very hard and extreme) the beares and woollfes issue by troups out of the woods driven by hunger, and enter the villages, tearing and rauening all they can finde: so that the inhabitants are faine to flie for safegard of their liues. And yet in the Sommer time you shall see such a new hiew and face of a Countrey, the woods (for the most part which are all of firre and birch) so fresh and so sweete, the pastures and meadowes so greene and well grown, (and that vpon the sudden) such varietie of flowers, such noyle of birdes (specially of nightingales, that seeme to be moze lowde and of a moze variable note then in other Countreys) that a man shall not lightly trauell in a moze pleasant Countrey.

And this fresh and speedy growth of the Spring there seemeth to proceede from the benefite of the snow: which all the Winter time being spread ouer the whole Countrey as a white robe, and keeping it warme from the rigour of the frost, in the Spring time (when the Sunne waxeth warme, and dissolueth it into water) doth so throughly drench and soake the ground, that is somewhat of a sleight and sandie mould, and then thineth so hotely vpon it againe, that it draweth the hearbes and plants forth in great plentie and varietie, in a very short time. As the Winter exceedeth in colde, so the Sommer inclineth to ouer much heat, specially in the moneths of June, July and August, being much warmer then the Sommer aire in England.

The Countrey throughout is very well watered with springs, riuers, and Ozeracs, or lakes. Wherein the prouidence of God is to be nozed, for that much of the Countrey being so farre inland, as that some part lieth a thousand miles and moze euery way from any Sea, yet it is serued with faire Riuer; and that in very great number, that emptying themselves one into another, runne all into the Sea. Their lakes are many and large, some of 60, 80, 100, and 200, miles long, with breadth proportionate.

The chiefe Riuers of Russia.

The chiefe Riuer is these, First, Volgha, that hath his head or spring at the roote of an Aldertree, about 200. verst above Yaruslaue, and groweth so bigge by the encrease of other Riuer; by that time it cometh thither, that it is broad an English mile and moze, and so runneth into the Caspian sea, about 2800. verst or miles of length.

The next is Boristhenes (now called Neper) that diuideth the Countrey from Lithuania, and falleth into the Euxin sea.

The third Tanais or Don, (the ancient boulder betwixt Europe and Asia) that taketh his head out of Rezan Ozer, and so running through the Countrey of the Chrim Tartar, falleth into the great Sea, lake, or meare, (called Mxotis) by the Citie of Azou. By this Riuer (as the Russe reporteth) you may passe from their Citie Mosco to Constantinople, and so into all those parts of the world by water, drawing your boate (as their maxer is) ouer a little Isthmus or narrowe slip of land, a few versts ouerthwart. Which was proued not long since by an Ambassadour sent to Constantinople, who passed the Riuer of Moscu, and so into another called Ocka, whence hee drew his boat ouer into Tanais, and thence passed the whole way by water.

The fourth is called Duyua, many hundred miles long, that falleth Northward into the bay of S. Nicholas, and hath great Alabaster rockes on the bankes towards the sea side.

The fifth Duna, that emptieth into the Balrick sea by the towne Riga.

The sixt Onega, that falleth into the Bay at Solouersko 90. verst from the port of S. Nicholas. This Riuer, below the towne Cargapolia, meeteth with the Riuer Volock, that falleth into the Finland Sea by the towne Yama. So that from the port of S. Nicholas into the Finland sea, and so into the Sound, you may passe all by water, as hath bene tried by the Russe.

The senenth Suchana, that floweth into Duyna, and so into the North sea.

The eight Ocka, that fetcheth his head from the borders of the Chrim, and streameth into Volgha.

The ninth Moscu, that runneth thorow the Citie Mosco, and giueth it the name.

There is Wichida also a very large and long riuer that riseth out of Permia, and falleth into Volgha.

Volgha. All these are rivers of very large streames, the least to be compared to the Thames in bignesse, and in length farre more, besides diuers other. The Pole at Mosco is 55. degrees 10. minutes. At the port of S. Nicholas towards the North 63. degrees and 50. minutes.

The native commodities of the Countrey.

For kinds of fruites, they haue Apples, pearces, plummes, cherries, red and blacke, (but the blacke wilde) a deene like a mulke millian, but more sweete and pleasant, cucumbers and goords (which they call Arbouse) rasps, strawberies, and hurtilberies, with many other berries in great quantitie in euery wood and hedge. Their kinds of graine are wheat, rie, barley, oates, pease, buckway, psnycha, that in taste is somewhat like to rice. Of all these graines the Countrey yeeldeth very sufficient with an ouerplus quantitie, so that wheate is solde sometime for two alteens or ten pence starling the Cheefird, which maketh almost three English bushels.

and graine of Russia.

Their rie is sowed befoze the Winter, all their other graine in the Spring time, and for the most part in May. The Permians and some other that dwell farre North, and in desert places, are serued from the parts that lye more Southward, and are forced to make bread sometimes of a kinde of roote (called Vaghnoy) and of the middle rine of the firre tree. If there be any dearth (as they accounted this last yeere Anno 1588, wheat and rie being at 13. alteens, or 5. shillings five pence starling the Cheefird) the fault is rather in the practice of their Nobilitie that vse to engrosse it, then in the Countrey it selfe.

The native commodities of the Countrey (wherewith they serue both their owne turnes, and send much abroad to the great enriching of the Emperoz, and his people) are many & substantiall. First, furs of all sorts. Wherin the prouidence of God is to be noted, that prouideth a naturall remedie for them, to helpe the naturall inconuenience of their Countrey by the cold of the Climat. Their chiefe furs are these, Blacke fox, Sables, Lusernes, dun fox, Marronnes, Gurnestalles or Armins, Lafets or Miniuer, Beuer, Wuluerins, the skin of a great water Rat that smelleth naturally like muske, Calaber or gray squirrel, red squirrel, red & white fox. Besides the great quantitie spent within y^e Countrey (the people being clad al in furs the whole winter) there are transported out of the Countrey some yeeres by the merchants of Turkie, Persia, Bougharia, Georgia, Armenia, and some other of Christendom, to the value of foure or five hundred thousand rubles, as I haue heard of the merchants. The best Sable furre groweth in the countrey of Pechora, Mongolorskoy and Obdorskoy, the worst sort in Siberia, Perm, & other places. The blacke fore and red come out of Siberia, white and dunne from Pechora, whence also come the white wolfe, and white Beare skin. The best Wuluerin also thence and from Perm. The best Martrons are from Siberia, Cadam, Morum, Perm, and Cazan. Lyserns, Pineuer, and Armins, the best are out of Gallers, and Ouglis, many from Nouogrod and Perm. The Beauer of the best sort breedeth in Murmonskey by Cola. Other common furs, and most of these kinds grow in many, and some in all parts of the Countrey.

of the Coun-trei.
1. Furs.

These Rats are in Canada.

Mongolorskoy
perhaps Mol-gomzaia.

The second commoditie is of Ware, whereof hath bene shipped into forreigne countreys (as I haue heard it reported by those that best know it) the summe of 50000. pood yeerely, euery pood concepneth 40. pound, but now about 10000. pood a yeere.

2. Ware.

The thirde is their Ponie, whereof besides an exceeding great quantitie spent in their ordinary drincks (which is Mead of all sorts) and their other vses, some good quantitie is caried out of the countrey. The chiefe encrease of hony is in Mordua and Cadam neere to the Cheremissen Tartar: much out of Seuerskoy, Rezan, Morum, Cazan, Dorogobose, and Vasma.

3. Hony.

Fourthly, of Tallow they asooyd a great waight for transportation: not onely for that their countrey hath very much good ground apt for pasturage of cattell, but also by reason of their many Lents and other fasses: and partly because their greater men vse much ware for their lightes, the poorer and meaner sort birch dried in their stoues, and cut into long stiuers, which they call Luchineos. Of tallow there hath bene shipped out of the Realme a few yeeres since about 100000. pood yeerely, now not past 30000. or thereabouts. The best yeeld of tallow is in the parts and territories of Smolensko, Yaruslaue, Ouglis, Nouogrod, and Vologda, Orser, and Goroderskey.

4. Tallow.

An other principall commoditie is their Losh or Cow hide. Their Losh or Buffle hide is very faire and large. Their bull and cowe hide (for oren they make none, neither yet weather) is of a small size. There hath bene transported by merchants strangers some yeres 100000. hides, now it is decreased to 30000. or thereabouts. Besides great stoe of goates skinnes, whereof great numbers are shipped out of the countrey. The largest kinde of Losh or Buffle breedeth about Rostoue, Wichida, Nouogrod, Morum, and Perm. The lesser sort within the kingdome of Cazan.

5. Hide.

An other very great and principall commoditie is their Trane oyle, drawn out of the Seal fish. Where it will not be impertinent to shew the maner of their hunting the Seal, which they make this oyle of: which is in this sort. Towards the ende of Sommer (before the frost beginne) they goe downe with their boates into the Bay of S. Nicholas, to a cape called Cusconesse or Fox-nose, where they leane their boats till the next spring tide. When the Sunne wareth warme toward the spring, and yet the yce not melted within the Bay, they returne thither againe. Then drawing their boates over the sea yce, they use them for houses to rest and lodge in. There are commonly about 17. or 18. flecte of them, of great large boates, which divide themselves into divers companies, five or six boates in a consort.

They that first finde the haunt, fire a beacon, which they carry with them for the nonce. Which being espied by the other companies, by such among them as are appointed of purpose, they come altogether and compass the Seales round about in a ring, that lie sunning themselves together upon the yce, commonly foure or five thousand in a shoale, and so they invade them every man with his club in his hand. If they hit them on the nose, they are soone killed. If on the sides or backe they beate out the blow, and many times so catch and holde downe the clubbe with their teeth by maine force, that the partie is forced to call for helpe to his fellows.

The maner of the Seals is when they see themselves beset, to gather all close together in a throng or plump, to sway downe the yce, and to breake it (if they can) which so benderth the yce that many times it taketh the sea water upon it, and maketh the hunters to wade a foote or more deepe. After the slaughter when they haue killed what they can, they fall to sharing every boate his part in equall portions: and so they flay them, taking from the body the skin, and the lard or fat with all that cleaveth to the skin. This they take with them, leaving the bodies behind, and so go to store. Where they digge pits in the ground of a fadome and an halfe deepe, or thereabout, and so taking the fat or lard off from the skinne, they throw it into the pit, and cast in among it hoat burning stones to melt it withall. The uppermost and purest is sold, and used to oile wool for cloth, the grosser (that is of a red colour) they sell to make sope.

7. Ickary.

Likewise of Ickary or Cauery, a great quantitie is made upon the river of Volgha out of the fish called Bellougina, the Scurgeon, the Seueriga and the Sterledey. Whereof the most part is shipped by French and Netherlandish merchants for Italy and Spaine, some by English merchants.

8. Hempe and Flaxe.

The next is of Flax and Hempe, whereof there hath bene shipped (as I haue heard merchants say) at the port of Narue a great part of 100. ships small and great yere. Now, not past five. The reason of this abating and decrease of this & other commodities, that were wont to be transported in a greater quantitie, is the shutting up of the port of Narue towards the Finland sea, which now is in the handes and possession of the Sweden. Likewise the stopping of the passage ouerland by the way of Smolensko, & Plorsko, by reason of their warres with the Polonian, which causeth the people to be lesse proudent in mainteining and gathering these and like commodities, for that they lacke sales. For the growth of flaxe the prouince of Vobsko, and the countrey about is the chiefe and onely place. For Hempe Smolensko, Dorogobose and Vasma.

9. Salt.

The countrey besides maketh great store of salt. Their best salt is made at Srararouse in very great quantitie, where they haue great store of salt wells, about 250. vers from the sea. At Astracan salt is made naturally by the sea water, that caseth it up into great hills, and so it is digged downe, and caried away by the merchants and other that wil fetch it from thence. They pay to the Emperour for acknowledgement or custome 3. d. Russe upon every hundred weight. Besides these two, they make salt in many other places of the Realme, as in Perm, Wichida, Torma, Kenitsina, Solouetsky, Ocona, Bombassey, and Nonocks, all out of salt pits, saue at Solouetsky, which lieth nere to the sea.

10. Tarre.

Likewise of Tarre they make a great quantitie out of their fire trees in the countrey of Duy-na and Smolensko, whereof much is sent abroad. Besides these (which are all good and substantiall commodities) they haue diuers other of smaller accompt, that are naturall and proper to that countrey: as the fish tooth (which they call Ribazuba) which is used both among themselves, and the Persians and Bougharians that fetch it from thence for beads, knives, and sword harts of Roblemen and gentlemen, and for diuers other uses. Some use the powder of it against poison, as the Vnicornes hoine. The fish that weareth it is called a Morfe, and is caught about Pechora. These fish teeth some of them are almost 2. foote of length, and weigh 11. or 12. pound apiece.

11. Ribazuba.

In the prouince of Corelia, and about the river Duy-na towards the North sea, there groweth a soft rocke which they call Slude. This they cut into pieces, and so teare it into thin flakes, which naturally it is apt for, and so use it for glasse-lanthorns and such like. It giueth both inwards and outwards a clearer light then glasse, and for this respect is better then either glasse or hoine: for that it neither breaketh like glasse, nor yet will burne like the lanthorne. Saltpeeter they make in many places, as at Ouglits, Yaruslaue & Vsiug, and some smal store of bymstowe upon the river 12. Slude.

13. Saltpeeter and bymstowe.

Volgha,

Volgha, but wāt skil to refine it. Their iron is somewhat brittle, but a great weight of it is made in Corelia, Cargapolia, & Vltiug Thelesna. Other mine they haue none growing within þ realme.

14 Iron.

Their beasts of strange kinds are the Losh, the Ollen, the wild hōle, the beare, the wolouering, or wood dog, the Lylerne, the Beauer, the Sable, the Marton, the black and dunne fox, the white Beare towards the sea coast of Pechora, the Gurnstale, the Lafet or Pineuer. They haue a kinde of Squirrell that hath growing on the pinion of the shoulder bone a long tuft of haire, much like vnto feathers with a far broader taile then haue any other Squirrels, which they moue and shake as they leape from tree to tree, much like vnto a wing. They skife a large space, & seeme for to flie withal, and therefore they cal them Lerach Vechshe, that is, the flying Squirrels. Their hares and Squirrels in Sommer are of the same colour with ours, in Winter the hare changeth her coate into milke white, the Squirrel into gray, wherof commeth the Calaber.

beastes, fish, foules, &c. that bred in Russia.

They haue fallow deere, the roe bucke, & goats very great stoze. Their hōles are but smal, but very swift & hard, they trauell them vnthō both winter and Sommer, without all regard of pace. Their sheepe are but smal & beare courle & harsh wool. Of foule they haue diuers of the principal kinds: First, great stoze of hawks, the eagle, the gersaulton, the slight faulton, the goshawk, the tassel, the sparrowhawk, &c. But the principal hawke þ breedeth in the countrie, is counted þ gersaulton. Of other foules their principal kinds are the swan tame & wilde, (whereof they haue great stoze) the storke, the crane, the tender of the colour of a feasant, but far bigger & liueth in the fire woods. Of feasant and partridge they haue very great plentie. An owle there is of a very great bignesse, moze bigly to behold then þ owles of this countrie, with a broad face, & eares much like vnto a man.

For fresh water fish, besides the cōmon sorts (as carpe, pikes, pearch, tench, roach, &c.) they haue diuers kinds very good and delicate: as the Bellouga or Bellougina of 4. or 5. elnes long, the Ostrina or Sturgion, the Seueriga and Sterledy somewhat in fashion and taste like to the Sturgion, but not so chicke nor long. These 4. kinds of fish breed in the Volgha, and are catched in great plenty, and serued thence into the whole Realme for a great food. Of the Roes of these foure kinds they make very great stoze of Icaray or Caucary as was said before.

They haue besides these that breed in the Volgha a fish called the Riba bela, or white salmon, which they accompt moze delicate then they do the red salmon, whereof also they haue exceeding great plentie in the Riuers Northward, as in Duyna, the riuer of Cola, &c. In the Ozer a lake neere a towne called Perislaue, not far frō the Mosco, they haue a final fish which they cal the fresh herring, of the fashion, and somewhat of the taste of a sea-herring. Their chiefe towne for fish are, Yaruslaue, Bealozera, Nouogrod, Astracan, and Cazan: which all peeld a large custome to the Emperour euery yeere for their trades of fishing, which they practise in Sommer, but sende it frozen in the Winter time into all parts of the Realme.

The chiefe cities of Russia are Mosco, Nouogrod, Rostoue, Volodomer, Plesko, Smolensko, Iaruslaue, Perislaue, Nishouogrod, Vologda, Vltiug, Colmogro, Cazan, Astracan, Cargapolia, Columna. The city of Mosco is supposed to be of great antiquitie, though the first founder be vnknown to the Russe. It seemeth to haue taken the name frō the riuer that runneth on the one side of the towne. Berofus the Chaldean in his 5. booke telleth that Nimrod (whō other prophane stories cal Saturne) sent Assyrius, Medus, Moscus, & Magog into Asia to plant colonies there, and that Moscus planted both in Asia and Europe. Which may make some probabilitie, that the citie, or rather the riuer whereon it is built, tooke the denomination frō this Moscus: the rather because of the climate or situation, which is in the very farthest part & list of Europe, bordering vpon Asia. The Citie was much enlarged by one Iuan or Iohn, sonne to Daniel, that first changed his title of duke into King: though that hono^r continued not to his posterity: the rather because he was inuaded into it by the Popes Legate, who at that time was Innocencius the 4. about the yeere 1246. which was very much disliked by the Russe people, being then a part of the Casserne or Greeke Church. Since that time the name of this city hath growen more famous, & better known to the world: inso much that not only the prouince, but the whole Countrey of Russia is termed by some by the name of Moscouia the Metropolitane city. The forme of this City is in manner round with 3. strong wals, circuling the one within the other, & streets lying betwene, whereof the inmost wall, and the buildings closed within it (lying safest as the heart within the body, fenced and watted with the riuer Moscu, that runneth close by it) is all accompted the Emperours castle. The number of houses (as I haue heard) through the whole Citie (being reckoned by the Emperour a litle before it was fired by the Crim) was 41500. in all. Since the Tarrar besieged and fired the towne (which was in the yeere 1571.) there lieth waste of it a great breadth of ground, which before was wel set and planted with buildings, specially that part on the South side of Moscu, built not long before

by Basilius the Emperoz for his garison of souldiers, to whom he gaue priuiledge to drinke Beere, and beere at the dy of prohibited times, when other Russes may drinke nothing but water, and for that cause called this new city by the name of Naloi, that is skince of poure in. So that now the city of Mosco is not much bigger then the city of London. The next in greatnes, & in a manner as large, is the citie Nouograd: where was committed (as the Russe saith) the memorabable warre so much spoke of in stozies of the Scythians seruants, that took arme against their masters: which they report in this sort: viz. That the Boiarens of gentlemen of Nouograd & the territorie about (which only are souldiers after the discipline of those countreys) had war with the Tartars, which being wel performed & ended by them, they returned home wards. Where they vnderstood by the way that their Cholopey or bondslaues whom they left at home, had in their absence possessed their townes, lands, houses, wines and all. At which newes being somewhat amased, and yet disdeining the villany of their seruants, they made the moze speed home: and so not far from Nouograd met them in warlike manner marching against them. Whereupon aduising what was best to be done, they agreed all to set vpon them with no other shew of weapon but with their horse whips (which as their maner is euery man rideth withal) to put them in remembrance of their seruile condition, thereby to terrifie them, & abate their courage. And so marching on & lashing al together with their whips in their hands they gaue the onset. Which seemed so terrible in the eares of their villaines, and stroke such a sence into them of the smart of the whip which they had felt before, that they fled altogether like sheepe before the driuers. In memory of this victorie the Nouogradians euer since haue stamped their coine (which they cal a dingoe Nouogrodskoy currant thorough al Russia) with the figure of a horsman shaking a whip aloft in his hand. These 2. cities exceed y rest in greatnes. For strength their chiefe townes are Vobsko, Smolensko, Cazan & Astracan, as lying vpon the borders. But for situation Iarusslaue far exceedeth the rest. For besides the commodities that the soile yeildeth of pasture and cozne, it lieth vpon the famous riuer of Volgha, & looketh ouer it from a high banke very faire & stately to behold: whereof the towne taketh the name. For Iarusslaue in that tongue significth as much as a faire or famous banke. In this towne (as may be guessed by the name) dwelt the Russe king Vladimir surnamed Iarusslaue, that married the daughter of Harald king of England, by mediation of Sueno the Dane, as is noted in the Danish stozie about the yere 1067.

Saxo Grammaticus lib. 11. pag. 187.

The maner of Ruiss building.

The other townes haue nothing y is greatly memorabable, saue many ruines within their wals. The streets of their cities and townes in stead of paving are plankt with fir trees, plained & layd euen close the one to the other. Their houses are of wood without any lime or stone, built very close and warme with firre trees plained and piled one vpon another. They are fastened together with dents or notches at euery corner, & so clasped fast together. Betwixt the trees or timber they thrust in mosse (whereof they gather plenty in their woods) to keep out the aire. Euery house hath a paire of staires that lead vp into the chambers out of the yarde or streete after the Scottish maner. This building seemeth far better for their countrey, then that of stone or bricke; as being colder & moze dampish then their wooden houses, specially of firre, that is a dry & warme wood. Whereof the providence of God hath giuen them such store, as that you may build a faire house for 20. or 30. rubbles or litle moze, where wood is most scant. The greatest inconuenience of their wooden building is the aptnesse for firing, which happeneth very oft & in very feareful sort, by reason of the drynesse and fatnes of the fir, that being once fired, burneth like a torch, & is hardly quenched til all be burnt vp.

Of the maner of Crowning or Inauguration of the Russe Emperours.

The solemnities vsed at y Russe Emperors coronation, are on this maner. In the great church of Precheeste (or our Lady) within the Emperors castle is erected a stage whereon standeth a scrine that beareth vpon it the Imperial cap & robe of very rich stuffe. When the day of the Inauguration is come, there resort thither, first the Patriarch to the Metropolitans, archbishops, bishops, abbots and priors, al richly clad in their pontificalibus. Then enter the Deacons with the quier of singers. Who so soone as the Emperoz setteth foot into y church, begin to sing: Many yeres may liue noble Theodore Iuanowich, &c. Whereunto the patriarch and Metropolitane with the rest of the cleargy answereth with a certaine hymne, in foyme of a prayer, singing it altogether with a great noise. The hymne being ended, the patriarch with the Emperoz mount vp the stage, where standeth a seat ready for the Emperoz. Whereupon the patriarch willecth him to sit downe, & then placing himself by him vpon another seat provided for y purpose, boweth downe his head towards y ground, and saith this prayer: Oh Lord God king of kings, Lord of lords, which by thy prophet Samuel didst chofe thy seruant Dauid, & annoynt him for King ouer thy people Israel, heare now our prayer, & looke fro thy sanctuary vpon this thy seruant Theodore, whom thou hast chosen and exalted for king ouer these thy holy natiōs, anoint him with the oile of gladnes, protect by thy power, power, put vpon his head a crowne of gold & precious stones, giue him length of dayes, place him in the seat of Iustice, strengthen his arme, make subiect vnto him all the barbarous nations. Let thy feare be in his whole heart, turne him from an euill faith, and all errour, and shewe him the saluation of thy holy and vniuersal Church, that he may iudge thy people with Iustice, & protect the children of the poore, & finally attaine euerlasting life. This prayer he speaketh with a low voice, & then pronounceth aloud: Al praise and power to God the Father, the Sonne, and the holy Ghost. The prayer being ended, he commandeth certaine Abbots to reach the imperiall roabe & cap: which is done very decently, and with great solemnitie, the Patriarch withal pronouncing aloud: Peace be vnto all. And so he beginneth another prayer to this effect: Bow your selues rogether with vs, and pray to him that reigneth ouer all. Preserue him (oh Lord) vnder thy holy protection, keepe him that hee may doe good and holy things, let Iustice shine forth in his dayes, that we may liue quietly without strife and malice. This is pronounced somewhat softly by the Patriarch, whereto hee addeth againe aloud: Thou art the king of the whole world, and the sauour of our soules, to thee the Father, Sonne and Holy ghost be al praise for euer and euer. Amen. Then putting on the roabe and the cap, he blesseth the Emperour with the signe of the crosse, saying withall: In the name of the Father, the Sonne, and the Holy ghost. The like is done by the Metropolitans, Archbishops, and Bishops: who all in their order come to the chaire, and one after another blesse the Emperour with their two forefingers. Then is sayd by the Patriarch another prayer, that beginneth: O most holy virgin, mother of God &c. After which a Deacon pronounceth with a loude voice: Many yeres to noble Theodore, good, honourable, beloued of God, great Duke of Volodemer, of Mosco, Emperour, and Monarch of all Russia, &c. Whereto the other Priests and Deacons that stand somewhat farre off by the altar or table, answer singing: Many yeres, many yeres to the noble Theodore. The same note is taken vp by the Priests and Deacons, that are placed at the right and left side of the Church, and then altogether, they chaunt and thunder out, singing: Many yeares to the noble Theodore, good, honourable, beloued of God, great Duke of Volodomer, Mosco, Emperour of all Russia, &c. These solemnities being ended, first commeth the Patriarch with the Metropolitans, Archbishops, and Bishops, then the Nobility, and the whole company in their order, to doe homage to the Emperour, bending downe their heads, and knocking them at his feete to the very ground.

Theodore Iuanowich, by the grace of God great Lord and Emperour of all Russia, great Duke of Volodemer, Mosco, and Nouogrod, King of Cazan, King of Astracan, Lord of Plesco, and great duke of Smolensco, of Twerria, Ioughoria, Permia, Vadska, Bulghoria, and others, Lord and great Duke of Nouogrod of the Low countrey, of Chernigo, Rezan, Polotskoy, Rostoue, Yaruslaueley, Bealozero, Liefland, Oudoria, Obdoria, and Condensa, Commander of all Siberia, and of the North parts, and Lord of many other Countries, &c.

This stile containeth in it all the Emperours Prouinces, and setteth forth his greatnesse. And therefore they haue agreed delight and pride in it, forcing not onely their owne people but also strangers (that haue any matter to deliuer to the Emperour by speech or writing) to repeat the whole forme from the beginning to the end. Which breedeth much cauill, and sometimes quarell betwixt them and the Tartar, and Poland Ambassadors: who refuse to call him Czar, that is Emperour, and to repeat the other parts of his long stile. My selfe when I had audience of the Emperour, thought good to salute him only with thus much vz, Emperour of all Russia, great Duke of Volodomer, Mosco and Nouogrod, King of Cazan, King of Astracan. The rest I omitted of purpose, because I knew they gloried, to haue their stile appeare to be of a larger volume then the Queenes of England. But this was taken in so ill part, that the Chancelour (who then attended the Emperour, with the rest of the nobility) with a loude chaunting voice, called still vpon me to say out the rest. Whereto I answered, that the Emperours stile was very long, and could not so well be remembred by strangers, that I had repeated so much of it, as might shew that I gaue honour to the rest &c. But all would not serue till I commanded my interpreter to say it all out.

Their forces for the wars, with the chief officers and their salaries.

The Souldiers of Russia are called Sinaboyarskey, or the sons of Gentlemen: because they are all of that degree, by vertue of their military profession. For euery souldier in Russia is a gentleman, and none are gentlemen, but only the souldiers, that take it by descent from their birth and in-

ancestors : so that the sonne of a gentleman (which is bozne a souldier) is euer a gentleman, and a souldier withall, & professeth nothing els but military matters. When they are of yeres able to beare armes, they come to the office of Roserade, or great Constable, and there present themselves : who entreteth their names, and alloteth them certaine lands to maintaine their charges, for the most part the same that their fathers enioyed. For the lands assigned to maintaine the army, are euer certain, annexed to this office without impouing, or detracting one foot. But that if the Emperoz haue sufficient in wages, the roomes being full so farre as the land doeth extend already, they are many times deferred, and haue nothing allowed them, except some one portion of the land be deuided into two. The whole number of his souldiers in continuall pay, is this. First he hath his Dworaney, that is, Pensioners, or Ward of his person, to the number of 15000 horsemen, with their captaines and other officers, that are alwaies in a readines.

horsemen.
1. Prætoriani such as attend
person 15000.

Of these 15000 horsemen, there are thre sortes or degrees, which differ as well in estimation as in wages, one degree from another. The first sort of them is called Dworaney Bulshey, or the company of head Pensioners, that haue some an hundred, some fourtescore rubbles a yeare, and none vnder 70. The second sort are called Seredney Dworaney, or the middle ranke of Pensioners. These haue sixty or fifty rubbles by the yeare, none vnder fortye. The third and lowest sort, are the Dyta Boiarskey, that is, the low Pensioners. Their salary is thirty rubbles a yeare for him that hath most, some haue but 25, some 20, none vnder 12. Whereof the halfe part is paid them at the Mosco, the other halfe in the field by the general, when they haue any wars, & are imployed in seruice. When they receiue their whole pay, it amounteth to 55000 rubbles by the yeare.

And this is their wages, besides lands allotted to euery one of them, both to the greater and the lesse, according to their degrees. Whereof he that hath least, hath to yeelde him twentie rubbles or markes by the yeare. Besides these 15000 horsemen, that are of better choyce (as being the Emperors owne guard when himselfe goeth to the wars, not unlike the Romane souldiers called Prætoriani) are a hundred and ten men of speciall account for their Nobilitie, and trust, which are chosen by the Emperoz, and haue their names registred, that find among them for the Emperors wars, to the number of 65000. horsemen, with all necessaries meet for the wars after the Russe maner.

Two other troupes to the
65000.

To this end they haue perely allowance made by the Emperoz for themselves, and their companies, to the summe of 40000 rubbles. And these 65000 are to repayre to the field euery yeare on the borders towards the Crim Tartar, (except they be appointed for some other seruice) whether there be wars with the Tartars, or not. This might seeme peraduenture somewhat dangerous for some state, to haue so great forces vnder the command of Noblemen to assemble euery yeare to one certain place. But the matter is so vsed, as that no danger can growe to the Emperoz, or his state by this means. First, because these noblemen are many, to wit, an 110, in all, & changed by the Emperoz so oft as he thinketh good. Secondly, because they haue their linings of the Emperoz, being otherwise but of very small reuenue, and receiue this perely pay of 40000 rubbles, when it is presently to be paid forth againe to the souldiers that are vnder them. Thirdly, because for the most part they are about the Emperors person being of his Counsel, either speciall, or at large. Fourthly, they are rather as paymasters, then Captaines to their companies, themselves not going forth ordinarily to the wars, saue when some of them are appointed by speciall order from the Emperoz himselfe. So the whole number of horsemen that are euer in a readinesse, and in continuall pay, are 80000, a few more or lesse.

If he haue neede of a greater number (which seldeome falleth out) then he enterteineth of those Sinaboiarskey, that are out of pay, so many as he needeth : and if yet he want of his number, he giueth charge to his Noblemen, that hold lands of him to bring into the field euery man a proportionable number of his seruants (called Kolophey, such as till his lands) with their furniture, according to the iust number that he intendeth to make. Which the seruice being done, presently lay in their weapons, and returne to their seruile occupations againe.

Of footmen that are in continuall pay, he hath to the number of 12000 all gunners, called Strelsey : Whereof 5000 are to attend about the citie of Mosco, or any other place where the Emperoz shall abide, and 2000 (which are called Stremaney Strelsey, or gunners at the stirrop) about his owne person at the very Court or house where himselfe lodgeth. The rest are placed in his garison townes, till there be occasion to haue them in the field, and receiue for their salary or stipend euery man seuen rubbles a yeare, besides twelue measures a peece of Rye, and Dates. Of mercenary Souldiers, that are strangers (whom they call Nimschoy) they haue at this time 4300 of Polonians : of Chirchasses (that are vnder the Polonians) about 4000, wherof 3500 are abroad in his garisons : of Douches & Scots about 150 : of Greekes, Turks, Danes and Swedens, all in one band, an 100 or thereabouts. But these they vse onely vpon the Tartar

Tartar side, and against the Siberians: as they doe the Tartar souldiers (whom they hire sometimes, but only for the present) on the other side against the Polonian and Sweden: thinking it best policie to vse their seruice vpon the contrary border.

The chiefe Captaines or leaders of these forces, according to their names and degrees, are these which follow. First, the Voyauoda Bulshaia, that is, the Great Captaine, or Lieutenant general under the Emperour. This commonly is one of the foure houses of the chiefe Nobility of the land. Their great Voiaud or general at this present in their wars, is commonly one of these foure: Knez Feodor Iuanowich Methissloskey, Knez Iuan Michalowich Glinskoy, Cherechaskoy, and Trowbetskoy, all of great nobilitie. Next vnto the Voiaud or general there is some other placed as Lieutenant general, being a man of great valour and experience in the wars, who ordereth all things that the other countenanceth. At this time their principal man, & most vsed in their wars, is one Knez Demetrie Iuanowich Forestine, an ancient and expert captaine, and one that hath done great seruice (as they say) against the Tartar and Polonian. Next under the Voiaud and his Lieutenant general are foure other that haue the marshalling of the whole army deuided among them, and may be called the marshalls of the field.

The chief captains of leaders.

1. The Voiaud or General.

2. Lieutenant General.

3. Marshalls of the field foure.

Euery man hath his quarter, or fourth part under him. Whereof the first is called the Praua Polskoy, or right wing. The second is the Leuoy Polskoy, or left wing. The third is Rufaoy Polskoy, or the broken band, because out of this there are chosen to send abroad vpon any sodaine exploit, or to make a rescue or supplie, as occasion doth require. The fourth Storozhouoy Polskoy, or the warding band. Euery one of these foure Marshalls haue two other under them (eight in all) that twise euery weeke at the least must muster and traine their seueral wings or bands, and hold and giue iudice for all faults, and disorders committed in the campe.

Foure marshalls: deputies eight.

And these eight are commonly chosen out of the 110. (which I spake of before) that receiue & deliuer the pay to the souldiers. Under these eight are diuers other Captaines, as the Gulanoj, Captaines of thousandes five hundredes and 100. The Petyde Setskoy or Captains of fifties, and the Decetskies or Captains of tennes.

Five Colonels under Captains.

Besides the Voiauada or general of the armie (spoke of before) they haue two other that beare the name of Voiauada, whereof one is the master of the great Ordinance (called Naradna voiauada) who hath diuers under officers, necessary for that seruice. The other is called the Voiaudogulanoj, or the walking Captaine, that hath allowed him 1000 good horsemen of principall choyce, to range & spie abroad, & hath the charge of the running Castle, which we are to speake of in the Chapter following. All these Captains, & men of charge must once euery day resort to the Bulsha voiauada, or General of the armie, to know his pleasure, & to informe him, if there be any requisite matter pertaining to their office.

The walking Captaine.

Of their mustering, and leuying of forces, maner of armour, and prouision of victuall for the warres.

When wars are towards (which they faile not of lightly euery yere with the Tartar, & many times with the Polonian & Sweden) the foure Lords of the Chetfirds send forth their summons in the Emperours name, to all the Dukes and Dyacks of the Provinces, to be proclaimed in the head townes of euery Shire: that at the Sinaboarskey, or sonnes of gentlemen make their repaire to such a border where the seizure is to be done, at such a place, & by such a day, and there present themselves to such, & such Captaines. When they come to the place assigned them in the summons or proclamation, their names are taken by certaine officers that haue commission for that purpose from the Roserade, or high Constable, as Clarke of the bands. If any make default & faile at the day, he is mulcted, & punished very severely. As for the General & other chiefe Captaines, they are sent thither from the Emperours owne hand, with such Commission & charge as he thinketh behoofull for the present seruice. When the souldiers are assembled, they are reduced into their bands, & companies, under their seueral Captaines of tennes, fifties, hundredes, thousandes, &c. and these Bands into 4 Polskeis, or Legions (but of farre greater numbers then the Romane Legions were) under their foure great Leaders, which also haue the authoritie of Marshalls of the field (as was sayd before.)

Their order of mustering.

Concerning their armour they are but slightly appointed. The comon horseman hath nothing els but his bow in his case under his right arme, & his quiver & sword hanging on the left side: except some fewe that beare a case of dagges, or a Jauelin, or short staffe along their horse side. The under captains will haue commonly some piece of armour besides, as a shirt of male, or such like. The General with the other chiefe captaines & men of Nobilitie will haue their horse very richly furnished, their saddles of cloth of gold, their bridles fair bossed & tasselled with gold, & silk fringe, bestudded with pearle & precious stones, the selues in very faire armour, which they call Bullatnoy, made of faire shining Steele, yet covered commonly with cloth of golde, and edged round with armin furre, his Steele helmet on his head of a very great price, his sword both and arrowes at his side, his speare in his hand, with another faire helmet, and Sheltapera, or horsemans scypter carried before him. Their swords, bowes, and arrowes are of the Turkish fashion. They practise like the Tartar to shoote forwards and backwards, as they flie and retire.

victual.

The Strelley or footeman hath nothing but his piece in his hand, his striking hatchet at his back, & his sword by his side. The stock of his piece is not made calicuerwise, but with a plaine & strait stocke (somewhat like a fouling piece) the barrel is rudely & vnartificially made, very heauie, yet shooteth but a very small bullet. As for their prouision of victual, the Emperour alloweth none, either for Captaine or souldiour, neither prouideth any for them except peradventure some coine for their money. Every man is to bring sufficient for himselfe, to serue his turne for foure moneths, & if neede require to giue order for more to be brought vnto him to the Campe from his tenant that tilleth his land, or some other place. One great helpe they haue, that for lodging and diet every Russe is prepared to be a souldier beforehand. Though the chiefe Captains & other of account cary tents with them after the fashion of ours, with some better prouision of victual then the rest. They bring with them commonly into the Campe for victuall a kind of dried bread, (which they call Suchary) with some store of meale, which they temper with water, and so make it into a ball, or small lump of doue, called Tollockno. And this they eate rawe in stead of bread. Their meat is bacon, or some other flesh or fish dyed, after the Dutch maner. If the Russe souldier were as hardy to execute an enterpryse, as he is hard to beare out toyle and trauell, or were otherwise as apt and well trained for the warres, as he is indifferent for his lodging and diet, hee would farre exceede the souldiers of our parts.

Of their marching, charging, and other Martial discipline.

The Russe trusteth rather to his number, then to the valure of his souldiers, or good ordering of his forces. Their marching or leading is without al order, save that the foure Polskey or Legions, (wherinto their armie is deuided) keepe themselves severall vnder their ensignes, & so thrust all on together in a hurree, as they are directed by their Generall. Their Ensigne is the image of S. George. The Bulshadworaney or chiefe horsemen, haue every man a small drum of hyasse at his saddle bowe, which he striketh when he giueth the charge, or on set.

Horsemens
drummes.

The horsemans manner of charging.

They haue drummes besides of a huge bignes, which they cary with them vpon a boord layde on foure horses, that are sparr'd together with chaines, every drumme hauing eight strikers, or drummers, besides trumpets and shawmes, which they sound after a wilde maner, much different from ours. When they giue any charge, or make any inuasion, they make a great hollow or shoute altogether, as loud as they can, which with the sound of their trumpets, shawmes, and drummes, maketh a confused and horrible noyse. So they set on first discharging their arrowes, then dealing with their swordes, which they vse in a brauerie to shake, and brandish ouer their heads, before they come to strokes.

charge.

The walking Casse.

Their footmen (because otherwise they want order in leading) are commonly placed in some ambush or place of aduantage, where they may most annoy the enemy, with least hurt to themselves. If it be a set battell, or if any great inuasion be made vpon the Russe borders by the Tartar, they are set within y running or mouing Casle (called Beza, or Gulaygorod) which is carried about with them by the Voiauada guluuoy (or the walking General) whom I spake of before. This walking or mouing Casle is so framed, that it may be set vp in length (as occasion doeth require) the space of one, two, three, foure, fife, sixe, or seuen miles: for so long it will reach. It is nothing els but a double wall of wood to defend them on both sides behinde and before, with a space of three yards or thereabouts, betwixt the two sides: so that they may stand within it, and haue roome enough to charge and discharge their pieces, and to vse their other weapons. It is closed at both ends, and made with loope holes on either side, to lay out the nose of their piece, or to push forth any other weapon. It is carried with the armie wheresoeuer it goeth, being taken into pieces, and so layde on cartes sparr'd together, and drawn by horse that are not seene, by reason that they are couered with their carriage as with a shelle or perchouse. When it is brought to the place where it is to be used (which is deuised and chosen out before by the walking Voiaud) it is planted so much as the present vse requireth, sometime a mile long, sometimes two, sometimes three or more: Which is soone done without the helpe of any Carpenter, or instrument: because the timber is so framed to claspe together one piece with in another: as is easily vnderstoode by those that know the maner of the Russe building.

In this Casle standeth their shot well fenced for aduantage, specially against the Tartar, that bringeth bringeth no ordinance, nor other weapon into the field with him, save his sword, and bow, and arrows. They haue also within it diuers field pieces, which they vse as occasion doth require. Of pieces for the field they carie no great store, when they warre against the Tartar: but when they deale with the Polonian (of whose forces they make more account) they go better furnished with all kind of munition, and other necessarie provisions. It is thought that no Prince of Christendome hath better store of munition, then the Russe Emperour. And it may partly appeare by the Artillery house at Mosco, where are of all sortes of great Ordinance, all brasse pieces, very faire, to an exceeding great number.

The Russe souldier is thought to be better at his defence within some castle or towne, then he is abroad at a set pitched field. Which is euer noted in the practise of his warres, and namely at the siege of Vobsko, about eight yeres since: where he repulld the Polonian king Stepan Batore, with his whole armie of 100000 men, and forced him in the end to giue over his siege, with the losse of many of his best Captaines and souldiers. But in a set field the Russe is noted to haue euer the worse of the Polonian and Sweden.

If any behaue himselfe more valiantly then the rest, or do any special piece of seruice, the Emperour sendeth him a piece of golde, stamped with the Image of Saint George on horsebacke, which they hang on their sleeves, & set in their caps. And this is accounted the greatest honour they can receiue, for any seruice they doe.

Reward for valure.

Of their Colonies, and maintaining of their conquests, or purchases by force.

The Russe Emperours of late yeres haue very much enlarged their dominions, & territories. Their first conquest after the Dukedome of Mosco (for before that time they were but Dukes of Volodomer, as before was said) was the citie, & Dukedome of Nouogrod on the West, and North-west side: which was no small enlargement of their dominion, & strengthening to them for the winning of the rest. This was done by Iuan great grandfather to Theodor now Emperour, about the yere 1480. The same began likewise to encroach vpon the countries of Lituania and Liuania, but the conquest only intended, & attempted by him, vpon some part of those countries, was pursued & performed by his sonne Basileus, who first won the citie & dukedom of Plesko, afterwards the citie & dukedom of Smolensco, & many other faire townes, with a large territory belonging vnto them, about the yere 1514. These victories against the Lettoes or Lituanians, in the time of Alexander their duke, he atchieued rather by aduantage of ciuill dissentions, & treasons among themselves, then by any great policie, or force of his own. But al this was lost againe by his son Iuan Vasiluich, about 80 yeres past, vpon composition with the Polonian king Stephan Batore: wherunto he was forced by the aduantages which the Polle had then of him, by reason of the foile he had giuen him before, and the disquietnes of his own state at home. Onely the Russe Emperour, at this time hath left him on that side his countrey, the cities of Smolensco, Vobsko, Chernigo, & Bealagorod in Lituania. In Liuania, not a towne nor one foot of ground.

When Basilius first conquered those countries, he suffered then the natives to keepe their possessions, and to inhabite all their townes, onely paying him a tribute, vnder the gouernement of his Russe Captaines. But by their conspiracies & attempts not long after, he was taught to deale more surely with them. And so comming vpon them the second time, he killed and caried away with him, three parts of foure, which he gaue or sold to the Tartars that serued him in those wars, and in stead of them placed there his Russes, so many as might ouermatch the rest, with certaine garisons of strength besides. Wherein notwithstanding this oversight was committed, for that (taking away with him the vpland, or countrey people that should haue tilled the ground, & might easily haue bene kept in order without any danger, by other good policies) he was driuen afterwards many yeres together, to vicaille the countrey (specially the great townes) out of his owne countrey of Russia, the soile lying there in the meane while wast, and vntilled.

Lituania.

The like fell out at the port of Narue in Liefland, where his sonne Iuan Vasiluich deuised to build a towne, and a castle on the other side the riuer, (called Iuangorod) to keepe the towne and countrey in subiection. The castle he caused to be so built and fortified, that it was thought to be invincible. And when it was furnished, for reward to the Architect (that was a Polonian) he put out both his eyes, to make him unable to build the like againe. But hauing left the natives all within their owne countrey, without abating their number or strength, the towne and castle not long after was betrayed, and surrendred againe to the king of Sweden.

Narue.

On the Southeast side, they haue got the kingdomes of Cazan, and Astracan. These were wonne from the Tartar, by the late Emperour Iuan Vasiluich, the one about thirtie yeres, the other about thirtie and three yeres agoe. Northward out of the countrey of Siberia, he hath layed vnto his realme a great breadth and length of ground, from Wichida to the riuer of Obba, about a 1000 miles space: so that he is bolde to write himselfe now, The great Commander of Siberia. The countries like wise of Permia and Pechora are a diuers people and language from the Russe, ouercome not long since, and that rather by threatening, and shaking of the sword, then by any actiual force: as being a weake and naked people, without meanes to resist.

That which the Russe hath in his present possession, he keepeth on this sort. In his foure chief border townes of Vobsko, Smolensko, Astracan, and Cazan, he hath certaine of his counsell nor of greatest nobility, but of greatest trust, which haue more authoritie within their precincts, (for the countenancing and strengthening of their government there) then the other Dukes that are set to gouerne in other places, as was noted before, in the manner of ordering their Provinces. These he changeth sometime euery yere, sometime euery second or third yere, but errederth not that time, except vpon very speciall trust, and good liking of the party, and his seruice: least by enlarging of their time, they might grow into some familiaritie with the enemy (as some haue done) being so farre out of sight.

The townes besides are very strongly fenced with trenches, castles, & store of munition, and haue garisons within them, to the number of two or three thousand a peece. They are stored with victual if any siege should come vpon them, for the space of two or three yeres before hand. The foure castles of Smolensko, Vobsko, Cazan and Astracan, he hath made very strong to beate out any siege: so that it is thought that those townes are impregnable.

As for the countries of Pechora and Permia, and that part of Siberia, which he hath now vnder him, they are kept by as easie meanes, as they were first got, viz. rather by shewing, then by using of armes. First, he hath stored the countrie with as many Russes as there are natives, & hath there some few souldiers in garison, inough to keepe them vnder. Secondly, his officers & Magistrates there are of his own Russe people, and he changeth them very often, viz. euery yere twice or thrise: notwithstanding there be no great feare of any innouation. Thirdly, he deuiderth them into many small governments, like a staffe broke in many small peeces: so they haue no strength being seuered, which was but little neither when they were all in one. Fourthly, he prouiderth that the people of the countrie haue neither armor, nor money, being feared & pillled so often as he thinkech good: without any meanes to shake off that yoke, or to relieue themselves.

In Siberia (where he goeth on in pursuing his conquest) he hath diuers castles & garisons, to the number of 6000 souldiers of Russes & Polonians, & sendeth many new supplies thither, to plant and to inhabite, as he winneth ground. At this time besides he hath gotten the kings brother of Siberia, allured by certaine of his captaines, to leaue his own countrie by offers of great entertainment, and plesanter life with the Russe Emperour, then he had in Siberia. He was brought in this last yere, and is now with the Emperour at Mosco well entertained.

Of the Tartars, and other borderers to the country of Russia, with whom they haue most to doe in warre, and peace.

The Polonians called Laches by the Russe.

The Chym Tartar.

The firing of Mosco by the Chym Tartar
in the yere

Their neighbors with whom they haue greatest dealings & intercourse, both in peace & war, are first the Tartar. Secondly the Polonian whom the Russe calleth Laches, noting the first author or founder of the nation, who was called Laches or Leches, wherunto is added Po, which signifieth People, and so is made Polaches, that is, the People or posterity of Laches: which the Latins after their manner of writing call Polonos. The third are the Swedens, The Polonians & Swedens are better knownen to these parts of Europe then are the Tartars, that are farther off from vs (as being of Asia) and diuided into many tribes, different in name, and government one from another. The greatest and mightiest of them is the Chym Tartar, (whom some call the Great Can) that lieth South, & Southeastward from Russia, and doth most annoy the countrie by often inuasions, commonly once euery yere, sometimes entring very farre within the inland parts. In the yere 1571 he came as farre as the citie of Mosco, with an armie of 200000 men, without any battel, or resistance at all, for that the Russe Emperour (then Iuan Vasiliuich) leading forth his armie to encounter with him, marched a wrong way. The citie he tooke not, but fired the suburbs, which by reason of the buildings (which are all of wood without any stone, brick, or lime, saue certaine out roomes) kindled so quickly, and went on with such rage, as that it consumed the greatest part of the citie almost within the space of foure houres, being of 30 miles or more of compass. Then might you haue seene a lamentable spectacle: besides the huge & mighty flame of the citie all on light fire, the people burning in their houses and streetes, but most of all of such as laboured to passe out of the gates farthest from the enemy, where meeting together in a mighty throng, & so prelling euery man to preuent another, wedged themselves so fast within the

the gate, and streetes neere vnto it, as that three ranks walked one vpon the others head, the vppermost treading downe those that were lower: so that there perished at that time (as was said) by the fire & the pisse, the number of 800000 people or more.

The principall cause of this continual quarrell betwixt the Russe & the Chrim is for the right of certaine border partes claimed by the Tartar, but possessed by the Russe. The Tartar alleagech that besides Astracan and Cazan (that are the auncient possession of the East Tartar) the whole countrey from his boundes North and Westward so farre as the citie of Mosko, and Mosko it selfe pertaineth to his right: Which seemeth to haue bene true by the report of the Russes them selues, that tell of a certaine homage that was done by the Russe Emperour euery yeere to the great Chrim or Can, the Russe Emperour standing on foot and feeding the Chrims horse, (himselfe sitting on his backe) with oates out of his owne cappe, in stead of a bowle or manger, and that within the caille of Mosko. And this homage (they say) was done till the time of Basileus grand-father to this man. Who surprizing the Chrim Emperour by a stratageme done by one of his nobilitie (called Iuan Demetrovich Belschey) was content with this ransom, viz. with the changing of this homage into a tribute of furs: which afterwards also was denied to be payde by this Emperours father.

Homage done by the Russe to the Chrim Tartar.

Wherupon they continue y quarrell, the Russe defending his countrey, & that which he hath won, y Chrim Tartar inuading him once or twice euery yeere, sometime about Whitsonide, but oftner in haruest. What time if the great Can or Chrim come in his owne person, he bringerh with him a great armie of 100000, or 200000 men. Othewise they make short & sudden rodes into the countrey with lesser numbers, running about the list of the border as wild geese flie, inuading and retreating where they see advantage.

Their common practise (being very populous) is to make diuers armies, and so drawing the Russe to one or two places of the frontiers, to inuade at some other place, that is left without defence. Their maner of fight, or ordering of their forces is much after the Russe maner (spoken of before) saue that they are all horsemen, and carie nothing els but a bowe, a sheafe of arrowes, and a falcon sword after the Turkish fashion. They are very expert horsemen, and vse to shoote as readily backward, as for ward. Some wil haue a horsemans staffe like to a boze speare, besides their other weapons. The comon souldier hath no other armour then his ordinary apparell, viz. a blacke sheeps skin with the wool side outward in the day time, and inwarde in the night time, with a cap of the same. But their Morleys or noblemen imitate the Turk both in apparel and armour. When they are to passe ouer a riuer with their armie, they tie three or foure horses together, and taking long poles or pieces of wood, bind them fast to the taitles of their horse: so sitting on the poles they vniue their horse ouer. A handie strokes (when they toyne battell) they are accounted farre better men then the Russe people, fierce by nature, but more hardy and bloody by continuall practise of warre: as men knowing no artes of peace, nor any ciuill practise.

fight, and armour.

Yet their subtilty is more then may seeme to agree with their barbarous condition. By reason they are practised to inuade continually, and to robbe their neighbours that border about them, they are very pregnant, and ready witted to deuise stratagemes vpon the sudden for their better advantage. As in their warre against Beala the fourth, king of Hungarie, whome they inuaded with 500000 men, and obtained against him a great victorie. Where, among other, hauing slaine his Chancelor called Nicholas Schinick, they found about him the kings priuy seale. Wherupon they deuised presently to counterfeite letters in the kings name, to the cities and towines next about the place, where the field was fought: with charge that in no case they should conuey themselves, and their goods out of their dwellings, where they might abide safely without all feare of danger, and not leaue the countrey desolate to the possession of so vile and barbarous an enemy, as was the Tartar nation, terming themselves in all reprochful maner. For notwithstanding he had lost his carriages, with some few straglers that had marched disorderly, yet he doubted not but to recouer that losse, with the accesse of a notable victorie, if the sauage Tartar durst abide him in the field. To this purpose hauing written their letters in the Polish character, by certaine yong men whom they tooke in the field, and signed them with the Kings seale, they dispatched them forth to all the quarters of Hungaria, that lay neere about the place. Wherupon the Ungarians that were now flying away with their goods, wiues, and children, vpon the rumour of the kings overthrow, taking comfort of these counterfeite letters, staid at home. And so were made a pray, being surprisid on the sudden by this huge number of these Tartars, that had compassed them about before they were aware.

of the Tartar.

When they besiege a towne or fort, they offer much parle, and send many flattering messages to perswade a surrendry: promising all things that the inhabitants will require: but being once possessed of the place, they vie all maner of hostilitie, and crueltie. This they doe vpon a rule they haue, haue, v^z. that iustice is to bee practised but towards their owne. They encounter not lightly, but they haue some ambush, whereunto (hauing once shewed themselves, and made some short conflict) they retire as repulled for feare, and so draw the enemy into it if they can. But the Russe being well acquainted with their practise is more warie of them. When they come a rousing with some small number, they set on horsebacke counterfaite shapen of men, that their number may seeme greater.

When they make any onset, their maner is to make a great shout, crying all out together Olla Billa, Olla Billa, God helpe vs, God help vs. They contemne death so much, as that they chuse rather to die, then to peeld to their enemy, and are seene when they are slaine to bite the very weapon, when they are past striking or helping of themselves. Wherein appeareth how different the Tartar is in his desperate courage from the Russe and Turke. For the Russe souldier, if he begin once to retire, putteth all his safetie in his speed by flight. And if once he be taken by his enemy, he neither defendeth himselfe, nor intreateth for his life, as reckoning straight to die. The Turke commonly, when he is past hope of escaping, falleth to intreatie, and casteth away his weapon, offereth both his hands, and holdeth them, as it were to be tied: hoping to saue his life, by offering himselfe bondslaue.

The chiefe bootie the Tartars seeke for in all their warres is to get store of captiues, specially young boyes, and girles, whome they sell to the Turkes, or other their neighbours. To this purpose they take with them great baskets made like bakers panniers to carry them tenderly, and if any of them happen to tire, or to be sicke by the way, they dash him against the ground, or some tree, and so leaue him dead. The Souldiers are not troubled with keeping the captiues and the other bootie, for hindering the execution of their warres, but they haue certaine bandes that intend nothing else, appoynted of purpose to receiue and keepe the captiues and the other praye.

The Tartar religion.

The Russe borderers (being vsed to their inuasions lightly euery yere in the Sommer) keepe fewe other cattell on the border partes, saue swine onely which the Tartar will not touch, nor dyne away with him: for that he is of the Turkish religion, and will eate no swines flesh. Of Christ our Saviour they confesse as much as doeth the Turke in his Alkaron, viz. that he came of the Angel Gabriel and the Virgin Marie, that he was a great Prophet, and shall be the Iudge of the worlde at the last day. In other matter likewise, they are much ordered after the manner and direction of the Turke: hauing felt the Turkish forces when hee wonne from them Azou and Caffa, with some other townes about the Euxine or blacke Sea, that were before tributaries to the Crim Tartar. So that now the Emperour of the Crims for the most part is chosen one of the Nobility whom the Turke doeth commend: whereby it is brought nowe to passe, that the Crim Tartar giueth to the Turke the tenth part of the spoyle which hee getteth in his warres against the Christians.

Herein they differ from the Turkish religion, for that they haue certaine idole puppets made of sticke, or like stufte, of the fashion of a man, which they fasten to the doore of their walking houses, to be as Ianusses or keepers of their house. And these idoles are made not by all, but by certaine religious women which they haue among them for that and like vses. They haue besides the image of their King or great Can, of an huge bignesse, which they erect at euery stage when the army marcheth: and this euery one must bend and bowe vnto as he passeth by it, be he Tartar or stranger. They are much giuen to witchcraft, and ominous coniectures vpon euery accident which they heare or see.

In making of marriages they haue no regard of alliance or consanguinitie. Onely with his mother, sister, and daughter a man may not marrie, and though he take the woman into his house, and accompany with her, yet he accounteth her not for his wife till he haue a childe by her. Then hee beginneth to take a dowry of her friends of horse, sheepe, kine, &c. If she be barren after a certaine time, he turneth her home againe.

The Tartar nobilitie.

Under the Emperour they haue certaine Dukes, whome they call Morseis or Diuoymorseis, that rule ouer a certaine number of 10000. 20000. or 40000. a piece, which they call Hoords. When the Emperour hath any vse of them to serue in his warres, they are bound to come, and to bring with them their Souldiers to a certain number, euery man with his two horse at the least, the one to ride on, the other to kill, when it commeth to his turne to haue his horse eate. For their chiefe vitaille is horse flesh, which they eate without bread, or any other thing with it. So that if a Tartar be taken by a Russe, he shall be sure lightly to finde a horse-legge, or some other part of him at his saddle bowe.

The Tartar diet.

This last yere when I was at the Mosco, came in one Kiriach Morsey, nephew to the Emperour of the Crims that nowe is (whose father was Emperour before) accompanied with 300.

Tartars,

Tartars, and his two wiues, whereof one was his brothers widow. Where being intertaind in very good sort after the Russe maner, hee had sent vnto his lodging for his welcome, to bee made ready for his supper and his companies, two very large and fat horses, ready flayed in a sled. They prefer it before other flesh, because the meate is stronger (as they say) then Beefe, Mutton, and such like. And yet (which is marueile) though they serue all as horsemen in the warres, and eate all of horse flesh, there are brought yeerely to the Mosco to bee exchanged for other commodities 30. or 40. thousand Tartar horse, which they call Cones. They keepe also great herds of kine, & flocks of blacke sheepe, rather for the skins and milke (which they carie with them in great bottles) then for the vse of the flesh, though sometimes they eate of it. Some vse they haue of ryle, figs, and other fruits. They drinke milke or warme blood, and for the most part card them both together. They vse sometime as they trauel by the way, to let their horse blood in a vaine, and to drinke it warme, as it cometh from his bodie.

Townes they plant none, nor other standing buildings, but haue walking houses, which the latines call Veij, built vpon wheelles like a shepheards cottage. These they drawe with them whither soeuer they goe, drining their cattell with them. And when they come to their stage, or standing place, they plant their cartte houses verie orderly in a ranke: and so make the forme of streetes, and of a large towne. And this is the manner of the Emperoz himselfe, who hath no other seat of Empire but an Agora, or towne of wood, that moueth with him whither soeuer hee goeth. As for the fixed and standing building vsed in other countreyes, they say they are vnwholesome and vnpleasant.

The Tartars dwelling.

They begin to moue their houses and cattell in the Spring time from the South part of their Countrey towards the North partes. And so drining on till they haue grafed all vp to the farthest part Northward, they retorne backe againe towards their South countrey (where they continue all the Winter) by 10. or 12. miles a stage: in the meane while the grasse being sprung vp againe, to serue for their cattell as they retorne. From the border of the Shalcan towards the Calpian sea, to the Russe frontiers, they haue a goodly Countrey, specially on the South and Southeast partes, but lost for lacke of tillage.

Of money they haue no vse at all, and therefore prefer brasse and Steele before other mettals, specially bullate, which they vse for swordes, kniues, and other necessities. As for golde and silver they neglect it of very purpose, (as they doe all tillage of their ground) to bee more free for their wandring kinde of life, and to keepe their Countrey lesse subiect to inuasions. Which giuerh them great aduantage against all their neighbors, euer inuading, and neuer being inuaded. Such as haue taken vpon them to inuade their Countrey (as of oldetime Cyrus and Darius Hystaspis, on the East and Southeast side) haue done it with very ill successe: as wee finde in the stories written of those times. For their manner is when any will inuade them, to allure and drawe them on by flying and reculing (as if they were afraide) till they haue drawen them some good way within their countrey. Then when they begin to want victuall and other necessities (as needes they must where nothing is to be had) to stoppe vp the passages, and inclose them with multitudes. By which stratagem (as wee reade in Laonicus Chalcacondylas in his Turkish storie) they had welnigh surprized the great and huge armie of Tamerlan, but that hee retired with all speede hee could towards the riuer Tanais or Don, not without great losse of his men, and cariages.

In the storie of Pachymerius the Greeke (which hee wrote of the Emperors of Constantinople from the beginning of the reigne of Michael Palæologus to the time of Andronicus the elder) I remember he telleth to the same purpose of one Nogas a Tartarian captaine vnder Cazan the Emperoz of the East Tartars (of whom the citie and kingdome of Cazan may seeme to haue taken the denomination) who refused a present of Pearle and other iewels sent vnto him from Michael Palæologus: asking withall, for what vse they serued, and whether they were good to keepe away sicknesse, death, or other misfortunes of this life, or no. So that it seemeth they haue euer, or long time bene of that minde to value things no further, then by the vse and necessity for which they serue.

Pachymerius.

For person and complexion they haue broad and flatte visages, of a tanned colour into yellowe and blacke, fierce and cruell lookes, thinne haired vpon the vpper lippe, and pitte of the chinne, light and nimble bodied, with short legges, as if they were made naturally for horsemen: whereto they practise themselves from their childhood, selldome going afoot about any businesse. Their speech is verie sudden and loude, speaking as it were out of a deepe hollowe throte. When they sing you would thinke a kowe lowed, or some great bandogge howled. Their greatest exercise is shooting, wherein they traine vp their children from their verie infancie, not suffering them to eate, till they haue shot neere the marke within a certaine scantling.

scantling. They are the very same that sometimes were called Scythæ Nomades, or the Scythian shepherds, by the Greeks and Latines. Some thinke that the Turkes took their beginning from the nation of the Crim Tartars. Of which opinion is Laonicus Calcocondylas the Greek Historiographer, in his first booke of his Turkish storie. Whererin hee followeth diuers verie probable coniectures. The first taken from the verie name it selfe, for that the worde Turk signifieth a Shepheard or one that followeth a vagarant and wilde kinde of life. By which name these Scythian Tartars haue euer bene noted, being called by the Greekes οὐδαι κτηνοβοσκoi or the Scythian shepherds. His second reason, because the Turkes (in his time) that dwelt in Asia the lesse, to wit, in Lydia, Caria, Phrygia and Cappadocia, spake the very same language that these Tartars did, that dwelt betwixt the riuer Tanais or Don, and the countrey of Sarmatia, which (as is well knownen) are these Tartars called Crims. At this time also the whole nation of the Turkes differ not much in their common speech from the Tartar language. Thirdly because the Turke and the Crim Tartar agree so well together, as well in religion, as in matter of traffique neuer invading, or inuoying one another: saue that the Turke (since Laonicus his time) hath encroched vpon some Townes vpon the Euxin Sea, that before pertained to the Crim Tartar. Fourthly, because Ortogules sonne to Oguzalpes, and father to Otoman the first of name of the Turkish nation made his first roads out of those parts of Asia, vpon the next borderers, till hee came towards the countreys about the hill Taurus, where hee ouercame the Greekes that inhabited there: and so enlarged the name and territorie of the Turkish nation, till hee came to Eubæa and Attica, and other partes of Greece. This is the opinion of Laonicus; who liued among the Turkes in the time of Amurat the first Turkish Emperour, about the yeere 1400, when the memorie of their originall was more fresh: and therefore the likelier hee was to hit the crueth.

There are diuers other Tartars that border vpon Russia, as the Nagayes, the Cheremissens, the Mordwites, the Chircasses, and the Shalcans, which all differ in name more then in regiment, or other condition, from the Crim Tartar, except the Chircasses that border Southwest, towards Lituania, and are farre more ciuill then the rest of the Tartars, of a comely person, and of a stately behaviour, as applying themselves to the fashion of the Polonian. Some of them haue subiected themselves to the Kings of Poland, and professe Christianitie. The Nagay lieth Eastward, and is reckoned for the best man of warre among all the Tartars, but verie sauage, and cruell about all the rest. The Cheremessen Tartar, that lieth betwixt the Russe and the Nagay, are of two sorts, the Lugauoy (that is of the valley) and the Nagornay, or of the hilly countrey. These haue much troubled the Emperours of Russia. And therefore they are content now to buy peace of the, vnder pretence of giuing a yeerely pension of Russe commodities to their Morseys, or Diuoy morseis, that are chiefe of their tribes. For which also they are bound to serue them in their wars, vnder certaine conditions. They are said to be iust and true in their dealings: and for that cause they hate the Russe people, whom they account to be double, and false in all their dealing. And therefore the common sort are very vniwilling to keepe agreement with them, but that they are kept in by their Morseis, or Dukes for their pensions sake.

The most rude & barbarous is counted the Mordwit Tartar, that hath many selfe-fashions and strange kinds of behauiour, differing from the rest. For his religion, though he acknowledge one God, yet his manner is to worship for God, that liuing thing he first meeteth in the morning, & to sweare by it all that whole day, whether it be horse, dog, cat, or whatsoever els it bee. When his friend dieth, he killeth his best horse, and hauing slayed off the skinne hee carieth it on high vpon a long pole before the corpes to the place of buriall. This hee doeth (as the Russe saith) that his friend may haue a good horse to carie him to heauen: but it is likelier to declare his loue towards his dead friend, in that he will haue to die with him the best thing that he hath.

Next to the kingdom of Astracan, that is the farthest part Southeastward of the Russe dominion, lyeth the Shalcan, and the countrey of Media: whither the Russe marchants trade for rawe silkes, Spindon, saphion, skinnies, and other commodities. The chiefe Townes of Media where the Russe traderth, are Derbent (built by Alexander the great, as the inhabitants say) and Zamachi where the staple is kept for rawe silkes. Their manner is in the Spring time to reuirt the silke-wormes (that lie dead all the Winter) by laying them in the warme sunne, and (to hasten their quickening that they may sooner goe to worke) to put them into bags, and so to hang them vnder their childrens armes. As for the woorme called Chrinifin (as wee call it Chrymsor) that maketh coloured silke, it is bred not in Media, but in Assyria. This trade to Derbent and Samachi for rawe silkes, and other commodities of that Countrey, as also into Persia, and Bougharia downe the riuer of Volga, and through the Caspian sea, is permitted aswell to the English as to the Russe merchants, by the Emperours last grant at my being there.

The whole nation of the Tartars are utterly void of all learning, and without written Law: yet certaine rules they haue which they hold by tradition, common to all the Hoordes for the practice of their life. Which are of this sort. 1. To obey their Emperour and other Magistrates, whatsoeuer they commaund about the publike seruice. 2. Except for the publike behoofe, euery man to be free and out of controulment. 3. No priuate man to possesse any lands, but the whole countrey to be as common. 4. To neglect all daintinesse and varietie of meates; and to content themselves with that which commeth next to hand, for more hardnesse, and readines in the executing of their affaires. 5. To weare any base attire, and to patch their clothes whether there be any neede or not: that when there is neede, it be no shame to weare a patcht coate. 6. To take or steale from any stranger whatsoeuer they can get, as beeing enemies to all men, saue to such as will subiect themselves to them. 7. Towards their owne horde and nation to be true in worde and deede. 8. To suffer no stranger to come within the Realme. Of the Permians, Samoites, and Lappes.

The Permians and Samoites that lye from Russia, North and Northeast, are thought likewise to haue taken their beginning from the Tartar kinde. And it may partly bee guessed by the fashion of their countenance, as hauing all broad and flat faces as the Tartars haue, except the Chircasses. The Permians are accounted for a very ancient people. They are now subiect to the Russe. They liue by hunting, and trading with their furs, as also doth the Samoit, that dwelleth more towards the North Sea. The Samoit hath his name (as the Russe saith) of eating himselfe: as if in times past, they liued as Cannibals, eating one another. Which they make more probable, because at this time they eat all kind of raw flesh, whatsoeuer it be, euen the very carion that lieth in the ditch. But as the Samoites themselves will say, they were called Samois, that is, of themselves, as though they were Indigene, or people bred vpon that very soyle, that neuer changed their seate from one place to another, as most nations haue done. They are subiect at this time to the Emperour of Russia.

The Permians,

The Samoites.

I talked with certaine of them, and finde that they acknowledge one God: but represent him by such things as they haue most vse and good by. And therefore they worship the Sunne, the Moon, the Loth, and such like. As for the story of Sata Baba, or the Golden hagge, (which I haue read in some mappes, and descriptions of these countries, to be an idole after the forme of an olde woman) that being demanded by the Priest, giue them certaine Oracles, concerning the successe, and event of things, I found it to be a very fable. Onely in the Province of Obdoria vpon the sea side, neare to the mouth of the great riuer Obba, there is a rocke, which naturally (being somewhat helped by imagination) may seeme to beare the shape of a ragged woman, with a child in her armes (as the rocke by the North Cape the shape of a Frier) where the Obdoria Samoites vse much to resort, by reason of the commoditie of the place for fishing: and there sometime (as their manner is) conceiue, and practise their sorceries, and ominous coniecturings about the good or bad speede of their iourneies, fishings, huntings, and such like.

They are clad in Seale skins, with the haire side outwards downe as low as the knees, with their breeches and netherstockes of the same, both men and women. They are all blacke haired, naturally bearded. And therefore the men are hardly discerned from the women by their looks: saue that the women weare a locke of haire downe along both their eares. They liue in a manner a wilde and sauage life, roving still from one place of the countrey to another, without any property of house or land more to one then to another. Their leader or director in euery companie, is their Papa or Priest.

On the North side of Russia next to Corelia, lieth the countrey of Lappia, which reacheth in length from the farthest point Northward, (towards the North Cape) to the farthest part South-east (which the Russe calleth Sweetnesse or Holy nose, the English men Capegrace) about 345. verst or miles. From Sweetnesse to Candelox by the way of Versaga (which measureth the breadth of that countrey) is 90. miles or thereabouts. The whole countrey in a maner is either lakes, or mountaines; which towards the Sea side are called Tondro, because they are all of harde and craggy rocke, but the inland partes are well furnished with woods that growe on the hilles sides, the lakes lying betweene. Their diet is very bare and simple. Bread they haue none, none, but feede onely vpon fish and foule. They are subiect to the Emperoꝛ of Russia, and the two kings of Sweden and Denmarke: which all exact tribute and custome of them (as was saide befoꝛe) but the Emperoꝛ of Russia beareth the greatest hand ouer them, and exacteth of them farre moze then the rest. The opinion is that they were first termed Lappes of their brieft and shorſe speech. The Russe diuideth the whole nation of the Lappes into two sortes. The one they call Nowremanskoy Lapary, that is, the Noruegian Lappes because they be of the Danish religion. Foꝛ the Danes and Noruegians they account foꝛ one people. The other that haue no religion at all but liue as brute and heathenish people, without God in the worlde, they cal Dikoy Lapary, oꝛ the wilde Lappes.

The whole nation is utterly vnlearned, hauing not so much as the vse of any Alphabet, oꝛ letter among them. Foꝛ practise of witchcraft and sozterie they passe all nations in the worlde. Though foꝛ enchanting of ships that saile along their coast, (as I haue heard it repoꝛted) and their giuing of winds good to their friends, and contrary to other, whom they meane to hurt by tying of certaine knots vpon a rope (somewhat like to the tale of Eolus his windbag) is a very fable, deuised (as may seeme) by themselves, to terrifie sailers foꝛ comming neere their coast. Their weapons are the long bow, and handgumme, wherein they excell, aswell foꝛ quicknesse to charge and discharge, as foꝛ neerenesse at the marke by reason of their continual practise (whereto they are forced) of shooting at wild fowle. Their maner is in Sommer time to come downe in great companies to the sea side, to Wardhuysle, Cola, Keger, and the bay of Vedagoba, and there to fish foꝛ Codde, Salmon, & But-fish, which they sel to the Russes, Danes, & Noruegians, and nowe of late to the English men that trade thither with cloth, which they exchange with the Laps & Corelians foꝛ their fish, oyle, and fures, whereof also they haue some stoꝛe. They holde their mart at Cola on S. Peters day: what time the capitaine of Wardhuysle (that is resident there foꝛ the king of Denmark) must be present, oꝛ at least send his deputie to set pꝛices vpon their stockfish, crain oile, fures, and other commodities: as also the Russe Emperoꝛs customer, oꝛ tribute taker, to receiue his custome, which is euer payde befoꝛe any thing can bee bought oꝛ solde. When their fishing is done, their manner is to drawe their carballies oꝛ boates on shoꝛe, and there to leaue them with the keele turned bywardes, till the next spring tide. Their trauaile to and fro is vpon sleddes drawn by the Olen Deere: which they vse to turne a grazing all the Sommer time in an Island called Kildyn, (of a verie good soyle compared with other partes of that Countrey) and towards the Winter time, when the snowe beginneth to fall, they fetch them home againe foꝛ the vse of their sledde.

The description of the regions, people, and riuers, lying North and East from Moscouia: as the way from Moscouia to the riuier Petzora, and the Prouince Ingaria or Iubra, and from thence to the riuier Obi. Likewise the description of other countreys and regions, euen vnto the Empire of the great Can of Cathay, taken out of Sigismundus ab Herberstein.

The dominion of the Duke of Moscouia.

Vologda.
Verst.
Vstiug.

THE dominion of the Prince of Moscouia, reacheth farre toward the East and North, vnto the places which we will now describe. As concerning which thing, I translated a booke was presented vnto me in the Moscouites tongue, and haue here made a brieft rehearſall of the same. I will first therefore describe the iourney from Moscouia to Petzora, and so to Ingaria and Obi. From Moscouia to the citie of Vologda, are numbred fūe hundred versts, one verst conſpnyng almost the space of an Italian myle. From Vologda to Vstiug toward the right hand, descending with the course of the riuier of Vologda and Suchana with whom it iopneth, are counted fūe hundred versts, where within two versts of the towne called Strelze; and hard by the citie of Vstiug, Suchana iopneth vnto Iug, which runneth from the South: from whose mouth vnto the springs of the same, are numbred fūe hundred versts.

Suchana.
Iug. So called and pleasant streame.

Pienega.

Nicholai.
Kuluio.

But Suchana and Iug, after they iopne together, lose their first names, and make but one riuier named Dwina, by the which the passage to the citie of Colmogro containeth fūe hundred versts, from whence, in the space of sixe dayes iourney, Dwina entreth into the North Ocean at sixe mouthes. And the greatest part of this iourney consisteth by Nauigation. Foꝛ by lande from Vologda vnto Colmogro, passing ouer the riuier Vuaga, are a thousand versts. Not farre from Colmogro, the riuier Pienega running from the East on the right hand foꝛ the space of seuen hundred versts, falleth into Dwina. From Dwina by the riuier Pienega, by the space of two hundred versts, they come to a place called Nicholai, from whence within halfe a verst ships haue passage into the riuier Kuluio, which hath his originall from a lake of the same name toward the North, from from whose springs is eight daies biage to the mouth of the same, where it entreteth into the Ocean.

Sayling by the coasts of the right hand of the sea, they passe by the regions of Stanuwische, Camenische, and Apnu: And sayling about the promontorie or cape of Chorogowski, Stanuwische, Camenick, and Toltickh, they come at length into the riuer Mezen, and from thence in the space of five dayes, to a village of the same name, standing in the mouth of the riuer Pieza, by the which againe ascending toward the left hand & somer East, they come to the riuer Pielcoia: from whence sayling for the space of five versts, they come into two lakes, in the which are seene two wayes: whereof one on the right side, goeth to the riuer Rubicho, by the which they passe to the riuer Czircho. Other, by an other and shorter way, bying their ships from the lake directly into Czircho: from whence, except they be hindered by tempest, they come in the space of three weekes to the riuer and mouth of Czilma, flowing into the great riuer Perzora, which in that place is two versts in breadth. Sayling from thence, they come in the space of five dayes to the Towne and castle of Pustosero, neare vnto the which, Perzora entreteth into the North Ocean at five mouthes. The inhabitants of this place, are men of simple wit: they receiued the faith of Christ, and were baptised in the yeare M.D.xviii.

From the mouth of Czilma vnto the mouth of the riuer Vssa, going by Perzora, is one moneths biage. Vssa hath his springs in the mountaine Poyas Semnoi, being on the left hand toward the somer East, and springeth out of a great stone of the same mountaine, called Camen Bolchoi. From the springs of Vssa to the mouthes of the same, are numbered moze then a thousand versts. Furthermore, Perzora runneth from this south winter part, from whence ascending from the mouthes of Vssa, vnto the mouthes of the riuer Szuchogora, is three weekes biage. They that described this vyage sayd that they rested betwene the mouthes of the riuers of Szuchogora and Potzcheriema, and left their victuals there which they brought with them from Russia. Beyond the riuers of Perzora and Szuchogora toward the mountaine Camenipoias, and the sea with the Islands thereabout, and the Castle of Pustosero, are diuers and innumerable nations, which by one common name are called Samoged (that is) such as eat themselves. They haue great increase of fowles, birds, and diuers kindes of beastes: as Sables, Martenes, Weuers, Otters, Hermelines, Squirrels: and in the Ocean the beaſt called a Boys: Also Uesse, white Beares, Wolues, Hares, Equibodiani, great Whales, and a fish called Senfi, with diuers other. The people of these nations come not to Moscouia: for they are wilde, and flee the company and society of other men.

From the mouthes of Szuchogora, sayling by the riuer vnto Poiassa, Artawische, Cameni, and Poiassa the greater, is three weekes vyage. Furthermore, the ascending to the mountaine Camen, is three dayes iourney: from the which descending they come to the riuer Artawische, and from thence to the riuer Sibut, from whence they passe to the Castle of Lepin, and from Lepin to the riuer Soffa. The people that inhabite the region by this riuer, are called Vuogolici. Leaving Soffa on the right hande, they come to the great riuer Obi, that springeth out of the lake Kiraisko, the which, with all the haste they could make, they could scarcely passe ouer in one day, the riuer being of such breadth that it reacheth fourescore versts. The people also that dwell about the riuer, are called Vuogolici and Vgritzchi. From the Castle of Obea, ascending by the riuer of Oby, vnto the riuer Irtische, into the which Soffa entereth, is three moneths iourney. In these places are two Castles named Ierom and Tumen, kept by certaine Lords called Kneſ Iuhorski, being tributaries to the great Duke of Moscouia, as they say. Here are diuers kindes of beaſts and fures.

From the mouth of the riuer Irtische to the Castle of Gruſtina, is two moneths iourney: from whence to the lake Kitai, by the riuer Oby (which I said to haue his springs in this lake) is moze then three moneths iourney. From this lake come many blacke men, lacking the vse of common speech. They bring with them diuers wares, and especially pearles and pzerious stones, which they sell to the people called Gruſtinzi and Serponowrzi. These haue their name of the Castle Serponow, situate in the mountaines of Lucomoria, beyond the riuer Obi. They say that to the men of Lucomoria chaunceth a marueylous thing and incredible: for they affirme, that they die peereſly at the xxvii. day of Nouember, being the feast of S. George among the Moscouites: and that at the next spring about the xxiii. day of Aprill, they reuine againe as doe Froggess.

With these also, the people of Gruſtinzi and Serponowrzi exercise a new and strange kinde of trade: for when the accustomed time of their dying, or rather of sleeping, appoacheth, they leaue their wares in certaine places appointed, which the Gruſtinzi and Serponowrzi carry away, leauing other wares of equall value in their places: which if the dead men at the time of their reuining perceiue to be of vnequall price, they require their otone againe: by reason whereof, much strife and fighting is betwene them.

Obi.
Calami.
Riuers.

From the riuers of Obi descending toward the left hand, are the people called Calami, which came thither from Obiowa and Pogosa. Beneath Obi, about Aurea Anus (that is, the golden old wife) are the riuers Sossa, Berezuua, and Danadim, all which spring out of the mountaines Camen, Bolcheha, Poiassa, and the rockes ioyning to the same. All the nations that inhabite from these riuers to Aurea Anus, are subiect to the prince of Moscouia.

Aurea Anus, Obdora.

Aurea Anus, called in the Moscouites tongue, Slara Baba, is an idol, at the mouth of Obi in the prouince of Obdora, standing on the furthest banke toward the sea. Along by the bankes of Obi, & the riuers neare there about, are here and there many castles and fortresses: all the lordes whereof, are subiect to the prince of Moscouia, as they say. They say also, or rather fable, that the idol called Aurea Anus, is an image like vnto an old wife, hauing a child in her lap, and that there is now seene another infant, which they say to be her nephew: Also, that there are certaine instruments that make a continuall sound like the noyle of Trumplers, the which, if it so be, I thinke it to be by reason of the winde, blowing continually into the hollow places of those instruments.

Plinie writeth
of the like fish.

The riuier Cossin falleth out of the mountaines of Lucomoria: In the mouth of this is a castle, whither from the springs of the great riuier Cossin, is two monethes viage. Furthermore, from the springs of the same riuier, the riuier Cassima hath his originall, which running through Lucomoria, falleth into the great riuier Tachnin, beyond the which (as is said) dwell men of prodigious shape, of whom, some are ouergrown with haire like wilde beastes, other haue heads like dogges, and their faces in their breasts, without neckes, and with long hands also, and without feete. There is likewise in the riuier Tachnin a certaine fish, with head, eyes, nose, mouth, hands, feete, and other members vnto of humane shape, and yet without any voyce, and pleasant to be eaten, as are other fishes.

All that I haue hitherto rehearsed, I haue translated out of the saide iourney which was deliuered me in the Moscouites tongue: In the which, perhaps some things may seeme fabulous, and in manner incredible, as of the dombe men, and the dead reuiuing, the Aurea Anus also, and the monstrous shapes of men, with the fish of humane fourme: whereof, although I haue made diligent inquisition, yet could I knowe nothing certaine of any that had seene the same with their eyes: neuerthelesse, to giue further occasion to other to search the truth of these things, I haue thought good to make mention hereof.

Noss in the Moscouites tongue signifieth a nose, and therefore they call all capes or points, that reach into the sea, by the same name.

Mountaines.

The mountaines about the riuier of Perzora are called Semnoi Poyas, or Cingulus mundi, that is, the girdle of the world, or of the earth.

The great Can of Cathay.

Kirhai is a lake, of which the great Can of Cathay, whom the Moscouians call Czar Kirhaiski, hath his name: For Can in the Tartars language signifieth, A King.

Moria is the sea.
Lucomoria.

The places of Lucomoria, neare vnto the sea, are saluage, full of woods, and inhabited without any houses. And albeit, that the author of this iourney, said, that many nations of Lucomoria are subiect to the prince of Moscouia, yet for as much as the kingdome of Tumen is neare therunto, whose prince is a Tartar, and named in their tongue, Tumenski Czar, that is, a king in Tumen, and hath of late done great damage to the prince of Moscouia: it is most like that these nations should rather be subiect vnto him.

Petzora, Papin.

High mount-taines, supposed to be Hyperborei, and highly.

Neare vnto the riuier Petzora (whereof mention is made in this iourney) is the citie and castle of Papin, or Papinowgorod, whose inhabitants are named Papini, and haue a private language, differing from the Moscouites. Beyond this riuier are exceeding high mountaines, reaching euen vnto the bankes, whose ridges or tops, by reason of continuall windes, are in manner vnto barren without grasse or fruits. And although in diuers places they haue diuers names, yet are they commonly called Cingulus mundi, that is, the girdle of the world. In these mountaines doe Terfalcones breed, whereof I haue spoken before. There growe also Cedar trees, among the which are found the best and blackest kinde of Sables: and onely these mountaines are seene in all the dominions of the prince of Moscouia, which perhaps are the same that the old writers call Rhipheos, or Hyperboreos, so named of the Greeke word, Hyper, that is, Aboue, and Boreas, that is, the North: for by reason they are couered with continuall snow and frost, they can not without great difficultie be trauesed, and reach so farre into the North, that they make the vnknewen land of Engronland. The Duke of Moscouia, Basilius the sonne of Iohn, sent on a time two of his Captaines, named Simeon Pheodorowich Kurbski, & Knes Peter Vschatoi, to search the places beyond these mountaines, and to subdue the nations thereabout. Kurbski was yet aliue at my being in Moscouia, & declared vnto me, that he spent xviij. daies in ascending the mountaine, & yet could not come to the top thereof, which in their tongue is called Scolp, that is, a pillar. This mountaine is extended into the Ocean vnto the mouthes of the riuers of Dwina and Petzora.

But now having spoken thus much of the said iourney, I will recurre to the dominions of Moscouia, with other regions lying Eastward & South from the same, toward the mighty Empire of Cathay. But I will first speake somewhat briefly of the prouince of Rezan, and the famous riuer of Tanais.

The prouince of Rezan, situate betweene the riuers of Occa and Tanais, hath a citie builded of wood, not from the banke of Occa: there was in it a Castle named Iaroslau, whereof there now remaineth nothing but tokens of the old ruine. Not farre from that citie, the riuer Occa maketh an Island named Scrub, which was sometime a great Duke dome, whose prince was subiect to none other. This prouince of Rezan is moze fruitful then any other of the prouinces of Moscouia: Insomuch that in this (as they say) euery graine of wheat bringeth forth two, and sometimes moze eares: whose stalkes or straws grow so thicke that horses can scarcely go through them, or Quaples sie out of them. There is great plenty of hony, fishes, foules, birds, and wilde beasts. The fruits also doe farre exceede the fruits of Moscouia. The people are bolde and warlike men.

A speciall note gathered by the excellent Venetian Cosmographer M. Iohn Baptista Ramusius out of the Arabian Geographie of Abulfada Ismael, concerning the trending of the Ocean sea from China Northward, along the coast of Tartarie and other vnknown lands, and then running Westwards vpon the Northerne coasts of Russia, and so farther to the Northwest.

DEscrivendo poi il predetto Abulfada Ismael i luoghi della terra habitabile, che circuyendo il mar Oceano tocca, dice cosi.

Riuoltasi l'Oceano da leuante verso la regione delle Cine, & va alla volta di Tramontana, et passata finalmente la detta regione, se ne giunge a Gogi & Magogi, cio è alli confini de gli Vltimi Tartari, et di quivi ad Alcune Terre che sono Incognite: Et correndo sempre per Ponente, passa sopra li confini Settentrionali della Rossia, et va alla volta di Maestro.

The aforesaid Abulfada Ismael describing afterward the habitable places of the earth, which the Ocean sea in his circuit toucheth, sayth in this manner following.

The Ocean sea turneth from the East toward the Countrey of the Chinaes, and stretcheth toward the North, and at length hauing passed the said Countrey, it reacheth vnto the Gogi and Magogi, that is, to the confines of The vttermost Tartars, and from thence, vnto certaine vnknown Countreys: and running still Westward it passeth vpon the Northerne coasts of Russia, and from thence it runneth toward the Northwest, (which it doeth indeede vpon the coast of Lappia.) By this most notable testimony it appeareth, that the Ocean sea compasseth and enuironeth all the East, Northeast, and North parts of Asia and Europe.

The Emperors priuate or household Officers.

The chiefe Officers of the Emperors household are these which follow. The first is the office of the Boiaren Conesheua, or master of the Horse. Which containeth no moze then is expressed by the name, that is, to be ouerseer of the Horse, and not Magister equitum, or Master of the Horsemen. For he appointeth other for that seruice, as occasion doth require, as before was sayd. He that beareth that office at this time, is Boris Pheodorowich Godonoe, brother to the Emperesse. Of Horse for seruice in his warres (besides other for his ordinary vses) he hath to the number of ten thousand which are kept about Mosco.

The next is the Lord Steward of his household at this time, one Gregory Vasilowich Godonoe. The third is his Treasurer, that keepeth all his moneys, iewels, plate, &c. now called Srephan Vasilowich Godonoe. The fourth his Controller, now Andreas Petrowich Clesimine. The fifth his Chamberlaine. He that attendeth that office at this time, is called Estoma Bisabroza Pastelnitchay. The sixt his Tassers, now Theodor Alexandrowich; and Iuan Vasilowich Godonoe. The seuenth his Harbengers, which are three Noble men, and diuers other Gentlemen that do the office vnder them. These are his ordinary officers, and offices of the chiefe account.

continually day and night: which come not within the house, but waite without in the court or yard, where the Emperour is abiding. In the night time there lodgeth next to his bedchamber the chiefe Chamberlaine, with one or two more of best trust about him. A second chamber off, there lodge five other of like account for their trust and faithfulness. In the thirde chamber lie certaine young Gentlemen, of these two hundred, called Shilsey Strapsley, that take their turnes by forties every night. There are Groomes besides that watch in their course, and lie at every gate and doore of the Court, called Ekopnick.

Groomes.

The Bagbutters or Gunners, whereof there are two thousand (as was said before) watch about the Emperours lodging, or bed chamber by course 250. every night, and 250. more in the Court yerde, and about the Treasure house. His Court or house at the Mosco is made Castle wise, walled about, with great store of faire ordinance planted upon the wall, and containeth a great breadth of ground within it, with many dwelling houses: Which are appointed for such as are known to be sure, and trustie to the Emperour.

Of the priuate behauour, or qualitie of the Russe people.

THE priuate behauour and qualitie of the Russe people, may partly be understood by that which hath beene sayd concerning the publique state and stage of the Countrey. As touching the naturall habite of their bodies, they are for the most part of a large size, and of very fleshy bodies: accounting it a grace to be somewhat grosse and burley, and therefore they nourish and spread their beards, to haue them long and broad. But for the most part they are very unwieldy and vnactive withall. Which may be thought to come partly of the climate, and the numbnesse which they get by the cold in winter, and partly of their diet that standeth most of rootes, onions, garlike, cabbage, and such like things that breed grosse humors, which they vse to eate alone, and with their other meates.

Constitution of their bodies.

Their diet.

Their diet is rather much then curious. At their meales they beginne commonly with a Charke or small cuppe of Aqua uita, (which they call Russe wine) and then drinke not till towards the end of their meales, taking it in largely, and all together, with kissing one another at every pledge. And therefore after dinner there is no talking with them, but every man goeth to his bench to take his afternoones sleepe, which is as ordinary with them as their nights rest. When they excede, and haue varietie of dishes, the first are their baked meates (for roste meates they vse litle) and then their broathes or pottage. Their common drinke is Mead, the poorer sort vse water, and a third drinke called Quasse, which is nothing else (as we say) but water turned out of his wits, with a litle bzanne meathed with it.

This diet would breed in them many diseases, but that they vse bathstones, or hote houses in steade of all Physicke, commonly twice or thrise every weeke. All the winter time, and almost the whole Sommer, they heat their Deaches, which are made like the Germane bathstones, and their Doclads like ouens, that so warme the house that a stranger at the first shall hardly like of it. These two extremities, specially in the winter of heat within their houses, and of extreame colde without, together with their diet, make them of a darke, and fallow complexion, their skinnnes being tanned and parched both with cold and with heate: specially the women, that for the greater part are of farre worse complexions, then the men. Whereof the cause I take to be their keeping within the hote houses, and busying themselves about the heating, and vsing of their bathstones, and peaches.

The Russe because that he is vsed to both these extremities of heat and of cold, can beare them both a great deale more patiently, then strangers can doe. You shall see them sometimes (to season their bodies) come out of their bathstones all on a froch, and fuming as hoat almost as a pigge at a spit, and presently to leape into the riuer starke naked, or to potwze cold water all ouer their bodies, and that in the coldest of all the winter time. The women to mende the bad hue of their skinnnes, vse to paint their faces with white and red colours, so visibly, that every man may perceiue it. Which is made no matter, because it is common, and liked well by their husbands: who make their wiues and daughters an ordinarie allowance to buy them colours to paint their faces withall, and delight themselves much to see them of fowle women to become such faire images. This parcheth the skinne, and helpeth to deforme them when their painting is of.

An admirable induring of extreme heat, and colde at one and the same time.

The Noble mans attire.

They apparell themselves after the Greeke manner. The Noble mans attire is on this fashion. First a Taffia, or litle night cappe on his head, that couereth litle more then his crowne, commonly verie rich wrought of silke and golde threed, and set with pearle and precious stone. His head he keepeth shauen close to the very skinne, except he be in some displeasure with the Emperour. Then hee suffereth his haire to growe and hang downe upon his shoulders, couering ring his face as ugly and deformedly as he can.ouer the Tassia hee weareth a wide cappe of blacke ffore (which they account for the best furre) with a Tiara or long bonnet put within it, standing vp like a Persian or Babilonian haire. About his necke (which is scene all bare) is a collar set with pearle and pperious stone, about thye or foure fingers broad. Next ouer his shirt, (which is curiously wrought, because hee strippeth himselfe into it in the Sommer time, while he is within the house) is a Shepen, or light garment of silke, made downe to the knees, buttoned before: and then a Casan or a close coat buttoned, and girt to him with a Persian girdle, whereat he hangs his knives and spoone. This commonly is of cloth of gold, and hangeth downe as low as his anckles.ouer that hee weareth a lose garment of some rich silke, furred and faced about with some golde lace, called a Ferris. Another ouer that of chauncet, or like stuffe called an Alkaben, sleeued and hanging lowe, and the cape commonly brooched, and set all with pearle. When hee goeth abroad, he casteth ouer all these (which are but sleight, though they seeme to be many) an other garment called an Honoratkey, like to the Alkaben, saue that it is made without a collar for the necke. And this is commonly of fine cloth, or Camels haire. His buskins (which he weareth in stead of hose, with linne nsoles vnder them in stead of boot hose) are made of a Persian leather called Saphian, embzodered with pearle. His vpper storkes commonly are of cloth of golde. When he goeth abroad, hee mounteth on horsebacke, though it be but to the next doore: which is the maner also of the Boiarskey, or Gentlemen.

The Boiarskey or Gentlemans attire is of the same fashion, but differeth in stuffe: and yet hee will haue his Casan or vndercoat sometimes of cloth of golde, the rest of cloth, or silke.

The Gentlemans apparrell.

The Noble woman (called Chyna Boiarshena) weareth on her head, first a caull of some soft silke (which is commonly redb) and ouer it a fruntlet called Obrosa, of white colour.ouer that her cappe (made after the ruse fashion of cloth of gold) called Shapka Zempska, edged with some rich furre, and set with pearle and stone. Though they haue of late begonne to disdain embzodering with pearle aboue their cappes, because the Diacks, and some Marchants wiuces haue taken vp the fashion. In their eares they weare earerings (which they call Sargee) of two inches or moze compasse, the matter of gold set with Rubies, or Sapphires, or some like pperious stone. In Sommer they goe often with kerchieffes of fine white lawne, or cambricke, fastned vnder the chinne, with two long tassels pendent. The kerchiefe spotted and set thicke with rich pearle. When they ride or goe abroad in raynie weather, they weare white hattes with coloured bandes, called Scapa Zemskoy. About their neckes they weare collers of thye or foure fingers broad, set with rich pearle and pperious stone. Their vpper garment is a loose gowne called Oposhen commonly of scarlet, with wide loose sleeues, hanging downe to the ground buttoned before with great golde buttons, or at least silver and guilt nigh as bigge as a walnut. Which hath hanging ouer it fastned vnder the cappe, a large broad cape of some rich furre, that hangeth downe almost to the middes of their backs. Next vnder the Oposhen or vpper garment, they weare another called a Leinick that is made close before with great wide sleeues, the cuffe or halfe sleeue vp to the elbowes, commonly of cloth of golde: and vnder that a Ferris Zemskoy, which hangeth loose buttoned throughout to the very foot. On the hande wzefts they weare very faire bracelets, about two fingers broad of pearle and pperious stone. They goe all in buskins of white, yellow, blew, or some other coloured leather, embzodered with pearle. This is the attire of the Noblewoman of Russia, when she maketh the best shewe of her selfe. The Gentlewomanes apparell may differ in the stuffe, but is all one for the making or fashion.

The Noble womanes attire.

As for the pooze Mousick and his wife they goe poozely cladde. The man with his Honoratkey, or loose gowne to the small of the legges, tyed together with a lace before, of course white or blew cloth, with some Shube or long waistcoat of furre, or of sheeps skine vnder it, and his furred cappe, and buskins. The poozer sort of them haue their Honoratkey, or vpper garment, made of Kowes haire. This is their winter habite. In the sommer time, commonly they weare nothing but their shirts on their backs, and buskins on their legges. The woman goeth in a red or blew gowne, when she maketh the best shewe, and with some warme Shube of furre vnder it in the winter time. But in the sommer, nothing but her two shirts (for so they call them) one ouer the other, whether they be within doores, or without. On their heads, they weare caps of some coloured stuffe, many of velvet, or of cloth of gold: but for the most part kerchiefs. Without earings of silver or some other mettall, and her crosse about her necke, you shall see no Russe woman, be she wife, or maide.

The Lord Boris Pheodorowich his letter to the Right Honorable William Burghley Lord high Treasurer of England, &c.

By the grace of God the great Lord Emperour, and great Duke Theodore Iuanowich, great Lord, King, and great Duke of all Russia, of Volodémér, Mosco, and Nouogorod, king of Cazan, and Astracan, Lord of Vobsko, and great Duke of Smolensco, Tuer, Vghon, Permi, Viarsko, Bolgorie, and other places, Lord and great Duke of Nouogorod in the Lowe Countrey, of Chernigo, Rezan, Pólotsky, Rostouc, Yerslaue, Bealozera, and Liefland, of Oudorski, Obdorski, Condinski, and commander of all Sibierland, and the North coasts, great Lord over the Countrey of Iucerski, Grifinski, Emperour of Kabardinski, and of the Countrey Charchaski, and the Countrey of Gorsky, and Lord of many other regions.

The Emperours title increased.

The English Merchants complaints.

From Boris Pheodorowich his Paiefties brother in law, master of his horses, gouernour of the territories of Cazan and Astracan, to William Lord Burghley, Lord high Treasurer to the most vertuous Ladie Elizabeth, Queene of England, France, and Ireland, and other dominions: I receiued your Lordships letters, wherein you write that you haue receiued very iopfully my letters sent vnto you, and aduisedly read them, and imparted the same vnto her Paieftie: and that your Merchants finde themselves agreed, that when they approach these parts, and are arrived here, they are not permitted to enter into a free and liberall course of barter, traffike, and exchange of their commodities, as heretofore they haue done, but are compelled before they can enter into any traffike to accept the Emperours ware, and other goods, at high rates farre above their value, to their great losse: and that they are by reason of this restraint long holden vpon these coasts to the danger of wintering by the way. Hereafter there shall be no cause of offence giuen to the Merchants of the Queenes Paieftie Queene Elizabeth: they shall not be forced to any thing, neither are there or shall be any demands made of custome or debts. Such things as haue beene heretofore demanded, all such things haue beene already vpon their petition and supplication commaunded to be discharged. I haue solicited his Paieftie for them, that they be not troubled hereafter for those matters, and that a fauourable hand be caried ouer them. And according to your request I will be a meane to the Emperour for them in all their occasions, and will my selfe shew them my fauorable countenance. And I pray you (William Burghley) to signifie to her Paiefties Merchants that I promise to haue a care of them, and for the Queenes Paieftie of Englands sake, I will take her Merchants into my protection, and will defend them as the Emperours selected people vnder the Emperours commission: and by mine appointment all his Paiefties officers and authorized people shall be carefull ouer them. The Emperours gracious fauour towards them was neuer such as it is now. And where you write that at the port the Emperours Officers sell their ware by commission at a set rate giuen them, farre above the value, and that they enforce your Merchants to accept it; they deny that they take any such course, but say they barter their ware for other wares, and also put their ware to sale for readie money to your Merchants, according to the worth thereof, and as the price goeth in the custome house here. It hath beene heretofore deare, and now is sold as good cheape as in any other place, and as they can best agree: they enforce no man to buy it, but rather kepe it: therefore your Merchants haue no iust cause to make any such report. I haue expressly giuen order, that there shall be no such course vsed to enforce them, but to buy according to their owne willes, and to carrie at the port or to depart at their pleasure. And as touching the customes already past, and debts demanded at your Merchants hands, whereof you write: Our Lord great Emperour and great Duke Theodore Iuanowich of all Russia of famous memory hath shewed his Paiefties especial fauour and loue, for the great loue of his welbeloued sister Queene of England, and by my petition and mediation, whereas there was commandement giuen to take Marshes whole debt of your Merchants and factors, it is moderated to the halfe, and for the other halfe, commandement giuen it should not be taken, and the Merchants billes to be deliuered them. And to the end hereafter that her Paiefties Merchants moue no contention betwixt our Lord the Emperour and great Duke of Russia, and his welbeloued sister Queene Elizabeth, his Paieftie desireth order to be giuen, that your Merchants doe deale iustly in their traffike, and plainly without fraud or guile. And I will be a fauourer of them above all others, vnder his Paiefties authoritie: themselves shall see it. Written in our great Lord the Emperours citie of Mosco in the moneth of Iuly,

The

The Queenes Maiesties letter to Theodore Iuanovich
Emperour of Russia, 1591.

Lizabeth by the grace of God Queene of England, France, and Ireland, Defender of the faith, &c. to the right high, mighty, and right noble prince Theodore Iuanovich great Lord, King, and great Duke of all Russia, Volodimer, Mosco, Nouogrod, King of Cazan, and Astracan, Lord of Vobsko, and great Duke of Smolensko, Otuer, Vghory, Perme, Viarski, Bolgory, and other places: Lord and great Duke of Nouogrod in the low countrey, of Chernigo, Rezan, Polotsky, Rostoue, Yeraslaue, Bealozero, and Lifland, of Oudorsky, Obdorsky, Condinsky, and commander of all Siberland and the North coast, great Lord ouer the countrey of Iuersky, Grifinsky, Emperoz of Kabardinsky, and of the countrey of Charkasky, and of the countrey of Gorsky, and Lord of many other countreys, our most deare and louing brother, greeting. Right noble and excellent prince, we haue receiued your Maiesties letters brought ouer by our merchants in their returne of their last voyage from your port of S. Nicholas; which letters we haue aduisedly read and considered, and there by perceiue that your Maiesty doth greatly mislike of our late imployment of Ierome Horsey into your dominions as our messenger with our Highnesse letters, and also that your Maiesty doth thinke that we in our letters sent by the sayd messenger haue not obserued that due order or respect which appertained to your princely maiesty, in the forme of the same letter, aswell touching the enlargement of your Maiesties stile and titles of honoz which your Maiesty expected to haue bene therein moze particularly expressed, as also in the adding of our greatest seale or signet of armes to the letters which we send to so great a Prince as your Maiesty is: in any of which pointes we would haue bene very loth willing to haue giuen iust cause of offence thereby to our most deare and louing brother. And as touching the sayd messenger Ierome Horsey we are soyy that contrary to our expectation he is fallen into your Maiesties displeasure, whom we minde not to mainteine in any his actions by which he hath so incurred your Maiesties mislike: yet that we had reason at such time as we sent him to your Maiesty to vse his seruice as our messenger, we referre our selues to your princely iudgement, praying your Maiesty to reduce into your minde the especiall commendation, which in your letters written vnto vs in the yeere 1585, you made of the sayd Ierome Horsey his behauiour in your dominions: at which time your Maiesty was pleased to vse his seruice as your messenger to vs, requiring our answere of your letters to be returned by him and by none other. That imployment, with other occasions taken by your Maiesty to vse the seruice of the sayd Ierome Horsey (as namely in the yeere 1587) when your Maiesty sent him to vs againe with your letters, and your liberall and princely priuiledge at our request granted to our merchants (for which we haue heretofore giuen thanks to your Maiesty, so doe we hereby reiterate our thankfulness for the same) moued vs to be of minde, that we could not make choise of any of our subiects so fit a messenger to your Maiesty as he, whom your Maiesty had at seuerall times used vpon your owne occasions into this our Realme. But least your highnesse should continue of the minde that the letters which you sent by our ambassadoz Giles Fletcher (wherein some mention was made of your conceiued displeasure against the sayd Horsey) came not to our hands, and that wee were kept ignorant of the complaint which your Maiesty made therein against the sayd Horsey, we do not deny but that we were acquainted aswell by our ambassadour as by those letters of some displeasure conceiued against him by your Maiesty: but your sayd letters giuing onely a short generall mention of some misdemeanour committed by him, expressing no particulars, we were of opinion that this offence was not so hainous, as that it might utterly extinguishe all your former princely fauour towards him, but that vpon his humble submission to your Maiesty, or vpon better examination of the matter of the displeasure conceiued against him, the offence might haue bene either remitted, or he thereof might haue cleared himselfe. And to that end we were not onely by his great importunity long sollicitated, but by the intercession of some of our Nobility giuing credit to his owne defence, we were intreated on his behalfe to vse his seruice once againe into Russia as our messenger to your Maiesty, whereby he might haue opportunity to cleare himselfe, and either by his answere or by his submission recover your Maiesties former fauour: whereunto our princely nature was moued to yeeld, withing the good of our subiect so farre forth as his desert might carry him, or his innocencie cleare him.

This noble Prince, our most louing and dearest brother, it may appeare vnto your Maiesty how we were induced to vse the seruice of the sayd messenger, aswell for the recovery of your

Hailties fauor towards him (if he had bene found woorthy of it) as for experience of the maners and fashions of your countrey, where he hath bene much conuersant. But sith by your Hailties letters it appeareth that he hath not cleared himselfe in your Hailties sight, we meane not to vse him in any such price hereafter.

And as touching your Hailties conceit of the hieutie which we vsed in the setting downe of your Hailties stile and titles of honour: as nothing is further from vs, then to abridge so great and mighty a Prince of the honour due vnto him (whom we holde for his greatnesse to deserue moze honour then we are able to giue him) so shall we need no further nor surer argument to cleare vs of the suspicion of the detracting from your Hailty any part of your iust and princely honoz and greatnesse, then the consideration of our owne stile, which is thus contracted, videlicet, Elizabeth by the grace of God Queene of England, France, and Ireland, defender of the faith &c. which kingdomes and dominions of ours are expessed by these generall words, videlicet, England, France, and Ireland: in euery of which there are seuerall principallities, dukedomes, earledomes, prouinces and countreys: which being scuerally expessed would enlarge much our stile, and make it of great length; which by our progenitors hath not bene vsed: not withstanding, we thinke it no dishonour to vs, compendiously to abridge the same in all our writings and letters written to what Prince, King, or Potentate soeuer. Whereupon we inferre, that holding your Hailties generall stile, we offer your Highnesse no dishonour in not expessing all the particular prouinces: albeit we can willingly content our selfe, vpon the knowledge of your vlags and customes, to obserue that course, which your selfe shall thinke most honourable. And for the sealing vp of our letters which we write to all our allies, kinsmen, and friends, Kings and Princes, we haue in vse two seuerall seales; both which we esteeme alike honourable, being our princely seales. And as the volume of our letters falleth out to be great or small, so accordingly is our greater or lesser scale annexed to the sayd letters, without esteeming either of them moze or lesse honourable then the other. So as, our most louing and dearest brother, in the said letters there was nothing done of purpose to detract from your Hailty any thing of the vsuall regard, which our Highnesse was wont to yeeld vnto your most noble father of famous memory Iuan Basiluich Emperoz of al Russia, or to your selfe, our dearest brother. For the residue of the points of your Hailties letters concerning the entertainment of our ambassadour, and proceeding in the cause of Anthonie Marsh we holde our selfe satisfied with your princely answere, and doe therein note an honourable and princely care in your Hailtie to puenent the like troubles, controuersies and lutes, that Marshes cause stirred vp betweene our merchants and your subiects, which is, that your Hailtie doeth purpose from time to time to purge your Countrey of such straglers of our subiects, as doe or shall hereafter abide there, and are not of the Company of our merchants, but contemptuously depart out of our land without our Highnesse licence: of which sort there are presented vnto vs from our merchants the names of these seuerall persons, videlicet, Richard Cocks, Bennet Lackman, Rainold Kitchen, Simon Rogers, Michael Lane, Thomas Worfenham: whom it may please your Hailty by your princely order to dismisse out of your land, that they may be sent home in the next shippes, to auoid the mistlike which their residence in those parts might breed to the disturbance of our brotherly league, and the impeaching of the entercourse.

And whereas, most louing and dearest brother, one William Turnebull a subiect of ours is lately deceased in your kingdom, one with whom our merchants haue had much controuersie for great summes of money due vnto them by him while he was their Agent in their attayzes of merchandises: which differences by arbitrable order were reduced to the summe of 3000 rubbles, and so much should haue bene payed by him as may appeare by your Hailties counsell or magistrates of iustice by very credible information and testimony: and whereas also the sayd Turnebull was further indebted by billes of his own hand to diuers of our subiects, amounting in the whole, to the summe of 1326 pounds, which billes are exemplified vnder our great seale of England, and to be sent ouer with this bearer: of which summes he hath often promised payment: it may please your most excellent Hailtie in your approued loue to iustice, to giue order to your favourable counsell and magistrates, that those seuerall debts may be satisfied to our merchants and subiects out of the goods, merchandise, and debts which are due to the state of the sayd Turnebull: whereof your Hailties counsell shall be informed by the Agent of our merchantes.

We trust we shall not need to make any new request by motion to your Hailty that some order might be taken for the finding out of the rest of our merchants goods seized to your maiesties vse in the hands and possession of Iohn Chappel their seruant, being a thing granted, and no doubt already performed by your Hailties order. We therfore intreat your Hailty, that as conueniently as may be, satisfaction or recompense be giuen to our said merchants towards the repairing of their sundry great losses, as well therein as other wise by them of late sundry wayes sustained. And lastly, our most deare and louing brother, as nothing in all these our occasions is to be preferred before our entire league and amitie, descending vpon vs as an inheritance, in succession from both our ancestors and noble progenitors: so let vs be carefull on both sides by all good meanes to holde and continue the same to our posterity for euer. And if any mistaking or error of either side do rise, in not accomplishing of circumstances agreeable to the fashion of either of our countreys and kingdomes, let the same vpon our enterchangeable letters be reconciled, that our league and amitie be no way impeached for any particular occasion whatsoeuer. And thus we recommend your Maiesty to the tuition of the most High. From our royall Palace of Whitehall the 14 of January, anno Domini 1591.

The Queenes Maiesties letters to the Lord Boris

Phedorowich.

Lizabeth by the grace of God Queene of England, France, and Ireland, defendour of the faith, &c. to the right honourable and noble Prince Lord Boris Phedorowich Godonoua, Master of the hozles to the great and mightie Emperour of Russia, his Highnesse lieutenant of Cazan and Astracan, our most deare and louing cousin, greeting. Right honourable, it hath appeared vnto vs vpon the reading and perusing of the Letters lately sent vnto our Highnesse from our deare and louing brother the Emperour, in what part his Maiestie tooke the late imployment of our messenger Ierome Horsey in our affaires into Russia: wherein we doe also finde the honourable endeuour vsed by your Lordship to appease his Highnesse mistlike and erception taken as well to the person of our Messenger, as to our princely letters sent by him: both of which points we haue answered in our letters sent by this bearer directed to our sayd louing brother the Emperour: vpon perusing whereof we doubt not but his Maiestie will be well satisfied touching our sayd Messenger and former letters. And for the honourable course holden by your Lordship in the interposing of your opinion and fauourable construction in a thing which might grow to the offence of the league and amitie standing betweene your Soueraigne Lord and vs (wherein your Lordship performed the office of an honourable and graue Counsellour) we take our selfe beholding to your Lordship for your readinesse in that behalfe, and doe assure our selfe that the same did proceed of the especiall loue and kinde affection that your Lordship hath euer borne and continued towards vs, whereof our princely nature will neuer be vnmindfull. We haue bene also from time to time made acquainted by our chiefe and principall Counsellour William Lord Burghley, Lord high Treasurour of our Highnesse Realme of England, of your letters which haue passed betweene your Lordship and him, concerning the entercourse of our Merchants traffike in your Countreys, and of the honourable offices done by your Lordship with the Emperour in fauour of our sayd Merchants. And lastly (which wee take a most assured argument of your vndoubted loue and affection towards vs) that your Lordship hath vouchsafed, and of purpose taken into your hands the protection of our sayd Merchants, and the hearing and determining of all their causes and occasions whatsoeuer, which shall concerne them or their trade. All which wee conceiue to be done for our sake, and therefore do acknowledge our selues to be, and still will continue beholding vnto you for the same.

And whereas we haue made mention in our sayd letters witten to our louing brother the Emperour of certaine debts due as well to our merchants, as to other of our subiects by one William Turnebull a subiect of ours late deceased in Russia, wee pray you to be referred to the sayd letter. And forasmuch as the sayd cause will fall vnder your Lordships iurisdiction by reason of your acceptation of all their causes into your patronage and protection: we are so well assured of your honourable inclination to iustice, and your good affection towards our merchants for our sake, that we shall not need to intreat your honourable furtherance either of iustice or expedition in the sayd cause. And lastly considering that your noble linage together with your great wisdom and desert hath made you a principall Counsellour and directour of the state of so great a Monarchie, whereby your aduice and direction is followed in all things that doe concerne the same, we haue given order to our sayd principall Counsellour William Lord Burghley, treasurour of our Realme of England, that as any occasion shall arise to the hinderance of the entercourse betweene these Countreys, or of the priuiledges graunted by his Maiestie to our merchants, that he may by aduertisement treat with your Lordshippe thereupon: which we by reason of our great princely affaires can not so conueniently at all times doe with such expedition expedition as the cause may require. And thus with our princely commendations we bidde you farewell. From our royall Pallace of Whitehall the foureteenth day of Januarie, Anno Domini 1591.

To the right honourable my very good Lord, the Lord Boris Pheodorowich, Master of the horses to the great and mighty Emperour of Russia, his Highnesse Lieutenant of Cazan and Astracan, William Cecil Lord Burghley, Knight of the noble Order of the Garter, and Lord high Treasurer of England, sendeth greeting.

Right honourable my very good Lord, vpon the last retorne of our merchants shippes out of Russia, there was brought vnto my handes, by one Francis Cherrie an English merchant, a letter directed to the Queenes Maiestie, from the great and mightie Emperour of Russia, and another letter from your Lordship directed to me: which sayd letter written from the Emperour to her Maiestie hath bene considerably and aduisedly by her Highnesse read and perused, and the matter of complaint against Ierome Horsey therein comprised thorowly examined: which hath turned the same Horsey to some great displeasure. I did also acquaint our Maiestie with the contents of your Lordships letters written to mee, and enformed her of your Lordships honourable fauour shewed to her Highnesse merchants from time to time: who tooke the same in most gracious part, and confessed her selfe infinitely beholding vnto your Lordship for many honourable offices done for her sake, the which she meant to acknowledge by her letters to be written to your Lordship vnder her princely hand and seale. And soasmuch as it hath pleased your good Lordshippe to take into your handes the protection of her Maiesties merchants, and the redresse of such iniuries as are, or shall be offered vnto them contrary to the meaning of the priuiledges and the free liberty of the entercourse, wherein in some points your Lordship hath already vsed a reformation, as appeareth by your sayd letters: yet the continuance of traffique moouing new occasions and other accidents tending to the losse of the sayd merchants, whereof some particulars haue bene offered vnto me to treat with your Lordship vpon: I thought it good to referre them to your honourable consideration, that order might be taken in the same, for that they are apparantly repugnant to the Emperours letters written to her Maiestie, and doe much restraine the liberty of the trade: one is, that at the last coming of our merchants to the port of Saint Michael the Archangel, where the mart is holden, their goods were taken by the Emperours officers for his Highnesse seruice at such rates, as the sayd officers were disposed to set vpon them, so farre vnder their value, that the merchants could not assent to accept of those prices: which being denied, the sayd officers restrained them of all further traffique for the space of three weekes, by which meanes they were compelled to yeld vnto their demaund how unwillingly soeuer. Another is, that our sayd merchants are diuyn to pay the Emperours officers custome for all such Russe money as they bring downe from the Mosco to the Sea side to employ there at the Mart within the Emperours owne land; which seemeth strange vnto me, considering the same money is brought from one place of the Countrey to another, and there imployed without any transport ouer of the sayd money. These interruptions and impositions seeme not to stand with the liberties of the Emperours priuiledges and freedom of the entercourse, which should be restrained neither to times or conditions, but to be free and absolute: wherof it may please your Lordship to be aduised, and to continue your honourable course holden betweene the Emperour and her Maiestie, to reconcile such differences as any occasion doth offer to their league or trafficke. Thus not doubting of your Lordships furtherance herein, I humbly take my leaue of your good Lordship. From her Maiesties royall palace of Whitehall this 15 of January, 1591.

The English merchants 3 weeks restrained from their Mart.

A Letter from the Emperour of Russia, Theodore Iuanowich to the Queenes Maiestie.

Through the tender mercie of our God, whereby the day spring from on high hath visited vs, thereby to guide our feet into the way of peace. Euen this our God by mercy we glorifie in Trinitie.

We the great Lord, King and great Duke Theodore Iuanowich, gouernour of all Russia, of Volodimer, Mosco, and Nouogrod, King of Cazan and Astracan, Lord of Vobsko, and great Duke of Smolensco, Otuer, Vghori, Vghori, Perme, Viatsky, Bulgary, and other regions, Lord and great Duke also of Nouogrod in the low countrey, of Chernigo, of Rezan, Polotsko, Rostoue, Yeroslaue, Bealozera, and of Lissland, of Vdorsky, Obdorsky, Condinsky, and all the countrey of Siberia, and commander of all the North parts, and Lord ouer the countrey of Iuersky, and King of Grufinsky, and of the countrey of Kabardinsky, Cherchasky, and Duke of Igorsky, Lord and ruler of many countreys moze &c. To our louing sister Elizabeth Queene of England, France, and Ireland, &c. Lo- uing sister, your letters sent by your seruant Thomas Lind, we haue receiued, and read what you haue written in the same touching our title, and touching your order holden in your letters heretofoze sent vs by your seruant Ierome Horsey : wherein you haue answered vs sufficiently and most graciously.

The Emperors stile late- ly enlarged.

And whereas your Maiestie hath written in your letter concerning the goods of William Turnebull late deceased in our kingdome, that your subiects, for whom he was factour, should haue debts growing vnto them from him by account ; we at your Maiesties request haue caused not onely order to be taken, but for your Highnesse sake, louing sister, we haue caused the goods to be sought out and deliuered to your merchants Agent and his company, together with his stufte, bookes, billes and writings, as also money to the value of fife hundred rubbles, which Christopher Holmes and Francis Cherry are to pay for y^e carie : and we haue set at libertie the sayd Turnebulls kinsman Raynold Kitchin and his fellowes, and deliuered them to your mer- chants Agent.

And further, where you write vnto vs for such your subiects as haue departed out of your ma- iesties Realme secretly without licence, that we should giue order to send them home : concer- ning such your subiects for which you haue written vnto our Maiestie by letters, we will cause search to be made, and such as are willing to goe home into your kingdome, we will command forthwith to be deliuered vnto your merchants Agent, and so to passe. And such of your Maie- sties people as haue giuen themselves vnder our gouernment as subiects, we thinke it not requi- site to grant to let them passe.

And further, where you haue written vnto vs concerning the goods of Iohn Chappell, we haue written heretofore the whole discourse thereof not once, but sundry times, and therefore it is not needfull to write any moze thereof. And such goods as were found out of the goods of the sayd Chappell, the money thereof was restozed to your Maiesties people William Turnbull and his fellowes. Your Maiesties seruant Thomas Lind we haue sent with our letters the same way whereby he came into our kingdome. The long abiding heere of your Maiesties seruant in our kingdome, was for the coming of your people from the Sea port. Written in our princely court and royall seat in the city of Moico in the yeere from the beginning of the world 7101, in the moneth of January.

By Thomas Lind,

To the Queenes most excellent Maiestie from the Lord

Boris Pheodorouich Godonoua.

By the grace of God great Lord and great Duke Theodore Iuanouich gouer- nour of Russia, Volodimer, Mosco, and Nouogrod, King of Cazan and Astracan, Lord of Vobsko, and great Duke of Smolensco, Otuer, Vghori, Perme, Viatsky, Bulgary, and other regions, Lord and great Duke of Nouo- grod in the low countrey, of Chernigo, of Rezan, Polotsko, Rostoue, Iero- slaue, Bealozera, and of Lissland, of Vdorsky, Obdorsky, Condinsky, and all the countrey of Sibery, and commander of all the North parts, and Lord ouer the countrey of Iuersky, and King of Grufinsky, and of the countrey of Kabardinsky, Cherchasky, and duke of Igorsky, Lord and ruler of many countreys moze, &c.

Most resplendent Queene Elizabeth of England, France, and Ireland, &c. his princely Ma- iesties seruant, Lord and Master of his hopes, and high Steward of his house, and President of the territories of Cazan and Astracan, Boris Pheodorouich Godonoua, vnto your most excel- lent Maiesty, great Ladie Queene Elizabeth, send my humble commendations. It hath pleased your Maiestie to write vnto me your gracious and princely letter by your seruant Thomas Lind; which letter I receiued with all humblenesse. During the time of the abode of your Messenger Thomas Lind here in the Mosco, it pleased God of his mercifulnesse, and our Lady the mother of God, and holy Saints, by the prayers of our lord and king his Maiestie Theodore Iuanouich ouer all Russia gouernour, the right beloued and loued of Christ, to send our Queene and gra- cious Lady Irene a young Princesse, to the great ioy and comfort of our kingdome, named Pheodocine. Wherefore we giue all honour and gloze to the almightie God unspeakable, whose whose giftes had beene manifolde with mercie vnto vs; for which all wee Christians laud and praise God.

After all this your seruant was occasioned to stay vntill the comming of your merchants from the sea port.

Touching the letters which you haue receiued from your louing brother our Lord and Master by your ambassadour, therein you perceiue sufficiently my good meaning, in traauailing for the continuance of amitie and friendship betwixt you mighty great princes, in the which I will continue mine endemour. Also your merchants I haue taken into my protection for to defend them for the loue I beare to your Maiestie. As heeretofore I haue done it willingly, and with great care of their good, so I meane to continue so farre as God will giue me leaue; to the end that brotherly loue be holden betweene you Princes without disturbance.

As I haue beene to your merchants in times past, so now by the permission and commandement of our Lord and Master, I will be their defendour in all causes: and will cause all our authorized people to fauour them and to defend them, and to giue them free liberty to buy and sell at their pleasure. The merchants doe not certifie your princely Maiestie of all our friendship and fauour shewed vnto them from time to time. And whereas your Maiestie hath now written to our Lord and Master for the debts which your merchants ought to haue of William Turnebull lately deceased, I hauing perused your Maiesties letter, whereby I am requested to be a meane for the recouerie and obtaining of their sayd debts, I haue moued it to our Lord and King his Maiestie, that order may be giurn therein: and that his kinsman Rainold Kirchin with three persons moze may be sent ouer together with the sayd Turnebulles stufte and other things, as belles, books and writings. All which shall be deliuered to your merchants Agent and his fellowes, and in money 600 rubbles of the sayd Turnebulles.

And touching your merchants, I will haue a great care ouer them, and protect them, whereby they shall suffer no damages in their trade: and all kinde of trafficke in merchandise shall be at their libertie.

A letter from the Lord Boris Pheodorowich to the right honourable Lord William Burghley, Lord high Treasurer of England.

By the grace of God great Lord, King, and great Duke Theodor Iuano- uich, gouernour of Russia, Volodimer, Mosco, and Nouogrod, King of Cazan and Astracan, Lord of Vobsko, and great Duke of Smolensco, Otuer, Vghory, Perme, Viatsky, Bulgary, and other regions, Lord and great Duke of all Nouogrod in the low countreys, of Chernigo, of Liffeland, of Vdorsky, Obdorsky, Condinsky, and all the countrey of Sibery, and commaunder of all the North parts, and Lord ouer the countrey of Iuersky, and King of Grusinsky, and of the countreys of Kabardinsky, Cherchasky, and Duke of Igorsky, Lord and ruler of many Countreys moze etc. His princely Maiesties seruant, Lord and Master of his horses, and high Steward of his house, President of the territories of Cazan and Astracan, Boris Pheodorowich Godonoua, to the most honourable Counsellor of the most resplendent mightie great Lady Elizabeth Queene of England, France, and Ireland, William Burghley, Lord, and Knight of the Garter, high Creatour of England, sendeth greeting.

I perceiue by your letter that your merchants last shippes came home in lastie, and that you haue receiued the letters sent by them, by the hands of Francis Cherie, one from our Lord and great King of all Russia his Maiesty, vnto your Queenes most excellent Maiesty, and one from me to her Highnesse, and one from my selfe to you; and the contents thereof you haue caused to be read and well vnderstood at large. And whatsoeuer is therein written concerning Ierome Horsey, you haue sought out the ground thereof, and that he is in great displeasure. And her Highnesse hath written in her letter concerning her Maiesties merchants, that whereas I haue taken them into protection, she taketh it very louingly and kindly, that for her sake they haue receiued to great kindnesse.

And touching the damages and hinderances which your merchaunts haue sustained by meanes of the Emperours authorized people and officers, and that they were not permitted to trafficke at libertie at the Sea port in the yeere 1589, for the space of three weekes, it hath beene against the Emperours Maiesties will and pleasure, as also against mine. Where you you desire and wish that betweene our Emperours Maestie, and your Queenes Maestie, their loue and amitie may not bee seperated at any time, but to continue: and you request mee that I should be good unto the English merchants, and to defend them from all such domages hereafter: your honours loving letter I haue therein thoroughly considered: and as I haue bene heretofore, so I will still continue to be a meane betwixt our Loyde and kings Maestie, and your great Lady the Queene her highnesse, for the mainteyning of brotherly loue and amitie, most ioyfully and willingly, as God knoweth, aswel hereafter as I haue bene heretofore: praying you to doe the like also. Mine onely desire is for your most excellent Princesse sake, to do all that lyeth in mee for the apoynting, helping and protecting of her Maesties merchants, by the order and commaundement of our Loyde and king his Maestie.

And so that ende, I haue giuen order to all our authoized people to bee carefull ouer them, and to defende them in all causes, and to giue them free libertie to trafficke at their owne willes and pleasures. It may bee that your merchants doe not certifie you the trueth of all things, nor make knownen unto your honour my readinesse to protect them: And howe my Letters and Commissions are sent to all authoized people for them, that they shoulde apye and assist them according to the tenour of my Letters, to all others that bee in authoritie vnder the said Officers or otherwise.

Also your honour writeth of the debarring of your merchants at the Sea port from their accustomed libertie of enterchangeable trafficke and bartar. Touching which complaint search and inquisition hath bene made, and commaundement giuen, that your Queenes Maesties merchants at the Seaside, and in all places where the trade is, doe not sustaine any damage or hindrance hereafter, but that they shalbe at libertie without any hindering or letting, either in the Mosco, the Treasurehouse, or else where by any of our authoized people, but absolutely to bee at free libertie at their owne will and pleasure. And also I will continue to be their protectour and defendour in all causes, by our Loyde and kings Maesties order and commaundement: as it shalbe knownen and certified you by your people resident here in the Mosco.

peere, in the moneth of Ianuary.

A most gracious Letter giuen to the English Merchants Sir John Hart and his company, by Theodore Iuanowich, the King, Lord, and great duke of all Russia, the onely vpholder thereof.

We onely God omnipotent before all eternitie, his will be done without ende: the Father, Sonne, and holy Ghost we glorifie in Trinitie. Our onely God the maker of all things and worker of all in all euery where with plentifull increase: for which cause he hath giuen life to man to loue him, and to trust in him: Our onely God which inspireth euery one of vs his holy children with his word to discerne good through our Loyd Iesus Christ, and the holy quickning spirit of life now in these perillous times establish vs to keepe the right scepter, and suffer vs to reigne of our selues to the good profit of the land, and to the subuening of the people together with the enemies, and to the maintenance of vertue.

We the great Loyd, king, and great duke Theodore Iuanowich, of all Russia the onely vpholder, of Volodimer, Mosco, and Nouogrod, King of Casan, and king of Astracan, Loyd of Volsco, and great duke of Smolensko, of Otuer, Vghorie, Permia, Viarski, Bulgari, and other regions, great duke also of Nouogrod in the lowe Countrey, of Chernigo, of Rezan, Polotski, Rostoue, Yarusslaue, Bealozero, and of Liefland, of Vdorski, Obdorski, Condenski, and commaunter of all the Countrey of Siberi and of the North parts, and Loyd ouer the Countrey of Iuerski, Grufinski, and King ouer the Countrey of Igorski, and ruler ouer many other kingdomes and Lordships more.

Our princely Maestie at the request of our brother in lawe Boris Feodorowich Godenoua our seruant, and Master of our houses, generall Comptroller of our house, and gouernour of the Lordships and kingdomes of Casan and Astracan, vnto the English merchants Sir John Hart knight, sir William Webbe knight, Richard Salkenstow Alderman, Nicholas Moseley Alderman, Robert Doue, Wil. Garowe, John Harbey, Robert Chamberlaine, Henry Anderson, John Woodworth, Francis Cherry, John Merrick, & Christopher Holmes; hath graciously giuen leave to come & go with their ships into our kingdomes & territories of Diuna with all kind of commodities at their pleasures to trafficke frō the seaside to our roiall city of Mosco, & in al other cities, townes, counteries and territories of our whole kingdom of Mosco: vpon the humble petition and lute of the saide English merchants sir Iohn Hart and his company, wee haue giuen them leaue to passe and trafficke into all parts of our dominions and territoryes of Mosco, and to our inheritance of Nouogrod and Plesco with their wares and commodities without paying any custome or duties.

We the great Lord, king, and great duke Theodore Iuanowich of all Russia haue firmly giuen and graunted vnto the aforesaide English merchants sir Iohn Hart and his company, for the loue we beare to our deare sister Queene Elizabeth, we I say of our gracious goodnes haue giuen leaue to trauele and passe to our royal seat of Mosco, and to all the parts of our kingdome with all kinde of commodities, and to trafficke with all kinde of wares at their owne pleasure; without paying any custome of their said wares.

To you our Customers we wil and command not to take any maner of custome of the said merchants and their company, neither for entering, weying nor passing by or through any place of our territoryes, nor for custome, of iudgement by Lawe, or for their person or persons; nor any duties ouer bridges, or for certificats or prosesles, or for conducting ouer any streames or waters, or for any other customes or duties that may be named; we wil and straitly commaund you not to take any of them in any wise.

Provided alwayes, that the saide merchants shall not colour any strangers wares, nor bring them into our countrey, nor fauour them colourably, nor sel for any stranger. To you our subiects also we comand, not to meddle or deale with any wares of strangers colourably, nor to haue them by you in keeping, nor to offer to sel their commodities; but themselves to sel their owne commodities in change or otherwise as they may or can. And in al townes, cities, countreys, or any part of our dominions and territoryes it shalbe lawful for the foresaid merchants and their company to sell or barter away their owne commodities in change or otherwise, for or at their pleasure as they will. And whensoever the said merchants or any of them come into our territoryes of great Nouogrod or Plesco, or to any other parts of our kingdome with their wares, by vertue of these our Hienes letters we straitly charge and command you our Captaines, generals, and all other that be authorized or in office, to suffer the aforesaid merchants to passe and repasse, and to take no kinde of custome or dutie of them, or any of their goods, howsoever it may haue names nor in no place else where they shal come in all our kingdome. Likewise if they sell not nor buy no wares, you shall take no custome, but suffer them quietly to passe where they will with their goods. Of our gracious goodnes and merre goodwill we haue giuen the said merchants leaue to trafficke throughout all our kingdomes; and in all townes and cities with all maner of wares and commodities without paying any custome or dutie. Wheresoever they shal happen to sel or barter away any of their commodities to our subiects, they are to barter or sell by whole sale, and not by retaile, as by the yard or by the ounce in their houses or elsewhere; but by the packe or whole clothes, veluets, damasks, taffaties by the piece, and not by the yard; and al other wares that are to be sold by weight, they are to be sold not by the ounce, but by great sale. Your wines shalbe sold by hogs heads, pipes or buttres, but not by quartes nor pintes.

The said English merchants are to sel or barter away their owne commodities themselves, and not to suffer any Rulles to buy or sell for them: nor to carry or transport any wares of strangers in stead of their owne in no wise. And if the saide English merchants shall be desirous to sell any of their commodities at Colmogro, or vpon the Riuer of Diuina, or at Vologhda or at Yeraslave; when as the saide merchants haue solde in any of the saide Townes, Cities or territoryes, then you our officers and authorized people by vertue of this our gracious letter wee will and straitly commaund not to take any custome of the aforesaid merchants, howsoever it may be named.

Also whensoever the saide English merchants or any of their factours shalbe desirous to hire carriers to carry their wares to any place of our dominions or Cities; it shalbe at their choyse and pleasure to hier them the best they can, and where they will, either water men to rowe, or vessels.

Also when any of the said merchants themselves, or any of theirs are desirous to trauele into any part of our dominions, or into any other kingdomes, or into their owne kingdome, if any of our treasure be deliuered to them, they to take it with them, and to sel it in barrat or otherwise for such wares as are most requisite and necessary to be brought into our kingdome and to be deliuered in to our treasury. You, our nobilitie, generals & al others in authority suffer them to passe through al our cities, townes & countries without taking any custome of them. And when the said merchants haue done their traffick in any place & come to the Mosco, they shal make it knownen at their arriual at the house of Chancery and secretariship to Vahli Shalkan. And further when there come any English merchants with their ships or vessels by sea, that by mishap shalbe cast away vpon any of our shoars or colles, we wil and command you to ayde & helpe them, and to seeke for their goods so perished perished by any casualty, and to be restored againe to the saide English merchants or their assignes without any prolonging or detayning. As also if any of the aforesaid merchants goods be found in any part of our coastes or streames and they not present themselves, let the said goods be taken and layd up in safetie in some place or other, and be deliuered to the aforesaid merchants or their factors vnder penaltie of our displeasure.

Furthermoze we King, Lord, and great Duke of all Russia, of our gracious goodnesse giue vnto the English merchants and their company, their house in the Citie of Mosco lying hard by the Church of S. Marke behinde the market place: which they shall keepe and remaine therein after their old accustomed vse. Whereof alwayes that they shall keepe one Russe porter or one of their owne people, & may keepe any other Russe seruant at their discretion. Also their houses in sundry places, as at Ierassau, Vologhda, Colmogro, and at S. Michael Archangel, all these houses they shall keepe and vse at their owne pleasure, according to our former letters patents without paying any dutie, rent, or custome. Nor you the communalitie of the said townes shal take any thing of them or theirs for any dutie that should belong to you, especially of the houses aforesaid: but the said English merchants shal enioy them peaceably for themselves and their families, but shall not suffer any other strangers Russes or others to vse the aforesaid houses: Also you shall suffer them to lay their wares and commodities in their warehouse, and to sell their commodities to whom they please without let or hinderance, by vertue of this our gracious letter.

Their housekeeper bring a Russe shall not undertake to meddle, or sell any of their wares without they themselves be present, nor to buy any thing for them.

Also it shalbe lawfull for the said merchants when they shal arrive at their port, to lade and unlade their merchandises as in times past they haue done at their pleasure. And when they lade their ships with Russe commodities or unlade them, it shalbe lawfull for them to hire any of our subiects to helpe them for the present time, and for them to carry their goods to and fro with their owne vessels to S. Michael Archangel, or elsewhere.

Also we command you our authorized people at the sea side as wel Customers as others to take of the foresaid merchants a note, or remembrance, what goods they bring in and ship out: wherby it may be knowen what goods come in and go out. But in no wise shall you open or vnyacke any of their wares or merchandises.

In like maner when as they ship or sende away any of their countrey commodities from S. Michael Archangel to any other place, or to our royall Citie of Mosco yee shall not hinder nor let them any maner of wise for the shipping of their merchandises in or out, by vertue of these our gracious letters of priuiledge giuen them.

And whensoever any of the said English merchants haue any occasion to send ouer land out of our dominions into their own countrey any of their seruants or factors, by vertue of this our gracious letter we command you to giue them their passeport out of the office of our Secretarihip.

And whensoever any of our subiects haue any thing to do with any of the foresaid merchants by way of contentions: or that they be dammified or hindered by any of our subiects: then we appoint and ordeine our Chancellor and Secretary Vasil Shalcan to heare their causes, and finally to determine on both sides according to equitie and iustice: and that he shall search the truth betwene both parties.

And when the truth cannot be proued or found out, then to cast lots by order of the foresaid Iudge, and he to whom the lot shall fall to take his othe.

Furthermoze whensoever any of the English merchants or their factors shall come into any parts of our dominions or Cities, and shalbe wronged any kinde of wayes in trading, or otherwise by any abused, or haue any occasion of contention with any by way of trade in merchandise or other wayes: we straitly charge and command you our gouernours, and authorized subiects within all our Realme and territories of the same, to minister iustice vnto the aforesaid merchants, or to their deputies, and to search the truth of the contention: And for want of sufficient prooue cast lots who shall take his oath for the more ready trial of the cause: And in no wise to take any fee or dutie of the aforesaid English merchants for the said iudgement in Lawe.

We wil and command all this to be obserued and kept in all parts of our dominions by all our subiects and authorized people, by vertue of these our royal letters patents: And the said letters not to be diminished in any part or partell thereof, by any persons howsoever they be named. And whosoever shall withstand & not regard these our gracious letters shalbe in our high displeasure, and shal incurr the losse of his life. This our gracious letter was giuen in our kingdom and royal City of Mosco, in the yere from the beginning of the world 7104. in the moneth of May.

The contents of M. Garlands Commission vnto Thomas Simkinson for the bringing of M. Iohn Dee to the Emperour of Russia his Court.

Friend Thomas Simkinson I pray you goe to Brounswik or Cassil and inquire if Master Iohn Dee be there or where he is, and when you finde him, certifie him howe that I haue sent you purposely to knowe where hee doeth remaine, and at your returne I will come and speake with him my selfe. Also you may certifie him that the Emperour of Russeland hauing certaine knowledge of his great learning and wisdome is marueilous desirous of him to come into his Countrey. And hath giuen me his letter with his hand and golden seale at it for to bring him into the Countrey with mee if it be possible, and for his lining the while him that he shall be sure of 2000. pound peereley, and also all prouision for his table out of the Emperours kitchen free: and if he thinke this too little, I will assure him that if he aske as much more, hee shall haue it, and for his charges into the Countrey, I haue sufficient of the Emperours allowance to bring him and all his royally into the Countrey. And because hee may doubt of these proffers, hee shall remaine at the borders untill the Emperour be certified of him, and of his requests, which he would haue. And I am sure he shall be conueyed through the land with five hundred horses, and hee shall be accounted as one of the chiefest in the land next the Emperour. Also shew him howe that my Lord Protector at my coming away did take me in his armes, and desired me as hee should be my friend to bring him with me, and he would giue him of his owne purse peereley 1000. rubbles besides the Emperours allowance. All these foresaide grauntes and demaunds see I Thomas Simkinson acknowledge to be spoken by Edward Garland to mee, and to be sent to declare the same vnto Master Iohn Dee. And in witness that this is of a trueth I haue written the same with my owne hand, and thereunto set my name, in Wittingaw, otherwise called Trebona, the 18. of September, Anno 1586.

By me Thomas Simkinson of Hull.

A letter to the right worshipfull M. Iohn Dee Esquire, conteyning the summe and effect of M. Edward Garland his message, deliuered to Master Dee himselfe, (Letterwise) for a more perfect memoriall thereof. Anno 1586.

Right worshipfull, it may please you to vnderstand, that I was sent vnto you from the most mightie Prince Feodor Iuanowich, Lord, Emperour and great duke of Russia, &c. As also from the most excellent prince Boris Feodorowich, Lord Protector of Russia: to giue your worship to vnderstand the great good will and heartie desire they beare vnto you; for that of long time they haue had great good report of your learning & wisdom, as also of your good counsel vnto Princes: whereupon his Maiesties most earnest desire and request is vnto you; that you would take the paines to come vnto his citie of Mosco, to visite his Maiesties Court: for that hee is desirous of your company, and also of your good counsell in diuers matters that his Maiestie shall thinke needfull. And for the great goodwill that his Maiestie beareth vnto you, he will giue you peereley toward your maintenance 2000. pound sterling; and the Lord Protector will giue you a thousand rubbles, as also your prouision for your table you shall haue free out of his Maiesties kitchen: And further whatsoeuer you shall thinke needfull or conuenient for you, in any part or parts of his dominion, it shall be at your worships commandement. And this is the summe and effect of my message and commandement giuen me by his Maiestie and the Lord Protector.

In witness whereof I haue written this with my owne hand, the 17. of December 1586.

By me Edward Garland.

In Trebona Castell otherwise called Wittingaw in Boemia: to which place this M. Edward Garland came to M. Dee with two Moscouires to serue him, &c. He had sixe more, which by M. Dees counsell were sent backe.

Witness M. Edward Kelley, and M. Francis Garland, brother to the foresaid Edward, and diuers others.

It seemeth that this princely offer of the Emperour Phedor Iuanowich, and of the L. Boris Phedorowich Protector to his Maiestie, was made vnto the learned and famous Mathematician M. Iohn Dee, partly to vse his counsell & direction about certaine discoveries to the North-east; and partly for some other weighty occasions: but because their conquest to Siberia was not as then fully settled, & for diuers other secret reasons, it was for y^e time with al thankfulness refused.

A branch

A branch of a letter from M. Iohn Merick, Agent vnto the Moscouie company in Russia, closed vp in the Mosco the 14. of March, Anno 1597. touching the death of Pheodor Iuanovich late Emperour of all Russia, &c.

Having thus farre proceeded with this my answer vnto the chiefeſt points of your worſhips letters receiued, my deſire was to haue ſent one vnto you long ſince, as you may perceiue by the firſt date: but by reaſon I could not get leaue, I haue deferred it of till this inſtant, for that there was none ſuffered to paſſe out of the land. The cauſes may be iudged, for that it pleaſed God to call out of this worlde, the Emperour his Maieſtie, who departed about the 7. of Ianuary: and euer ſince hath bene a mourning time, & no ſuites for any matter could be heard. But it hath bene a very dead ſeaſon. Yet (thankes be to God) through the wiſe gouernment of Lord Boris Pheodorowich the Lord Protector vnto the ſaide late Emperour, ſince his death all things haue bene very quiet without any diſſention; as the like in ſuch a great kingdome I haue not heard of. And now through the prouidence of Almighty God, and by ſurrender of the late Emperice Irenia Feodoruna, and the common conſent of the Patriarch, Nobles, Biſhops, and the whole Clergie, with the whole Commons beſides, choiſe is made of none other but of the ſaid Lord Protector, L. Boris Pheodorowich to be Emperour, and great duke of all Russia, who was moſt unwilling to reſcine the kingdome, but the people would make no other choiſe, nor haue any other. So that with much adoe and entreatie, it hath pleaſed his Maieſtie to take vpon him the kingdome, and he is abſolute Emperour to him and his heires. And certainly God hath done much for this Countrey, and hath made the people greatly happy, in that he hath prouided and appointed ſo famous and worthy a Prince: whoſe excellent gouernment and experience theſe foureteene peeres hath bene manifeſt to all Russia. God graunt his highneſſe a moſt proſperous and long raigne, with his Lady the Emperice, the Prince his ſonne, and the Princeſſe his daughter. All men do reioyce both Ruſſe and Strangers for this moſt famous Emperour. The Coronation is thought ſhalbe on the Aſſenſion day next, till which time I cannot depart from Mosco: which is a litle befoze the time that ordinarily I doe take my iourney from hence. And touching his Maieſties fauour towards me on your behalfe, eſpecially for her Maieſties ſake, as in ſozerime it was extraordinary, and ſo ſpecially ſhewed to mee, as to none the like: ſo hath his highneſſe promiſed the continuance thereof, with further fauour as ſhalbe deſired. Whereof I haue no doubt: for dayly I do finde the ſame.

Quod si nauim per fluvium Obam aduerso amne possit impellere, prima si poterit cataraëta, eaque, ut verisimile est, commodissima, ad eumque locum appellere, quem aliquando ipse cum suis aliquot per Sibericorum regionem terra adiit, qui duodecim iuxta dierum itinere distat à Mari, quæ influit in mare flumen Ob, qui locus est in continente, prope fluvium Ob cui nomen est Yaks Olgush, nomine mutato ab illo magno Profluente flumini Ob illabente, tum cerè speraret maximas se difficultates superasse. Referunt enim illic populares, qui trium duntaxat dierum navigatione ab eo loco absuerunt (quod illic rarum est, eo quod multi ad vnum duntaxat diem cymbas pelliceas à littore propellentes oborta tempestate perierunt, cum neque à sole neque à syderibus rectionem scirent petere) per transuersum fluminis Ob, vnde spaciosum esse illius latitudinem constat, grandes se carinas præciosas onustas mercibus magno fluuiio delatas vidisse per Nigros, puta Æthiopes. Eum fluvium Ardoh illi vocant, qui influit in lacum Kittayum, quem Paraha illi nominant, cui contermina est gens illa latissime fusa, quam Carrah Colmak appellant, non alia certè quam Cathaya. Illic, si necessitas postulabit, opportunum erit hybernare; se suosque reficere, resque omnes necessarias conquirere. Quod si acciderit, non dubitat interim plurimum se adiutum iri, plura illic quærentem atque ediscentem. Veruntamen sperat æstate eadem ad Cathayorum fines se peruenturum, nisi ingenti glacie mole ad os fluuij Obæ impediatur, quæ maior interdum, interdum minor est. Tum per Pechoram redire statuit, atque illic hybernare: vel si id non poterit, in flumen Duinæ, quo mature satis pertinget, atque ita primo vere proximo in itinere progredi. Vnum est quod suo loco oblitus sum. Qui locum illum Yaks Olgush incolunt, à maioribus suis olim prædicatum asserunt, se in lacu Kittayum dulcissimam campanarum harmoniam audiuisse, atque ampla ædificia conspexisse: Et cum gentis Carrah Colmak mentionem faciunt (Cathaya illa est) ab imò pectore suspiria repetunt, manibusque proiectis suspiciunt in cælum, velut insignem illius splendorem innuentes atque admirantes. Utinam Alferius hic Cosmographiam melius saperet, multum ad illius vsum adiungeret, qui sanè plurimus est. Multa prætereo, vir amicissime, ipsumque hominem te audire cupio, qui mihi spondidit se in itinere Duisburgi te visurum. Auet enim tecum conferre sermones, & procul dubio hominem multum adiuueris. Satis instructus videatur pecunia & gratia, in quibus alijsque officijs amicitiae feci illi, si vellet, mei copiam. Deus Optimus maximus hominis votis atque alacritati faueat, initia secundet, successus fortunet, exitum felicissimum concedat. Vale amicè ac Domine singularis.

To

To the famous and renowned Gerardus Mercator, his Reuerend and singular friend at Duisburgh in Clineland, these be deliuered.

Calling to remembrance (most deare Friend) what exceeding delight you tooke at our being together, in reading the Geographicall writings of Homer, Strabo, Aristotle, Plinie, Dion, and the rest, I reioyced not a little that I happened vpon such a messenger as the bearer of these presents, (whom I do especially recommend vnto you) who arrived lately here at Arusburg vpon the riuer of Osella. This mans experience (as I am of opinion) will greatly auail you to the knowledge of a certaine matter which hath bene by you so vehemently desired, and so curiously laboured for, and concerning the which the late Cosmographers do hold such varietie of opinions: namely, of the discouerie of the huge promontorie of Tabin, and of the famous and rich countreys subiect vnto the Emperoz of Cathay, and that by the North-east Ocean sea. The man is called * Alferius being by birth a Netherlander, who for certaine yeeres liued captiue in the dominions of Russia vnder two famous men Yacouius and Vneckius, by whom he was sent to Antwerp to procure skilfull Pilots and Mariners, (by propounding liberall rewards) to go vnto the two famous personages aforesayd, which two had set a Sweden Shipwright on worke to build two ships for the same discouerie vpon the riuer of Dwina. The passage vnto Cathay by the North-east (as he declareth the matter, albeit without arte, yet very aptly, as you may well perceiue, which I request you diligently to consider) is without doubt very short and easie. This very man himselfe hath trauelled to the riuer of Ob, both by land, through the countreys of the Samoeds, and of Sibir, and also by Sea, along the coast of the riuer Pechora Eastward. Being encouraged by this his experience he is fully resolu'd with himselfe to conduct a Barke laden with merchandize (the keele whereof hee will not haue to drawe ouer much water) to the Baie of Saint Nicholas in Russia, being furnished with all things expedient for such a discouerie, and with a new supply of victuals at his arrivall there, and also to hire into his company certaine Russes best known vnto himselfe, who can perfectly speake the Samoeds language, and are acquainted with the riuer of Ob, as hauing frequented those places yeere by yeere.

Two ships built vpon the riuer of Dwina for the North-east discouerie.

Whereupon about the ende of May hee is determined to saile from the Baie of S. Nicholas Eastward, by the maine of Ioughoria, and so to the Easterly parts of Pechora, & to the Island which is called Dolgoia. And here also hee is purposed to obserue the latitudes, to suruey and describe the countrey, to sound the depth of the Sea, and to note the distances of places, where, and so oft as occasion shall be offered. And forasmuch as the Baie of Pechora is a most conuenient place both for harbour and victuall, as well in their going forth as in their returne home in regard of Ice and tempest, he is determined to bestow a day in sounding the Flats, and in searching out the best enterance for ships: in which place heretofore he found the water to be but five fote deepe, howbeit he doubteth not but that there are deeper chanelis: and then hee intendeth to proceed on along those coasts for the space of three or foure leagues, leauing the Island called Vaigats almost in the middle way betwene Vgoria and Noua Zembla: then also to passe by a certaine Baie betwene Vaigats and Ob, trending Southerly into the land of Vgoria, where into fall two small riuers called * Marnesia and Carah, vpon the which riuers doe inhabite another barbarous and sauage nation of the Samoeds. He found many Flats in that tract of land, and many cataracts or ouerfalls of water, yet such as hee was able to saile by. When hee shall come to the riuer of Ob, which riuer (as the Samoeds report) hath seuentie mouthes, which by reason of the huge breadth thereof containing many and great Islands, which are inhabited with sundry sortes of people, no man scarcely can well discouer, because he will not spend too much time, he purposeth to search three or foure at the most of the mouthes thereof, those chiefly which shall be thought most commodious by the aduise of the inhabitants, of whom hee meaneth to haue certaine with him in his boiage, and meanely to employ three or foure boates of that Countrey in search of these mouthes, as neere as possibly he can to the shore, which within three dayes iourney of the Sea is inhabited, that he may learne where the riuer is best navigable. If it so fall out that he may saile by the riuer Ob against the streame, and mount vp to that place which heretofore accompanied with certaine of his friends, he passed vnto by land through the countrey of Siberia which is about twelue dayes iourney from the Sea, where the riuer Ob falleth into the Sea, which place is in the Continent neere the riuer Ob, and is called Yaks Olgush, borrowing his name from that mightie riuer which falleth into the riuer Ob, then doubtlesse hee would conceiue full hope that hee had passed the greatest difficulties: for the people dwelling thereabout report, which were three dayes sayling onely from that place beyond the riuer

The Island of Dolgoia.

The Island of Vaigats. A Baie betwene Vaigats and Ob trending Southerly.

* Dr. Naramfey and Cara Rea.

The place vpon the riuer Ob, where he was but 12. dayes iourney from 3. mouthes thereof, and is called Paka Olgush.

Mr. Ienkinson in his voyage to Baghar speaks of the ri-

riuer Ob, whereby the breath thereof may be gathered (which is a rare matter there, because that many rowing with their boates of leather one daies iourney onely from the shore, haue bene cast away in tempest, hauing no skill to guide themselves neither by Sunne nor Starre) that they haue seene great vessels laden with rich and precious merchandize brought downe that great riuer by blacke or swart people. They call that riuer * Ardok, which falleth into the lake of Kirtay, which they call Paraha, whereupon bozereth that mightie and large nation which they call Carrah Colmak, which is none other then the nation of Cathay. There, if neede require, he may sit by Winter and refresh himselfe and his, and seeke all things which he shall stand in need of: which if it so fall out, he doubteth not but in the meane while he shall be much furthered in searching and learning out many things in that place. Howbeir, he hopeth that hee shall reach to Cathaya that very Sommer, vntill he be hindered by great abundance of Ice at the mouth of the riuer of Ob, which is sometimes moze, and sometimes lesse. If it so fall out, hee then purposeth to returne to Pechora, and there to Winter: or if he cannot doe so neither, then hee meaneth to returne to the riuer of Dwina, whither he will reach in good time enough, and so the next Spring following to proceed on his voyage. One thing in due place I forgate before.

The people which dwell at that place called Yaks Olgush, affirme that they haue heard their forefathers say, that they haue heard most sweete harmonic of bells in the lake of Kirtay, and that they haue seene therein stately and large buildings: and when they make mention of the people named Carrah Colmak (this countrey is Cathay) they fetch deepe sighes, and holding vp their hands, they looke vp to heauen, signifying as it were, and declaring the notable glory and magnificence of that nation. I would this Oliuer were better seene in Cosmographie, it would greatly further his experience, which doubtlesse is very great. Post deare friend, I omit many things, and I wish you should heare the man himselfe which promised mee faithfully that he would visite you in his way at Duisburg, for he desireth to conferre with you, and doubtlesse you shall very much further the man. He seemeth sufficiently furnished with money and friends, wherein and in other offices of curtesie I offered him my furtherance if it had pleased him to haue vsed me. The Lord prosper the mans desires and forwarde, blisse his good beginnings, further his proceedings, and grant vnto him most happy issue. Fare you well good sir and my singular friend. From Arusburg vpon the riuer of Osella, the 20. of February, 1581.

Yours wholly at commandement,

John Balak.

MAfter Anthonie Ienkinson in a disputation before her Maiestie with sir Humfrey Gilbert for prooue of a passage by the Northeast to Cathaya, among other things alleageth this: videlicet, that there came a continuall streame or curreant through Mare glaciale, of such swiftnesse as a Colmak told him, that if you cast any thing therein, it would presently be caried out of sight towards the West, &c.

A testimonie of the Northeasterne Discouerie made by the English, and of the profite that may arise by pursuing the same: taken out of the second volume of Nauigations and Voyages, fol. 17. of the notable Cosmographer, M. John Baptista Ramusius, Secretarie to the State of Venice: Written in Italian in the yeere, 1557.

Alla parte poi di sotto la nostra Tramontana, che chiasmo scrittore & Cosmographo di questi & de passati tempi fin hora vi ha messo & mette mare congelato, & che la terra corra continuamente fino a 90. gradi verso il Polo: sopra questo mappa-mondo all'incontro si vede che la terra va solamente vn poco sopra la Noruega & Suetia, & voltando corre poi Greco & Levante nel paese della Mosconia & Rossia, & va diritto al Cataio. Et che cio sia la verita, le navigationi che hanno fatte gl' Inglesi con le loro nani, volendo andare a scoprire il Cataio al tempo del Re Odoardo Sesto d' Inghilterra, questi anni passati, ne possono far vera testimonianza: perche nel mezzo del loro viaggio, capitate per fortuna a i liti di Mosconia, doue trouarono all' hora regnare Giouanni Vasiluich Imperatore della Rossia & gran Duca di Mosconia, il quale con molto piacere & marauiglia vedutogli, fece grandissime carezze, hanno trenato quel mare essere nauigabile, & non agghiacciato. La qual navigatione (ancor che con l'esito fin hora non sia stata bene intesa) se col spesso frequentarla & col lungo uso & cognitione de que mari si continuerà, è per fare grandissima mutatione & riuolgimento nelle cose di questa nostra parte del mondo.

The same in English.

Moreouer (having before spoken of diuers particularities, in an excellent Map of Paulus Venerus) on that part subiect to our North pole, where euery writer and Cosinographer of these and of former times hitherto, haue, and doe place the frozen Sea, and that the land stretcheth continually to 90. degrees, towards the pole: contrarywise, in this mappe is to bee seene, that the land extendeth onely a litle about Norway and Swethland, and then turning it selfe trendeth afterwards towards the Southeast and by East, vnto the countrey of Moscouie and Russia, and stretcheth directly vnto Cathay. And that this is true, the navigations which the English men haue of late made, intending to discouer Cathay, in the time of Edward the first, king of England, are very sufficient witnesses. For in the mids of their voyage, lighting by chance vpon the coast of Moscouie (where they found then reigning Iohn Vasiluich Emperoz of Russia, and great duke of Moscouia, who after he had, to his great delight and admiration, seene the English men, entertained them with exceeding great curtesies) found this sea to be navigable, and not frozen.

Which navigation to Cathay, although it be not as yet thoroughly knowen, yet if with often frequenting the same, and by long vse and knowledge of those seas it bee continued, it is like to make a wonderfull change and reuolution in the state of this our part of the world.

The great hope of the Northeastern Discouerie.

The testimonie of Gerardus Mercator in his last large Mappe of Europe, touching the notable discoueries of the English, made of Moscouie by the Northeast.

Agnam occasionem certamque rationem emendandæ Europæ nobis attulit celeberrima Anglorum per Cronium mare navigatio: quæ littora Septentrionalia Finlappiæ Moscouiæque iuxta cœli situm, mundi que plagas digesta habet. Exacta etiam vrbs Moscux latitudo ab Anglis obseruata, interiorum Regionum emendatiùs describendarum infallibilem legem præscripsit: Quibus oblatis adminiculis pulcherrimis, iniquum putauit tabulam hanc castigatiorem non reddere.

The same in English.

The most famous navigation of the English men by the Northeast sea hath offered vnto me a great occasion, and certaine direction for the reformation of the mappe of Europe: which discouerie hath the Northerne parts of Finmarke, Lapland, and Moscouie, laid out according to the iust eleuation and the quarters of the world. And further, the true obseruation of the latitude of the city of Mosco, made by the foresaid Englishmen, hath yeelded me an infallible rule, for the correcting of the situation of the inland countries: which notable helps being ministred vnto me, I thought it my duetie to exhibite to the world this Mappe, more exact and perfect then hitherto it hath bene published.

Another testimonie of Ioannes Metellus Sequanus concerning the same Navigation and Discouerie in his Preface prefixed before Osorius de rebus gestis Emanuelis Regis Portugallia, written about the yeere, 1574.

Tne omnis, vnus Hispanis, Oceani maris gloria totaque concederetur, Britanni Septentriones noua in Moscouiam navigatione, ab hinc annis viginri plus minus illustrarunt. Nam bellis Suecicis à Moscouitarum, Naruæque Liouix exclusi commercio, iter ad illos Oceano, hinc Noruegiæ, Finmarchiæ, Lappiæ, Scricinnix, Biarmiæque; illinc Groenlandiæ littora præteruecti, vltra Septuagesimum latitudinis Aquilonaris gradum sibi patefaciunt. Quam navigationem Belgæ postea, non sine tamen cum eisdem Britannis velitatione, sunt secuti. Eò vehunt argenti veteris fragmenta, lineasque vestes propè detritas, omnisque generis minutiores merces, ad vsum, cultumque corporis hominum minum vtriusque sexus, veluti lintea & byssea cingula, periscelides, crumenas, cultros, & id genus sexcenta. A Moschis autem pelles omnis generis praeiosas adferunt, & salmones salitos, fumoque duratos.

The same in English.

BUt least all and the whole glory of discovering the Ocean Sea should be ascribed to the Spaniards, the Englishmen about twentie yeeres past, by a new nauigation into Moscouie, discovered the Northeast partes. For they by reason of the warres of Swethland being hindered from the traffique of the Moscouites and of the Narue in Liefland, opened a passage for themselves by the Ocean Sea, beyond the Northerne latitude of 70. degrees: hauing in their course on the one side the coastes of Norway, Finmark, Lapland, Scrickfin and Biarmia: On the other side the coast of Gronland. Which voyage the Hollanders afterwarde entred into, but not without some conflict with the English. They carry thither old plate and course linnen cloth, and all kind of small Percherie wares, seruing for the apparelling of men and women, as linnen, and silke girdles, garters, purses, knives, and many such like things. And they bring away from the Moscouites, all kinde of precious furs, and Salmones salted and dried in the smoke.

COMMENTARIVS DE ISLANDIA: QVO SCRIPTORVM DE HAC

ARNGRIMVM IONAM ISLANDVM

Domino CHRISTIANO IIII. DANIAE, Noruegia, Vandalorum, Gothorūmq; Regi electo: Slesuici, Holsaue, Stormaria & Wihmarfia Duci: Comiti in Oldenburg & Delmenhorst: Domino suo clementissimo.

Raclaram sanè apud Historicos meretur laudem, Sereniss. Prin-ceps, Anchuri illius Midæ regis filij ausus plusquam humanus, & in patriam pietas, serè exemplo carens, quod ad occudendum ingentem circa Celanam Phrygia oppidum terra hiatum, quoti-die homines haud exiguo numero, & quicquid in propinquo erat, absorbentem, sese ultro obtulerit. Cum enim ab oraculo Midas pater accepisset, non prius conclusum iri istam voraginem, quam res eo preciosissima immitterentur: Anchurus existimans, nihil esse anima pretiosius, sese viuum in illud profundissimum chasma precipitem dedit: idq; tanto animi cum feruore, vt neque parentis desiderio, neque dulcissima coniugis amplexu vel lachrymis, ab isto proposito se retrahi passus sit.

Nec inferiorem multò consecati sunt gloriam Sperthius & Bulis, Lacedæmonij, qui ad auertendam potentissimi Regis Persarum Xerxis, ob occisos à Lacedæmonijs Darij patris legatos, ultionem, ad Regem profecti sunt, & vt legatorum necem in se, non in patria vlcisceretur, erectis & constantibus animis sese obtulerunt.

Quæ verò res, Sereniss. Princeps, illos ac alios complures mouit, vt patriæ flagrantes amore, nullū pro ea periculum, nullas molestias, imò ne mortē ipsam recusarint, ea profectò me quoque impulit, non quidem, vt quemadmodum illi, mortem sponte oppeterem, aut me ma-tandum ultro offerrem, sed tamen, vt id quod solum possem, in gratiam patriæ tentarem:
Hoc est, vt scriptorum de ea errores colligerem & rumusculos vanos refellerem: Ac ita rem profectò periculosam, & multorum forsan sinistro obnoxiæ iudicio, aggrededer.

In eo proposito me etiam Cn. Pompeij exemplum confirmauit: Quem rei frumentariæ apud Romanos procuratorem, cum in summa Urbis annonæ charitate, in Sicilia, Sardinia & Africa frumentum collegisset, maiorem patriæ, quàm sui, tradunt rationem habuisse.
Cum enim Romam versus properaret, & ingenti ac periculosa oborta tempestate, Naucle-ros trepidare, nec se ventorum aut maris sauitia committere velle animaduiceret, ipse naui primus ingressus, anchoras tolli iussit, in hæc verba exclamans: Vt nauigemus vr-get necessitas, vt viuamus, non vrget. Quibus vir prudentissimus innuisse videtur, patriæ periclitantis maiorem habendam rationem, quàm priuatæ incolumitatis.

Hunc ego sic imitor,

(Si parualicet componere magnis, & muscam Elephanto conferre) ut collectis ac portatis ijs, quibus ad succurrendum gentis nostræ nomini ac famæ, apud extraneos, ex maleuolorum quorundam inuidia iam diu laboranti vterer; paucula hæc in lucem emittere, meque pelago huic quantumuis turbulento committere, lintea ventis tradere, cumque illo exclamare non dubitem: Ut scribamus, vrget necessitas: Ut verò scriptum nostrum, cuiusuis delicato palato, ubiq; satisfaciât, aut omnem Momî proteruiam effugiat, non vrget. Institutum meum complures probaturos spero: successum forsan non itidem omnes probabunt. Nihilominus tamen maiorem habendam rationem patriæ, multorum hætenus opprobria & contumelias sustinentis, quàm suæ laudis, siue vituperationis, ad me ipsum hinc forsan redituræ, existimabam. Quid enim causæ esse potest, cur nonnullorū odium & inuidiam, cum hoc patriæ benefaciendi seu gratificandi studio fortè coniunctâ recusem?

Quod si scriptorum errores liberius notare, si quorundam calumnias durius perstringere videbor, eos tamen æquos me habiturum censores confido, qui paulo diligentius animaduertere volent, quàm parum tolerabiles sint scriptorum de nostra gente errores: quot etiam & quàm graues quorundam in nos calumnie, quibus nationem nostram varijs modis laceßuere, & etiamnum laceßere non desistunt. Dandum etiam aliquid omnibus congenito soli natalis amoris est; Dandum iusto, ob hanc patriæ illatam iniuriam, dolori. Et ego quidem, quantum fieri potuit, ubiq; mihi temperaui, ac à conuiuijs abstinere volui: quod si quid videatur mollius dicendum fuisse, id prædictâ ratione veniam spero, merebitur.

Cum igitur hæc mihi subeunda sit alea, quod omnibus scriptum aliquod edituris in more positum animaduerto, id mihi hoc tempore sollicitè curandum est: Nempe ut patronum & mecænatem aliquem huic meo commentariolo quæram, sub cuius nomine & numine, tutius in vulgî manus exeat.

Eam igitur ad rem nihil poterit contingere optatius, vestra, clementissime Princeps, Sereniss. Maiestate. Etenim nos ei, qui vitam & fortunas nostras in suam potestatem & tutelam accepit, ei inquam, nomen quoque gentis nostræ innocenter contaminatum, curæ vtsit, supplices rogamus.

Imò verò, Rex clementiss. non solum ad hanc rem, S. Maiestatis V. clemens implorare auxilium necessum habemus; Sed ad multa quoque alia, quæ in nostra patria desiderantur, aut quæ alioqui ad huius utilitatem & salutem communem spectant: quæq; non per me, sed per summorum nostræ gentis virorum libellos supplices hoc tempore exponuntur; aut certe breui exponentur. Nihil enim dubitamus quin S. V. Maiestas, Christianissimorum maiorum exemplo, etiam nostram patriam, inter reliquas imperij sui Insulas, sua curâ & protectione regia dignari velit. Nam quæ nostra est ad S. Maiestatem V. confugiendi necessitas, ea est S. Maiestatis V. in nobis subleuandis, curandis & protegendis, gloria. Et ob nutritam extremi ferè orbis Arctoi ecclesiam, in remotissimis M. V. imperij finibus, quæ tranquillitatem & tuta singulari Dei beneficio halcyonia habet, præmium, ac reposita in cælis immarcescibilis vitæ æternæ corona.

Caterum cum illa huius loci non sint, id quod meum est propositi subiūgo: & à S. Maiestate V. ea, quæ par est, animi submissione peto, ut huic meæ opellæ & studio in patriam collato, fauere, & patroni benigni esse loco, clementer dignetur. Quod superest Sereniss. Princeps, Dom. clementissime, Maiestatem V. sapientiæ & prudentiæ, omniumq; adeo virtutum heroicarum indies incrementa summentem, ad summum imperij fastigium, summus ille regnorum, omniumq; adeo rerum humanarum dispensator, Deus opt. max. euehat: Euectam, omni rerum felicissimo successu continuè beet: Beatamque hoc modo, ut summum horum regnorum ornamentum, columen, præsidium, Ecclesiæ chlypeum & munimen, quàm diutissimè conseruet: Ac tandem in altera vita, in solido regni cælestis gaudio, cum præcipuis ecclesiæ Dei nutritijs, syderis instar, illustrem fulgere faciat. Faxit etiâ idem Pater clementiss. ut hæc vota, quando sepius, in amplissimorum Maiestatis V. regnorum & Insularum quouis angulo, quotidie repetuntur ac ingeminantur, tantò rata magis & certiora maneant.

Benigno & pio Lectori salutem.

IN lucem exijt circa annum Christi 1561. Hamburgi fœtus valdè deformatis, patre quodam Germanico propola: Rhythmi videlicet Germanici, omnium qui vnquam leguntur spurcissimi & mendacissimi in gentem Iflandicam. Nec fufficiebat sordido Typographo sordidum illum fœtum semel ciniffisse, nisi tertium etiam aut quartum publicasset, quo videlicet magis innocenti genti apud Germanos & Danos, aliòsque vicinos populos summam & nunquam delendam ignominiam, quantum in ipso fuit, inueret. Tantum Typographi huius odiù fuit, & ex re illicita lucrauiditas. Et hoc in illa ciuitate, quæ plurimos annos commercia sua magno fuorum cum lucro in Iflandia exercuit, impunè fecit, Ioachimus Leo nomen illi est; dignus certè qui Leones pascat.

Reperiuntur præterea multi alij scriptores, qui cum miracula naturæ, quæ in hac Insula creduntur esse plurima, & gentis Iflandicæ mores ac instituta describere se velle putant, à re ipsa & veritate prorsus aberrarunt, nautarum fabulas plusquam aniles, & vulgi opiniones vanissimas secuti. Hi Scriptores etsi non tam spurca & probrosa reliquerunt, quàm sordidus iste Rhythmistæ: multa tamen sunt in illorum scriptis, quæ illos excusare non possunt, aut prorsus liberare, quo minus innocentem gentem suis scriptis deridendam alijs exposuerint. Hæc animaduertens, legens, expendens, subinde nouis, qui Iflandorum nomen & æstimationem læderent, scriptoribus ortis, alienorum laborum suffuratoribus impudicis, qui etiam non desinunt gentem nostram nouis conspurcare mendacijs, lectoris que noua monistorum enumeratione & descriptionibus fictis deludere, sæpe optabam esse aliquem, qui ad errata Historicorum, & aliorum iniquorum censorum responderet, quisque aliquo scripto innocentem gentem à tot conuicijs si non liberaret, certè aliquo modo apud pios & candidos Lectores defenderet. Quare hoc tempore Author eram honesto studioso, Arngrimo Iona F. vt reuolutis scriptorum monumentis, qui de Iflandia aliquid scripserunt, errores & mendacia solidis rationibus detegeret. Ille etsi primò reluctabatur, vicit tamen demum admonitio, amorque communis patriæ, ita vt hunc qualemcunque commentariolum conscriberet, non ex vanis vulgi fabulis, sed & ex sua & multorum fide dignorum experientia, probationibus sumptis.

Ille verò, qui hanc rem meo est aggressus instinctu, vicissim à me suo quasi iure flagitabat, vt in has pagellas, vel tribus saltem verbis præfaret: existimans aliquid fidei vel auctoritatis opusculo inde conciliatum iri. Quare vt mentem breuiter exponam: Ego quidem & honestam & necessariam quoque operam nauasse eum iudico, qui non modò scriptorum varias sententias de rebus ignotis perpendere, & inuicem conferre, nec non ad veritatis & experientiæ censuram exigere: Sed etiam patriam à venenatis quorundam sycophantarum morsibus vindicare conatus sit. Equum est igitur, Lector optime, vt quicquid hoc est opusculi, velut sanctissimo veritatis & patriæ amore aduersus Zoilorum proteruiam munium & muniendum excipias. Vale.

Vemadmodum in militia castrensi, alios nulla æqua ratione adductos, sed ambitione, inuidia & avaritia motos, Martis castra sequi animaduertimus: Alios verò iusti de causis arma fumere; vt qui vel doctrinæ cœlestis propagandæ aut seruandæ ergò bellamouent, vel aliquo modo laceffiui paratam vim ac iniuriam repellunt, vel saltem non laceffiti, propter obsidentem hostem metu in armis esse coguntur: Non secus Apollini militantes: alij animo nequaquam bono, Philosophico seu verius Christiano, ad scribendum feruntur: puta qui gloriæ cupiditate, qui liuore ac odio, qui affectata ignorantia alios sugillant, vt ipsi potiores habeantur, nunc in personam, nomen ac famam alicuius, nunc in gentem totam stylum acuentes, atque impudenter quasi mentiendo, infontem nationem & populos commaculantes: Alij verò contrâ, animo ingenuo multa lucubrando inuestigant & in lucem emittunt; vt qui scientiam Theologicam & Philosophicam scriptis mandantur, quique suis vigilijs veterum monumenta nobis explicuerunt: qui quicquid in illis obscurum, imperfectum, inordinatum animaduertunt, vsu & experientia duce illustrarunt, explerunt, ordinarunt: qui mundi historias, bona fide, æternæ memoriæ consecrarunt: qui linguarum cognitionem suis indefessis laboribus iuuerunt: denique qui aliorum in se suamue gentem vel patriam, licentiosam petulantiam reprimere, calumnias refellere, & quandam quasi vim iniustam propulsare annixi sunt.

Et quidem ego, cui literas vix, ac ne vix quidem videre contigit, omnium qui diuinæ Palladi nomen dederunt, longè infimus (vt id ingenuè de mea tenuitate confitear) facere certè non possum, quin me in illorum aciem conferam, qui gentis suæ maculam ablucere, veritatem ipsam asserere, & conuiuantium iugum detrectare studuerunt: Maiora ingenio fors denegauit: Id quoquo modo tentare compellit ipsius veritatis dignitas, & innatus amor patriæ, quam extraneos nonnullos falsis rumoribus deformare, varijs conuiitijs, magna cum voluptate proscindere, alijsq; nationibus deridendam propinare comperimus. Quorum petulantia occurrere, & criminationes falsas, detectis simul scriptorum de hac Insula erroribus, apud bonos & cordatos viros, (Nam vulgus sui semper simile, falsi & vani tenacissimum, non est quòd sperem me ab hac inueterata opinione abducere posse) diluere hoc commentariolo decreui.

Et si autem Islandia multos habet, vt ætate, ita ingenio & eruditione me longè superiores, ideòq; ad hanc causam patriæ suscipiendam multò magis idoneos: Ego tamen optimi & clarissimi viri, Dom. Gudbrandi Thorlacij, Episcopi Høleulvi, apud Islandos, sollicitationibus motus communi causæ, pro viribus, nequaquam deesse volui, tum ut æquissimæ postulationi ipsius parerem, atque amorem & studium debitum erga patriam declararem, tum vt reliquos sympatriotas meos, in bonarum literarum scientia scèlicius versatos, atque in rerum plurimarum cognitione vltèrius progressos, ad hoc gentis nostræ patrociniū inuitarem: Tantum abest, vt ijs qui idem conabuntur, obstaculo esse voluerim.

Cæterum vt ad rem redeamus, quoniam illi quicunque sunt nostræ gentis obtrectatores, testimonio scriptose vti ac niti iactitant: videndum omnino est, quidnam de Islandia, & quàm vera scriptores prodiderint, vt si fortè isti, alijs in nos dicendi aliquam occasionem dederint, patefactis ipsorum erroribus (nolo enim quid durius dicere) quàm meritiò nos calumnientur, reliquis planum fiat. Porro, quamuis vetustiorum quorundam scripta de hac Insula, ad veritatis & experientiæ normam exigere non verear: Tamen nobis eorundem alioqui sacra est memoria, reuerenda dignitas, suspicienda eruditio, laudanda voluntas & in Rempub. literariam studium: Nouitij verò, si qui sunt id genus scriptores, aut verius paucissimi, cum ijs longè veriora quàm scripserant, audire & nosse de Islandia licuerit, sua leuitate & ingenio malè candido, nihil nisi inuidiæ & calumniæ maculam lucrari esse videbuntur.

Atque vt Commentarius hic noster aliquid ordinis habeat, duo erunt propositæ orationis capita, vnum de Insula, de incolis alterum: quantum quidem de his duobus capitibus Scriptores qui in nostris manibus versantur, annotatum reliquerunt: Quoniam vltra has metas vagari, vel plura quàm hæc ipsa, & quæ huc pertinere videbuntur attingere nolo. Non enim ex professio Historicum vel Geographum sed disputatorem tantum agimus. Itaque omiſſa longiore præfatione partem primam, quæ est de situ, nomine, miraculis, & alijs quibusdam adiunctis Insulæ, aggrediamur.

Primæ partis tractatio.

SECTIO PRIMA.

Insula Islandia, quæ per immensum à cæteris secreta longè sita est in Oceano, vix à nauticantibus agnoscitur, &c.

Munst. lib. 4. Cosmograph.

Eti hæc tractare, quæ ipsam terram vel illius adiuncta seu proprietates concernunt, ad gentem vel incolas à calumniantium morſu vindicandos parum faciat: tamen id nequaquam omitendum videtur. Sed de his primum, & quidem prolixius aliquantò agendum est, ut perspecto, quàm vera de hac re tradant illi Islandiæ scriptores, facilè inde candidus Lector, in ijs quæ de incolis scripta reliquerunt, quæque ab illis alij, tanquam Dijs prodentibus, acceperunt, vnde sua in gentem nostram ludibria depromi aiunt, quantum fidei mereantur, iudicet.

Primum igitur distantiam Islandiæ à reliquis terris non immensam esse, nec tantam, quanta vulgò putatur, si quis insulæ longitudinem & latitudinem aliquo modo cognitam haberet, facilè demonstrari posset. Non enim id alio, quàm isto cognosci exactè posse modo existimari, cum nulli dubium sit, quàm semper nautarum vel rectissimus, ut illis videretur, cursus aberret. Quare varias authorum de situ Islandiæ sententias subiungam, ut inde quivis de distantia id colligat, quod maximè verisimile videbitur, donec fortè aliquando propria edoctus experientia, meam quoque sententiam si non interponam, tamen adiungam.

Munſterus Islandiam collocat	Longit.	Latitud.	Heckelsel promontorium	25.	67.

Et si qui sunt præterea, qui vel in mappis, vel alioqui suis scriptis Insulæ situm notarunt, quorum plures sententias referre nihil attinet, cum quò plures habeas, eò magis dissidentes reperias, Ego quamvis verisimiles coniecturas habeo, cur nullæ citatæ de Islandiæ situ sententiæ assentiar, quin potius diuersum quippiam ab ijs omnibus statuam, tamen id ipsum in dubio relinquere malo, quàm quicquam non exploratum satis affirmare, donec, ut dixi, fortè aliquando non coniecturam, sed obseruationem & experientiam propriam asserre liceat.

Distantiam ab ostio Albis ad portum Islandiæ meridionalis Barzende, quidam scripserat esse circiter 400. milliarium: Vnde si longitudinis differentiam ad meridianum Hamburgensem supputaueris, nullam modò positaram longitudinum habebit illo in loco Islandia. Ego tamen Hamburgensem nauigationibus docere possum, septimo die Hamburgum ex Islandia peruentum esse. Præterea etiam, Insulæ quæ ab ouium multitudine Færeyjar, seu rectius Faereyjar dictæ sunt, bidui nauigatione, ut & littora Noruagiæ deserta distant. Quatridui verò nauigatione in Gronlandiam habitabilem, & pari ferè temporis interuallo, ad prouinciam Noruagiæ Stad. inter opida Nidrosiam & Bergas sitam peruenitur, quemadmodum in harum nationum vetustis codicibus reperimus.

SECTIO SECVNDA.

Munsterus, Olaus magnus: & reliqui.

In hac, æstivo solstitio, sole signum Cancræ transeunte, nox nulla, brumali Solstitio proinde nullus dies. Item, Vadianus. In ea autem Insula qua longe supra Arcticum circulum in amplissimo Oceano sita est, Islandia hodie dicta, & terris congelati maris proxima, quas Entgronlandt vocant, menses sunt plures sine noctibus, Nillum esse hyemali solstitio diem, id est, tempus quo sol supra horizontem conspicitur in illo tantum Islandiæ angulo, si modò quis est, fatemur, ubi polus ad integros 67. gradus attollitur. Holis autem, quæ est sedes Episcopalis Borealis Islandiæ, sita etiam in angustissima & profundissima conualle, latitudo est circiter grad. 65. 44. min. vt à Domino Grubrando eiusdem loci Episcopo accepimus, & illic diem breuissimum habemus ad minimum duarum horarum, in meridionali autem Islandia longiorem, vt ex artificum tabulis videre est. Vnde constat nec Islandiam vltra Arcticum circulum positam esse, nec menses plures noctibus in æstiuo, vel diebus in brumali solstitio carere,

SECTIO TERTIA.

Munsterus.
Saxo.

Nomen habet à glacie qua illi perpetuo ad Boream adheret. Item. A latere Occidentali Noruagiæ Insula, quæ Glacialis dicitur, magno circumfusa Oceano reperitur, obsoleta admodum habitationis tellus, &c. Item, Hac est Thyle, nulli veterum non celebrata, Suælandia.

Nomen habet à glacie) Tria nomina consequenter sortita est Islandia. Nam qui omnium primus eius inuentor fuisse creditur Naddocus genere Noruagus, cū versus insulas Farenenses nauigaret tēpestare valida, ad littora Islandiæ Orientalis fortē appulit: ubi cum fuisset aliquot septimanas cum socijs commoratus, animaduertit immodicam niuium copiam, montium quorundam cacumina obtegentem, atque idcō à niue nomen Insulæ Suælandia indidit. Hunc securus alter, Gardarus, fama quam de Islandia Naddocus attulerat impulsus, Insulam quæsitum abiit, reperit, & nomen de suo nomine Gardarsbolme id est, Gardars Insula imposuit, Quin & plures nouam terram visendi cupido incescit: nam & post illos duos adhuc tertius quidam Noruagus (Floki nomen habuit) contulit se in Islandiam, illiq; à glacie qua viderat ipsam cingi nomen fecit.

Obsoleta admodum) Ego ex istis verbis Saxonis hanc sententiam nequaquam eruo, vt quidam, quod inde ab initio habitatam esse Islandiam, seu vt verbo dicam, Islandos autocthonas dicat, cum constet vix ante annos 718. incolæ ceptam.

Hæc est Thyle) Grammatici certant & adhuc sub iudice lis est. Quam tamen faciliè dirimi posse crediderim, si quis animaduertat, circa annum Domini 874 primum fuisse inhabitatam. Nisi quis dicere velit Thulen illum Aegypti Regem, quem hoc ipsi nomen dedisse putant, ad Insulam iam tum inuitam & inhabitatam penetrasse. Illud verò rursus si quis neget, per me sanè licebit, vt illud sit quoddam quasi spectaculum, dum ita in contrarias scinduntur sententias. Vnus affirmat esse Islandiam. Alter quandam insulam, ubi arbores bis in anno fructificant. Tertius vnā ex Orcadibus, siue vltimam in ditione Scoti, vt Ioannes Myritinus & alij, qui nomen illius referunt Thylensey, quod etiam Virgilius per suam vltimam Thylen sensisse videtur. Siquidem ultra Britannos, quo nomine Angli hodie dicti & Scoti veniunt, nullos populos statueret. Quod vel ex illo Virgilij Eclog. 1. apparet.

Et penitus totodinis orbe Britannos. Quartus vnā ex Farenensibus. Quintus Telemarchiam Noruagiæ. Sextus Schrichfinniam.

Glacies Aprili
aut Maio soluitur

Perpetuo ad Boream adheret.) Illud verò, Glaciem Insula perpetuò, vel vt paulò post asserit Munsterus: Octo continuis mensibus adherere: neutrum verum est. Nam vt plurimum in mense Aprili aut Maio soluitur, & Occidentem versus propellitur, nec ante Ianuarium aut Februarium sæpius etiam tardius redit. Quid? quod plurimos annos numerare licet, quibus glaciem illam huius nationis innite flagellum, ne viderit quidem Islandia: Quod etiam hoc anno 1592. compertum est. Vnde constat quā verè à Frisio scriptum sit, nauigationem ad hanc insulam tantum quadrimestrem patere, propter glaciem & frigora, quibus intercludatur iter, Cū Anglicæ naues quotannis nunc in Martio, nunc in Aprili, quædam in Maio, Germanorum & Danorum in Maio & Iunio, plærumque ad nos redeant, & harum quædam non ante Augustum iterum hinc soluant. Superiore autem anno 1591. quædam nauis Germanica, cupro onusta, portum Islandiæ Vopnafiord 14. dies circiter in Nouembri occupauit, quibus lapsis inde foeliciter soluit. Quare cum glacies Islandiæ, nec perpetuò, neque octo mensibus adheret, Munsterus & Frisius manifestè falluntur, SECTIO QUARTA.

Tam grandis Insula, ut populos multos contineat. Item, Zieglerus, Situs Insulae extenditur inter austrum & boream ducentorum prope Schanorum longitudine.

Kranzius.
Munsterius.

Grandis.) Wilstenius quidam, rector Scholæ OLDENBURGENSIS Anno 1591. ad auunculum meum in Islandia Occidentali misit breuem commentarium, quem ex scriptorum rapsodij de Islandia collegerat, Vbi sic reperimus: Islandia duplo maior Sicilia, &c. Sicilia autem secundum Munsterum 150. milliaria Germanica in ambitu habet, Nostræ verò Insulæ ambitus etsi nobis non est exactè cognitus, tamen vetus & constans opinio, & apud nostros recepta 144. milliaria numerat per duodecim videlicet promontoria Islandiæ insigniora, quæ singula 12. inter semilliaribus distent, aut circiter, quæ collecta prædictam summam ostendunt.

Islandiæ.

Populos multos) Gysserus quidam, circa annum Domini 1090. Episcopus Schalholtenfis in Islandia, omnes Insulæ colonos seu rusticos qui tantas facultates possiderent, ut regi tributum solvere tenerentur (reliquis pauperibus cum scæminis & promiscuo vulgo omissis) lustrari curauit, reperitque in parte Insulæ Orientali 700, meridionali 1000, Occidentali 1100, Aquilonari 1200. Summa 4000. colonorum tributa solucentium, iam si quis experiatur, inueniet Insulam plus dimidio fuisse inhabitatam.

SECTIO QUINTA.

Insula multa sui parte montosa est & inculta. Qua parte autem plana est præstat plurimum pabulo, tam læto, ut pecus depellatur à pascuis, ne ab aruina suffocetur.

Munst. Frisius, Ziegler.

ID suffocationis periculum nullo testimonio, nec nostra nec patrum nostrorum, vel quàm longè retrò nueneris, memoria confirmari potest.

SECTIO SEXTA.

Sunt in hac Insula montes elati in cælum, quorum vertices perpetua nix candent, radices sempiterno igne aestuant, Primus Occidentem versus est, qui vocatur Hecla, alter Crucis, tertius Helga. Item Zieglerus. Rupes sine promontorium Hecla aestuans perpetuis ignibus. Item Saxo. In hac itidem Insula mons est, qui rumpem fideream perpetua flagrationis astibus imitatur, incendia sempiterna iugi flammarum eruptione continuat.

Munst.
Frisius.

Miracula Islandiæ Munsterus & Frisius narraturi mox in vestibulo, magno suo cum incommodo impingunt, Nam quod hic de monte Hecla asserunt, etsi aliquam habet veritatis speciem, tamen quod idem de duobus alijs montibus perpetuo igne aestuantibus dicunt, manifestè erroneum est. Illi enim in Islandia non extant, nec quicquam, quod huic tanto scriptorum errori occasionem dederit, imaginari possumus. Facta tamen est, sed nunc demum. Anno 1581. ex monte quodam australis Islandiæ, maritimo, perpetuis niuib. & glacie obducto memorabilis fumi ac flammæ eruptio, magna saxorum ac cineris copia eiecta. Cæterum ille mons longè est ab his tribus, quos authores commemorant, diuersissimus. Porro etsi hæc de montibus ignitis maximè vera narrarent, annon naturaliter ista contingerent? An ad extruendam illam, quæ mox in Munsteri, Ziegleri & Frisio sequitur, de orco Islandico opinionem aliquid faciunt? Ego sanè nefas esse duco, his vel similibus naturæ miraculis ab absurda asserenda abuti, vel hæc tanquam impossibilia cum quadam impietate mirari. Quasi verò non concurrant in huiusmodi incendijs causæ ad hanc rem satis validæ. Est in horum montium radicibus materia vti aptissima, nempe sulphurea & bituminosa. Accedit aer per poros accuernas in terræ viscera ingressus, ac illum maximi incendiij fomitem exsufflans vnà cum nitro, qua exsufflatione tanquam foliis quibusdam, ardentissima excitatur flamma. Habet siquidem ignis, his ita conuenientibus, quæ tria ad vrendum sunt necessaria, materiam scilicet, motum, & tandem penetrandi facultatem: Materiam quidem pinguem & humidam idèoque flammæ diuturnas alentem: Motum præstat per terræ cæuernas admissus aer: Penetrandi facultatem facit ignis vis inuicta, sine respiraculo esse nescientis, & incredibili conatu violenter erumpentis, atque ita (non secus ac in cuniculis machinisue seu tormentis bellicis, globi è ferro maximi, magno cum fragore ac strepitu, à sulphure & nitro, è quibus pyrius pulvis conficitur, excitatur) lapides & Saxa in ista voragine ignita, ceu quodam camino, colliquefacta cum immodica arenæ & cinerum copia, exspuentis & eiaculantis, idque ut plurimum, non sine terræ motu: qui si secundum profunditatem terræ fiat, succussio à Possidoneo appellatur, vel hiatus erit, vel pulsus.

Lib. 2. cap. 20.

Hiatu terra dehiscit: pulsu eleuatur intumescens, & nonnunquam, vt inquit Plinius, moles magnas egerit: Cuiusmodi terræ motus iam mentionem fecimus, maritima Islandiæ Australis Anno 1581 infestantis, quique à Pontano his verbis scitissimè describitur.

*Ergo incerta ferens raptim vestigia, anhelus
Spiritus incur sat, nunc huc, nunc percitus illuc, Exploratque abitum insistens, & singula tentat,
Si quâ forte queat villis erumpere claustris.
Intereatremis ingentem factura ruinam
Terra, suis quatens latas cum mœnibus vrbes:
Diffiliunt auulsa iugis immania saxa, &c.*

Hæc addere libuit, non quòd cuiquam hæc ignota esse existinemus; Sed ne nos alij ignorare credant, atque ideo ad suas fabulas, quas hinc exstruunt, confugere velle.

Ceterum video quid etiamnum admirationem non exiguam scriptoribus moueat, in his, quos ignoranter fingunt, tribus Islandiæ montibus, videlicet cum eorum basin semper ardere dicant, summities tamen nunquā niue carcant. Porro id admirari, est præter autoritatem tantorum virorum, quibus Aetnæ incendium optimè notum erat, quæ, cum secundum Plinium hybernis temporibus nivalis sit, noctibus tamen, eodem teste, semper ardet. Quare etiam secundū illos, ille mons, cum adhuc niuium copia obducitur, & tamen ardeat, sordidarum animarum quoque erit receptaculum: id quod Heclæ propter niues in summo vertice & basin æstuantem, adscribere non dubitarunt. Vix autem mirum esse potest, quòd ignis montis radicibus latens, & nunquā, nisi rarissimè erumpens, excelsa montis cacumina, quæ niuib. obducuntur, non colliquefaciat. Nam & in Caira, altissima montis cacumina niuib. semper cadentia esse perhibentur: & in Beragua quidem similiter, sed 5000 passuum in cælum elata, quæ niuib. nunquam liberentur, cum tamen partibus tantum decem ab æquatore distent. Vtrāq; hanc prouinciā iuxta Pariam esse sitam accepimus. Quid? quod illa Teneriffæ (quæ una est ex insulis Canarijs, quæ & Fortunatæ) pyramis, secundum Munsterum, 8 aut 9 milliarius Germanicorum altitudine in aëra asurgens, atq; insar Aetnæ iugiter conflagens, niues, quibus media cingitur, teste Benzone Italo, Indiæ occidentalis Historico, non resoluit. Quod ipsum in nostra Heclæ quid est, quod magis miremur? Atque hæc ita breuiter de incendiis montanis.

Nunc illud quoq; castigandum arbitramur, quod hos montes in cælum vsq; attolli scribant. Habent enim nullā præ cæteris Islandiæ montibus notabilem altitudinem: Præcipuè tertius ille Helgæ à Munstero appellatus, nobis Helgafel, i. Sacer mons, apud monasterium eiusdè nominis, nulla sui parte tempore æstiuo niuib. obductus, nec montis excelsi, sed potius collis humilis nomen meretur, nunquā, vt initio huius sectionis dixi, de incendio suspectus. Nec verò perpetuè niues Heclæ, vel paucis alijs adscribi debebant: Permultos enim habet eiusmodi mōtes niuosos Islandia, quos omnes vel toto anno, non facillè collegerit aut connumerarit, horum prædicatōr & admirator Cosinographus, Quin etiam id non negligendum, quod mons Heclæ non occidentem versus, vt à Munstero & Zieglero annotatum est, sed inter meridiem & orientem positus sit. Nec promontorium est: sed mons ferè mediterraneus.

Incendia perpetua ingi, &c. Quicumq; perpetuam flammatarum eructationem Heclæ adscriperunt, toto cælo errarunt, ad eò, vt quoties flammæ eructārit, nostrates in annales retulerint, viz. anno Christi 1104. 1157. 1222. 1300. 1341. 1362. & 1389. Neque enim ab illo de montis incendio audire licuit, vsq; ad annum 1558. quæ vltima fuit in illo monte eruptio. Interea non nego, fieri posse, quin mons infernè latentes intus flammæ & incendia alat, quæ videlicet statim interuallis, vt hæcenus annotatum est, eruperint, aut etiam forte posthac erumpant.

Prisius, Munst.

Montis Heclæ flamma nec stuppam lucernarum luminibus aptissimam adurit, neque aqua extinguitur: Eoque impetu, quo apud nos machinis bellicis, globi eijciuntur, illinc lapides magni in aëra emittuntur, ex frigoris & ignis & sulphuris commixtione. Is locus à quibusdam putatur carcer sordidarum animarum, item Ziegletus. Is locus est carcer sordidarum animarum.

Nec stuppam adurit.) Vnde habeant Scriptores, non satis conijcitur. Hæc enim nostris hominibus prorsus ignota, nec hic vnquam, nisi prodidissent illi, audita fuissent, Nemo enim est apud nos tam temerariæ curiositatis, vt huius rei periculum, ardente monte, facere aufit, vel quod scire licuit, vnquā ausus fuerit. Quod tamen Munsterus asserit. Qui, inquit, naturam tanti incendijs contēplari cupiunt, & ob id ad montem propius accedunt, eos una aliqua vorago viros absorbet, &c. Quæ res, vt dixi, nostræ genti est ignota prorsus. Exstat tamen liber veteri Noruagorum lingua scriptus, in quo terrarum, aquarum, ignis, aëris, &c. miracula aliquot confusa fusa reperias, pauca vera, plurima vana & falsa. Vnde facile apparet, à Sophis quibuldam, si dijs placer, in Papatu olim esse conscriptum: Speculum Regale nomen dederunt, propter vanissima mendacia, quibus totus, sed plarumque sub religionis & pietatis prætextu (quo difficilior est fucum agnoscere) scatet speculum minimè regale, sed Anile & Irregulare. In hoc speculo figmenta quædam de Heclæ incendio, his quæ nunc tractamus non multum dissimilia, habentur, nullo experimento magis quàm hæc stabilita, ideoque explodenda.

1 De quadam Insula Hybernæ; quæ templum & Parochiam habet: Cuius incolæ decedentes non inhumantur: sed ad aggerem seu parietem cœmeterij, viuorum instar erecti, consistunt perpetuò: Nec ulli corruptioni, nec ruinæ, obnoxij: vt posterum quiuis suos maiores ibi quærere & conspiciere possit.

2 De altera Hybernæ Insula, vbi homines emori nequeant.

3 De omni terrâ & omnibus arboribus Hybernæ, quæ omnibus omnino venenis resistent, serpentes & alia venenata, vbiuis terrarum, solâ virtute & præsentia, etiam sine contactu, enecent.

4 De tertia Hybernæ Insula: Quòd hæc dimidia Diabolorum colonia facta sit. In diuiniâ vero propter templum ibidem exstructum, iuris habeant nihil, licet & pastore (vt tota Insula incolis) & sacris perpetuò careat: idque per naturam ita esse.

5 De quarta Hybernæ Insula, quæ in lacu quodam satis vasto fluitet: cuius gramina, quibusuis morbis prætentissimum remedium existant: Insula verò ripam lacus statis temporibus accedat, idque vt plurimum, diebus Dominicis; vt tum quiuis facillè eam velut inauim quandam, ingrediatur: id quod tamen pluribus simul, per fatum licere negat. Hanc vero Insulam septimo quoque anno ripæ adnasci tradit, vt à continente non discernas: In eius autem locum mox succedere alteram, priori, naturâ, magnitudine & virtute consimilem; quæ vnde veniat, nasci: idque cum quodam quasi tonitru contingere.

6 De venatoribus Norvegiæ, qui lignum domare (sic enim loquitur, quantumvis impropiè: cum ligno vt non vita, ita nec domitura competat) adeò docti sint, vt asseres 8. vlnas longi, plantis pedum eorundem alligati, tanta eos celeritate, vel in excelsis montibus, promoueant, vt non modò canum venaticorum, aut caprearum cursu, sed etiam auium volatu superari nequeant: atque vnico cursu, vnico etiam hastæ ictu, nouem vel plures capreas feriant. Hæc & similia, de Hybernia, Norvegia, Islandia, Gronlandia, de aquæ & aëris etiam miraculis, centonum ille magister, in suum speculum collegit: Quibus, licet suis admirationem, vulgo stuporem, nobis tamen risum concitauit.

Sed Frisum audiamus, Flamma, inquit, Montis Heclæ nec stupam, lucernarū luminibus aptissimam, adurit, nec aqua extinguitur. Atqui, inquam, ex Schola vestra Philosophica petitis rationibus hoc Paradoxon confirmari poterit. Docent enim Phisici, commune esse validioribus flammis omnibus vt siccis extinguantur, alantur verò humidis: Vnde etiam fabri, aqua inperfa, ignem excitare solent. Cum enim, aiunt, ardentior fuerit ignis, à frigido incitatur, & ab humido alitur, quorum utrumque, aqua inest. Item: Aqua solet vehementes accendere ignes: Quoniam humidum ipsum quod exhalat, pinguius redditur, nec à circumfuso fumo absorbitur, sed totum ignis ipse depascitur, quò purior inde factus, ac simul collectus, à frigido alacrior inde redditur. Vnde etiam ignes artificiosi aqua minimè extingui biles. Item: Sunt sulphure & bitumine loca abundantia, quæ sponte ardent, quorum flamma aqua minimè extinguitur. Prodidit etiam Philosophus, Aqua ali ignem. Arist. 3. de anim. Et Plin. lib. 2. Nat. Hist. cap. 110. Et Strabo lib. 7. In Nymphæo exitè Petra flamma, quæ aquâ accenditur. Idem, Viret æternum contexens fontem ignem fraxinus. Quin & repentinos ignes in aquis existere, vt Thrasumenum lacum in agro Perusino arsisse totum, idem autor est. Et anno 1226, & 1236, non procul à promontorio Islandiæ Reykianes, flamma ex ipso mari erupit. Etiam in corporibus humanis repentinos ignes emicuisse, vt Seruio Tullio dormienti, è capite flammam exsiluisse: Et L. Martium in Hispania, interfectis Scipionibus, concionem seu orationem ad milites habentem, atque ad vltionem exhortantem, conflagrasse, Valerius Antias narrat. Meminit etiam Plinius flammæ montanæ, quæ vt aqua accendatur, ita terra aut fœno extinguatur. Item, Alterius campestris, quæ frondem densi supra se nemoris non adurat. Quæ cum ita sint, mirum, homines id in solâ Heclâ mirari (ponam enim iam ita esse, cum non sit tamen, quòd à quoquam scire potuerim) quod multis aliarum terrarum partibus seu locis, tam montanis, quàm campestribus, cum ea commune esset.

Eo impetu quo apud nos globi. Sic enim Munsterus. Mons ipse cum furit, inquit, horribili tonitrua insonat, projicit ingentia Saxa, sulphur enomit, cineribus egestis, tam longè terram circumcirca aperit, operit, ut ad vicesimum lapidem coli non possit, &c. Cæterum oportuit potius cum Ætnâ, aut alijs montibus flammiumis, quos mox recitabo, comparasse, cum non deesset, non modò simile, sed prope idem: Nisi fortè quòd incendia rarius ex Heclâ erumpant, quàm alijs id genus montibus. Nam proximis 34. annis prorsus quieuit, facta videlicet vltima eruptione, An. 1558 ut superius annotauimus. Et nihil tam magnificè dici potest de nostra Hecla, quin idem, vel maius cæteris montibus flammiumis competat, ut mox apparebit. Quòd verò sulphur eiaculetur, manifestum est commentum, nullo experimento apud nostrates cognitum.

Is locus est carcer sordidarum animarum. Hic præfandum esse mihi video, atque veniam à Lectore pctendam, quòd, cum initio proposuerim, de terra & incolis diuissim agere, in hac prima parte tamen, quæ sunt merito secundæ partis, miscere cogar. Euenit hoc scriptorum culpa, qui Insulâ situi ac miraculis, religionis incolarum particulam hanc, de opinione infernalis carceris, confuderunt. Quare etiam ut hunc locum attingamus, quis non miretur isthoc commentum ab homine cordato in Historia positum esse? Quis non miretur, viros sapientes eò perducij, ut hæc vulgi deliramenta auscultent, nedum sequantur? Vulgus enim extraneorum & hominum colluies nautica, (hic enim saniores omnes, tam inter nautas quam reliquos, excipio,) de hoc insolito naturæ miraculo audiens, ingenito stupore ad istam, de carcere animarum, imaginationem ferrur: Siquidem incendio nullam subalterni materiam vider, quemadmodum in domesticis focus fieri consuevit. Atque hac persuasione vulgi fama inoleuit, dum (ut ad maledicta optimè affluendum est) vnus alteri huius montis incendium imprecatur. Quasi verò ignis elementaris & materiatus ac visibilis, animas, i. substantias spirituales comburat. Quis denique non miretur, cur eundem carcerè damnatorum, non in Ætnâ etiam, nihilo minus ignibus ac incendijs celebri, confingant? At confinxit, dices, Gregorius Pontifex. Purgatorium igitur est. Sit sanè: Eadem igitur huius carceris veritas, quæ & purgatorij. Sed priusquàm longius procedamus, libet hic referre fabulam, huius opinionis infernalis originem & fundamentum: Nempe cuidam extraneorum naui Islandiam relinquenti, & turgidis velis, citissimo cursu iter suum rectà legenti, factam obuiam alteram, similiter impigro cursu, sed contra vim tempestatum, velis & remis nitentem: cuius præfectus rogatus, quidnam essent? Respondisse fertur: De Bischof van Bremen. Iterum rogatus quo tenderent? ait. Thom Wettefeldt tho, Thom Wettefeldt tho. Hæc videns Lector vereor, ne peluim postulet dari: Est enim mendacium adeo detestandum, ut faciliè nauseam pariat. Abeat igitur ad Cynofarges & ranas palustres: illud enim eiusdè facimus atq; illarū coax, coax. Nec verò dignum est hoc commentum, quod rideatur, nedum refutetur. Sed nolo cum infanis Papistis nugari: Quin potius ad scriptores nostros conuertamur.

Atque in primis neque hic, clarissimi viri, D. Casparis Peuceri, illud præterire. Est in Islandia, inquit, mons Hecla, qui immanis barabari, vel inferni potius profunditate terribilis, eiulantium miserabili & lamentabili ploratu personat, ut voces plorantium circumquaq; ad internallum magni milliaris, audiantur. Circumvolitant hunc coruorum & vulturum nigerrima agmina, quæ nidulari ibidè ab incolis existimantur. Vulgus incolarum descensum esse per voraginem illam ad inferos persuasum habet: Inde, cum prælia committuntur alibi in quacumq; parte orbis terrarum, aut cades sunt cruenta, commoveri horrendos circumcircat tumultus, & excitari clamores, atq; eiulatus ingentes longâ experientia didicerunt. Quis verò rem tam incredibilem ad te vir doctissime perferre ausus fuit? Nec enim vulture habet Islandia, sed genus aquilum secundum, quod ab albicante caudâ Plinius notauit, & Pygarsum appellauit. Nec vlli sunt huius spectaculi apud nos testes: Nec deniq; ibidem coruos aut aquilas nidificare probabile est, quæ, igni & fumo semper inimicissimo, potius à focus vel incendijs arceantur. Et nihilominus in huius rei testimonium, (ut & ex auditi per voraginem montis tumultus extranei,) experientiam incolarum allegant, quæ certè contraria omnia testatur, Vnde verò foramen vel fenestra illa montana, per quam clamores, strepitus & tumultus apud antipodes, pericæcos & antæcos factos exaudiremus? De quâ re multa essent, quæ authorem istius mendacij, interrogatum haberem, modò quid de illo nobis constaret: qui vtinam veriora narrare discat, nec tam perfrictâ fronte similia, incomperta, atq; adeò incredibilia, clarissimo viro Peucero, aut alijs referre præsumat.

Ast verò Munsterus cum incendijs tanti & tam incredibilis causâs in famosissimâ Ætna inuestigare conatus sit, quam rem illic naturalem facit, hic verò præternaturalē imo infernalem faciat, an non monstri simile est? Cæterum de Æthnâ quid dico? Quin potius videamus quid de Heclâ incendio aliâs sentiat Munsterus.

Dubium non est, inquit, montes olim & campos arsisse in orbe terrarum: Et nostra quidem ætate ardent. Verbi gratia: In Islandia mons Hecla statis temporibus foras proycit ingentia Saxa, enomitis sulphur spargit cineres, tam longè circumcirca, ut terra ad vicesimum lapidem coli non possit. Vbi autem montium incendia perpetua sunt, intelligimus nullam esse obstructionem meatuum, per quos modo, quasi quasi fluum quendam, ignes, modo flammæ, nunc verò sumum tantum enomunt. Sin per temporum intervalla increscunt, internis meatibus obstratis, eius viscera nihilominus ardent. Superioris autem partis incendia, propter fomitis inopiam, non nihil remittunt ad tempus. Ast ubi spiritus vehementior, rursus reclusis meatibus isdem vel alijs, ex carcere magnâ vi erumpit, cineres, arenam, sulphur, pumices, massas, quæ habent speciem ferri, saxa, aliâsq; materias foras projicit, plerumq; non sine detrimento regionis adiacentis. Hæc Munsterus. Vbi videas quæso Lector, quomodo suo se iugulet gladio, videas inquam hîc eâdem de incendio Heclæ & Aetnæ opinionem & sententiam, quæ tamē lib. 4. eiusdem, admodum est dispar, ut illic ad causas infernales confugiat.

Habet profectò Indiæ occidentalis mons quidam flammiumus æquiores multò, quàm hic noster, censores & historicos, minimè illic barathrum exadificantes: Cuius historiam, quia & brevis est, & non illepidâ, subiiciam, ab Hieronimo Benzone Italo in Historiar. noui orbis, lib. 2. his verbis descriptam.

Triginta quinq; inquit, milliarium intervallo abest Legione mons flammiumus, qui per ingentem craterem tantos sape flammarum globos eruat, ut noctu latissimè ultra 10000. passuum incendia reluceant. Nonnullus fuit opinio, intus liquefactum aurum esse, perpetuam ignibus materiam. Itaq; Dominicanus quidam monachus, cum eius rei periculum facere vellet, abenum & catenam ferream fabricari curat, moxq; in montis iugum cum quatuor alijs Hispanis ascendens, catenam cum abeno ad centum quadraginta vlnas in caminum demittit. Ibi ignis feruore, abenum cum parte catenæ liquefactum est. Monachus non leuiter iratus Legionem recurrit, fabrum incusat, quòd catenam tenuiorem multò, quàm iussisset ipse, esset fabricatus. Faber aliam multo crassiorē excudit. Monachus montem repetit: Catenam & lebetem demittit. Res priori incæpto similem exitum habuit. Nec tantum resolutus lebes euaniuit, verù etiâ flammæ globus repente è profundo exsiliens, propemodùm & Fratrem & socios absumpsit. Omnes quidem adeo perculsi in urbem reuersi sunt, ut de eo incæpto exequendo nunquam deinceps cogitarent, &c.

O quam censura dispar? In montano Indiæ occidentalis camino aurum: Islandiæ verò, infernum quærunt. Sed hoc ut nimis recens, ac veteribus ignotum fortasse reijcient: Cur igitur eundem, quem in Heclâ Islandiæ, animarum carcerem, in Chimæra, Lyciæ monte, cuius noctu diuq; flamma immortalis perhibetur, non sunt imaginati scriptores? Cur nò in Ephesi montibus, quos tædâ flammante tactos, tantum ignis cōcipere accepimus, ut lapides quoq; & arenæ in ipsi aquis ardeant, & ex quibus accenso baculo, si quis sulcū traxerit, riuos ignium sequi narratur à Plinio? Cur non in Cophantro Bætrorum monte, noctu semper conflagrante? Cur non in Hiera Insula, in medio mari ardente? Cur non in Acolia, similiter in ipso mari olim dies aliquot aliquot accensæ? Cur non in Babyloniorum campo, interdium flagrante? Cur non in Aethiopum campis, Stellarum modo, noctu semper nitentibus? Cur non in illo Liparæ tumulo, ampla & profunda voragine hiant, teste Aristotele, ad quæ non tantò noctu accedatur: ex quo Cymbalorum sonitus, crotalorum boatus, cum insolitis & inconditis cachinnis exaudiantur? Cur non in Neapolitanorum agro ad Puteolos? Cur nò in illa superius cōmemorata Teneriffæ pyramide montana, instar Aetnæ, iugiter ardente, & lapides, ut ex Munstero videre est, in aëra expuente? Cur non in illo Aethiopum iugo, quod Plinius testatur, horum omnium maximo aduri incendio? Cur non denique in Vesuuio monte, non sine insigni viciniæ clade, & C. Plinij exitiali detrimento, dum insueti incendij causas perferaturus venit, nubium tenuis flammæ cum saxis euomente, pumicum & cinerum ineffabili copiâ aëra replente, & solem meridianum per totam viciniam densissimis tenebris interceptante? Dicam, & dicam quod res est: Quia scilicet illis, utpote notioribus, fidem, etsi inferni esse incendia finxissent, minimè adhiberi præuidebant: Heclæ verò æstum, cuius rumor tardius ad eorum aures peruenit, huic commento vanissimo stabiliendo, magis inservire putabant. Sed facefite: Deprehensa fraus est: Definite posthac illam de inferno Hekleni opinionem cuiquam velle persuadere. Docuit enim & nos, & alios, vobis inuitis, consimilibus incendijs, operationes suas Natura, non Infernus, Sed videamus iam plura eiusdem fatinæ vulgi mendacia, quæ Historicis & Cosmographis nostris adeò malè imposuerunt,

SECTIO OCTAVA.

In iuxta hos montes (tres prædictos Heclam, &c.) sunt tres hiatus immanes, quorum altitudinem apud montem Heclam potissimum, ne Lynceus quidem perspicere queat: Sed apparent ipsum inspicientibus, homines primum submersi, adhuc spiritum exhalantes, qui amicis suis, ut ad propria redeant, hortantibus, magnis suspirijs se ad montem Heclam proficisci debere respondent: Sicque subito evanescent.

Frifius Zieglerus,
Olaus Magn.

Ad confirmandum superius mendacium de Inferno terrestri ac visibili, commentum hoc, non minus calumniosum (etsi faciliè largiar, Frisium non tam calumniandi, quàm noua & inaudita inaudita prædicandi animo ista scripsisse) quàm falsum ac gerris Siculis longè vanius ac detestabilis, excogitarunt homines ignaui, nec cælum nec infernum scientes. Quos scriptores isti, viri alioqui præclarissimi & optimè de Repub. literaria meriti, nimium preproprio iudicio securi sunt.

Cæterum optandum esset, nullos tanto nouitatis studio Historias scribere, vt non vereantur aniles quasuis nugis ijs inferere, atq; ita aurum purum cæno aspergere. Qui verò demum sunt homines illi submersi, in lacu infernali natitantes, & nihilominus cum notis & amicis confabulantes? Anne nobis vererem Orphea, cum sua Euridice, in Stygias relabente vndas, colloquentem, & in his extremi orbis partibus, tanquam ad Tanaim Hebrumque niualet, cantus exercentem lyricos, rediuuium dabit? Certè, etsi nolint alij futilem huiusmodi ineptiarum leuitatem ac mendacium agnoscere, agnoui tamen rerum omnium haud negligens æstimator Cardanus, lib. 18. subtil. cuius hæc sunt verba.

Est Hecla mons in Islandia, ardetq; non aliter ac Ætna in Sicilia per internalla, ideog. persuasione longa (vulgi) concepta, quod ibi expientur animæ. Alij, ne vani sint, affingunt inania fabula, vt consona videantur. Quæ sunt autem illa inania? Quod spectra comminiscuntur, se admonem Heclam ire respondentia, ait idem. Et addit. Nec in Islandia solum, sed vbiq; licet rarò, talia contingunt: Subditq; de larua homicida Historiam, quæ sic habet. Efferebatur, inquit, anno præterito, funus viri plebeiij Mediolani, orientali in porta iuxta templum maius foro venali, quod a caulium frequentia nomen caulis nostra lingua sonat. Occurrit mihi notus: Peto, vt medicorum moris est, quo morbo exceperit? Respondet ille: consuesse hunc virum hora noctis tertia à labore redire domum: Vidit lemuem nocte quadam insequentem: Quam cum effugere conaretur, oculus citato pede abibat: Sed à spectro captus atq; in terram proiectus videbatur. Exclamare nitebatur: Non poterat. Tandem, cum diu in terra cum larua volutatus esset, inuentus à prætereuntibus quibusdam, semivivus domum relatus, cum respiratione, interrogatus, hæc quæ minus expectabantur, retulit. Obid animam despondens, cum nec ab amicis, nec medicis, nec sacerdotibus persuaderi potuisset, mania esse hæc, octo inde diebus perijt. Audini postmodum & ab alijs, qui vicini essent illi, neminem ab inimico vulneratum tam constanter de illo testatum, vt hic, quod à mortuo fuisset in terram pronolatus. Cum quidam quærent, quid ille postquam in terram volutatus ageret? Conatum, inquit, mortuum adhibitis gule manibus, vt eum strangularet: Nec obstitisse quicquam, nisi quod se ipsum tueretur manibus. Cum alij dubitarent, ne forte hæc à vino passus esset, interrogarentq; in quo mortuum a vino discernere potuisset? Causam reddidit satis probabilem, dicens se tanquam totum attréclasse, nec pondus habuisse, nisi vt premebatur. Et paulò post addit. Eadem verò ratione, qua in Islandia, in arena solitudinibus Ægypti & Æthiopiæ, Indiæq; ubi Sol ardet, eadem imagines, eadem spectra viatores ludificare solent. Hactenus Cardanus. Inde tamen nemo concluderit, sicut de Islandia scriptores nostri faciunt, in illis Ægypti & Æthiopiæ, Indiæq; locis, carcerem existere damnatorum.

Hæc ex Cardano adscribere libuit, vt etiam extraneorum testimonio pro nobis, contra figmenta tanta afferamus. Conuincit autè præsens Cardani locus hæc duo, scilicet: nec esse Islandiæ proprias spectrorum apparitiones: (quod etiã omnes norunt, nisi eius rei ignorantia nimis affectent) nec illud mortuorum cum viuis, in hiatus Heclensi, colloquium, nisi ementitis hominum fabulis, quauis ampulla vanioribus, nisi, quibus beluæ vulgares, ad confirmandã de animarum cruciatibus opinio, vñ fuerant. Et quisquã est, qui illis scriptoribus hiatus, mortuorum miraculis ad summum vsque refertis, adduci potest vt credat? Quisquam, qui vanitatem tantam non cotinuat? Certè. Nam & hinc conuicia in gentem nostram rectè sumi aiunt: Nihil scilicet hac proiectus ac deterius esse vsquã, quæ intra limites Orcum habeat. Scilicet hoc cõmodi nobis peperit Historicorum ad res nouas diuulgandas audidas. Verum illa è vulgi dementia nata opinio, vt stulta ac inanis, & in opprobrium nostræ gentis conficta, hæctenus, vt spero, satis labefacta est. Quare iam perge Lector, vltcrius hanc de secretis infernalibus Philosophiam cognoscere.

Frissus & Munst. Circum verò Insulam, per septem aut octo menses fluctuat glacies, miserabilem quandam gemitum, & ab humana voce non alienum, ex collisione edens. Putant incolæ, & in monte Hecla, & in glacie loca esse, in quibus animæ suorum crucientur.

Egregium scilicet Historiæ augmentum, de Orco Islandico in vnus montis basin, haud sanè vastam, coactò: Et interdum (statis forsan temporibus) loca commutante. Vbi scilicet domi in foco morano delitescere piget, & exire, pelagusq; sed sine rate, tentare iuvat, seseq; in glaciei frustella colligere. Audite porrò, huius secreti admiratores: En porrigã Historicis aliud Historiæ auctarium nequaquam contemnendum. Scribant igitur, quotquot his scriptoribus cõmentis adherent, Islandos non solum infernum intra limites habere, sed & scientes volentes ingredi, atq; intactos eodè die egredi, Quid ita? Quia peructus est Insulæ cõsuetudo, vt maritimi in hanc hanc glaciem, ab Historicis infernalem tactam, manè phocas, seu vitulos marinos captum eant, ac vesperi incolumes redeant. Adde etiam, in scrinijs & alijs vasis ab *Jf*landis carcerem damnatorum asseruari, vt paulò post ex Frisio audiemus.

Sed maturè prævidendum erit vobis, ne *Jf*landi fortitudinis & constantiæ laudem vestris nationibus præripiant: Quippe qui tormenta (vt historicis vestris placet) barathri sustinuisse & velint & possint, illaq; sine vilo grauiore damno perrumpere atq; effugere valeant, quod quidem ipsum ex iam dictis efficitur: Et multos nostratium enumerare possum, qui in ipso venationis actu longiusculè à littore digressi, glaciè à Zephyris dissipata, multa milliaria glaciè infidètes, tempestatis violentia profligati, & aliquot dies ac noctes continuas crudelissimi pelagi fluctibus iactati, sicque (id enim, inquam, ex præsentis Historicorum problemate consequitur) tormenta & cruciatus barathri glacialis experti sunt: Qui tandem murata tempestate, atq; à Borea spirantibus ventis, ad littora, cum hoc suo glaciali nauigio rursus adacti, incolumes domum perueniunt: Quorum aliqui etiam hodie viuunt. Quare hoc nouitaris auidi arripiant, indeque, si placet, iustum volumen conficiant, atque ad Historiam suam apponant. Nec enim vanissima illa commenta aliter, quàm eiusmodi iocularibus excipienda & confundenda videntur. Ceterum, ioco seposito, vnde digressi sumus, reuertamur.

Primum igitur ex sectione secunda satis constat, glaciem, neque septem, neque octo mensibus circa ipsam Insulam fluitare: Deinde etiam, glaciem hanc, etsi interdum ex collisione grandes sonitus & fragores edit, interdum propter vndarum alluionem, raucum murmur personat, quicquam tamen humanæ voci simile resonare aut eiulare minimè fatemur.

Quod autem dicunt, nos & in glaciè, & in monte Hecla loca statnere, in quibus animæ nostrorū cruciuntur, Id verò seriò pernegamus, Deòq; ac Domino nostro Iesu Christo, qui nos à morte & inferno eripuit, & regni cœlestis ianuam nobis reserauit, gratias ex animo agimus, quod nos de loco, in quem animæ nostrorum defunctorum commigrent, rectius, quàm dicunt isti Historici, instituerit, Scimus & tenemus animas piorum non in Purgatorium Pontificiorum, aut campos Elysios, sed in sinum Abrahæ, in manum Dei, in Paradisum cœlestem, mox è corporis ergastulo transferri. Scimus & tenemus de impiorum animabus, non in montanos focos & cineres, vel glaciem nostris oculis expositam, deflectere, sed in extremas mox abripi tenebras, vbi est sletus & stridor dentiū, vbi est frigus, vbi est ignis ille, non vulgaris, sed extrā nostrā scientiā & subtilem disputationem positus. Vbi non modò corpora, sed animæ etiam, substantiæ spirituales, cruciuntur. Huic extremo & tenebricoso carceri non *Jf*landos viciniore, quàm Germanos, Danos, Gallos, Italos, aut quamvis aliam gentem, quoad loci situm, statuiamus. Nec de huius carceris loco sitūue quicquā disputare attinet: Sufficit nobis abundè, quod illius tenebricosum fœtorem & reliqua tormēta, dante & iuuantē Domino nostro Iesu Christo, cuius precioso sanguine redempti sumus, nunquam sumus visuri aut sensuri. Atque hic de orco *Jf*landico disputationis colophon esto.

SECTIO DECIMA.

Frisius, Zieglerus Saxo scire sinijiter.

ID profecto necessariò addendum fuit: Hanc scilicet glaciem, voces humanas, secundum Historicos, representatam, & damnatorum receptaculum existentem, non esse, vt reliqua in vastissima hac vniuersitate omnia, ex Elementi alicuius materia conflata. Siquidem cum corpus esse videatur, corpus tamen non sit, (quod ex Frisij paradoxo rectè deducitur) cum etiam corpora dura & solida perrumpat, non secus ac spectra & genij: Restat igitur cum non sit elementaris naturæ, vt vel spiritualement habeat materiam, vel cœlestem, vel quod ipsi forsitan largiantur, infernalement. Infernalement tamen esse non assentimur, quia ad aures nostras peruenit frigus infernale longè esse intractabilius, quàm est hæc glaciè, humanis manibus in scrinio reposita, nec quicquā suo contactu, vel nudatam carnem lædere valens. Nec profectò spiritualement esse dabimus; accepimus enim à Physicis, substantias spirituales nec cerni, nec tangi, nec ijs quicquam decedere posse: Quæ tamen omnia in hanc historicorum glaciem, quantumuis, secundum illos, hyperphysicam, cadere certum & manifestum est. Præterea & hoc verissimum est, eam calore solis resolutam, ac in superficie sua stagnantem, sicut piscatorum restinguendæ, nō secus ac riuos terrestres, inferuire: Id quod substantiæ spirituali denegatū est. Non est igitur spiritualis, vt nec infernalis. Iam verò cœlestem habere materiam, nemo audebit dicere: Ne forte inde aliquis suspicetur, glaciem hanc barathrum, quod illi Historici affingūt, secum è cœlo traxisse: Vel id cœlo, quippe eiusdem materiæ cum glaciè, commune esse, atq; ita carcer damnatorum cum Paradiso cœlesti loca commutasse, Historicorum culpa putetur.

Quare

Quare cum glacies hæc Historica nec sit elementaris, vt ex præfenti loco Frisij optime sequi iam toties monuimus: nec spiritualis, nec infernalis, quod vtrumq; breuibus, solidis tamen rationibus demonstrauimus: nec celestis materiam, quod opinari religio vetat: relinquitur omnino, vt secundum eosdem Historicos nulla sit, quam tamē illi tam eum stupendam admiratione prædicant, & nos videri ac tangi putamus. Est igitur, & non est: Quod axioma vbi secundum idem, & ad idem, & eodem tempore, verum esse poterit, nos demum miraculis istis glacialibus credemus. Itaq; iam vides Lector, ad hæc refellenda nullo alio esse opus, quam monstrari quomodo secum dissideant. Sed haud mirum, cum qui semel vulgi fabulosis rumoribus se permisit, sæpius errare. Cuiusmodi etiam prodidit quidam de glacie huius Sympathiæ; quod videlicet molis, cuius pars esset, discessum insequeretur, vt omnem obseruationis diligentiam inuitabili fugæ necessitate deciperet. Atqui sæpe vidimus eiusmodi solitariam molem post abactam reliquam glaciem, nullis vectibus, nullis machinis detentam, ad litus multis septimanis consistere. Palam est igitur; illud de glacie miraculum fundamento niti, quam est ipsa glacies, magis lubrico.

SECTIO VNDECIMA.

Frisius.

Non procul ab his montibus, (tribus prædictis) ad maritimas oras vergentibus, sunt quatuor fontes diuersissima natura. Vnus suo perpetuo ardore omne corpus sibi immixtum raptim conuertit in saxum, manente tamen priorē formā. Alter est algoris intolerabilis. Tertius vel melle dulcior, & restinguendæ sitis incurandissimus. Quartus plane exitialis, pestilens, & virulentus.

Etiam hæc fontium topographia satis apertè monstrat, quam ex impuro fonte has narrationes omnes miraculosas hauserit Geographus: Id enim dicere videtur: Montes hos tres prædictos ferè cōtinguos esse: Siquidē tribus montibus quatuor fontes indiseretè adscribit. Alioqui si non vicinos statuisset, vni alicui horum duos fontes adscripisset. Sed neque hi montes contigui sunt (quippe multis miliaribus inuicem diffusi) neque iuxta hos fontes illi quatuor reperiuntur: quod, qui credere nolit, experiarur. Cæterum ad hæc confundenda sufficit, credo, ipsorum historicorū contrarietas. Nam de duobus fontibus quidam Frisio his verbis contradicit. Erumpunt ex eodem monte (Heclā) fontes duo, quorum alter aquarum frigiditate, alter feruore intolerabili exedit omnem elementarem vim. Hi duo sunt primi illi Frisij fontes, nisi quod hic miraculum indurandi corpora, alteri fontium attributum, omissum sit. Atqui non simul possunt ex ipso monte, & iuxta montem erumpere.

Hic vero libenter quaesierim, quā ratione quisquam ex Peripateticis dicat, aliquid ipso elemento aquæ frigidius, aut igne calidius? Vnde demum, scriptores, ista frigiditas? Vnde iste feruor? Nonne è Schola vestra accepimus aquam esse elementum frigidissimum & humidum, atque adeo frigidissimum, vt ad constituendas qualitates secundas, remitti sit necesse, nec simplicem vsibus humanis inseruire? (Hæc ego nunc Physicorum oracula fundo; vera an falsa, nescio.) Testis est vnus omnium, & pro omnibus, Iohannes Fernellius lib. 2. Physiologiæ, cap. 4. Sic, inquit, qualitates hæc (quatuor primæ) quatuor rerum naturis summa obtigerunt, vt quemadmodum puro igne nihil calidius, nihilque lenius: Sic terra nihil siccius, nihil grauius: Aquam sinceram, nullius medicamenti vis gelida enunciat, vt nec aërem, villius humor. Summa præterea sic illis insunt, vt ne minimum quidem possint auferre, remitti vero possint. Nolo hic rationes seu argumenta Physicorum aggregare. Vnum profecto hic cauendum est, ne dum fontium miracula prædicant scriptores, vt glaciem Islandorum, ita etiam fontes creatorum numero eximant. Nos fontium adiuncta, quæ huc scriptores pertraxerunt, ordine persequemur. Primus suo perpetuo calore Plurimæ sunt in Islandia thermæ seu fontes calidi: Pauciores ardentes: quos neque cuiquam miraculo esse debere existimamus, cum huiusmodi, vt a scriptoribus didici, passim abundet Germania, præcipue in ijs locis, quæ non sunt procul ab Alpium radicibus. Nota est fama thermarum Badenium, Gebarfuiensium, Calbensium, in ducatu Wirtēbergenfi, & multarum aliarum quarum meminit Fuchsius in lib. de arte medendi. Et non solum Germania, sed etiam Gallia, & longè magis omnium bonorum parens Italia, inquit Cardanus. Et Aristoteles narrat, circa Epyrum calidas aquas scaturire, vnde locus Pyriphlegeton appellatur. Atq; inquam, hæc ideo minus miranda, quod vt incendij montani, ita feruoris aqueæ causas indagant Naturæ speculatores: Aquam scilicet per terræ venas sulphureas, aut aluminosas labi, indeq; non calorem solum, sed saporem etiam & virtutes alienas concipere. Docuit hoc Aristoteles libro de mundo. Continet, inquit, terra in se multos fontes, vt aqua, ita & spiritus & ignis. Quidam annuum more fluunt, & vel ignescens eiciunt ferrum: Nunc tepide aquæ erumpunt, nunc feruentissima, nunc temperata. Et Seneca: Empedocles existimabat ignibus, quos multis locis operios tegit terra, aquam calefcere, si subiecti sint solo, per quod aqua transitus est. Et scitè de thermis Baianis Pontanus, Baiano sed ne fumare in litore thermas.

Mirere, aut liquidis fluitare incendia venis:

Vulcani fora sulphureis incensa caminis

Ipsa nonent, latè multum tellure sub ima

De bacchari ignem, camposq; exurere opertos.

Inde fluit, calidum referens ex igne vaporem,

Vnda fugax, tellus feruent & balnea flammis.

Hoc loco attingendum duxi quod tradit Saxo Grammaticus, Danorum celebratissimus historicus, Islandiæ fontes quosdam nunc ad summum excrefcere, & exundare: Nunc ad eò subsidere, vt vix fontes agnoscat. Qui etsi rariores apud nos inueniuntur, adscribam tamen similes, etiam a libi à natura productos, ne quis hic monstri quippiam imaginetur. Hos autem recitat Plinius. In Tenedo Insula vnum, qui semper à tertia noctis hora, in sextam solstitio æstiuo exundet. In agro Pitinate, trans Apenninum montem, fluuium esse, qui omnibus Solstitijs æstiuus exundet, brumali tempore siccat. Refert etiam de fonte quodā satis largo, qui singulis horis intumescat & residat. Nec id magis negligendum: subire terras flumina, rursusque redire: vt Lycus in Asia, Erasinus in Argolica, Tigris in Mesopotamia, quibus Cardanus addit Tanaim in Moscouia: Et quæ in Æsculapij fonte Athenis immersa sunt, in Phaetico reddi. Et Seneca scribit esse flumina, quæ in specum aliquem subterraneum demissa, ex hominum oculis se subducunt, quæ cōsumi paulatim & intercidere constet: Eademq; post interuallum reuerti, recipereq; & nomen & cursum priorem, Et iterum Plinius; fluuium in Atinate campo mersum, post 20 milia passuum exire. Quæ omnia, & his similia, Islandiæ fontes, miraculo nullo, præ cæteris esse debere, ostendunt.

Omne corpus immissum continuo conuertit in saxum. His duobus adiunctis, seruiore nempe, seu ardore vehementissimo, & virtute indurandi corpora, primum suū fontem describit Frisius. Et fama quidem accipi, ipse non sum expertus, existere similem fontem in Islandia, non procul à sede Episcopali Schallhol, apud villam nomine Haukadal. Habet simile Seneca, dicens, fontē quendam esse, qui ligna in lapides conuertat, hominumq; viscera indurescere, qui aquam eius biberint: Et addit eiusmodi fontes in quibusdam Italiæ locis inueniri: quod Ouidius Ciconum flumini tribuit 15. Metamorph.

Et Cardanus: Georgius Agricola, inquit, in Elbogano tractu iuxta oppidum à falconibus cognominatum, integras cum corpore abietes in lapidem conuersas esse, atq; quod maris est, in rimis etiam Pyritidem lapidem continere. Et Domitius Brusonius, in Sylare amne, qui radices montis eius, qui est in agro urbis Vrsentinorum olim, nunc Contursy, lambit, folia & arborum ramos in lapides transire, non fide aliorum, sed propria, vt qui incola sit regionis, (cui rei etiam Plinius aspiculatur) narrat, cortices autē lapidū, annos numero ostendere. Sic (si scriptoribus credimus) guttæ Gotici fontis sparſæ lapidescunt. Et in Vngaria, Cepusij aqua, in vrceos infusa, lapidescit, Plinius refert etiam, vt in Ciconum flumine, & in Piceno lacu velino, lignum deiectum, lapideo corrice obduci.

Secundus algoris intolerabilis. Quantum ad secundum fontem attinet, nullus hic est quod quisquā sciat, algoris intolerabilis, sed plurimi bene frigidi, ita vt vulgaribus riuis æstiuo sole tepescantibus, non sine voluptate ex frigidioribus illis aquam hauriamus. Sunt & longè frigidiores fortè alibi: Nam & Cardanus in agro Corinthio è montis vertice fluentem riuum commemorat, niue frigidiorē: Et intra primum à Culma lapidem, Insanam vocatum: quæ aqua cū feruere videatur, sit tamen longè frigidissima, &c.

Tertius vel melle dulcior. Neq; id profus verum est. Non enim est vllus apud nos, qui vel minima ex parte cum mellis dulcedine conferri possit. Rectius igitur Saxo, qui fontes (quoniam plures sunt) in Islandia dicit inueniri Cerealem referentes liquorem, vt etiam ibidem non diuersi saporis solum, sed diuersi etiam coloris fontes & flumina reperiuntur.

Etsi autem tradunt Phisici aquam naturaliter ex se neq; saporem neq; odorem habere, tamen, vt superius attigimus, verisimile est, quod alij per accidens vocant, eam sæpe referre qualitatem terræ, in qua generatur, & per cuius vcnas transitum atq; excursum habet: Atq; hinc aquarum odores, colores, sapes, alios atq; alios existere. Cuiusmodi sunt, de quibus narrat Seneca, quorum alij famem excitent, alij bibentēs inebrient, alij memoriæ officiant, alij iuuent eandem, alij vini saporem & virtutem repræsentent: Vt ille apud Plinium in Andro Insula fons, in templo Liberi, qui Nonis Ian: vini sapore fluat. Et apud Aristotelem fons in agro Carthaginensi, qui oleū præbeat, & guttulas Cedri odore repræsentet. Item, Orcus fluuius Theſſaliæ, influens in Peneum, olei instar supernatans: Cuiusmodi etiam narrat Cardanus in Saxonia esse, iuxta Brunonis oppidum, fontem oleo perfusum: Et in Sueuia, iuxta Cœnobium, cui Tergensche nomen est. Itē, in valle montis Iurassi. Causam huius rei putat esse bitumen valde pingue, quod oleum sine dubio contineat. Idem, famam esse ait, in Cardia, iuxta locū Daphyli, in campo albo aquam esse lacte dulciorem. Aliā quoq; iuxta pontem, qua Valbeburgum itur, iam aquarū vini saporem referentium meminit his verbis Propertius, 3. lib. Elegiar.

Lib. de mirab. auscultat.

Lib. 2. de Element.

*En tibi per mediam bene olentia flumina Naxon,

Est autem Naxius Insula una ex Cycladibus, in mari Aegeo. Causam huius assignat Cardanus, quod hydromel vetustate transeat in vinum. Aristoteles commemorat Siciliae fontem, quo incolae loco aceti utantur. Idem saporum aquae causam in calorem reulit, quod terra excocta mutet & præbeat saporem aquae.

Iam de aquae coloribus ita Cardanus. Eadem est ratio colorum aquae, ait, quae & saporum: videlicet à terra originem trahere. Nam Candida est aqua, ad secundum lapidem à Glaucia, Misena oppido: Rubra, ut in Radera Misena fluuiio, iuxta Radeburgum: Et olim in Indae iuxta Ioppen: Viridis, in Carpatomonte, iuxta Neusolam: Cerulea aut blava, inter Feltrium & Tarvisium, & in Thermopylis etiam talem fuisse referunt: Nigerrima in Allera fluuiio Saxonia, ubi in Visurgim se exonerat. Causae sunt argilla colores, sed tenuiores. Item Aristoteles: circa Iapygiam promontoriū, esse fontem, qui sanguinem fundat, addens, eam maris partem suo foetore nauigantes procul arcere. Aiunt præterea in Idumaea fontem esse, qui quater in anno colorem mutet, cum sit colore nunc viridi, nunc albo, nunc sanguineo, nunc lutescente.

Et de aquarum odore sic Cardanus. Similis ratio differentia est in odoribus. Plerumq; tamen aquarum odores inuicem sunt, quod draro terra bene oleat. Pessimè olim foetabat in Aelide, Anigri fluminis aqua, usq; ad perniciem, non solum piscium, sed etiam hominum. Iuxta Metonem in Messania, in puteo quodam optimè olens aqua hauriebatur. Hæc ideo recito, ut nullus magis in Islandia quàm alibi, aquarum, colores odores, sapores, miretur.

Quartus plane exitialis. Autor est Isidorus, esse fontem quendam, cuius aqua pota vitam extinguat: Et Plinius: Iuxta Nonarim, inquit, Arcadiae, Styx (iuxta Cyllenem montem, ait Cardan.) Sola equi vngula continebatur: referunt ea sublata Alexandriū magnū nec odore differens, nec colore, epota illico necat. Idem, In Berofo Taurorum colle sunt tres fontes sine remedio, sine dolore mortiferi: Et quod longè maximum est, quod Seneca flagnum esse dicat, in quod prospicientes statim moriantur. Nos verò Islandi etiam hunc quartum Frisij fontē, cuius etiam Saxo meminit, ut antehac semper, itidem etiam nobis hodie penitus ignotum testamur: Hocq; igitur nomine, Deo immortales gratias agimus, quod ab eiusmodi fontibus & serpentibus, insectis venenatis, ac alijs pestiferis & contagiosis, esse nos immunes voluerit.

Præterea est apud prædictos fontes tanta sulphuris copia. Montes tres à Munstero & Frisio igniuomi dicti, omnes longissimo interuallo à nostris fodinis distant. Quare cum iuxta hos montes, fontibus quatuor, quos tantopere miraculis celebrant, locum & situm faciant, necesse est eos fontes pari ferè interuallo à fodinis sulphureis remotos esse. Nec verò apud montem Heclam, ut Munsterus, nec apud hos Frisij fontes (quorum rumor quàm verus sit, hætenus ostensum est) sulphur effoditur: Nec patrum nostrorum memoria effossum esse arbitramur, Neq; verum est, quod de sulphuris copia tradit Munsterus, esse videlicet penè vnicum Insulae mercimonium & vectigal. Nam cum insula in quatuor partes diuisa sit, quarta pars, nempe borealis, tantum dimidia, hoc vititur mercimonio, nec sulphuris mica in vectigal Insulae penditur.

Sub aperto cælo. Id quidem facere vidimus mercatores extraneos, donec naues mercibus extraneis exonerarint, incipiātq; easdem rursus piscibus & reliquis nostratium mercibus onerare. An verò nostri homines id aliquando fecerint, non satis liquet. Certè copiosa illa & vetus piscium abundantia iam defijt, Islandis & istius boni, & aliorum penuria laborare incipientibus, Domino Deo meritum impietatis nostrae flagellum, quod utinam ritè agnoscamus, immitte.

Equos habent velocissimos, qui sine intermissione 30. millaria continuo cursu conficiunt.

Quidam in sua mappa Islandiae, 20. millaria continuo cursu assequi tradit cuiusdam parociæ equos. Sed vtrumque impossibile ducimus, Nam maximæ celeritatis & roboris bestias (Rangiferos appellant) scribit Munsterus non nisi 30. millaria 24. horarum spacio conficere.

Cete grandia instar montium prope Islandiam aliquando conspiciuntur, quæ naves evertunt, nisi tibi Munst. barum sono absterreantur, aut missis in mare rotundis & vacuis vasis, quorum lapsu delectantur, ludificantur. Est aliquando, ut naves in dorsa cetorum, quæ Insulas esse putant, anchoras figentes, sæpe periclitentur, vocantur autem eorum lingua Trollwal, Tuffelwalen. i. Diabolica cete.

Instar montium: En tibi iterum, Lector, Munsteri Telenicia Echo, & cæcum, ut dici solet, in somnium. Deformat, me Hercule, adeo mendax & absurda hyperbole historiam, idque tantò magis quantò minus est necessaria. Nam quorsum attinet mentiri Historicum, si historia est rei veræ narratio? Quorsum tropicas hyperboles assumat? Quid conabitur persuadere, aut quo pertrahere Lectorem, siquidem nihil nisi simplicem rerum expositionem sibi proponit?

Pictoribus atq; Poëtis,

Quodlibet audendi semper fuit æqua potestas:

Non itidem Historicis.

Dorsa cetorum, quæ Insulas putant: Nata est hæc fabula, ut & reliquæ, ex mendacio quodam, ut antiquo, ita ridiculo & vano, cuius ego fidem titiulatio non eman. Est autem tale: Misos fuisse olim Legatos cum sodalicio monastico, ab Episcopo Bremensi (Brandanus veteribus Noruagis, Krantzio, ni fallor, Alebrandus appellatur) ad fidem Papisticam, quæ tum Christiana putabatur, in Septentrione prædicandam & diuulgandam: Eosque, ubi immensum iter Septentrionem versus nauigando consumpsissent, ad insulam quandam peruenisse: ibique iacta anchora descensum in Insulam fecisse, focos accendisse: (Nam verisimile est nautas in ipso mari glaciali frigore non parum esse vexatos) & comineatum naualem ad reliquum iter expediuisse. At ubi bene ignibus accensis incaluerant foci, Insulam hanc submersam citò euauisse, nautas autem per præsentem scapham vix seruatos fuisse. Habes huius rei fundamentum, Lector, sed quam incredibile, ipse vides. Quid verò tandem est animi nautis, qui in mari procelloso videntes scopulum, vel, ut Munsterus, Insulam per exiguam emergere, non vident potius omni studio, allisionem & naufragium metuentes, quam ut in portu parum tuto quiescerent? Sed ubi anchora figenda? Solent enim, ut plurimum, deesse nautis tam immensi funes, ut in altissimo æquore anchoram demittant: Igitur in dorsis cetorum, respondet Munsterus. Oportet igitur, vestigiū vnci prius effodiant. O stultos nautas, balenarum carnem, à terræ cespitibus, inter fodiendum, non dignoscentes, nec lubricam cetorum cutem, à terrestri superficie internoscentes. Digni profecto, quibuscum ipse Munsterus, nauclerus transfretaret. Equidem hoc loco, ut & superius, de miraculis Islandiæ terrestribus agens, è Tanti, ut aiunt, horto fructus colligit, id est, ea confectatur, quæ nunquam reperiuntur, nec usquam sunt, dum miracula hinc inde conquirere, terram & pelagus verrere, ad Historiæ suæ supplementum studet: Vbi tamen nihil nisi commentitia tantum venari potest.

Vocantur autem lingua eorum Trollwal. Ne ultra peram, Munstere: Nullam siquidem es linguæ nostræ cognitionem adeptus: Quare meritò puderet tantum virum, rem ignotam alios velle docere: Est enim eiusmodi inceptum erroribus obnoxium complurimis, ut vel hoc tuo exemplo doceamus. Dum enim vis alijs autor esse, quomodo nostra lingua balenæ vel cetæ appellentur, detracta, per inscitiam, aspiratione, quæ penè sola vocis significationem facit, quod minimè verum est, affers: Non enim val nostra lingua balenam, sed electionem siue delectum significat, à verbo, Ex vel i. eligo, vel deligo: unde val, &c. At balena dicitur nobis vocatur: Unde tu Trollwalur scribere debebas. Nec vero Troll Diabolum, ut tu interpretaris, sed Gigantes quosdam montanos significat. Vides igitur, quomodo in toto vocabulo turpiter, quod haud tamen mirum, errès. Levis quidem illa in linguam nostram iniuria, in vñica tantum voce: quoniam plures, haud dubie, non noras.

Idem alijs etiam vsu venit: Non enim probandum est, quòd quidam, dum Islandiæ descriptionem, ab Islandis acceptam, ederet, maluerit omnia, aut certè plurima promontiorum, sinuum, montium, fontium, fluminum, telæ quorum, vallium, collium, pagorum nomina deprauare (quòd nostræ linguæ ignarus, non sciret à nostratibus accepta satis exactè legere) atque corrumpere, quam prius ab ipsis Islandis, qui tum temporis, id est, Anno 1585. 1585. in Academia Hassniensi vixerunt, quomodo singula legi ac scribi deberent, edificere: Ipsum certè hac natiuorum nominum & appellationum voluntaria deprauatione, (qua factum est, ut ipsi ea legentes, paucissima nostra agnoscamus) in linguam nostram, alioqui puram & auitam penè elegantiam retinentem, non leuiter peccasse reputamus.

Cæterum iam plurima Islandiæ miracula, quæ quidè scriptores nostri attigerunt, sic utcumq; examinauimus. Sed tamen priusquàm alio diuertamus, in hac parte attingendum videtur, quod idem ille in mappa Islandiæ, quam sub suo nomine, prædicto anno edi fecerat, de quobus, præter supra dictos, fontibus Islandiæ prodidit: quorum alter lanas albas colore nigro, alter nigras albo, inficiat. Quod quidem ubi acceperit, aut vnde habeat, scire equidem non possumus: Nec enim apud nostros, nec apud extraneos scriptores, reperire licuit. Sed vnde cumque est, fabula est, nec veritatis micam habet. Quamvis autem sit incredibile, Lanas nigras albo infici colore, cum traditum sit à Plinio, Lanarum nigras nullum imbibere colorem: Tamen simile quiddam narratur à Theophrasto: Flumen esse in Macedonia, quod oves nigras, albas reddat. Et illa, cuius etiam superius memini, rapsodia Noruagica, speculum scilicet illud Regale, hos ipsos fontes, Islandiæ, quæ hodie Hybernia, non Islandiæ esse affirmat. Quod forsan Lectori imposuit, in lingua peregrina, pro R, S, legenti.

Non maiorem fidem meretur, quod Historicus quidam habet: Esse in Islandia saxum, quod montium prærupta non extrinseca agitatione, sed propria nativag, motione percollet: Id qui credere volet, quid incredibile ducet? Est enim commentum tam inauditum, ut nullum eius simile, fabularos fuisse Epicuræos (qui tamen multa incredibilia excogitasse Luciano visi sunt) cōfiteret: Nisi fortè hominem, qui Islandis proprio nomine Stein dicitur, sentit Historicus rupes quasdam circuisse, vel circumreptasse, Quod, etsi ridiculum est in Historiâ miraculosam referre, hominem scilicet moveri vel ambulare, tamen ad salvandam Historici fidem, simulandum: ne figmentum illud, per se satis absurdum, nec dignum quod legatur, durius perstringamus.

Eodem crimine tenentur, quicumque Islandiæ, coruos albos, picas, lepores, & vultures adscripserunt: Perrarò enim vultures, cum glacie marina, sicut etiam vrios (sed hos sæpius quàm vultures) & cornicum quoddam genus, Islandis Islakrakur, advenire observatum est. Picas verò & lepores, ut & coruos albos, nunquam Islandia habuit.

Atque hæc ferè sunt, quæ de prima commentarii nostri parte per quotidianas occupationes, in præsentia, afferre licuit. Quæ in hunc finem à me scripta sunt, (quod etiâ prius testatus sum,) ut scriptorum de terra ignota errores, & quorundam etiam affectata vanitas, patefierent: Neque enim eorum famæ quicquam detractum cupio: Sed quod veritati & patriæ, operam meam consecraram, illa, quæ hæcenus dicta sunt à multis, de Insula, fidem valde exiguum mereri, necesse habui ostendere: ac ita mihi viam ad sequentia de incolis sternere.

Absolutis hæcenus miraculis Islandiæ, (cum nonnullis alijs, primæ parti annexis) quæ dum scriptores, velut Agamemnonios quosdam fontes, imò, ut quiddam præter & contra omnem naturam, mirantur, nec non variè deprædicant, minus veritati ipsi, & authoritati suæ consulunt; monet propositæ orationis series, ut ad alteram commentarii partem nos conferamus, quæ est de incolis: Vbi quid primùm dicam, aut vnde initium sumam, non satis tenco. Tanta enim sunt in nos ultimos Islandos, & tot quorundam ludibria, tot opprobria, tot scommata, tot diçteria, (Atque inter hæc etiam nonnulla eorum, qui simplicissimam veritatem profiteri volunt, nempe historicorum) ut si singula recensere velim, non aliud quàm Icaria numerum dicere coner aqua. Sed, ut dixi initio, non cum omnibus æquè stricto iure agemus. Nam licet Kranizius, Munsterus, Frisius, & alij, nimis audacter multa de gente nostra scripserint: Tamen suis monumentis de studijs liberalibus alioqui benè meriti, etiam apud nos eo erunt in precio, quo merentur. Verum interea, etsi quis velit eos à calumniandi nota liberare, tamen non leue est, eos res quasdam tam absurdas, impossibiles & ridiculas proposuisse, cuiusmodi illa fuerunt, quæ hæcenus exposuimus, tum impias, & atrocitate mendaciorum horrendas, cuiusmodi iam sequentur aliquot, in historias reuulisse. Ast alijs, quicumque sunt, qui quotidianis conuicijs nationem Islandorum incessunt, responsio, quam merentur, parata esse debet: Ex quorum numero, scurra ille fuit, qui rhythmis aliquot, in gentis nostræ contumeliam, Germanica lingua editis, nomen suum immortali de decori consecrauit.

Quapropter, ut instituti nostri ratio exigit, dum scriptorum de hac re monumenta persequimur, etsi quædam in eis occurrant, quæ contumeliæ parum habent, nos tamen pluraque excutiemus, & errores, ut hæcenus, annotabimus: tum si quid veri in erea attulerint, id nequaquam dissimulabimus. Ac eo modo, primùm Munsterum, Kranziûm, Frisium, & si qui sunt alij, audiemus, Graculo illo, cum suis rhythmis Germanicis, dira calumnia infectis in postremum, ut dignus est, reiecto locum. In hunc igitur modum, primùm de fide seu Religione Islandorum: Deinde de ipsorum moribus, institutis seu viuendi ratione, authores isti scribunt.

Adalbertus Metropolitanus Hamburgensis, Anno Christi 1070. vidit ad Christum conuersos Ifflandos: licet ante susceptam Christi fidem, lege Naturali viuentes, non multum à lege nostra discrepantes: itaque, petentibus illis, ordinauit quendam virum sanctum, primum Episcopum, nomine Iffleif.

Krantzius his verbis, & Munsterus alibi, fidei seu Religionis Christianæ dignitatem Ifflandis videntur adscribere: Facerentq; & se, & veritate dignum, nisi eandem aliàs nobis adimerent, Nam (vt de Krantzio infra) Munsterus, quæ supra prodidit, de fide nostra, seu opinione circa Inferni locum situmque, omnino est à Christiana pietate alienum: Velle scilicet scrutari arcana, quæ Deus sibi soli reſeruauit, ouæq; voluit nostrum captum excedere: Non enim reperitur de hac re quicquam in literis sacris, vbi locus vel situs inferni seu ignis æterni, Diabolo & Angelis ipsius, adeoq; damnatis omnibus animabus destinati, determinetur, aut circumſcribatur; Nullum inquam, infra terram, seu in ea, aut vlla alia huius mundi parte, corporalem seu localem situm illi damnatorum carceri pagina sacra assignat: quinimò, terram hanc interituram, & terram nouam & cœlos nouos, iustorum & sanctorum habitacula, creanda affirmat: Apoc. 2. 2. Petri 3. Esa. 65. Quare Christianus rerum adeò abstrusarum inquisitionem libenter præterit: tum dogmata nullis apertis & illustribus scripturæ sacræ testimonijs stabilita, velut certa & vera recipere, aut alijs tradere, nefas esse ducit. Deut. 4. & 12. Esa. 8. Matth. 17. 2. Timoth. 3.

Deinde etiam pugnat acriter cum Religione Christiana, quo Munsterus & Krantzius Ifflandos ornant, encomium: Eos videlicet, catulos ac pueros suos æquo habere in precio. De quo infra, ſectio. 7. Sic igitur ſecum diſſidet Munſt. dum quos Chriſtianos aſſerit, inferni architectos aliàs facit: Item, Krantzius & Munsterus, dū quos fide Chriſto inferos affirmant, eodem omni pietatis & honeſtatis ſenſu exuunt: quòd ſcribant filios ab his, non maiore cura, quàm catulos diligi.

Hic cum domi suæ à 100. viris coniuratus obcedem à filio ipsius, ipso tamen iulcio patriam cingeretur, & inimicis domum vndiq; igni succendentibus, sibi videret supremum fatum instare, ait tandem. Hæc quidem fato, hoc est, voluntate diuina accidunt. Cæterū spem & fiduciam in Christo sitam habeo, nos (de se & vxore loquens) licet corpus hoc nostrum caducum, inimicorum flammis, mortalitatis corruptionem subear, ab æternis tamen flammis liberatum iri. Sicq; inter has voces, & flammarum sæuitiam, vitam, An, Christo 1010. cum vxore & filio homicida, finiuit. Vox profectò filijs Dei non indigna, animæ, cum mortis acerbitate luæantis luminum solatium arguens.

Hæc ideo addidi, vt ostendam, quā coniectura adducar ad existimandum mox initio Christianismi (vt sic loquar) apud nos recepti, non fuisse tam deceptas & errorum tenebris immerfas hominum mentes, quā nunc, paulò ante hæc nostra tempora fuerunt.

Anno Domini 1070. uidet ad Christum conuersos Islandos.

Krantzius.

DVbium nobis est, utrum hi verbis dicere voluerit Krantzius, Islandos primum Anno Domini 1070. ad Christum esse conuersos: an verò, prius quidem esse conuersos non neget, sed eo primum annoid Adalberto innouisse dicat. Vtrumuis autem asseruerit, tamen fidei ipsius hoc loco suspectam reddunt annales & Chronologia nostræ gentis antiquissimæ, quæ contrarium testantur: quibus utrum malis, de rebus nostris proprijs & domesticis & intra nostræ insulæ limites gestis credere, an verò Krantzio, aut cuius alteri in nostratum rerum historia peregrino, sit penes tuum, candide Lector, arbitrium. Ego profectò multis adducor ut nostris potius assentiar. Nostrates enim nota tantum & ferè domestica asserunt; ille peregrina & ignota. Hi suas Chronologias sine aliarum omnium nationum labe, macula & sugillatione contextuerunt tantummodo, ut rebus gestis suum verum tenip^o seu æram assignarent; ille quædam cum re & veritate pugnancia in contumeliâ gentis nostræ ignotissimæ, historiæ suæ admiscuit, ut paulò post apparebit: hi omnium episcoporum Islandiæ nomina, annos, ordinem & successum describunt; ille vnius tantum mentionē facit, idq; longè secus quam res habet. Porò vt hi fidem faciam, pauca, quæ in vetustissimis nostris annalibus de Islandia ad Christum conuersa, & de Episcoporum in nostris Ecclesijs successione reperi, quorum etiam fides apud nos publicè recepta est, cum extraneis communicabo. Quæ tamen leuiuscula, nec omnia prorsus digna quæ scribantur, scribenda tamen omninò sunt ad nostratum rerum veritatem, aduersus Krantzium & alios asserendam: Sic igitur habent.

Anno Christi 874. prius quidem, ut ante commemorauimus, inuenta, sed tunc primum à Noruagis (quorum princeps fuit Ingulphus quidam, è cuius nomine promontorium Islandiæ orientalis Ingulphs hofst appellacionem traxit) occupata est Islandia. Hi plures quam 400. cum cognatis & agnatis & præterea numerosa familia nominatim in annalibus nostris recententur: nec illorum tantum numerus describitur, sed quas oras, quæ littora, & quæ loca mediterranea, singuli occupauerint & incoluerint, & quomodo primi inhabitatores, fretis, sinibus, portubus, Isthmis, porthmis, promontorijs, rupibus, scopulis, montibus, collibus, vallibus, telquis, fontibus, fluminibus, riujs, ac deniq; villis seu domicilijs suis nomina dederint, quorum hodiè plæraq; retinentur & in vsu sunt, apertè narratur. Itaq; Noruagi occupatæ iam Islandiæ 60. annorum spacio, aut circiter, habitabiles partes sua multitudine implent: Centum verò propemodum annis Ethnici manserunt, si paucissimos, qui in Noruagia fortè sacro fonte abluti fuerant, excipias. Annis autem vix centum à primo ingressu elapsis, mox de religione Christiana agi coeptum est, nempe circa annum Domini 974. quæ res non sine insigni rebellionē plusquam 20. annis variè à multis tentata est. Commemorantur autem duo Episcopi extranei, qui cum alijs, in conuertenda ad fidem Christi insula, diligenter laborarint: Prior Fridericus, Saxo natione, qui anno 981. ad Islandos venit, atque docendi munere strenuè functus est, ac tantum fecit, ut Anno 984. sacræ aedēs Islandis in vsu fuerint.

874

974

Fridericus Saxo.

Alter verò ille extraneus Episcopus siue concionator, quem Thangbrandt nuncupauere, anno 997. in Islandiam primum venit.

Hinc post 26. annorum disceptationem de religione, tandem Anno 1000. in conuentu generali omnium incolarum decretum est, vniuersali eorundem consensu, ut Ethnicorum numinum cultu seposito, religionem sectarentur Christianam.

Anno dom. 1000.

Rursus in solenni incolarum conuentu Anno 1050. sancitum est, ut leges seculares seu politica (quarum constitutiones allatas ex Noruagia quidam Vlfothus, Anno 926. Islandis communicarat) vbique cederent iuri Canonico seu diuino.

Anno 1056. abijt peregrè ex Islandia Iseifus quidam, in Episcopum Islandiæ ordinandus.

Redit ordinatus in Islandiam, & Cathedram Scalholtensem adijt Anno 1057. Morit^{ur} 1080. Etatis 74.4. Kalendas Iulias.

Videbuntur forsitan hæc minuta, concisa, vilia, nec narratione satis digna, cum multis fortè quæ sequuntur: Sed nec historiam Romanam contextimus, nec tam minuta erunt, quin contra Krantzium & aliorum errores conuincendos, prout nostrum est institutum, valeant. Et certè, quantum ad fidem nostratum Chronologiarum, constat Saxonem Grammaticum non parum illis tribuisse: Cuius, in præfatione suæ Daniæ, hæc sunt verba. Nec Thylensum inquit, (sic enim Islandos appellat) industria silentio obliteranda: qui cum ob nativam soli sterilitatem, luxuria nutritis carentes, officia continuè sobrietatis exerceant, omniq; vitæ momenta ad alienorum operum notitiam conferre soleant, inopiam ingenio pensant. Cunctarum quippe nationum res gestas cognosse, memoriaq; mandare, voluptatis loco reputant, non minoris gloriæ indicantes, alienas virtutes asserere, quam proprias exhibere. Quorum thesuros Historicarum rerum pignoribus refertos curiosus consulens, haud parnam præsentis operis partem ex eorum relationis imitatione contexti: nec arbitros habere contempsit, quos tanta vetustatis peritia callere noni. Hæc Saxo. Quare lubet Episcoporum Islandiæ Catalogum

Catalogum persequi, vt ex annalibus nostris continuata diligenter, quoad eius fieri potest, omnium series, his quæ de primo Illeiso contra Kranizium attulimus, fidem faciat, Hic membrum ſecundum initium ſumit, de incolarum viuendi ratione & moribus. Et primum, quibus vtantur edificijs ſeu domibus: nempe ſecundū Muſterum, Krantzium, Friſium, &c. Specus & montium cauernis. Quamuis autem in ſplendidis edificijs, alijsq; id genus mundani ornatus pretioſis rebus parum ineſt, quod ad verè beatam vitam conferre queat, tamen nec hîc veritatem tacere poſſumus: dicimusq; omnino Cosmographos & Historicos in errore etiam hîc verſari. Etenim, cuiuſmodi gentis publica domicilia eſſe ſcribunt, ea ſunt tantum in paucis locis, tum magalia, vt opilionum, tum piſcatorum caſæ & receptacula, eo tantum anni tempore quo piſcaturæ operam dare, aut propter gregem excubare opus habent. At ipſas domus, ſeu ipſa hominum domicilia, antiquiſ quidem ſatis magnificè & ſumptuoſè, quoad huius terræ fert conditio, ligno, ceſpite & ſaxis habuerunt Inſlandi conſtructa, vſq; ad illud tempus, quo illis cum Noruagis, qui ligna ſufficiebant, negociatio, & mercium commutatio eſſe deſijt, quæ inde paulatim collabi incipiunt: Cùm nec ſyluas edificijs aptas habeamus, nec fluuium maris beneficio iam vt olim ad litora, quod minima ex parte ſufficiat, adſeratur: Nec mercatores extranei inopiæ noſtræ ſuccurrant. Vnde plurima rura ignobiliora ab antiqua illa integritate multum declinarunt, & iam quædam collapſa ſunt, quædam ruinam minantur. Nilominus multa ſunt prædia, multæ villæ, quas haud faciliè recenſuero, quarum ædificia veterem illam excellentiam imitantur, & quarum domus ſunt maximæ, & latæ & longæ, tum plarumque benè altæ. Vt exempli gratia, Prædia ſeu villæ, quæ cubilia habent pluſquam 50, cubitos longa, 10, lata, alta 20. Tum reliquas domus, vt cœnaculum, hypocauſtum, penurarium &c. huius ſua proportionem reſpondentes. Poſſum multa noſtratum ædificia ampla & vaſta, nec in ſpeciem deformia, nec ob artis ſtructuram & ſumptuoſam firmitudinem, ſeu robur, contemnenda cum aliquot delubris, ſiue ſacris ædibus, ſolis lignis, antiqua & operoſa grauitate & pulchritudine exſtructis commemorare: Cuiuſmodi eſt templum Cathedrale Holenſe atrium habens, cuius columnæ vtrinque quinque, vlnas 14, altæ, 5. circiter craſſæ: tum trabes ac tigna, & reliquum culmen, huic ſubſtructioni proportionaliter reſpondens. Ligna ad hoc ipſum atrium Anno 1584, horrenda tempeſtate collapſum, clementiſſimus Rex noſter D. Fridericus, cuius nobis ſacraſſima eſt memoria, Anno 1588, benigniſſimè largitus eſt. Ipſum verò templū atrium ſuum omni quantitate manifeſtè excedit: tum templi intima pars quæ chorus appellari ſolet, & templi mediuſculi, & atrio magnitudine non nihil cedit. Erat autem hoc longè maius olim, vt accepi Schalholtenſe, quod iam bis concrematum, ad inferiorem magnitudinem redactum eſt. Prætereà aliquot alia templa noſtræ Inſulæ, horum antiquam magnificentiā imitantia licet non æquantia. Sed hîc nequaquam res exigere videtur, vt in prolixiorẽ eius rei deſcriptionem euager. Vt enim Domus & ædificia noſtra nihil deprædicamus: ita eorundem nos nihil pudet, quod contenti paupertate noſtra Chriſto gratias immortales agamus, qui à nobis viſitæto nō dedignatur recipi, quodq; templa & domus noſtras, quas Muſterus, Krantzium, & Friſius piſcium & balenarum offibus non verè dicunt exſtructas, non aſpernetur magis, quàm illa extraneorum culmina marmorea, parietes vermiculatos, pauimenta teſſellata, reliquumque id genus ornamenti.

SECTIO TERTIA.

Munsterus.
Krantzius.

Communi tecto, victu, statu, (hic Krantzius habet, strato) gaudent cum iumentis. Item: Solo pastu peccorum & nunc captura piscium viſſitant.

HAcc sunt & sequentia, quæ Krantzius suo Munſtero præmanſa, in os ingeſſit, adeo vt Munſtero non opus fuerit ea vel ſemel maſticare, quod ex collatione vtriuſq; patet. Munſterus enim hæc opprobria, vt ex Krantzj in ſuam Noruegiæ præſatione hauſta degluſcit, ita eadem cruda lib. 4. Cosmographiæ capit 8. in gentem noſtram euomit. Quæ hætenus fuerunt, etſi ſatis graua ſunt, tolerabilia tamen erant. Hoc verò commentum maligniſſimum, & quæ ſequentur, non facilè eſt ſine ſtomacho præterire. Noſtrum igitur eſt, etiam hic veritatem aſſerere, & mendacium in Authoris caput retorquere.

Tecto. Primum igitur quod de communi tecto, (vti etiam de victu & ſtatu) cum iumentis dicunt, falſum & erroneum clamamus, teſte non modò re ipſa, ſi quis id hodiè perquirere volet: Sed etiam multorum extraneorum, qui aliquot apud nos annos egerant, & veritati plus quam gentem noſtram calumniandi affectui tribuunt, experientia; qui ipſi domos & habitationes noſtras viderunt, & norunt in ſingulis prædijs ſeu villis, multas eſſe diſtinctas domus: nempe in abiectiſſimis & viliſſimis 7. vel 8. in maioribus, nunc decem, nunc 20. In maximis, nunc 40. nunc 50; quæ vt plurimum, & tecto & parietibus diſtinctæ, vni poſſeſſori vel domino, raro duobus aut tribus, rariſſimè pluribus inſeruiunt, ac vſibus quotidianis & domeſticis ſufficiunt. Vnde facilè intelligis, Lector, quàm verè eodem tecto cum iumentis vtantur Iſlandi, cum ſinguli ruſtici in hac domuum varietate, peculiaria bouilia, ouilia, equilia, agnilia, debitis intervalis diſſita habeant, quæ ſerui, quoties opus eſt, petunt, vnde ruſus habitationem ſubinde repetunt.

Quod autem quidam in mappa Iſlandiæ de prouincia Skagethord annotauit, ſub eodem tecto homines, canes, ſues & oues, viuere, partim falſum, partim minimè mirandum eſt. De ouibus quidem, vt iam dictum eſt, & præcipuè ſuis (cum illa prouincia ſues non habeat) falſum: De canibus haud mirum, cum illis nec regum aulæ caruerint nec hodiè carcant, vt nimis omnibus eſt notum. Sed de canibus paulò poſt. Sect. 7. huius.

Victu. An iumentorum pabula poſſint commodè victus appellatione contineri, nieriò dubitauerim: Cum Doletus, Ciceronis interpretem agens, dicat: Victum, inquit, cum iure conſultis, ita exponemus, vt victus verbo contineantur, quæ eſui, potui, cultuiq; corporis, quæque ad viuendum homini ſunt neceſſaria. Et Vlpianus, de verborum ſignificat. Iſdem verbis victum definiit. Hoc loco verò Authores illi, etiam iumentorum pabula, victum appellant.

Cæterum videamus quomodo hic eluceat veritatis & candoris præſtantia. Iumenta non habemus præterquam equos & boues: His gramina & ſcenum (niſi vbi ſceni inopia obrepi) pabulum, aqua potum præbet. At hi ipſi ſcriptores fatentur, Iſlandos piſcibus, buiro, carnibus, tum bubulis, tum ouillis, etiam frumento, licet pauco & aduentitio, viuere. Non igitur cibum habent cum brutis communem, quod tamen iſdem his verbis aſſerunt: Communi victu gaudent cum iumentis: Quod quid ſit Munſtero, ipſe paulò ſuperius haud obſcure docuit. Iſlandia, inquit, populos multos continet, ſolo pecorum paſtu, & nunc capitur a piſcium viſſitantes. Quid autem eſt pecorum paſtus, aliud, quàm pecorum cibus? ait Doletus: niſi Munſterus fortè pecorum paſtum, ipſa pecora ad paſtum hominum inactata appellet: cui, vt exiſtimo, vſus Romanorum refragatur, qui, vt homines veſci, ita pecora paſci docuit: hominumque victum, pecorum autem, paſtum & pabulum vocari iuſſit. An verò exiſtimem tam dementes fuiſſe Munſterum & Krantzium, vt ſenſerint Iſlandos graminibus & ſceno viuere? Quo miſeriæ Nabuchodonozor, diuinæ vltionis iugum ſubiens, redactus eſt, Dani. 4. 30. Facile dabimus multa, quibus homines, non modò noſtrates, ſed veſtrates quoque veſcuntur, iumenta & pecora fortè non reiſcere, ſi familiari pabulo deſtituantur. Vt equi frumento & panibus hordeaceis paſcuntur: iſdem lac (quemadmodum etiam vituli & agni) & cereuiſiam, ſi offeratur, bibunt, & quidem auidè. Sed & canes quæuis ſercula & cibaria deuorant. An idcirco quiſquam dicet, homines communè victu cum canibus & iumentis gaudere?

Iam quæcunq; famis graſſantis tempore contigère, pro vniuerſali gentis alicuius conſuetudine in hiftoriam referri non debent. Vt non licet nobis de extraneis ſcribere, huius aut illius terræ populos canum, murium aut felium vſu victitare ſolitos, etſi fortè fame, ſue obſidioe, ſive alioqui annonæ charitate inualeſcente immiſſa, id factitarint.

Potum autem interdum eſſe multis cum iumentis communem non magnoperè contraibimus: nenipè a quam lympidiſſimam, naturalem illum potum, omnibus animantibus à Deo creatum: quem etiam ex parte, medicinæ conſulti comendant, imò nec patres Hebræi, nec ipſe Seruator noſter ſaſtidiebat.

Ad amiſtum verò quod attinet, (Nam & amiſtum victus vocabulo comprehendimus) nequaquam quaquam hic cum iumentis communis est. Illa enim pilis & villis natura (quod Munsterum & Krantzium nouisse iuram) vestiuit: homines, alioqui nudi, pannis corpus induere necesse habent. Hæc indumenta, quæ quidem Islandia suppeditat, ex lanis ouium conficiuntur. Sed non cogitaram idè rectè dici, amictum esse nobis cum ouibus communem, siue eundem. Utuntur etiam extranei pannis ex ouilla lana confectis, licet artificio subtiliore. Sed de indumentis nihil: Stultum enim est, ex eolaudem vel superbam æstimationem quærere, quod naturæ nostræ infirmitatem arguit.

Statu. Restat ille status, quem cum brutis habere communem dicimus. Qui qualis aut cuiusmodi sit, aut cum esse velint nostri scriptiores, certè non faciliè assequor. Status, inquit Doletus, est vel corporis, vel causarum, vel ordinis & cõditionis. Certè alium esse statum nostri corporis, quàm iumentorum (nam præter duos pedes etiam manus habemus, & corpore ac vultu sursum erecto incedimus) alium item ordinem & conditionem nostram ducimus. Illi boni viri, si id de se aut alijs cognitum habent, fateantur. Nos hæc tam vana & in Deum creatorem nostrum tam contemptibilia iridemus, nec prolixiore tractatu dignamur.

Cæterum quia nostrum est, nec amoris patriæ, nec vili rei tantum tribuere, quin plus semper & vbique veritati largiamur: Dicam quid sit, quod huic infami scriptorum conuicio occasionem fortè dederit.

Sunt in vicinia Schalholtie, ad littus Islandiæ australe, paræchiolæ tres, inter duos rapidissimos amnes Chiozsa & Disfiss aâ interceptæ; quæ & syluis & cespitibus, consueto gentis ad focos alendos fomite, ferè destituuntur. In istis paræchijs habitantes, & si qui sint vicini, quamuis plures eorum, vt de omnibus rebus, ad rem familiarem pertinentibus, ita etiam de his, quæ ad focos & balnea opus habent, sibi opportunè prospiciunt: Tamen sunt inter eos quidam, sed infimæ tantum fortis coloni, qui quoniam istis rebus domi destituuntur, nec aliunde petere eas valeant, in culinis scæno ad coquendos cibos vtuntur: Ast vbi hyemis niuosa sequitia horrida ingruit, coloni isti miseri ad suum bouile refugiunt, illic scilicet exstructis tabulatis interditi operas domesticas exercentes, à bobus, cum focos habere nequeant, calorem mutuuntur, quemadmodum mihi ab alijs narratum est. Sicq; illi tantum, qui sanè paucissimi sunt, communi cum bobus recto, in bruma, vti quidem non gaudent, sed coguntur. Verum victum & statum longè alium habent, de qua re hæcenus. Hæc est in istis Paræchiolis quorundam fors & inopia, quorum conditio idcirco etiam apud nos fabula vulgi effecta est, quamuis non satis iuste. Vbi, quo iure toti genti tribuatur, quod vix ac ne vix quidem de istis paucis colonis verum est, libenter quæserim? Tædet de his pluribus agere: Tantum quia mihi cum Theologis res est, illud Salomonis ijs reponam, Qui calumniatur egenum, deridet factorem eius,

Proverb. 14.

Equidem quia gens hæc nostra pauper & egena est & fuit, ac veluti quidam mendicus inter diuites, tot extraneorum probra & scommata tulit. Sed videant cui exprobrent. Certè, si aliud nihil nobis cum illis commune est, tamen omnes ex iisdem constamus elementis, & vnus & idem omnium Pater, Deus.

SECTIO QVARTA.

In simplicitate sanctæ vitæ agunt, cum nihil amplius quærant, quàm natura concedit. Beata gens, cuius paupertati nullus inuidet. Sed mercatores Anglici & Dani quiescere gentem non sinunt, qui obpiscaturam euehendam terram illam frequentantes cum mercibus omnigenis vitæ quoq; nostra inuexerunt. Nam & fruges aquæ miscere in potum didicerunt, & simplicis aquæ haustus oderunt. Nunc aurum & argentum cum nostris admirantur.

Simplicitate. Equidem sanctæ simplicitatis laudem nobis attribui, meritò gaudemus: Sed id dolemus, quòd reperiatum etiam apud nos iustitiæ ac legum ingens deprauatio, ac magna anarchia, quam multorum scelerum myriades consequuntur; quòd pij & boni omnes quotidie deplorant. Id mali autè nequaquam supremi Magistratus, hoc est, Regis nostri clementissimi, sed verius nostræ culpa accidit: qui hæc quæ clàm ipso præposterè geruntur & quæ in inferiore magistratu desiderantur, ad maiestatem ipsius non deferimus.

Mercatores. Mercatores porò, non solum Angli & Dani, sed maximè Germani, vt nunc, ita olim terram nostram, non obpiscaturam sed pisces aucendos frequentantes, nequaquam artem illam, miscendarum strugum aquæ, Islandos docuerunt. Quippe ipsi Noiuagi primi, quòd nobis confert, terræ nostræ incolæ, à quibus oriundi sunt Islandi, artem illam, sicut etiam aureos argenteosq; nummos, secum ex Noruegia attulerunt, vt initio non fuerit minor argenti & auri vsus apud nos, quàm est hodiè.

Et quidem ante Danorum, Germanorum, Anglorum uè frequentes ad nos nauigationes, terra nostra multò, quàm nunc, senescens mundi incommoda, cælo solòq; perficiens, ferillior, in delectissimis quibusque locis, Cereis munera produxit.

SECTIO QUINTA.

Rex Dania qui & Noruagia quotannis prefectum immittit genti.

858

ANno Domini 846. natus est Haraldus Harfagre (quod auricomum vel pulchricomum dixeris) Qui deinde Anno 858. Rex Norugie designatus, ubi ætas virilique iustum incrementum acceperunt, formam imperij Norugici mutauit. Nam antea in minutas prouincias diuisum (quas ffylki vocabant, & qui his præerant regulos, ffylkis Konga) ad Monarchiam armis potentibus redegit. Id cum & genere & potentia valentes aliquot regni incolæ ægrè ferrent, patria exulare, quam ipsius Tyrannidis iugum non detrectare maluerunt. Vnde hi in Icelandiam, antea quidem à quibusdam visam & inuentam, at desertam tamen, colonias, dicto superius Anno 874. transtulerunt: Atque sic genti nostræ originem præbentes, se Ilandos nuncuparunt, quod nomen hodiè posteri retinent. Vixerunt itaque Ilandi diu, nullius imperium agnoscentes, annis scilicet 386. plus minus. Et quamuis Rex Norugie Haquinus ille conatus, qui omnium regum Norugie diutissimè, nempe plusquam 66. annos imperium gerebat, sæpè per legatos tentarat tributarios sibi facere Ilandos, constanter tamen semper restiterunt, donec tandem circa annum Domini 1260. homagium ipsi præstarent. Atque postea semper in data fide persistentes, & regibus Norugie parentes, translato per Margaretam, Daniæ, Sueciæ, & Norugie reginam, Norugorum imperio, ad Danos, vnà cum reliquis imperij Norugici Insulis, Serenissimum Daniæ regem; Dominum & Regem suum hodiè salutant.

SECTIO SEXTA.

Omnia inter eos communia sunt, præter uxores.

Krantzius.
Munsterus.

HOc loco præmittit Krantzius talem Ironiam.

Multa insignia in moribus illorum, &c. Porro etiam hic fidem vestram eleuat ingenium, ad asserendum res incomptas nimis proclue, cupidinem nouitatis, & nominis ac famæ; imò veritatis curam præposteram arguit, omnium & rerum personarumque; & temporum experientia: O scriptores suspiciendi.

Testes sunt leges politicæ, quibus inde ab initio cum Norugis vsi sunt eisdem Ilandi: De Rege & subditis: De foro, & his quæ in forenses disceptationes cadere possunt: De hereditatibus: adoptionibus, nuptijs, furto, rapinis, mutuo, contractibus & cæteris: Quæ omnia, quorum illis, quibus res omnes sunt communes? Testes sunt, tot de bonis mobilibus & immobilibus contentiones, turbæ & certamina, in foris ac iudicijs Ilandorum: Testes sunt Reges nunc Daniæ & olim Norugie, qui tot libellis supplicibus Ilandorum, ad componendas istas de possessionibus controuersias, olim & nunc interpellati sæpè fuerant. Testis contra seipsum Krantzius, cuius verba distinctione. i. huius, hæc fuerunt. Ante susceptam Christi fidem (Ilandi) lege naturæ viuentes parum à lege nostra discrepabant, &c. Si lege naturæ, certè lege illa iustitiæ, quæ tribuit unicuique suum: Si lege iustitiæ, certè proprietatum & dominiorum distinctiones in nostra gente locum habuisse oportet: Quamquam autem in hanc ipsam legem etiam in Ecclesia, & quidem satis atrociter, sæpè delinquitur: tamen & Ecclesia & Ethnici iustissimam & optimam esse semper fassi sunt.

Catulos suos & pueros a quo habent in precio: Nisi quod à pauperioribus facilius impetrabis filium quam catulum, &c.

QUamuis principio huius commentarioli censuerim, Munsterum & alios magni nominis viros, in ijs, quæ de Icelandia scripta reliquerunt, esse à calumniæ nota liberandos: num tamen id hic, etiam à candidissimo & maximè sincero quocunque fieri possit, non satis video. Quid enim mouit tantos viros, vt Nautarum maleuolas nugas & mendacia secuti, tam atroci & contumelioso opprobrio gentem nostram diffamarent, commacularentque? Nihil profectò, nisi secuta ridendi & contemnendi gentem pauperem & ignotam, licentia, & si quæ sunt huic vicia confinia.

Cæterum nōrint omnes non tam Ilandis, quàm ipsis Authoribus, incommodare hoc mendacium. Cum enim illud, & plurima etiam alia in historiam suam accumulans, efficiunt vnà, vt alibi quoque suspectæ fidei habeantur. Illudque quod ait Aristoteles, lucratur, vt cum vera dixerint, illis sine suspitione non credatur.

expende: Ne tantum Islandiæ Elogium intactum prætereamus, Docuerunt hactenus Krantzin & Munsterus: Islandos esse Christianos. Item: Islandos ante susceptam Christi fidem lege naturali vixisse. Item: Islandos vixisse lege quadam non multum à lege Germanorum discrepante. Item: Vixisse eos in sancta simplicitate. Adeldum igitur Lector, & quas Christianismi, Legis naturalis, legis Germanorū, sanctæ simplicitatis notas Auctores illi requirant, & in Islandis monstrent ac depingant, perpende. Vna fuit supra, quod infernum siue carcerem damnatorum montis Hecle voragine & radicibus circumscribant Islandi; de quo vide Sect. 1, huius: & sect. 7. prior. part. Altera nota, quod, cum Anabaptistis, proprietatum & dominiorum distinctiones tollant: de quo Sect. præced. Tertia cæque longè excellentissima hæc est: illi præclari affectus naturales, amor, cura, & animus tam pius & paternus Islandorum in liberos, quod videlicet eiusdem precij sint apud illos canes & filij, aut hi etiam vilioris. Siccine nobis Munstere & Krantzi Legem Christi, naturæ, Germanorum, & sanctam simplicitatem depingitis? O picturam præclaram & excellentem, quamvis nō prorsus Apellaam: O Inuentum acutum & admirandum, si benè authenticum: O scientiam plusquàm humanam, etsi non prorsus diuinam.

Nos verò Islandi, quamvis vltimi & gelidam conclusi ad Arcton, longè alias Christianismi notas requirimus. Nam & præceptum Dei habemus, vt quilibet proximū diligat velut seipsum. Iam nemo est, puto, qui seipsum non plus diligat, aut pluri faciat, quàm canem. Quod si tantus esse debet proximī cuiuslibet fauor, tanta æstimatio, tantus amor, quantus quæso erit in liberis? Quorum arctissimum amorem, præterquam quod ipsa parens natura nobis firmissimè cōciliauit, etiam Lex diuina curam summam in enutriendo habere iussit, (Exo. 12, 24. Ephe. 6, 4.) vt scilicet sint in sancto coniugio, Ecclesiæ quædam seminaria, omnis pietatis & honestatis exercitia: Prout vates ille pulcherrimè cecinit.

Item:

Coniugium humane quadam est Academia vite.

Vt iam satis constet, apud Christianos longè pluri faciendos & curandos filios, quàm canes: Et, si qui non aliter curent, Christianos non esse.

Sed & hic in prolem dulcissimam affectus naturalis in Ethnicis etiam satis apertè conspicitur: vt si quos hoc penitus exueris, eosdem etiam homines esse negaueris. Monstrant id matres Carthagenenses, cum tertio bello Punico adolescentes quicq; lectissimi obsides in Siciliam mitterentur, quos illæ fletu & lamentatione miserabili ad naues comitatur, & ex his quædam à filiorum complexibus ægrè diuulsæ, cum ventris pandi vela cernerent, nauæsq; è portu egredi, dolore stimulante, in subiectos fluctus dissiluere; Sabellico auctore. Monstrat Ægeus, qui nauem filij Thesi, cum velis atri coloris, ex Creta redeuntem cerneret, perijsse filium ratus, vitam in proximis vndis finiuit, Sabellico, lib. 3, cap. 4. Monstrat Gordianus senior, Africæ proconsul, qui similiter, ob rumores de morte filij, vitam suspensio clausit, Campofulgos lib. 5, cap. 7. Monstrant idem Iocasta Creontis filia, Anfolia Simonis F. Anius Tuscorum Rex, Orodes Rex Parthorum, & alij numero innumero: De quibus vide stat, lib. 2, Plutarchum, & alios, &c. Huc illud, Amor descendit, &c. Aded, vt videas non minus esse homini proprium, sobolem intimè diligere, & summo amore prosequi, quàm aui volare; vt si iam aliquando homines esse Islandos, nedum Christianos scriptores nostri fassi sint, hunc amorem & affectum in filios ipsidem, quantumvis inuiti & repugnantes, adscribant: sin minus, non modò hominis titulum & dignitatem illis detrahant, sed etiam infrà bruta & quasuis bestias, quæ ipsæ, stimulante natura, maximo prolis suæ & arctissimo amore tenentur, deprimant.

Non addam contra hoc impudens mendacium exempla etiam nostratium satis illustria: Tacebo leges nostras plagiarias ipsi Islandis antiquiores, quippe à Noruagis acceptas, quæ exstant in codice legum nostrarum, titulo Spamhelge: cap. 5. Si quis hominem liberum (quemuis, nedum filium) extraneis vendat, &c.

Iam verò si quis eò fortunæ deueniat, vt proprium filium, siue incolæ, siue extranei alicuius potestati, vel fame vel extrema quacunq; urgente necessitate, aut periculo, permittat, ne famelicum inedia deficientem aspicere cogatur, canem verò in proprias dapes referuet, Is minimè dicendus est filium æquo aut inferiore loco habere quàm canem, siue id faciant Islandi, siue extranei quilibet.

Offenderant fortè Germanorū vel Danorum nauet apud nos mendicos quosdā, liberis onus, quorū hic maximus est numerus, qui iocando, vt sunt nugis scurrilibus additi, dixerint: Da mihi aut vende hoc vel illud: Cūq; rogarint extranei: Quid tu mihi vicissim? Responderint mēdici. Habeo liberos 10. vel 14, dabo ex eis vnū vel plures, &c. Solet enim ista mendicorum colluies istiusmodi scurriles dialogismos cum extraneis instituere, Quod si tum quispiam bonus vir, misertus stoliditatis & inopiæ mendicorum, vno illos filio leuauerit, eique propter Deum in alijs terris, aliquo tandem modo bene protulerit, num mendicus, qui alioqui cum filio, fame & paupertate moriturus, filium miseri permittit & committit; filium istum suum minoris facit quàm canem? Prestitum est à multis tam Islandis quàm extraneis huiusmodi beneuolentiæ & commiserationis opus: ex quibus fuit vir nobilissimus Accilius Iulius à serenissimo rege Daniae olim missus ad Islandos, Anno Domini 1552. Qui ut audiui, 15. pueros pauperulos assumpsit & secum in Daniam auxi: Vbi postea ipsius beneficio singulos suo vitæ generi addictos, in viros bonos & frugi euasisse, mihi narratum est.

Quid si quis in extrema constitutus angustia, filium non modò vendat; sed si emptorem nò habet, ipse maectet & comedat? Nota sunt huius rei exempla: Parentum videlicet inuita crudelitaris in filios, stimulante nò odio vel astringia, sed inuitabili necessitate compellente. Num quis inde vniuersale gentis alicuius còuicium extruxerit? Legimus, in obsidione Samariæ matres duas filios suos maectasse, & coctos comedisse: 4. Reg. C. 6. Legimus in obsidione Ierofolymitana, quam flebilis fuerit vox miserimæ matris, filium misellum iam maectaturæ. Infans, ait, (referam enim Eusebij verba de hac re, etsi notissima, vt miseræ matris affectus appareat, miselle & infelix, cuius in hoc belli, famis, & seditionis tumultu, te commodè referuem? Si Romanorum subiiciamur imperio, illic seruitutis ingopressi, vitam infelicitèr exigemus. Sed seruitutem credo famem antenertet. Accedit factiosorum prædonum turba, his utrisq; miserij toleratum multo asperior. Age igitur mi gnate, sis matri cibis, sis prædonibus furia, sis communi hominum vitæ fabula, quæ res una ad Iudeorum calamitates deesse videtur. Quæ cum dixisset, natum trucidat, assatumq; dimidiū mox comedit, dimidium reservat, &c. Eusebius libro 3. capite 6. Iam quis est, qui non credat miserimam hanc matrem filium hunc suum, domini alicuius, si se obtulisset, apud quem credidisset sentiatum iri, aut emptoris possessioni fuisse permitturam? Nota est fames, Calagurium, Hispaniæ urbem, olim à Cneo Pompeio obsessam opprimens (Val. libro septimo cap. 7.) cuius ciuibus, vxores & liberi in vsum extremæ dapis conuersi sunt, quos profectò, pro cibarijs & alijs dapibus haud inuiti vendidissent. Nota est quoque fames, quæ Anno Domini 851. (Vincent. libro 25. cap. 36.) Germaniam attriuit, vt etiam pater filium suum deuorare voluerit. Notum etiam est, post mortem Henrici septimi Imperat. fame per triennium continuata, quomodo parentes liberos, vel liberi parentes deuorant, & præcipuè quidem in Polonia & Bohemia. Et ne exempla tantum antiqua petamus, accepimus tantam annonæ sæuitiam, Anno 1586, & 1587, in Hungaria grassatam fuisse, vt quidam alimentorum inopia adacti immanissimo Christianorum hosti proprios liberos vendiderint, & in perpetuum seruitutis iugum manciparint: quidam paruulos suos, quos vltèr tolerare non sustinebant, crudeli misericordia in Danubium proiecisse, & suffocasse dicantur. Sed, num hæc & similia exempla quempiam eò insanix adigent, vt dicat hanc vel illam nationem, liberos in escam propriam maectare consueuisse, Turcis libenter vendere, aut aquis submergere & suffocare solitæ esse? Non opinor. Sic neq; quòd mendici apud Islandos, extrema vrgente necessitate, cuius durissimi sunt morsus, filios suos libenter amittant, toti genti, & quidem probri loco, communiter adscribendū est à quoquam, nisi apud eundē omnis pudor, candor, humanitas, veritas exulent.

Cæterum optarim ego, parcius Islandis canum curam exprobrare illos populos, quorum matronæ, & præcipuè nobiles, canes in maximis delicijs habent, vt eos vel in plateis, ne dicam in sacris concionibus, sinu gestent, quem morem in peregrinis quibusdam, quos Romæ catulos siniarum & canum in gremio circumferre Cæsar conspexit, hac quæstione reprehendit, dum quæreret: Numquid apud ipsos mulieres liberos non parerent? Monens errare eos, qui à natura inditos sibi affectus, quibus in amorem hominum ac præcipuè sobolis incitarentur, in bestias transferunt, quarum deliciarum voluptas, Islandorum gentem, nunquam cepit aut habuit. Quare iam Munfere & Krantzii, alias nobis Christianitatis, (vt sic dicam) legis naturæ, legis item Germanorum, & sanctæ simplicitatis notas quærite,

Episcopum suum colunt pro Rege: ad cuius nutum respicit totus populus. Quicquid ex lege scripturis, & ex consuetudine aliarum gentium constituitur, quàm sanctè obseruant.

FVit equidem initio ferè ad repurgatam Euangelij doctrinam maxima Episcopi obseruantia; sed nunquam tanta vt exteris legibus aut consuetudini cederent nostræ leges politicæ, ex nutu Episcopi. Nec tempore Alberti Krantzii, multò minùs Munsteri (quorum ille 1517, hic 1552, post partum salutiferum decessit) Episcopi Islandorum regiam obrinuerunt auctoritatem, cum scilicet multi ex ijs, qui diuitijs paulò plus valebant, aduersus ipsos consurgere non dubitarint; quæ res apud nostros liquidò constar, Interim tamen Episcopi, anathematis fulmine terribiles, alios in suam potestatem redegerunt, alios furibunda sæuitia id temporis persecuti sunt, Portò etsi cum fuit magna, inò maxinia Episcopi obseruantia, tamè nunc dispulsi tenebris Papisticis, alia ratione homines Satan aggreditur, eorumq; mentes contemptus libertate & refractaria contumacia, aduersus Deum & sacrum ministerium, etiam hîc armare non negligit.

SECTIO NONA.

Illic visitant plerumq; piscibus, propter magnam penuriam frumenti, quod aliunde à maritimis ciuitatibus inferitur: & qui inde cum magno lucro pisces exportant. Item Munsterus, Illic piscibus induratis uiuntur loco panis qui illic non crescit. Munster.

VIdet Lector, quàm Munsterum iuuat, eadem oberrare chorda: vt cum de gente ignota nihil scribere possit, quod coloris aliquid habeat, vel falsâ afferre, vel eadem sæpius repetere, sicque cramben eandem recoquere iustineat: Dixerat enim paulò ante, Islandos piscibus vinere. Verba ipsius superius etiam recitata, hæc sunt, Islandia populos continet multos, solo peccorum pastu & nunc captura piscium visitantes, &c. Et vt cætera transeam in quibus leue quiddam notari poterat; Illud sanè, panem in Islandia non crescere, perquam verum est. Quod etiam illi cum Germania commune esse crediderim, quòd videlicet nec illic panis crescat, nisi forte in Munsteri agro, vbi etiam acetum naturale optimè crescit. Sed hæc, troporum indulgentia, scilicet, salua erunt. Ad conuicia autem, quæ ex victu Islandorum petunt extranei, infra paucis respondebitur, Sect. 15.

Incole res maiorum & sui temporis celebrant cantibus & insculpunt scopulis, atque promontorijs, vt nulla, nisi cum natura insuria, intercedant apud posteritatem. Munster. Krantzius.
Cytharædi, & qui testitudine ludunt, apud eos reperiuntur quàm plurimi, qui prædulci modulamine & volucres & pisces irretiant & capiant. Frisius.

Quin veterum gesta aliquot cantibus & poëmatibus nostratium, vt & soluta oratione, apud nos conseruentur, non negamus. Quòd verò à nobis aut maioribus nostris eadem scopulis vel promontorijs insculpta sunt, eam non licet nobis, vt neque illam tantam Citharædorum, aues aut pisces demulcentium, laudem accipere. Statuimus enim animi esse generosi ac veracis, vt crimina falsa refellere, ita laudem immeritam sibi haud vindicare, nec, etsi quis tribuat, agnoscere.

Sed cum scriptoribus iam dictis, viris alioqui spectatæ eruditionis & præclari nominis, qui tamen hæc ita inconsideratè scriptis suis interseruerunt, actionis finis esto.

Et iam magna mei pars est exhausta laboris:

Sed testat tamen scetus ille vipereus Germanicus, quem idcirco anonymum secundo partu mater edi voluit, vt venenatis aculeis nomen Islandorum tantò liberius pungeret.

Porro licet aduersus hanc bestiam in arenam descendere non dubitem, omnibus tamen constare volo, quoniam hoc animo faciam, videlicet, non vt cum illius pestifera virulentia, conuicijs aut maledicentia certem (Nam vt est in triuali paroemia, Vinco, seu vincor, semper ego maculor:)

Hoc scio pro certo, quod si cum stercore certo,

Sed vt bonis & cordatis omnibus, etiam extraneis, satisfaciam, qui maledicentiam istam Germanicam lecturi vel audituri sunt, aut olim audierint, ne & hi nos meritò calumniam tantam sustinere credant: Tum etiam vt alios qui istis virulentis rhythmis Germanicis, in gentis nostræ opprobrium vtuntur, & inde dicteria & contumeliosas subsannationes ad despiciendos Islandos petunt, ab illa mordendi licentia in posterum, si fieri possit, abducamus.

Ergò, ne longis ambagibus Lectori fastidium oratio nostra pariat, ad ea narranda accedam, quæ maledicus ille Germanus in suum pasquillum congeffit: Quem etiam sua de Islandis carmina Encomiastica recitantem in his pagellis introducerem, nisi præuiderem scetum illum probrosum, tot & tam varijs maledictis turgidum, omnibus bonis nauseam mouere posse, ac sua spurcitie ab ijs legendis abstertere.

Referam igitur præcipua, (ijs scilicet omisiss quæ cum alijs communia habet, atque hætenus ventilata sunt) sed, quàm ille, longè mitius; ne, vt dixi, linguæ ipsius obscena petulantia, aures bonæ & eruditæ offendantur: Qui ipsum videre aut audire volet, quærat apud propolas. Nobis inquam, non est in animo putida ipsius calumnia & conuiciorum sentina, has chartas inquinare. Primum igitur obiecit Germanicus hic noster, si Dijs placet, Historicus: Multos ex pastori-

1. Obiectio seu conuicium.

huius pasquilli legitur, quod tamen posterior editio eiusdem refutat: Dicens, eosdem pastores in integro anno tantū quinque concionari solitos: quæ duo quàm ritè sibi consentiant, videas bone Lector, cum constet Authorem mox à prima editione vix vidisse Islandiam. Ita scilicet plerumq; mendacium mendacio proditur, iuxta illud: Verum vero consentit: Falsum nec vero, nec falso.

Sed cum nostrum non sit veritatem vsipiam dissimulare, nos haud negandum ducimus conciones sacras circa id tempus, quo iste Sycophanta in Islandia vixit, nempe anno 1554, aut circiter multò fuisse rariores, quàm sunt hodiè, tum scilicet tenebris Papisticis vix dum discussis. Quod etiam de Psalmis Dauidicis à vulgo latinè demurmuratis, vt idè nostratibus exprobrat, intelligere est: Papistæ enim totam spem salutis in sua Missa collocantes, de concione aut doctrina parùm fuere solliciti. Postquam verò caligine illa exempti sumus, aliter se rem habere, Deo inprimis gratias agimus: Licet quorundā pastorum nostrorum tardam stupiditatem, segnitiam & curam præposteram non possimus omni modo excusare. Quod vtrum in nullos suorum popularium etiam competat, aliæ quoque nationes viderint.

SECTIO DVODECIMA.

2. Coniutium.

Secundò calumniatur vitiligator: Adulteria & scortationes non modò publica esse & frequentia scelera inter Islandos: sed ab ijs pro scelere ne haberi quidem.

ET si autem scèdissimæ istæ turpitudines etiam in nostra repub. non prorsus inusitatæ sunt: tamen cum omnibus constet in alijs quoque nationibus longè etiam frequentiores esse, cum ibi quoque populi frequentia maior: immeritò & malignè hoc nomine magis Islandos, quàm populos & gentes reliquas, quarum, vt dixi, nomen etiam plus nostratibus hoc crimine malè audit, notauit.

Et licet ex animo optarim longè minus ad scelera, & turpitudines in nostra patria conuiuari, quàm passim hic fieri videmus: tamen etiam innata illa mordendi libidine, hoc veterator in presenti conuitio attextuit: videlicet, quòd scelera ista ab Islandis pro scelere non habeantur. Nam in quà demum repub. id impudens ille asserere audeat? Illane; quæ in legem codicis II. titulo Dannhelge: cap. 28. iurauit; quæ statuit, vt iterum adulterium qui cum coniuge alterius commiserit, confiscatis suis bonis, capite etiam plectatur? Illane, quæ pro adulterio, à famulo cum vxore domini commissio, non ita dudum 80. thalerorum multam irrogauit? Illane, quæ eundem, si ad statutum tempus non soluerit vel vades dederit, in exilium proscribendum decreuit? Illane: cuius leges politicæ, quemuis in adulterio cum vxore, à viro legitime deprehensum, si euaserit, homicidij multam expendere iubent? Illane, cuius itidem leges politicæ, in complexu matris, filiae aut sororis, à filio, patre, vel fratre deprehensum, vitam suam dimidio eius, quod quis si eundem in fontem interfecisset, expendere teneretur, redimere iubent? Illane, cuius leges politicæ adulterium sceleris infandi nomine notarunt & damnarunt? Et in eo tertio deprehensum, capite plectendum seuerè mandant?

Cernis igitur, Lector benigne, quàm iniurium habeamus notarium, dicentem: Adulterium & scortationes in Islandia peccati aut sceleris nomen non mereri. Nam licet politici quidam hoc vel illud scelus impunitum omittant, non debet tota gens, non leges, non boni & pij omnes, eo nomine in ius vocari, aut malè audire.

SECTIO DECIMATERTIA.

3. Coniutium.

Tertium conuiutium est, quo fraudis & perfidiæ erga Germanos Islandis notam inurit. Fuit autem proculdubio famosi huius libelli author, cerdo & propola circumforaneus, multosq; Islandiæ angulos, sordidæ mercaturæ gratia, ostiatim adierat: quod ipse de se in præclaris illis suis rhythmis testatur, maximè Islandiæ partem sibi peragratam esse. Vnde cum ipse mala fide cū multis egerit (plerumq; enim fraus & mendacia coniunguntur, & mendacem se fuisse, hac ingenijsui experientia satis probauit) etiam fortè à se deceptorum fraudem esse expertus. Hinc illa in totam gentem criminatio extitit: Dissimulato interea, quia fide quidam Germanorum, quibus annua est nauigatio ad Islandos, cum nostris hominibus agant. Ea autem querela, cum non alios conuiuari, sed aliorum in gentem nostram immerita conuicia monstrare instituerim, consultò supersedeo.

SECTIO DECIMA QVARTA.

4. 5. 6. & 7. Coniutia.

Quarto: negat in conuiuijs quemquam discumbentium à mensa surgere: sed matres familias singulis conuiuijs quoties opus fuerit matellæ porrigere. Præterea variam conuiuiorum edendi bibendiq; rusticitatem notat.

Cubandi & prandendi ritus obijcit: quod decem plus minus in eodem lecto promiscuè viri cum feminis minis pernolent, inque lecto cibum capiant: atq; interea se non nisi alea aut latrunculorum ludo exercent.

Sexto. Calumniatur eosdem faciem & os urina proluere.

HÆc & huiusmodi plurima in gentem insontem, imò de se & suis optimè meritam, impurus calumniator euomit. Quæ quidem eius generis sunt, ut illi de his respondere prorsus dedignemur. Nam vt demus (quod tamen non damus) aliquid huiusmodi apud homines fordidos, & ex ipsa vulgi colluie infimos, quibuscū longè sapius, quàm bonis & honestis conuersabatur, animaduertisse præclatum hunc notarium Germanicū (vixerat enim, vt eius rhythmi testantur, diuisculè in locis maritimis Islandiæ, quo ferè promiscuum vulgus, tempore piscaturæ annuatim confluit, & tam extraneorū nautarum, quàm sua nequitia corruptum, sapius inhonestè mores & vitam instituit) Tamen manifestiorem etiam hoc loco iniuriam nobis facit, vitius nebulonis & desperati Sycophantæ turpitudine, totā gentē (vt ferè solent etiā alij) aspergendo, quàm vt refutatione vlla indigeat. Cuius rei etiam ipsi extranei in nostra Insula non parum versari, locupletissimi testes esse possunt.

Possem multas eius farinæ foeditates, rusticitates & obscenitates, etiam in ipsius natione deprehensas colligere. Sed odi facundiam caninam, nec in aliorum opprobriū disertū esse iuvat: nec tam tener esse volo, vt verbulis transuerberer. Id tantum viderint boni & pij omnes, cuius sit animi, pessima quæq; ab vno aut altero designata, toti genti obijcere. Si quis Germaniæ aut alterius nationes vrbes & pagos omnes peragret, & scelera ac mores pessimos, furta, homicidia, particidia, scortationes, adulteria, incestus, luxuriam, rapinas & reliquas impietates & obscenitates in vnum coactas, omnibus Germanis, aut alioqui alteri cuius toti nationi communes esse asserat, atq; hæc omnia insigniter mentiendo, exaggeret, sine optimæ rei studiosus habebitur?

Notum est enim porcos, cū hortos amantissimos intrant, nec hliū nec rosas aut flores aliqui pulcherrimos & suauissimos decerpere: Sed rostro in cœnum prono, quicquid est luti & stercoreis volutare, vertere & inuertere, donec impurissima, hoc est, suo genio apprimè congruentia eruant, vbi demum solida voluptate pascuntur.

Ad istum igitur modum hic porcus Rhythmistā, optima, & quæ in nostra Repub. laudibilia esse possunt, sicco pede præterit, pessima quæq; atq; ea, vel à nullo, vel admodum paucis designata; hoc est, suæ naturæ, & ingenio aptissima, vt se esse, qui dicitur, re ipsa probaret, corrasit: vnde posthac porci nomen ex moribus & ingenio ipsius factum, sortitor.

SECTIO DECIMA QVINTA.

Nonum conuiuium hic recensibimus, quod à victu, ac præcipuè cibo ac potu Islandorum ^{9. Conuiuium,} maledicus ille porcus, non vno aut paucis verbis, sed proluxa inuectiua petiuit: Nempe quod cibis vtantur vetustis, & insulsis, idq; sine panis usu: Tum etiam quod varia & incognita extraneis piscium genera illis sint esui, & aquam ac serum lactis in potum misceant. Quæ omnia venenatus hic paquillus diserta contumelia, & ingeniosa calumnia, pulchrè amplificauit.

Cæterum et si illum prolixiore responsione non dignemur: tamen propter alios, qui hodie hanc rem partim mirantur, partim haud leniter nostræ genti obijciunt, pauca hoc loco addenda videbantur.

Primum igitur totam hanc gentem bipartitò secabimus: In mendicos, & hos qui & se & cum alijs etiam mendicos alunt. Mendicorum, & eorum qui ad hos proximè accedunt, omnia cibaria recensere aut examinare haud facile est, nec quòd illos edere, aut edisse, extrema aliquando coëgit necessitas, reliquæ genti cibariorū genera aut numerū præscribere fas est. Nam & de suffocatis quidem non comedendis legem habemus inter canones, quorum seruantissima videri voluit antiquitas.

Deinde etiam tempora distinguemus, vt nihil mirum sit, grassante annonæ scæuitia, multa à multis ad explendam famem adhiberi aut adhibita fuisse, quæ aliàs vix canes pascant. Vt nuperimè de Parisiensibus accepimus, Anno 1590. arctissima Henrici 4. Nauarræ obsidione pressis, & famem Saguntinam, vt P. Lindebergius loquitur, perpeffis; eos non modò equinam, sed morticinam quoque carnem ex mortuorum ossibus in mortariò contusis farinæ pugilo vno aut altero misto, confectam, in suas dapes conuertisse; & de alijs quoque populis notum est, qui simili urgente inopia, etiam murium, felium & canum esu victitarent. Sic etiam Islandis aliquando vsu venit (quanquam à canina, murium & felium, vt & humana carne hætenus; nobis quantum constat, abstinerint) licet non ab hoste obsessis: Nam cum ad victum necessaria ex terra marique petant, & ab extraneis nihil commeatus, aut parum admodum aduehatur, quoties terræ marisque munera DEVS præcluserit, horrendam annonæ caritatem ingruere & ingruisse, & dira fame vexari incolas, necesse est. Vnde fit, ut illos qui in diem viuere soliti fuerint, nec præcedentium annorum superantes commeatus habuerint, extrema tentasse, quoties egestas vrserit, credibile. Cæterum, vtrum hæc res publico & perpetuo opprobrio magis apud Islandos, quàm alias nationes, occasionem meritò præbere debeat, candidis & bonis animis iudicandum relinquo.

Potè quod de gentis nostræ proprijs & consuetis alimentis multi obijcere solent, potissimum de carne, piscibus, butyro, absque sale inueteratis, Item de lacticijs, siumentum inopia, potu aquæ, &c. & reliquis: id nos in plurimis Islandiæ locis (nam sunt multi quoque nostratum, qui Danorum & Germanorum more, quantum quidem castis & temperatis animis ad mediocritatem sufficere debet, licet magna condimentorum varietate, vt & ipsis Pharmacopolijs, destituimur, mensam instruere & frugaliter viuere sustineant) ita se habere haud multis refragabimur, videlicet prædicta victus genera, passim sine salis condimento vsitata esse. Et insuper addemus, hæc ipsa cibaria, quæ extranei quidam vel nominare horrent, ipsos tamen extraneos apud nos, non sine voluptate, manducare solitos. Nam etsi frumenti aut faris penè nihil vulgò habeamus, nec sal, gulæ irritamentum, ad cibaria condienda, omnibus suppetit: docuit tamen Deus, opt. max. etiam nostros homines rationem tractandi & conseruandi, quæ ad vitam sustentandam spectant, vt appareat, Deum in alendis Islandis non esse ad panem vel salem alligatum. Quod verò sua omnia extranei iucundiora & salubriora clamant; negamus tamen satis causâ esse, cur nostra nobis exprobrent: Nec nos DEVM gulæ nostræ debitorem reputamus; quin potius totopectore gratias agimus, quod sine opiparis illis delicijs & lautitijs, quæ tam iucundæ & salubres putantur, etiam nostræ gentis hominibus, annos & ætatem bonam, tum valetudinem etiam firmissimâ, robur ac vires validas (quæ omnia statuimus boni & conuenientis alimentis, vt his luxurias esse indicia) concedere dignetur, cum ingenio etiam non prorsus tam crasso ac sterili, quàm huic nostro aëri & alimentis assignare Philosophi videntur, quod re libentius, quàm verbis multi fortasse nostratum comprobare poterant,

Sed hic vulgi iudicium, vt in alijs sæpè, etiam eos qui sapere volunt (iam omnes bonos & cordatos excipio) nimis apertè decipit: Videlicet hoc ipso, quod omnia, quæ illorum vsus non admittit, aut quæ non videntur, aut experti sunt antea, continuò damnant. Veluti, si quis, qui mare nunquam vidit, mare mediterraneum esse aliquod, non possit adduci vt credat: Sic illi sensu suæ experientiæ omnia metiuntur, vt nihil sit bonum, nihil conducibile, nisi quo illi soli viuunt: At profectò nos, eò dementiæ non processimus, vt eos qui locustis vescuntur, quod rum de alijs, tum Æthiopie quibusdam populis, ideo (autore Diodoro) Acridophagis appellatis, & Indiæ gente, cui Mandrorum nomen Clytharcus & Magestanes dederunt, teste Agararchide, didicimus; aut ranis, aut cancris marinis, aut squillis gibbis, quæ res hodiè nota est, vulgi propterea ludibrijs exponere præsumamus, à quibus tamen edulijs, in totum nostra consuetudo abhorret.

SECTIO DECIMASEXTA.

no. Conuicium.

DEcimo. Hospitalitatem nostris hominibus inhumanissimus porcus obijcit, Marsupium inquit, non circumferunt, nec hospitari aut conuiuari gratis pudor est. Nam si quis aliquid haberet, quod cum alijs communicaret, id faceret sanè in primis ac libenter. His quoque annectamus, quod templa, seu sacras adiculas domi propria à multis Islandorum extructas velut pudendâ quiddam commemorat: quodq; eas primùm omnium de manè oraturi petant, nec à quoquam prius interpellari patiantur. Hæc ille velut insigne quoddam dedecus in Islandis notauit.

Scilicet, quia nihil cum Amaricino, sui:

Nec porci diuina vnquam amarunt: quod sanè metuo ne nimis verè de hoc conuiciatore dicatur, id quod vel ex his vltimis duabus obiectionibus constare poterit.

Verùm enim uerò, cum ipse suarum virtutum sit testis locupletissimus, nos Lectorem eius rei cupidum ad ipsius hoc opus Poëticum remittimus, quod is de Islandia composuit, & nos iam aliquot proximis distinctionibus examinauimus: cuius maledicentiæ & sceditatis nos hic pro ipso puduit; ita, vt quæ is Satyrica, at quid Satyrica? Sathanica, inquam, mordacitate & maledicentia in nostram gentem scribere non erubuit, nos tamen referre pigeat: Tanta eius est & tam abominanda petulantia, tam arrox calumnia. DEVS BONE: Hoc conuiciorum plaustrum (paucissimam namq; attigimus: Nolui enim laterem lauare, & stulto, vt inquit ille sapientissimus, secundum secundum stultitiam suam respondere, cum in ipsius Rhythmis verbum non sit quod conuicio careat) qui viderit, nonne iudicabit pasquilli illius autorem hominem fuisse pessimum, imò facem hominum, tum virtutis ac veritatis contemptorem, sine pietate, sine humanitate?

Sed hinc merito dubitauerim, peiusne horum conuiciorum autor de Fflandis meritis sit, an verò Typographus ille Ioachim^{us} Leo (& quicumque sunt alij, qui in suis editionibus, nec suum nec vrbs suæ nomen profiteri ausi sunt) qui illa iam bis, si non sæpius, typis suis Hamburgi enulgaui. Hocce impune fieri sinitis, ó senatus populusque Hamburgensis? Hancce statuitis gratiam deberi Fflandiæ, quæ vrbi vestræ iam plurimos annos, exportatis affatim nostratium quibusuis commodis, pecudum, pecorumque carnibus, butyro & piscium copia quotannis, pendè immodica, quædam quasi cella penuraria fuit? Sensere huius Insulæ commoda etiam Hollandiæ olim & Angliæ vrbes aliquor: Præterea Danis, Bremensibus, & Lubecensibus cum Fflandis commercia diu fuerunt. Sed a nullis vnquam tale encomium, talem gratiam reportantur, qualis hæc est Gregoriana calumnia: In vestra, vestra inquam vrbe, nata, edita, iterata, si non terriata: quæ alias nationes, quibus Fflandia vix, ac ne vix quidem, nomine tenus, aliqui innotuerat, ad huius gentis opprobrium & contemptum armauit: quam à ciue vestro acceptam iniuriam, iam 30. annos, & plus eò, Fflandia sustinet. Sed etiam, in scio magistratu, eiusmodi multa sæpè fiunt: Neque enim dubitamus, quin viri boni eiusmodi scripta famosa indignè ferant, & ne edantur, diligenter caueant: cum tales editiones pugnent cum iure naturali: Ne alteri facias, quod tibi factum non velis: Et Casareo, de libellis famosis: in quo irrogatur pœna grauissima ijs, qui tales libellos componunt, scribunt, proferunt, emi venditque curant, aut non statim repertos discernunt.

Cæterum iam tandem receptui canamus: Nôsq; ad te, Fflandia parens carissima, quam nec paupertas, nec frigora, nec id genus incommoda alia, quamdiu Christo hospitium cupide & libenter exhibere non desistis, inuisam facient, conuertamus: Vbi te primum ad id quod modò diximus, nempe serium & ardens studium ac amorem D E I, & diuinæ scientiæ, nobis in Christo patefactæ, totis viribus hortamur: vt vni huic cuncta posthabeas, doctrinæ & verbi cupiditate flagres: Sacrum ministerium & ministros, non parum cures, non contempnas aut odio prosequare: sed reucrearis, foueas, ames. Contra facientes, pro impijs & profanis habeas: vt omnia ad pietatis & honestatis præscriptum geras, in vita priuata & communi, vt huic status & ordines Ecclesiastici & Politici, in vniuersum obtemperent: In vtroque vitæ genere, ab illa amussi seu norma æqui & boni dependeas, & cæteros qui pertinacia ac impietate ab ea defleunt, auerferis, quos æquum est poenis condignis affici, id quod magistratui curæ futurum non desidimus. In primis verò nullos nisi spectatæ fidei & probitatis viros, quique ad istas virtutes, reliquas huc pertinentes coniungant, ad gubernacula admittas, quæ ratione reliquis incommodis ritè occurrunt. Res ista enim, si probè curetur, vt videlicet, qui munus publicum gerunt, ex bonis omnibus optimi quique deligantur, improbi & huic rei inepti, procul inde arceantur; subditorum conditio, longè erit optatissima: vita & mores tantò magis laudabiles sequemur: pietas & honestas tantò erunt illustriores. At verò si secus fiat, si Pastores Ecclesiarum suo muneri, vel vita vel doctrina non respòdeant, si ad administrationem politicam promiscuè admittantur, quicumque eò propria leuitate, ambitione vel avaritia & contentione honoris, ruunt: si iidem criminum aut improbitatis, vel suspecti vel conuicti sint, aut suspectorum & conuictorum protectores, vel iidem illicitè indulgentes, quis tuus quæso demum futurus est status? quæ facies? quæ conditio? Certè longè omnium miserrima. Nec enim alio pacto citius ad ruinam & interitum tuum appropinquabis, quàm si istis te regendam commiseris, qui quod in ijs est, licet sint & ipsi ex tuis, iugulum tuum, propter emolumenta priuata, & odia latentia, quotidie petere cõtendunt. Quamobrem (ne ista pluribus agam) quanti intersit, vt hæc probè curentur, facile, ó Patria, intelligis.

Sed dum hæc tuis auribus à me occinuntur, utinam gemitus meos altissimos, qui sub hac ad te Apostrophe latent, Serenissimæ Regiæ Maiestatis aures exaudiant, apud quam ego pro te ita deploro damna publica, quæ ea de causa exoriuntur maximè, quòd patria nostra à regia sede, & conspectu, tantò intervallo sit remota, vt multi propterea tantò sibi maiorem sumant licentiam, & impunitatem securius committant. Cæterum ista numini iustissimo, quod æquis omnia oculis aspicit, committenda ducimus.

A BRIEF COMMENTARIE

of Iceland: wherein the errors of such as haue written concerning this Iceland, are detected, and the slanders, and reproches of certaine strangers, which they haue vsed ouer-boldly against the people of Iceland, are confuted.

By Arngrimus Ionas, of Iceland.

To the most mighty Prince and Lord, Lord Christian the 4. of Denmarke, Norway, and of the Vandals and Gothes, King elect: of Sleswic, Holste, Stormar, and Dithmarse Duke: Earle of Oldenburg, and Delmenhorst: His most gratiuous Lord.

That heroicall attempt of Anchurus, sonne of King Midas (most gratiuous prince) and that pietie towards his countrey in manner peerelesse, deserueth highly to be renowned in histories: in that freely and couragiously he offered his owne person, for the stopping vp of an huge gulf of earth, about Celœna, a towne in Phrigia, which daily swallowed multitudes of men, and what soeuer else came neere vnto it. For when his father Midas was aduertised by the Oracle, that the said gulf should not be shut up, before things most precious were cast into it: Anchurus deeming nothing to be more inualluable then life, plunged himselfe a line downe headlong into that bottomles hole; and that with so great vehemencie of mind, that neither by his fathers request, nor by the allurements and teares of his most amiable wife, he suffered himselfe to be drawne backe from this his enterprise.

Sperthius also and Bulis, two Lacedemonians, were not much inferiour to the former, who to turne away the reuenge of Xerxes that most puissant King of the Persians, entended against the Lacedemonians, for killing the ambassadors of his father Darius, hyed them vnto the sayd king, and that he might auenge the ambassadors death vpon them, not vpon their countrey, with bards, and constant mindes presented themselves before him.

The very same thing (most graciuous prince) which moued them, and many others being enflamed with the loue of their countrey, to refuse for the benefite thereof, no danger, no trouble, no nor death it selfe, the same thing (I say) hath also enforced me, not indeed to vndergoe voluntarie death, or freely to offer my selfe vnto the slaughter, but yet to assay that which I am able for the good of my countrey: namely, that I may gather together and refute the errors, and vaine reports of writers, concerning the same: and so take vpon me a thing very dangerous, and perhaps subiect to the sinister indgement of many.

In this purpose the example of Cneius Pompeius hath likewise confirmed me: who being chosen procurator for corne among the Romanes, and in an extreme scarcetie and dearth of the citie, hauing taken up some store of graine in Sicilia, Sardinia, and Africa, is reported to haue had greater regard of his countrey, then of himselfe. For when he made haste towards Rome, and a mighty and dangerous tempest arising, he perceined the Pilots to tremble, and to be unwilling to commit themselves to the rigor of the stormie sea, himselfe first going on boord, and commanding the anchors to be weighed, brake forth into these words: That we should sayle necessitie vrgeth: but that we should liue, it vrgeth not. In which words he seemeth wisely to inferre, that greater care is to be had of our countrey lying in danger, then of our owne priuate safetie.

This

This mandoe I thus imitate, { If small with great as equals may agree :
And Flie with Elephant compared bee.

Namely that gathering together and laying up in store those things which might be applied to succour the same and credite of our nation, hauing now this long time bene oppressed with strangers, through the enuie of certaine malicious persons, I boldly adventure to present these fewe meditations of mine vnto the viewe of the world, and so hoysing vp sailes to commit my selfe vnto a trouble some sea, and to breake forth into the like speeches with him : That I should write necessitie vrgeth : but that my writings in all places should satisfie euery delicate taste, or escape all peeuisshnes of carpers it vrgeth not. I doubt not but many will allow this my enterprise : the successe perhaps all men will not approue. Neuertheles, I thought that there was greater regard to be had of my countrey, sustaining so many mens mocks and reproches, then of mine owne praise or dispraise, redounding perhaps vnto me upon this occasion. For what cause should moue me to shunne the enuie and hate of some men, being ioyned with an indenour to benefite and gratifie my countrey?

But if I shall seeme somewhat too bold in censuring the errors of writers, or too seuer in reprehending the slanders of some men : yet I hope all they will iudge indifferently of me, who shall seriously consider, how intolerable the errors of writers are, concerning our nation : how many also and how grievous be the reproches of some, against vs, wherewith they haue sundry wayes prouoked our nation, and as yet will not cease to prouoke. They ought also to haue me excused in regard of that in-bred affection rooted in the hearts of all men, towards their native soile, and to pardon my iust griefe for these iniuries offered vnto my countrey. And I in very deed, so much as lay in me, haue in all places moderated my selfe, and haue bene desirous to abstaine from reproches : but if any man thinke, we should haue vsed more temperance in our stile, I trust, the former reason will content him.

Sithens therefore, I am to vndergoe the same hazard, which I see is commonly incident to all men, that publish any writings : I must now haue especiall regarde of this one thing : namely, of seeking out some patron, and Meccenas for this my brieue commentary, vnder whose name and protection it may more safely passe through the hands of all men.

But for this purpose I could not finde out, nor wish for any man more fit then your royal Maiestie, most gracions prince. For vnto him, who hath receiued vnder his power & tuition our liues and goods, vnto him (I say) doe we make humble sute, that he would haue respect also vnto the credit of our nation, so iniuriously disgraced.

Yea verily (most gracions King) we are constrained to craue your Maiesties mercifull aide, not on-ly in this matter, but in many other things also which are wanting in our countrey, or which otherwise belong to the publique commoditie and welfare thereof : which not by me, but by the letters supplicatory of the chiefe men of our nation, are at this time declared, or will shortly be declared. For we doubt not but that your sacred Maiestie, after the example of your Christian predecessors, will vouchsafe vnto our countrey also, amongst other Islands of your Maiesties dominion, your kingly care and protection. For as the necessitie of fleeing for redresse vnto your sacred Maiestie, is ours : so the glory of relieuing, regarding, and protecting vs, shal wholly redound vnto your sacred Maiestie : as also, there is layd up for you, in respect of your fostering and preserving of Gods church, vpon the extreme northerly parts almost of the whole earth, and in the vittermost bounds of your Maiesties dominion (which by the singular goodnes of God, enioyeth at this present tranquillitie and quiet safetie) a reward and crowne of immortal life in the heauens.

But considering these things are not proper to this place, I will leaue them, and returne to my purpose which I haue in hand : most humbly beseeching your S. M. that you would of your clemencie vouchsafe to become a fanourer and patron vnto these my labours and studies, for the behalfe of my countrey.

It now remaineth (most gracions and mercifull souereigne) for vs to make our humble prayers vnto almighty God, that king of kings, and disposer of all humane affaires, that it would please him of his infinite goodnes, to aduance your Maiestie (yearely growing vp in wisdom & experience, and all other heroicall vertues) to the highest pitch of souereigntie : and being aduanced, continually to blesse you with most prosperous successe in all your affaires : and being blessed, long to preferne you, as the chief ornament, defence and safegarde of these kingdomes, and as the shield and fortresse of his church : and hereafter in the life to come, to make you shine glorious like a starre, amongst the principall nurcing fathers of Gods Church, in the perfect ioy of his heauenly kingdome. The same most mercifull father likewise grant, that these prayers, the oftener they be dayly repeated and multiplied in euery corner of your Maiesties most ample territories & Islands, so much the more sure and certein they may remaine, Amen. At Haffnia, or Copen Hagen 1593. in the moneth of March.

To

The errors of the writers of Island intolerable.

To the courteous and Christian reader Gudbrandus Thorlacius, Bishop of Holen in Island, wisheth health.

Here came to light about the yeate of Christ 1561, a very deformed impe, begotten by a certain Pedlar of Germany: namely a booke of German rimes, of al that euer were read the most filthy and most slanderous against the nation of Island. Neither did it suffice the base printer once to send abroad that base brat, but he must publish it also thrise or foure times ouer: that he might thereby, what lay in him, more deeply disgrace our innocent nation among the Germans, & Danes, and other neighbour countries, with shamefull, and euerlasting ignominie. So great was the malice of this printer, & his desire so greedy to get lucre, by a thing vnlawfull. And this he did without controlment, euen in that citie, which these many yeres hath trafficked with Island to the great gaine, and commodity of the citizens. His name is Ioachimns Leo, a man worthy to become lions foode.

Moreouer, there are many other writers found, who when they would seeme to describe the miracles of nature, which are thought to be very many in this Island, & the maners, & customs of the Islanders, haue altogether swarued from the matter and truth it selfe, following mariners fables more trifling then old wiues tales, & the most vain opinions of the common sort. These writers, although they haue not left behind them such filthy & reprochful stuffe as that base timer: yet there are many things in their writings that wil not suffer them to be excused, & altogether acquitted from causing an innocent nation to be had in derision by others. Wherefore marking, reading, & weighing these things with my selfe, & considering that there dayly spring vp new writers, which offer iniury to the same & reputatiō of the Islanders, being such men also as do shamelessly filch out of other mens labours, deluding their readers wth feined descriptions, & a new rehearsal of monsters, I often wished that some one man would come forth, to make answer to the errors of historiographers & other vniust censurers: and by some writing, if not to free our innocent nation from so many reproches, yet at leastwise, in some sort to defend it, among christian & friendly readers. And for this cause I haue now procured an honest and learned young man one Arngrimus Fitz-Ionas, to peruse the works of authors, that haue written any thing concerning Island, and by sound reasons to detect their errors, & falsehoods. And albeit at the first he was very loth, yet at length my friendly admonition, & the common loue of his countrey preuailed with him so farre, that he compiled this brieue commentary, taking his proofes, not out of the vaine fables of the people, but from his owne experience, and many other mens also of sufficient credit.

Now, he that vndertooke this matter at my procurement, did againe as it were by his owne authority chalēge at my hands, that I should in two or three words at least, make a preface vnto his booke; thinking it might gaine some credit, and authority thereby. Wherefore to speake my minde in a word: for my part, I iudge him to haue taken both honest & necessary paines, who hath done his indeuour not onely to weigh the diuers opinions of wrighters concerning things vnknown, and to examine them by the censure of trueth, and experience, but also to defend his countrey from the venemous bitings of certaine sycophants. It is thy part therefore (gentle reader) to accept this small treatise of his, being as it were guarded with the sacred loue of truth, and of his countrey, against the peruerfines of carpers. Farewel, Anno 1592. Intij 29.

As in war, dayly experience teacheth vs, that some vpon no iust & lawfull grounds (being egged on by ambition, emule, and couetise) are induced to follow the armie, and on the contrary side, that others arme themselves vpon iust and necessary causes: namely such as go to battell for the defence and propagation of the Gospel, or such as being any way prouoked thereunto, doe withstand present violence and wrong, or at least (not being prouoked) by reason of the enemye appoaching are constrained to be vp in armes: right so, they that fight vnder Apolles banner. Amongst whom, a great part, not vpon any honest, philosophical, or indeede Christian intention, addresse themselves to wright: especially such as for desire of glory, for enuy and spight, or vpon malicious and affected ignorance, carpe at others: and, that they may be accompted superiours, sometimes whette their stiles against the person, name and fame of this or that particular man, sometimes inueighing against a whole countrey, and by shamelesse vntrueths disgracing innocent nations and people. Again, others of an ingenuous minde, doe by great industry, search and bring to light things profitable: namely, namely, they that write of Diuinity, Philosophy, History and such like: and they who (taking use and experience for their guides) in the said Sciences haue brought things obscure to light, things mained to perfection, and things confused to order: and they that haue faithfully commended to euermasting posteritie, the stories of the whole world: that by their infinite labours haue aduanced the knowledge of tongues: to be short, that endeavour themselves to repress the insolencie, confute the slanderers, and withstand the vniust violence of others, against themselves, their Nation or their Countrey.

And for my part, hauing scarce attained the sight of good letters, and being the meaneest of all the followers of Minerva (that I may freely acknowledge mine owne wants) can do no lesse then become one of their number, who haue applied themselves to ridde their countrey from dishonour, to auoid the truely, and to shake off the poke of railers & reuilers. My estate enabled me onely to write, howbeit the excellencie of truth, and the in-bred affection I beare to my countrey, enforceth me to do the best I can: sithens it hath pleased some strangers by false rumours to deface, and by manifold reproches to iniurie my sayd countrey, making it a by-word, and a laughing-stocke to all other nations. To meet with whose insolencie and false accusations, as also to detect the errors of certaine writers concerning this Island, vnto good and well affected men (for the common people will be alwayes like themselves, stubburnly mainteining that which is false and foolish, neither can I hope to remooue them from this accustomed and stale opinion) I haue penned the treatise following.

And albeit Island is not destitute of many excellent men, who, both in age, wit, and learning, are by many degrees my superiours, and therefore moze fit to take the defence of the countrey into their hands: notwithstanding, being earnestly perswaded thereunto, by that godly & famous man Gudbrandus Thorlacius Bishop of Holar in Island, I thought good (to the vtmost of mine ability) to be no whit wanting vnto the common cause: both that I might obey his most reasonable request, and also that I might encourage other of my countrey-men, who haue bene better trained by in good learning, and indued with a greater measure of knowledge then I my selfe, to the defence of this our nation: so farre as I from hindring any man to vnder take the like enterprize.

But to returne to the matter, because they (whatsoeuer they be) that reproch and maligne our nation, make their boast that they vse the testimonies of writers: we are seriously to consider, what things, and how true, writers haue reported of Island, to the end that if they haue giuen (perhaps) any occasion to others of inueying against vs, their errors being layd open (for I will not speake moze sharply) all the world may see how iustly they do reproch vs. And albeit I nothing doubt to examine some ancient writers of this Island, by the rule of truely and experience: yet (otherwise) their memory is precious in our eyes, their dignity reuerend, their learning to be had in honour, and their zeale and affection towards the whole common wealth of learned men, highly to be commended: but as for nouices (if there be any such writers or rather pasquilles) when they shall heare and know truer matters concerning Island, then they themselves haue written, they shall seeme by their inconstancie and peruerse wit to haue gained nought else but a blacke marke of enuy and reproch.

And that this commentarie of mine may haue some order, it shall be diuided into two generall parts: the first of the Island, the second of the inhabitants: and of these two but so far-foorth as those writers which are come to our hands haue left recozded: because I am not determined to wander out of these lists, or to handle moze then these things and some other which pertain vnto them: For I professe not my selfe an Historiographer, or Geographer; but onely a Disputer. Wherefore omitting a longer Preface, let vs come to the first part concerning the situation, the name, miracles, and certaine other adiuncts of this Island.

The first section.

The Isle of Island being seuered from other countreys an infinite distance, standeth farre into the Ocean, and is scarce knowen vnto Sailers.

Albeit a discourse of those things which concerne the land, and the adiuncts or properties thereof be of little moment to defend the nation or inhabitants from the biting of slanderers, yet seemeth it in no case to be omitted, but to be intreated of in the first place, that the friendly reader perceiuing how truely those writers of Island haue reported in this respect, may thereby also easily iudge what credit is to be giuen vnto them in other matters which they haue left written concerning the inhabitants, and which others haue received from them as oracles, from whence (as they say) they haue borrowed scoffes and taunts against our nation.

First therefore, that the distance of Island from other countreys is not infinite, nor indeed so great as men commonly imagine, it might easily be provided, if one did but in some sort know the true longitude & latitude of the said Island. For I am of opinion that it cannot exactly be known any other way then this, whenas it is manifest how the Mariners course (be it never so direct, as they suppose) doth at all times swerve. In y^e meane while therfore I will set downe diuers opinions of autho^rs, concerning y^e situation of Island, that from hence euery man may gather that of the distance which seemeth most probable; vntill perhaps my selfe being one day taught by mine owne experience, may, if not inuide, yet at least adioin, what I shal thinke true as touching this matter.

There be others also, who either in their maps, or writings haue noted the situation of Island: notwithstanding it is to no purpose to set downe any more of their opinions, because the more you haue, the more contrary shall you finde them. For my part, albeit I haue probable coniectures perswading me not to beleue any of the former opinions, concerning the situation of Island, but to dissent from them all: yet had I rather leaue the matter in suspence then affirme an vncertainty, vntill (as I haue sayd) I may be able perhappes one day not to gesse at the matter, but to bring forth mine owne obseruation, and experience.

A certaine wyter hath put downe the distance betwene the mouth of Elbe & Batzende in the South part of Island to be 400 leagues: from whence if you shall account the difference of longitude to the meridian of Hamburg, Island must haue none of the fozenamed longitudes in that place, I am able to prooue by three sundry voyages of certaine Hamburgers, that it is but seven dayes sailing from Island to Hamburg. Besides all those Islands, which by reason of the abundance of sheepe, are called Fareyiar, or more rightly Faareyiar, as likewise the desert shores of Norway, are distant from vs but two dayes sailing. We haue foure dayes sailing into habitable Gronland: and almost in the same quantitie of time we passe ouer to the prouince of Norway, called Stad, lying betwene the townes of Nidrosia or Trondon, and Bergen, as we finde in the ancient records of these nations.

The second section.

In this Island, at the Summer solstitium, the Sun passing thorow the signe of Cancer, there is no night, and therefore at the Winter solstitium there is no day. Also Vadianus. But in that Island, which farre within the arctic circle is seated in the maine Ocean, at this day called Island, and next vnto the lands of the frozen sea, which they call Engromland, there be many moneths in the yere without nights.

At the solstitium of winter, that there is no day (that is to say, no time, wherein the Sunne is such angle) where the pole is eleuated full 67 degrees. But at Holen (which is the bishops seat for the North part of Island, and lieth in a most deepe valley) the latitude is about 65 degrees and 44 minutes, as I am enformed by the reuerend father, Gudbrand, bishop of that place: and yet there, the shortest day in all the yere is at least two houres long, and in South-Island longer, as it appeareth by the tables of Mathematicians. Whereence it is manifest, first that Island is not situate situate beyond the arctic circle : secondly, that in Island there are not wanting in Summer solstium many nights, nor in Winter solstium many dayes.

Island is not within the circle arctic.

The third section.

It is named of the ice which continually cleaueth vnto the North part thereof. Another writeth : From the West part of Norway there lieth an Island which is named of the ice, enuironed with an huge sea, and being a countrey of ancient habitation, &c. Zieglerus. This is Thyle, whereof most of the ancient writers haue made mention, Munsterus, Saxo.

IT is named of ice, &c. Island hath bene called by thre names, one after another. For one Naddocus a Mozuagian boine, who is thought to be the first Discouerer of the same, as he was sailing towards the Faar-Ilands, through a violent tempest did by chance arrive at the East shore of Island ; where staying with his whole company certaine weeks, he beheld abundance of snow couering the tops of the mountaines, and thereupon, in regard of the snow, called this Island Sneland. After him one Gardarus, being moued thereunto by the report which Naddocus gaue out concerning Island, went to seeke the sayd Island ; who, when he had found it, called it after his owne name Gardars-holme, that is to say, Gardars Isle. There were moze also desirous to visit this new land. For after the two former, a certaine third Mozuagian, called Flok, went into Island, and named it of the ice, where with he saw it enuironed.

Island first discovered by Naddocus in a tempest.

Sneland.

Gardars-holme.

Island.

Of ancient habitation, &c. I gather not this opinion out of these wordes of Saxo (as some men do) that Island hath bene inhabited from the beginning, or (to speake in one word) that the people of Island were autochthones, that is, earth-bred, or bred out of their owne soile like vnto trees and herbs ; sithens it is euident, that this Island scarce began to be inhabited no longer agoe then about 718 yeres since.

This is Thyle, &c. Grammarians wrangle about this name, and as yet the controuersie is not decided. Which notwithstanding, I thinke might easily grow to composition, if men would vnderstand that this Island was first inhabited about the yeere of our Lord 874. Unless some man will say that Thule King of Aegypt (who, as it is thought, gaue this name thereunto) passed so farre vnto an Island, which was at that time vntilled, and destitute of inhabitants. Again, if any man will denie this, he may for all me, that it may seeme to be but a dzeame, while they are distracted into so many contrary opinions. One affirmes that it is Island : another, that it is a certaine Island, where trees beare fruit twise in a yeere : the third, that it is one of the Orcades, or the last Island of the Scotch dominion, as Iohannes Myricus and others, calling it by the name of Thylesey, which Virgil also seemeth to haue meant by his ultima Thyle. If beyond the Bytans (by which name the English men and Scots onely at this day are called) he imagined none other nation to inhabit. Which is euident out of that verse of Virgil in his first Elogue :

And Britans whole from all the world diuided.

The fourth writeth, that it is one of the Faar-Ilands : the fift, that it is Telemark in Norway : the sixt, that it is Schrichfinnia.

Which continually cleaueth to the North part of the Island. That clause that ice continually cleaueth &c. or as Munster affirmeth a little after, that it cleaueth for the space of eight whole moneths, are neither of them both true, when as for the most part the ice is thawed in the moneth of April or May, and is driuen towards the West : neither doth it returne before Januarie or Februarie, nay often times it commeth later. What if a man should reckon by many yeeres, wherein ice (the sharpe scourge of this our nation) hath not at all bene scene about Island ? which was found to be true this present yeere 1592. Whereupon it is manifest how truely Frisius hath written that navigation to this Island lieth open onely for foure moneths in a yeere, and no longer, by reason of the ice and colde, whereby the passage is shut vp, when as English ships euery yeere, sometimes in March, sometimes in April, and some of them in May ; the Germans and Danes, in May and June, doe usually returne vnto vs, and some of them depart not againe from hence till August. But the last yeere, being 1591, there lay a certaine shippe of Germanie laden with Copper within the haven of Vopnashord in the coast of Island about fourteene dayes in the moneth of November, which time being expired, she fortunately set saile. Therefore, seeing that ice, neither continually, nor yet eight moneths cleaueth vnto Island, Munster and Frisius are much deceived.

The ice of Island set allways to the West.

An ice at all some yeeres ut Island.

Navigation open to Island from March till the midst of November.

The fourth section.

The Island is so great that it containeth many people. Item Zieglerus sayth : The situation of the Island is extended betweene the South and the North almost 200 leagues in length.

Krantzius, Munsterus.

So great, &c. One Wilstenius schoolmaster of Oldenburg, in the yeere 1591, sent vnto mine Uncle in West-Island, a short treatise which he had gathered out of the fragments of sundrie writers, Island 144 Ger-

writers, concerning Island. Where we found thus written: Island is twice as great as Sicilie, &c. But Sicilie, according to Munster, hath 150 Germaine miles in compass. As for the circuit of our Island, although it be not exactly known unto vs, yet the ancient, constant, and received opinion of the inhabitants accounteth it 144 leagues; namely by the 12 promontories of Island, which are commonly known, being distant one from another 12 leagues or thereabout, which two numbers being multiplied, produce the whole summe.

Many people. &c. One Gysserus about the yere of our Lord 1090, being bishop of Schalholten in Island, caused all the husbandmen, or countrey men of the Island, who, in regard of their possessions were bound to pay tribute to the king, to be numbred (omitting the poorer sort with women, and the meaner sort of the commonalty) and he found in the East part of Island 700, in the South part 1000, in the West part 1100, in the North part 1200, to the number of 4000 inhabitants paying tribute. Now if any man will trie, he shall finde that more then halfe the Island was at that time vnpeopled.

Frisius.
Zieglerus.

The Island, most part thereof, is mountainous and vntilled. But that part which is plaine doth greatly abound with fodder, which is so ranke, that they are faine to driue their cattell from the pasture, least they surfeit or be choaked.

That danger of surfetting or choaking was neuer heard tell of, in our fathers, grandfathers, great-grandfathers or any of our predecessours dayes, be they neuer so ancient.

The sixth section.

Munster.
Frisius.

There be in this Island mountaines lift vp to the skies, whose tops being white with perpetuall snowe, their roots boile with euerlasting fire. The first is towards the West, called Hecla: the other the mountaine of the crosse: and the third Helga. Item: Zieglerus. The rocke or promontorie of Hecla boileth with continuall fire. Item: Saxo. There is in this Island also a mountaine, which resembling the starrie firmament, with perpetuall flashings of fire, continueth alwayes burning, by vncessant belching out of flames.

Munster and Frisius being about to repozt the woonders of Island doe presently stumble, as it were, vpon the threshold, to the great inconuenience of them both. For that which they heere affirme of mount Hecla, although it hath some shew of trueth: notwithstanding concerning the other two mountaines, that they should burne with perpetuall fire, it is a manifest errour. For there are no such mountaines to be found in Island, nor yet any thing els (so farre forth as wee can imagine) which might minister occasion of so great an errour vnto writers. Howbeit there was seene (yet verypately) in the yere 1581 out of a certaine mountaine of South Island lying neere the Sea, and couered ouer with continuall snow and frost, a marueilous eruption of smoake and fire, casting vp abundance of stones and ashes. But this mountaine is farre from the other three, which the sayd authours doe mention. Howbeit, suppose that these things be true which they repozt of fire mountaines: is it possible therefore that they should seeme strange, or monstrous, whenas they proceed from naturall causes? What? Doe they any whit preuaile to establish that opinion concerning the hell of Island, which followeth next after in Munster, Ziegler, and Frisius? For my part, I thinke it no way tollerable, that men should abuse these, and the like miracles of nature, to auouch absurdities, or, that they should with a kinde of impietie wonder at them, as at matters impossible. As though in these kindes of inflammations, there did not concur causes of sufficient force for the same purpose. There is in the rootes of these mountaines a matter most apt to be set on fire, comming to neere as it doeth to the nature of brimstone and pitch. There is ayeer also, which insinuating it selfe by passages, and holes, into the very bowels of the earth, doeth puffe vp the nourishment of so huge a fire, together with Salt-peter, by which puffing (as it were with certaine bellowes) a most ardent flame is kindled. For, all these thus concurring, fire hath those three things, which necessarily make it burne, that is to say, matter, motion, and force of making passage: matter which is fattie and moyst, and therefore nourisheth lasting flames: motion which the ayeer doeth performe, being admitted into the caues of the earth: force of making passage, and that the inuincible might of fire it selfe (which can not be without inspiration of ayeer, and can not but breake forth with an incredible strength) doeth bring to passe: and so (euen as in vndermining trenches, and engines or great warrelke ordinance, huge pyon bullets are cast forth with monstrous roaring, and cracking, by the force of kindled Brimstone, and Salt-peeter, whereof Gunne-powder is compounded) chingle and great stones being thorched in

in that fiery gulfe, as it were in a furnace, together with abundance of sande and ashes, are vomited vp and discharged, and that for the most part not without an earthquake: which, if it cometh from the depth of the earth, (being called by Possidonius, Succussio) it must either be an opening or a quaking. Opening causeth the earth in some places to gape, and fall aunder. By quaking the earth is heaved vp and swelleth, and sometimes (as Plinie saith) casteth out huge heaps: such an earth-quake was the same which I cuen now mentioned, which in the yere 1581 did so for trouble the South Hoze of Island. And this kinde of earth-quake is most clearly described by Pontanus in these verses:

The stirring breath runnes on with stealing steppes, vrged now vp, and now enforced downe:
For freedome eke tries all, it skips, it leaps, torridde it selfe from vacourth dungeon.
Then quakes the earth as it would burst anon,
The earth yquakes, and walled cities quiuer,
Strong quarries cracke, and stones from hilles doe shiuer,

I thought good to adde these things, not that I suppose any man to be ignorant thereof: but least other men should thinke that we are ignorant, and therefore that we will runne after their fables; which they do from hence establish. But yet there is somewhat more in these three faired mountaines of Island, which causeth the sayd writers not a little to wonder, namely where-as they say that their foundations are alwayes burning, and yet for all that, their toppes be neuer destitute of snowe. Doubtless, it becometh not the authority and learning of such great clearks to maruile at this, who can not but well know the flames of mount Aetna, which (according to Plinie) being full of snowe all Winter, notwithstanding (as the same man witnesseth) it doth alwayes burne. Therefore, if we will giue credit vnto them, euen this mountaine also, sithens it is couered with snowe, and yet burneth, must be a prison of vncleane soules: which thing they haue not doubted to ascribe vnto Hecla, in regard of the frozen top, and the fire bottoome. And it is no maruile that fire lurking so deepe in the roots of a mountaine, and neuer breaking forth except it be very selborne, should not be able continually to melt the snowe couering the toppe of the sayd mountaine. For in Cairra (or Capira) also, the highest toppes of the mountaine are sayd continually to be white with snowe: and those in Veragua likewise, which are five miles high, and neuer without snowe, being distant notwithstanding but onely 10 degrees from the equinoctiall. We haue heard that either of the foresayd Provinces standeth neere vnto Paria. What, if in Teneriffa (which is one of the Canarie or fortunate Islands) the Pike so called, arising into the ayre, according to Munster, eight or nine Germane miles in heighe, and continually flaming like Aetna: yet (as Benzo an Italian, and Historiographer of the West Indies witnesseth) is it not able to melt the girole of snowe embracing the middell thereof. Which thing, what reason haue we more to admire in the mountaine of Hecla? And thus much briefly concerning fire mountaines.

Now that also is to be amended, whereas they write that these mountaines are lifted vp euen vnto the skies. For they haue no extraordinary height beyond the other mountaines of Island, but especially that third mountaine, called by Munster Helga, and by vs Helgafel, that is the holy mount, standing iust by a monastery of the same name, being couered with snowe, vpon no part thereof in Summer time, neither deserueth it the name of an high mountaine, but rather of an humble billocke, neuer yet (as I sayd in the beginning of this section) so much as once suspected of burning. Neither yet ought perpetuall snowe to be ascribed to Hecla onely, or to a few others; for Island hath very many such snowy mountaines, all which the Cosmographer (who hath so extolled and admired these three) should not easily finde out, and reckon vp in a whole yere. And that also is not to be omitted, that mount Hecla standeth not towards the West, as Munster and Ziegler haue noted, but betweene the South and the East: neither is it an headland, but rather a mid-land hill.

Continueth alwayes burning &c. whosoever they be that haue ascribed vnto Hecla perpetuall belching out of flames, they are farre besides the marke: insomuch that as often as it hath bene enflamed, our countrey men haue recorded it in their yerely Chronicles for a rare accident: namely in the yeres of Christ 1104, 1157, 1222, 1300, 1341, 1362, and 1389: For from that yere we neuer heard of the burning of this mountaine vntill the yere 1558, which was the last breaking forth of fire in that mountaine. In the meane time I say not that is impossible, but that the bottoome of the hill may inwardly breed and nourish flames, which at certaine seasons (as hath bene heretofore obserued) haue burst out, and perhaps may do the like hereafter.

*The seventh section.*Frisius,
Munsterus.

The flame of mount Hecla will not burne towne (which is most apt for the wicke of a candle) neither is it quenched with water: and by the same force that bullets are discharged out of warlike engines with vs, from thence are great stones cast forth into the aire, by reason of the mixture of colde, and fire, and brimstone. This place is thought of some to be the prison of vncleane soules. Item: Zieglerus. This place is the prison of vncleane soules.

Will not burne towne. Where these writers should finde such matters, it is not easie to conieecture. For our people are altogether ignorant of them, neither had they ever bene heard of heere among vs, if they had not brought them to light. For there is no man with vs so rashly and fondly curious, that dareth for his life, the hill being on fire, trie any such conclusions, or (to our knowledge) that cuer durst: which notwithstanding Munster affirmeth, saying: They that are desirous to contemplate the nature of so huge a fire, & for the same purpose approach vnto the mountaine, are by some gulfe swallowed vp aliuie, &c. which thing (as I sayd) is altogether vnknewen vnto our nation. Yet there is a booke extant, written in the ancient language of the Norwegians, wherein you may finde some miracles of earth, water, fire, and aire, &c. confusedly written, few of them true, and the most part vaine and false. Whereupon it easily appeareth that it was written long since by some that were imagined to be great wise men in the time of Popery. They called it a royall looking glasse: howbeit, in regard of the fond fables, wherewith (but for the most part vnder the shew of religion and piety, whereby it is more difficult to finde out the coulinage) it doth all ouer swarme, it deserueth not the name of a looking glasse royall, but rather of a popular, and olde wines looking glasse. In this glasse there are found certaine figments of the burning of Hecla, not much unlike these which we now entreat of, nor any whit more grounded vpon experience, and for that cause to be reiected.

But that I may not seeme somewhat foolesharpe, for accusing this royall looking glasse of falshood (not to mention any of those things which it reporteth as lesse credible) let heere a few things (friendly reader) which I suppose deserue no credit at all.

1 Of a certaine Isle in Ireland, hauing a church and a parish in it, the inhabitants whereof deceasing are not buried in the earth, but like liuing men, do continually, against some banke or wall in the Churchyard, stand bolt-vpright: neither are they subiect to any corruption or downefall: insomuch that any of the posteritie may there seeke for, and beholde their ancestors.

2 Of another Isle of Ireland, where men are not mortall.

3 Of all the earth and trees of Ireland, being of force to resist all poisons, and to kill serpents, and other venomous things, in any countrey whatsoeuer, by the onely vertue and presence thereof, yea euen without touching.

4 Of a third Isle of Ireland, that the one halfe thereof became an habitation of deuils, but that the sayd deuils haue no iurisdiction ouer the other halfe, by reason of a Church there built, although, as the whole Isle is without inhabitants, so this part is continually destitute of a Pastor, and of diuine seruice: and that it is so by nature.

5 Of a fourth Isle of Ireland floating vp and downe in an huge lake, the grasse whercof is a most present remedy for all kinde of diseases, and that the Island, at certaine seasons, especially on Sundayes, commeth to the bank of the lake, so that any man may then easily enter into it, as it were into a shippe: which notwithstanding (sayth he) destiny will not suffer any more then one to enter at a time. Furthermore, he reporteth that this Island euery seuenth yere groweth fast to the banke, so that you cannot discerne it from firme land: but that into the place thereof there succeedeth another, altogether like the former, in nature, quantitie, and vertue: which, from what place it commeth, no man can tell: and that all this happeneth with a kinde of thundering.

6 Of the hunters of Norway who are so expert to tame wood (for so he speaketh very improperly, whereas vnto wood neither life nor taming can be ascribed) that wooden pattens of eight elnes long being bound to the soles of their feet do carpe them with so great celeritie euen vpon the mountaines, that they cannot be outrun, either by the swiftnesse of hounds and deere, or yet by the flying of birds. And that they will kill nine roes or more at one course & with one stroke of a dart.

These and such like, concerning Ireland, Norway, Island, Gronland, of the miracles of water, and aire, this master of fragments hath gathered together into his looking glasse: whereby, although he hath made his owne followers wonder, and the common people to be astonished, yet hath he ministred vnto vs nothing but occasion of laughter.

But let vs heare Frisius. The flame of mount Hecla (sayth he) will not burne towne (which is most apt matter for the wicke of a candle) neither is it quenched with water. But I say that this strange opinion may be confirmed by many reasons borrowed out of your schoole of Philosophy.

sophy. For the naturall Philosophers doe teach, That it is common to all forcible flames to be quenched with dry things, and nourished with moiste: whereupon, even blacksmithes, by sprinkling on of water, vie to quicken and strengthen their fire. For (say they) when fire is more vehement, it is stirred vp by colde, and nourished by moisture, both which qualities doe concur in water. Item, water is wont to kindle skorching fires: because the moisture it selfe, which ariseth, doth proue more fattie and grosse, neither is it consumed by the smoke enclosing it, but the fire it selfe feedeth vpon the whole substance thereof, whereby being made purer, and gathering round together, it becommeth then more vehement by reason of colde. And therefore also wild-fires cannot be quenched with water. Item, There be places abounding with brimstone and pitch, which burne of their owne accord, the flame wherof cannot be quenched with water. The graund Philosopher also hath affirmed, that fire is nourished by water. Arist. 3. de anim. And Plinie in the second booke of his naturall historie cap. 110. And Strabo in his 7. booke, In Nymphæum there proceedeth a flame out of a rocke, which is kindled with water. The same autho^r sayth: The ashe continually flourisheth, covering a burning fountaine. And moreover that there are sudden fires at some times, even vpon waters, as namely that the lake of Thrasumenus in the field of Perugi, was all on fire, as the same Strabo witnesseth. And in the yeares 1226, and 1236, not farre from the promontorie of Islande called Reykians, a flame of fire brake forth out of the sea. Yea even vpon mens bodies sudden fires haue glittered: as namely, there sprang a flame from the head of Scruius Tullius lying a sleepe: and also Lucius Martius in Spaine after the death of the Scipions, making an oration to his souldiers, and exhorting them to reuenge, was all in a flame, as Valerius Ancias doth report. Plinie in like sort maketh mention of a flame in a certaine mountaine, which, as it is kindled with water, so is it quenched with earth or haye: also of another field which burneth not the leaues of shade trees that growe directly ouer it. These things being thus, it is strange that men should accompt that a wonder in Hecla onely (for I will graunt it to be, for disputation sake, when indeede there is no such matter so farre forth as euer I could learne of any man) which is common to manie other parts or places in the worlde, both hilly and plaine, as well as to this.

And by the same force that bullets, &c. Munster saith the like also. This mountaine when it ragerh, it soundeth like dreadfull thunder, casteth forth huge stones, disgorgeth brimstone, and with the cinders that are blown abroad, it couereth so much ground round about it, that no man can inhabite within 20. miles thereof, &c. Howbeit, they ought to haue compared it with Aetna, or with other fierie mountaines, whereof I will presently make mention, seeing there is to be found in them, not onely a like accident, but in a manner the very same. Unlesse perhaps this be the difference, that flames brake seldom out of Hecla, then out of other mountaines of the same kinde. For it hath now rested these 34. yeares full out, the last fierie breach being made in the yeare 1558. as we haue before noted. And there can no such wonders be affirmed of our Hecla, but the same or greater are to be ascribed vnto other burning mountaines, as it shall by and by appeare.

But that byrnestone should be sent forth it is a meere fable, and neuer knowne vnto our nation, by any experiment.

This place is the prison of vncleane soules, Here I am constrained to vse a preface, and to craue pardon of the Reader, because, whereas in the beginning I propounded vnto my selfe to treat of the land, and of the inhabitants distinctly by themselves, I must of necessitie confusedly handle certaine matters in this first part, which do properly belong vnto the second. This is come to passe through the fault of these writers, who haue confounded this part of the inhabitants religion concerning the opinion of hell, or of the infernall prison, with the situation & miracles of the island. Wherefore that we may come to this matter, who can but wonder, that wise men should be grown to this point, not onely to listen after, but euen to follow and embrace the doings of the rude people: For the common sort of strangers, and the off-shooting of mariners (here I do except them of better iudgement as well mariners as others) hearing of this rare miracle of nature, by an inbred and naturall blockishnesse are carried to this imagination of the prison of soules: and that because they see no wood nor any such fell laid vpon this fire as they haue in their owne chimneys at home. And by this perswasion of the grosse multitude, the report grew strong, especially (as they are too much accustomed to banning and cursing) while one would wish to another the fire torments of this mountaine. As though elementarie, materiall, and visible fire could consume mens soules being spirittuall, bodiless, and inuisible substances. And to be short, who can but wonder, why they should not saue the same prison of damned soules, as well in mount Aetna, being no lesse famous for fires and inflamations then this: But you will say, that Pope Gregorie famed it so to be. Therefore it is purgatorie, I am content it should be so: then there is the same crueltie of this prison that there is of purgatorie. But before I proceede any further I thinke it not amisse to tell a merie tale, which was the originall and ground of this hellish opinion: namely that a ship of certaine strangers departing from Island, under full saile, a most swift pace, going directly on her course, met with another ship sailing against wind & weather, and the force of the tempest as swiftly as themselves, who hailing them of whence they were, answer was given by their gouernour, De Bischof van Bremen: being the second time asked whether they were bound: he answered, Thom Heckelsfeld tho, Thom Heckelsfeld tho. I am assured lest the reader at the sight of these things should call for a bason: for it is such an abominable lie, that it would make a man cast his gorge to heare it. Away with it therefore to fenny frogs, for we esteeme no more of it, then of their croaking coar coar. Nay, it is so palpable that it is not worthy to be smiled at, much lesse to be refuted. But I will not trifle any longer with the fond Papists: let vs rather come vnto our owne writers.

And first of all I cannot here omit a saying of that most worthie man Doctor Caspar Peucer. There is in Islande (quoth he) mount Hecla, being of as dreadfull a depth as any vaste gulfe, or as hell it selfe, which resoundeth with lamentable, & miserable yellings, that the noise of the cryers may be heard for the space of a great league round about. Great swarms of vgly blacke Rauens and Vultures lie hooouering about this place which are thought of the inhabitants to nestle there. The common people of that countrey are verily perswaded, that there is a descent downe into hell by this gulfe: and therefore when any battailes are foughten else where, in whatsoever part of the whole world, or any bloudie slaughters are committed, they haue learned by long experience, what horrible tumults and out-cries, what monstrous skritchies are heard round about this mountaine. Who durst be so bold (most learned Sir) to bring such an incredible report to your eares? Neither hath Island any Vultures, but that second kinde of Eagles, which Plinie noted by their white tayles, and called them Pygarsi: neither are there any with vs, that can heare witnesse of the foresaid spectacle: nor yet is it likely that Rauens and Eagles would nestle in that place, when as they should rather be driuen from thence by fire and smoke, being things most contrarie to their nature. And yet notwithstanding for prooffe of this matter, as also of a strange tumult heard within the hollow of the mountaine, they allege the experience of the inhabitants, which indeede testifieth all things to the contrarie. But whereabout should that hole or windowe of the mountaine be, by the which we may heare out-cries, noise and tumults done among them, who inhabite the most contrarie, distant, and remote places of the earth from vs? Concerning which thing I would aske the authoꝝ of this fable many questions, if I might but come to the knowledge of him: in the meane time I could wish that from hencefoorth he would learne to tell troth, & not presume with so impudent a face to enforce excellent Peucer, or others, of such vnknownen and incredible matters.

But to returne to Munster, who endeavouring to search out the causes of the great and strange fire of that famous hill Aetna, is it not monstrous that the very samethings which he there maketh natural, he should here imagine to be p̄ternaturall, yea infernall? But why do I speake of Aetna? Let vs rather consider what Munster in another place thinketh of the burning of Hecla.

It is without doubt (saith he) that some mountaines and fields burned in old time throughout the whole world: and in this our age do burne. As for example: mount Hecla in Island at certaine seasons casteth abroad great stones, spitteth out brimstone, and disperseth ashes, for such a distance round about, that the land cannot be inhabited within 20. miles thereof. But where mountaines do continually burne, we vnderstand that there is no stopping of the passages, wherby they poure forth abundance of fire sometime flaming, & sometime smoaking as it were a streaming flood. But if betweene times the fire encrease, all secret passages being shut vp, the inner parts of the mountaine are notwithstanding enflamed. The fire in the vpper part, for want of matter, somewhat abateth for the time. But when a more vehement spirite (the same, or other passages being set open again) doth with great violence breake prison, it casteth forth ashes, sand, brimstone, pumistones, lumpes resembling iron, great stones, & much other matter, not without the damage of the whole region adioyning. Thus saith Munster. Where consider (good Reader) how he cutteth his throat with his owne sword, consider (I say) that in this place there is the very same opinion of the burning of Hecla, & the burning of Aetna, which notwithstanding in his 4. booke is very diuerse, for there he is faine to run to infernall causes. A certaine fierie mountaine of West India hath farre more friendly censurers, & historiographers then our Hecla, who make not an infernall gulfe therof. The Pilsop of which mountaine (because it is short & sweete) I will set downe, being written by Hieronimus Benzo an Italian, in his history of the new world, lib. 2. These be the words. About 35. miles distant from Leon there is a mountaine which at a great hole belcheth out such mightie balles of flames, that in the night they they shine farre and neare, about 100. miles. Some were of opinion that within it was molten gold ministring continuall matter & nourishment for the fire. Hereupon a certain Dominican Frier, determining to make trial of the matter, caused a brasse kettle, & an iron chain to be made: afterward ascending to the top of the hill with 4. other Spaniards, he letterd downe the chaine & the kettle 140. elnes into the fornace: there, by extreme heate of the fire, the kettle, & part of the chaine melted. The monke in a rage ran back to Leon, & chid the smith, because he had made the chaine far more slender then himselfe had commanded. The smith hammers out another of more substance & strength then the former. The Monke returnes to the mountains, and lets downe the chaine & the cauldron: but with the like successe that he had before. Neither did the caldré only vanish & melt away: but also, vpon the sudden there came out of the depth a flame of fire, which had almost consumed the Frier, & his companions. Then they all returned so astonished, that they had small list afterward to prosecute that attempt, &c. What great difference is there betwene these two censures? In a fiery hill of West India they search for gold: but in mount Hecla of Ifland they seeke for hel. Howbeit they will perhaps reiect this as a thing too new, & altogether vnknown to ancient writers. Why therefore haue not writers imagined the same prison of soules to be in Chimæra an hill in Lycia (which, by report, flameth continually day and night) that is in mount Hecla of Ifland? Why haue they not imagined the same to be in the mountaines of Ephesus, which being touched with a burning torch, are reported to conceiue so much fire, that the very stones & sand lying in the water are caused to burne, & from the which (a staffe being burnt vpon them, & traile after a man on the ground) there proceede whole riuers of fire, as Plinie testifieth: Why not in Cophantrus a mountaine of Bactria, alwayes burning in the night? Why not in the Isle of Hiera, flaming in the midst of the sea? Why not in Aeolia in old time likewise burning for certaine daies in the midst of the sea? Why not in the field of Babylon burning in the day season? Why not in the fields of Aethiopia glittering alwaies like stars in the night? Why not in the hill of Lipara opening with a wide and bottomlesse gulfe (as Aristotle beareth record) whereunto it is dangerous to approach in the night: from whence the sound of Cymbals and the noise of rattles, with vnwonted and vncouth laughter are heard? Why not in the field of Naples, neare vnto Puteoli? Why not in the Pike of Teneriffa before mentioned, like Aetna continually burning and casting up stones into the aier, as Munster himselfe witnesseth? Why not in that Aethiopian hill, which Plinie affirmeth to burne more then all the former? And to conclude, why not in the mountaine of Vesuius, which (to the great damage of all the countrey adioyning, & to the bitter destruction of Caius Plinius ppying into y^e causes of so strange a fire) vomiting out flames as high as the clouds, filling the aier with great abundance of pumiliones, and ashes, & with palpable darknesse intercepting the light of the sunne from all the region therabout? I will speake, & yet speake no more then the truth: because in deede they foresaw, that men would yeeld no credite to those things as being too well knownen, though they should haue feined them to haue bene the flames of hell: but they thought the burning of Hecla (the ruinoz wherof came more slowly to their eares) to be fitter for the establishing of this fond fable. But get ye packing, your fraud is found out: leaue off for shame hereafter to perswade any simple man, y^e there is a hel in mount Hecla. For nature hath taught both vs & others (maugre your opinion) to acknowledge her operations in these fire workes, not the fury of hell. But now let vs examine a few more such fables of y^e comō people, which haue so vnhappy misled our historiographers & cosmographers.

The eight section.

Neare vnto the mountaines (the 3. surnamed Hecla &c.) there be three vaste holes, the depth whereof, especially at mount Hecla, cannot be discerned by any man, be he neuer so sharpe sighted: but there appeare to the beholders thereof certaine men at that instant plunged in, & as yet drawing their breath, who answer their friends (exhorting them with deepe sighs to returne home) that they must depart to mount Hecla: and with that, they suddenly vanish away.

Frifius.
Zieglerus.
Olaus magnus.

TO confirme the former lie, of an earthly & visible hell (albeit I will easily grant that Frifius in writing these things did not intend to reproch any, but only to blaze abroad new & incredible matters) certaine idle companions knowing neither hell nor heauen haue inuented this fable, no lesse reprochfull then false, and more baine & detestable then Sicilian scoffes. Which fellowses these writers (being other wise men of excellent parts, and to whom learning is much indebted) haue followed with an ouer haste iudgement.

But it were to be wished, that none would write Histories with so great a desire of setting forth nouelties & strange things, that they feare not, in that regard to hych any fabulous & old-wiues toyes, & so to defile pure gold with filthy mire. But I pray you, how might those drowned men be swimming in the infernal lake, & yet for all that, parling with their acquaintance & friends?

What:

What? Will you coniure, & raise vp vnto vs from death to life old Orpheus conferring with his wife Euridice (drawen backe againe down to the Stigian flood) & in these parts of the world, as it were by the bankes of snowey Tanais, & Hebrus descanting vpon his harpe: But in very deed although others will not acknowledge the falshood, & vanity of these trifles, yet Cardane being a diligent considerer of all things in his 18. booke de subtilitate, doth acknowledge & find them out. Whose words be these. There is Hecla a mountaine in Island, which burneth like vnto Etna at certain seasons, & hereupon the comon people haue conceived an opinion this long time, that soules are there purged: some, least they should seeme liars, heape vp more vanities to this fable, that it may appeare to be probable, & agreeable to reason. But what be those vanities? namely, they feine certaine ghosts answering the, that they are going to mount Hecla: as the same Cardane saith. And further he addeth, Neither in Island only, but euery where (albeit seldome) such things come to passe. And then he tels this storie following of a man-killing spright. There was (saith he) solemnized this last yeare the funerall of a comon citizen, in the gate neare vnto the great Church, by that markerplace, which in regard of the abundance of herbs, in our toong hath the name of the herbmarker. There meets with me one of mine acquaintance: I (according to the custome of Phisicians) presently aske of what disease the man died? he giueth me answer that this man vsed to come home from his labour 3. houres within night: one night among the rest he espied an hobgoblin pursuing him: which to auoid, he ran away with all speed: but being caught by the spright, he was throwne down vpon the ground. He would faine haue made a shour, & was not able. At length (when the spright & he had struggled together vpon the ground a good while) he was found by certain passengers, & carried home halfe dead. And when he was come to himselfe againe, being asked what was the matter, he vp and tolde this strange relation. Hereupon (being vtterly daunted, & discouraged, when neither by his friends, nor by Phisicians, nor by Priests, he could be perswaded, that these things were but his owne conceits, & that there was no such matter) 8. daies after he died. I heard also afterward of others which were his neighbors, that no man could more constantly affirme himselfe to be wounded of his enemy, then this man did, that he was cast vpon the ground by a ghost. And when some demanded what he did, after he was tumbled on the earth? The dead man (quoth he) laying his hands to my throat, went about to stragle me: neither was there any remedy, but by defending my selfe with mine own hands. When others doubted least he might suffer these things of a liuing man, they asked him how he could discerne a dead man fro a liuing? To this, he rendered a very probable reason, saying that he seemed in handling to be like Cortum, & that he had no weight, but held him down by maine force. And presently after he addeth, In like manner as in Island, so in the desert sands of Egypt, Ethiopia, and India, where the sunne is hoat, the very same apparitions, the same sprights are wont to delude wayfaring men. Thus much Cardane. Per from hence (I trow) no man will conclude as our writers of Island do, that in the places of Egypt, Ethiopia, and India, there is a prison of damned soules.

I thought good to write these things out of Cardane, that I may bring euen the testimony of strangerson our sides, against such monstrous fables. This place of Cardane implicth these two things, namely y apparitions of sprights are not proper to Island alone (which thing al mē know, if they do not maliciously feigne theselures to be ignorant) And secondly that that conference of the dead with the liuing in y gulfe of Hecla is not grounded vpon any certaintie, but only vpon fables coined by some idle persons, being more vaine then any bubble, which the brutish comon sort haue vsed, to confirme their opinion of the tormenting of soules. And is there any man so fantastical, that wilbe induced to beleue these gulfes, mentioned by writers, to be any where extant, although they be neuer so full of dead mens miracles? yea doubtlesse. For fro hence also they say, y reproches are iustly vsed against our nation: namely, y there is nothing in all the world more base, & worse lesse then it, which conceineth hell within the bounds therof. This verely is the good that we haue gotten by those historiographers, who haue bin so greedy to publish nouelties. But this opinion, bred by the sortishnes of the comon people hath hitherto (as I hope) bene sufficiently ouerthrowen as a thing foolish & vaine, and as being deuised for the vphayping of our nation. Wherefore, proceede (friendly Reader) and be farther instructed in this philosophy of infernall secrets.

The ninth section.

But round about the Iland, for the space of 7. or 8. moneths in a yere there floateth ise, making a miserable kind of mone, and not vnlike to mans voice, by reason of the clashing together. The inhabitants are of opinion that in mount Hecla and in the ise, there are places wherein the soules of their countrey men are tormented.

NO doubt, a worthy augmentation of the history, concerning the hel of Island, but by within the botome of one mountaine, & that no great one: yea, at some times (by fies and seasons) changing changing places: namely, whē it is weary of lurking at home by the fireside within y^e mountaine, it delighteth to be ranging abroad, & to venter to sea, but without a ship, & to gather it selfe round into morzels of yce. Come forth, & giue eare all ye y^e wonder at this secret. Lo, I will affoord these historiographers another addition of history very notable. Let them write therfore, that y^e Islanders haue not only hel within their iurisdiction, but also y^e they enter into it willingly & wittingly, & come forth againe vntouched y^e very same day. How can that be? Why: it is an ancient custome of the Island that they which inhabite neare the sea shoare do vsually go betimes in a morning to catch Seales, euen vpon the very sameise which the historiographers make to be hel, & in the euening returne home safe and sound. Set downe also (if ye please) that the prison of the damned is kept in store by the Islanders in coffers and vessels, as we shall anon heare out of Frisus.

the ice.

But you had need wisely to forsee, lest y^e Islanders beguile all your countreies of the commendation of courage & constancy: namely, as they (for so it pleaseth your writers to report) who both can & will endure the tormentes of hell, & who are able to breake through & escape them, without any farther hurt: which thing is necessarily to be collected out of that, that hath bin before mentioned. And I am able to reckon by a great many of our countreimen, who in y^e very act of hunting, wandering somewhat farr from the shoare (the ice being dispersed by westerne winds) & for the space of many leagues resting vpon the ice, being chased with the violence of the tempest, & some whole daies & nights being tossed vp & downe in the waues of y^e raging sea, & so (for it followeth by good consequence out of this probleme of the historiographers) haue had experience of the tormentes, & paines of this hell of ice. Who at the last, the weather being changed, & the winds blowing at the North, being transported againe to the shoare, in this their ship of ice, haue returned home in safety: some of which number are aliuē at this day. Wherefore let such as be desirous of newes snatch by this, & (if they please) let them frame a whole volume hereof, & adde it to their history. Rather do these vaine phantasies deserue otherwise to be handled & cofuted, then with such like meriments, & sportings. But to lay aside all iesting, let vs returne to the matter from whence we are digressed. First of all therfore it is euident enough out of the second section, y^e ice floaterh not about this Island, neither 8. nor 7. moneths in a yere: when, that this ice (although at some times by shuffling together it maketh monstrous soundings & cracklings, & againe at some times with the beating of the water, it sendeth forth an hoarse kind of murmuring) doth any thing at all resound or lament, like vnto mans voice, we may in no case confesse. But whereas they say that, both in the Isle, and in mount Hecla we appoint certaine places, wherein the soules of our countreimen are tormented, we utterly stand to the deniall of that: and we thanke God & our Lord Iesus Christ from the botome of our hearts (who hath deliuered vs from death & hell, & opened vnto vs the gate of the kingdome of heauen) because he hath instructed vs more truely, concerning the place, whether the soules of our deceased countreimen depart, then these historiographers doe tell vs. We know and maintain that the soules of y^e godly are transported immediately out of their bodily prisons, not into the Papists purgatory, nor into the Elysian fields, but into Abrahams bosome, into the hand of God, & into the heavenly paradise. We know & maintaine concerning the soules of the wicked, that they wander not into the fires & ashes of mountaines, or into visible ice, but immediately are carried away into vtter darkenesse, where is weeping & gnashing of teeth, where there is colde also, & fire not comon, but far beyond our knowledge & curious disputation. Where not onely bodies, but soules also, y^e is spirituall substances are tormented. And we do also hold, y^e the Islanders are no whit nearer vnto this extreame & darke prison, in regard of the situation of place, then the Germans, Danes, Frenchmen, Italians, or any other nation whatsoever. Neither is it any thing to the purpose, at all to dispute of the place or situation of this dungeon. It is sufficient for vs, that (by the grace and assistance of our Lord Iesus Christ, with whose precious blood we are redeemed) we shall neuer see that vtter darkenesse, nor feele the rest of the tormentes that be there. Now let vs here shut vp the disputation concerning the hell of Island.

The tenth section.

If any man shall take a great quantity of this ice, & shall keepe it neuer so warily enclosed in a coffer or vessel, it wil at that time when the ice thaweth about the Island, utterly vanish away, so that not the least part thereof, no nor a drop of water is to be found.

Frisius.
Zieglerus,
Saxo.

Surely, this was of necessity to be added: namely, y^e this ice, which according to historiographers representeth mans voice, & is the place of the damned, doth not as all other things in this wide world, consist of y^e matter of some element. For whereas it seemeth to be a body, when indeed it is no body: (which may directly be gathered out of Frisus absurd opinion) whereas also it peirceth through hard & solide bodies, no other wise then spirits & ghosts: therfore it remaineth, seeing it is not of an elementary nature, y^e it must haue either a spirituall, or a celestiall, or an infernall matter. But y^e it should be infernall, we can not be perswaded, because we haue heard that infernall cold is farre farre moze vnusufferable then this ise, which vseth to be put into a bore with mens hands, & is not of force any whit to hurt euen naked flesh, by touching therof. Now yet will we grant it to be spiritual: for we haue learned in naturall Philosophy, that spiritual substances can neither be scene nor felt, & cannot haue any thing taken from them: all which things do not withstanding most manifestly agree to this ise of the Historiographers, howsoeuer according to them it be supernatural. Besides also, it is most true, that the very same yle being melted with the heat of the sunne, & resolved into water, vpon the vpper part therof, standeth fishermen in as good stead to quench their thirst, as any land-river would do, which thing can no way be ascribed to a spiritual substance. It is not therefore spiritual, nor yet infernall. Now none will be so bold to affirme, that it hath celestiall matter, least some man perhaps might hereupon imagine, y^t this ise hath brought hell (which the historiographers annexe vnto it) downe from heauen, together with it selfe: or that the same thing should be common vnto heauen, being of one & the same matter with ise, & so that the prison of the damned may be thought to haue changed places with the heauily paradiſe, & all by the oversight of these Historiographers. Wherefore seeing the matter of this historிக்கal ise is neither elementarie (as we haue so often proued by this place of Frisus) neither spiritual, nor infernall, which we haue concluded evidently, in short, yet sound and substantiall reasons: nor yet celestiall matter, which, religion forbiddeth a man once to imagine: it is altogether manifest, y^t according to the said historiographers, there is no such thing at all, which notwithstanding they blaze abroad with such astonishing admiration, & which we thinke to be an ordinary matter commonly scene and felt. Therefore it is, and it is not: which proposition when it shall fall out true, in the same respect, in the same part, and at the same time, then will we giue credite to these frozen miracles. Now therefore the Reader may easily iudge, that we need none other helpe to refuse these things, but onely to shew how they disagree one with another. But it is no matuell that he, which hath once enclined himselfe to the fabulous reports of the common people, should oftentimes fall into error. There was a like strange thing inuented by another concerning the sympathy or conioining of this ise: namely, that it followeth the departure of that huge lumpe, whereof it is a part, so naturally, & so swiftly, that a man by no diligence can obserue it, by reason of the vnrchangeable necessity of following. But we haue oftentimes scene such a salt-water lumpe of ise remaining (after the other parts thereof were driuen away) and lying vpon the shore for many weekes together, without any posts or engines at all to stay it. Therefore it is plaine that these miracles of ise are grounded vpon a moze slippery foundation then ise it selfe.

Frisus.

Not farre from these mountaines (the threeforesaid) declining to the sea shoare, there be foure fountaines of a most contrary nature betweene themselves. The first, by reason of his continuall heat conuerteth into a stone any body cast into it, the former shape only still remaining. The second is extremely cold. The third is sweeter then hony, and most pleasant to quench thirst. The fourth is altogether deadly, pestilent, and full of ranke poison.

Euen this description of fountaines doth sufficiently declare how impure that fountaine was, out of which the geographer drew all these miraculous stories. For he seemeth to affirme, that the threeforesaid mountaines doe almost touch one another: for he ascribeth foure fountaines indifferently vnto them all. Other wise, if he had not made them stand neare together, he would haue placed next vnto some one of these, two of the foreshaid fountaines. But neither doe these mountaines touch (being distant so many leagues a sunder) neither are there any such foure fountaines neare vnto them, which, he that wil not beleue, let him go try. But to confute these things, the very contrariety of writers is sufficient. For another concerning two fountaines gainesayth Frisus in these words. There do burst out of the lame hill Hecla two fountaines, the one whereof, by reason of the cold streames, the other with intollerable heat exceedeth al the force of elements. These be Frisus his two first fountaines, sauing that here is omitted the miracle of hardening bodies, being by him attributed to one of the said fountaines. But they cannot at one time breake forth, both out of the mountaine it selfe, and neare vnto the mountaine.

But here I would willingly demaund, by what reason any of the Peripateticks can affirme, that there is some thing in nature colder then the element of water, or hotter then the element of fire, from whence (I pray you, learned writers) proceedeth this coldnesse? & from whence cometh this heate? Haue we not learned out of your schole that water is an element most colde and some what moist: and in such sort most cold, that for the making of secundarie qualities, it must of necessity be remitted, & being simple, that it cannot be applyed to the vses of mankind? I do here deliuer these Oracles of the naturall Philosophers, not knowing whether they be true or false. M. Iohn Fernelius, lib. 2. Phys. cap. 4. may stand for one witness amongst all the rest, & in stead of the all. So excessiue (saith he) be these foure first qualities in the foure elements, that as nothing is hotter the pure fire, & nothing lighter: so nothing is drier then earth, & nothing heavier: and as for pure water, there is no qualitie of any medicine whatsoever exceedeth the coldnes thereof, nor the moisture of aire. Moreover, the said qualities be so extreme & surpassing in the, that they cannot be any whic increased, but remitted they may be. I wil not heare heape by the reasons or arguments of the naturall Philosophers. These writers had need be warie of one thing, lest while they too much magnifie the miracles of the fountains, they exempt them out of the number of things created, as wel as they did the ice of the Ilanders. We wil prosecute in order the properties of these fountains set downe by the foresaid writers. The first by reason of his continuall heat. There be very many Baths or hote fountains in Iland, but fewer vehemently hote, which we thinke ought not to make any man wonder, when as I haue learned out of authoys, that Germanie encrep where aboundeth with such hote Baths, especially neere the foot of the Alpes. The hote Baths of Baden, Gebarsvil, Calben in the duchy of Wittenberg and many other be very famous: all which Fuchsius doeth mention in his booke de Arte medendi. And not onely Germanie, but also France, & beyond all the rest Italy that mother of all commodities, saith Cardan. And Aristotle reporteth, that about Epyrus these hote waters doe much abound, whereupon the place is called Pyriplegethon. And I say, these things should therefore be lesse admired, because the searchers of nature haue as wel found out causes of the heate in waters, as of the fire in mountaines: namely, that water runneth within the earth through certaine veines of Pyrimstone & Allon, and from thence taketh not onely heat, but taste also, & other strange qualities. Aristotle in his booke de Mundo hath taught this. The earth (saith he) containeth within it fountains not onely of water, but also of spirite & fire: some of them flowing like riuers, doe cast forth red hote iron: from whence also doeth flow, sometimes luke-warme water, sometimes skalding hote, and sometimes temperate. And Seneca. Empedocles thought that Baths were made hote by fire, which the earth secretly containeth in many places, especially if the said fire bee vnder that ground where the water passeth. And Pontanus writeth very learnedly concerning the Baian Baths.

Lib. 3. nat. quæst.

For Vulcans forge incensed euermore doeth teach vs plaine, that heart of earth below

And bowels burne, and fire enraged glow.

From hence the sitting flood sends smokie streames,

And Baths doe boile with secret burning gleames.

I thought good in this place to touch that which Saxo Grammaticus the most famous historiographer of the Danes reporteth. That certaine fountains of Iland do sometime encrease & flow vp to the brinke: sometimes againe they fall so lowe that you can skarse discerne them to be fountains. Which kind of fountains, albeit they bee very seldome found with vs, yet I will make mention of some like vnto them, produced by nature in other countries, lest any man should thinke it somewhat strange. Plinie maketh a great recitall of these. There is one (saith he) in the Ile of Tenedos, which at the Solstitium of sommer doth alwaies flow from the third houre of the night, till the first. In the field of Picinas beyond the Apennine mountaine, there is a riuer which in the midst of sommer alwaies encreaseth, and in winter is dried vp. We maketh mention also of a very large fontaine, which euery houre doeth encrease and fall. Neither is it to be omitted, that some riuers run vnder the ground, and after that fall againe into an open chanel: as Lycus in Asia, Erasinus in Argolica, Tigris in Mesopotamia, vnto which Cardan addeth Tanais in Moscovia: and those things which were throwen into Aesculapius fontaine at Athens, were cast vp againe in Phaletico. And Seneca writeth that there are certaine riuers which being let downe into some caue vnder ground, are withdrawn out of sight, seeming for the time to be utterly perished and taken away, and that after some distance the very same riuers returne, enioying their former name and their course. And againe Plinie reporteth that there is a riuer receiued vnder ground in the field of Acinas that issueth out twentie miles from that place. All which examples and the like, should teach vs that the fountains of Iland are not to be made greater wonders then the rest.

Doth forthwith conuert into a stone any body cast into it. By these two properties, namely warmth or most vehement heat, & a vertue of hardening bodies doth Frisius describe his first fontaine. And I haue heard reported (though I neuer had experience thereof my selfe) that there is such a fountain in Iland not far fro the bishops seat of Schalholt, in a villiage called Haukadal. Seneca reporteth of the like, saying: That there is a certain fountain which conuerteth wood into stone, hardening the bowels of those men which drinke thereof. And addeth further, that such fountains are to bee found in certaine places of Italy: which thing Ouid in the 15. booke of his Metamor. ascribeth vnto the riuer of the Cicones, Water drunke out of Ciconian flood;

fleshy bowels to flintie stone doeth change:

Ought else therewith besprink't, as earth or wood becomneth marble streight: a thing most strange.

And Cardane. Georgius Agricola affirmeth, that in the territorie of Elbogon, about the town which is named of Falcons, that the whole bodies of Pine trees are conuerted into stone, and which is more wonderfull, that they containe, within certaine rifts, the stone called Pyrites, or the Flint. And Domitius Brusonius reporteth, that in the riuer of Silar (running by the foote of that mountain which standeth in the field of the citie in old time called Vrsence, but now Conursia) leaues and boughs of trees change into stones, & that, not vpon other mens credite, but vpon his own experience, being borne & brough't vp in that country: which thing Plinie also auoucherh, saying, that the said stones doe shew the number of their yeeres, by the number of their Barks, or stony husks. So (if we may giue credite to authoꝝ) drops of the Gothes fountain being disperſed abroad, become stones. And in Hungary, the water of Cepusius being poured into pitchers, is conuerted to stone. And Plinie reporteth, that wood being cast into the riuer of the Cicones, and into the Velin lake in the field of Pice, is enclosed in a bark of stone growing ouer it.

The second is extremely cold. As for the second fountaine, here is none to any mens knowledge so extremely cold: In deed there be very many that be indifferently coole, inſomuch that (our common riuers in the Sommer time being luke-warme) wee take delight to fetch water from those coole ſprings. It may be that there are some farre colder in other countries: for Cardane maketh mention of a riuer (streaming from the top of an hill in the field of Corinth) colder then ſnow: and within a mile of Culma, the riuer called Inſana ſeeming to be very hote is most extremely cold, &c.

The third is sweeter then honie. Neither is this altogether true. For there is not any fountaine with vs, which may in the least respect be compared with the sweetneſſe of honie. And therefore Saxo wrote more truly, ſaying, that certaine fountains (for there be very many) yeelding taſte as good as beere: and also in the ſame place there are fountains & riuers not onely of diuers taſts, but of diuers colours.

And albeit naturall Philoſophers teach, that water naturally of it ſelfe hath neither taſte nor ſmell, yet it is likely (as we haue touched befoꝛe, which other call per accidens) that oftentimes it repreſenteth the qualities of that earth wherein it is engendꝛed, and through the beins whereof it hath paſſage and iſſue: and from hence proceed the diuers & ſundry ſmells, colours and ſauours of all waters. Of ſuch waters doeth Seneca make mention, whereof ſome prouoke hunger, others make men drunken, ſome hurt the memory, & ſome helpe it, & ſome reſemble the very qualitie and taſte of wine, as that fountaine which Plinie ſpeaketh of in the Iſle of Andros, within the temple of Bachus, which in the Moſes of January uſed to flow ouer with wine. And Aristotle reporteth, that in the field of Carthage there is a fountain which yeeldeth oile, & certaine drops ſmelling like Cedar. Also Orcus a riuer of Theſſalie flowing into Peneus, ſwimmeth aloft like oile. Cardane reporteth, that there is in Saxonie, neere vnto the town of Brunſwic, a fountain mixed with oile: and another in Suzia neere vnto the Abbey called Tergeneſch. Also in the valley of the mountain Iuraſſus. We ſuppoſeth the cauſe of this thing to be very fattie pitch, which cannot but conteine oile in it. The ſame authoꝛ ſaith: It is reported that in Cardia neere to the place of Dachylus, in the white field, there is water ſweeter then milke. Another alſo neere vnto the bridge which we paſſe ouer going to the towne of Valdeburg. Propertius likewiſe in the third booke of his Elegies mentioneth certaine waters repreſenting the ſauour of wine in theſe words,

Amidſt the Iſle of Naxos loe, with fragrant ſmells and ſine

A freſher runs; ye Naxians goe fill cups, carouſe, there's wine.

This Naxos is one of the Iſlands called Cyclades lying in the Egean ſea. Cardane giueth a reaſon hereof, namely, becauſe Hydromel or water-hony, in long continuance will become wine. Aristotle nameth a fountain in Sicilia, which the inhabitants vſe in ſtead of vineger. The ſame authoꝛ maketh the cauſe of ſauours in water to be heate, becauſe the earth being hote changeth and giueth ſauour vnto the water.

Now concerning the colours of water ſo ſaith Cardane. There is the ſame reaſon (ſaith he) of the colours of water, that there is of the ſauours thereof, for both haue their originall fro the earth. For there is white water within two miles of Glanca a town in Mifena: red water in Radera a riuer of Mifena not farre from Radeburg: & in old time neere vnto Ioppa in Iudea: greene water in the mountaine of Carpathus by Neuſola: ſkie-coloured or blue water betweene the mountains mountains of Feltrius & Tarvisius: & it is reported that there was water of that colour in Thermopylae: cole-blacke water in Alera a river of Saxonia, at that place where it discharge thit self into the Weser. The causes of these colours are the colours of the soile. Also Aristotle saith, that about the promontorie of Iapigia, there is a fountaine which streameth blood: adding moreover, that Mariners are vnten farre from that place of the sea, by reason of the extreme stench thercof. Furthermore, they say that in Idumaea there is a fountaine which changeeth color foure times in a peece: for sometimes it is greene, sometime white, sometime bloodie, & sometimes muddy coloured.

Concerning the smells of waters, thus writeth Cardane. There is the like reason of difference in smells. But for the most part the steames of waters bee vnpleasant, because the earth doeth seldome times smell well. The water of the river Anigris in Aelis stanke, to the destruction, not onely of fishes, but also of men. About Meton in Messania, out of a certaine pond there hath bene drawen most sweer smelling, and odoriferous water. I doe recite all these examples to the end that no man should make a greater wonder at the colours, smells, and sauiours of waters that be in Island, then at those which are in other countreys.

The fourth is altogether deadly. Isidore affirmeth, that there is a certaine fountaine whose water being drunke, extinguishteth life. And Plinie saith, That about Nonaris in Arcadia, the river of Styx (neere the mountaine of Cillene, saith Cardane: it would be contained in nothing but an horse-hoofe: and it is reported that Alexander the great was poisoned therewithal) not differing from other water, neither in smell nor colour, being drunke, is present death. In Berosus an hill of the people called Tauri, there are three fountains, euery one of them deadly without remedy, & yet without griefe. And (which is the strangest thing of all the rest) Seneca maketh mention of a poole, into which whosoever looke, do presently die. But, as for this fourth fountaine of Frisius, which Saxo doth likewise mention, we Islanders, as alwayes heretofore, so euen at this day do testifie, that it is vnterly vnknowne vnto vs: and therefore in this regard, we render vnto God immortall thanks, because he hath vouchsafed to preserve our nation from such fountains, from serpents and venomous wormes, & from al other pestiferous & contagious creatures.

Furthermore about the foresaid mountains there is such abundance of brimstone. The three mountains called by Munster and Frisius, fierie mountains, do all of them stand an huge distance from our Wines. Therefore, when as neere vnto these hils they haue found out a place for foure fountains, which they doe so mightily extoll for wonders, they must needs haue some Brimstone Wines also, standing a like distance from the said fountaines. And assuredly, neither about mount Hecla, as Munster would haue it, nor by Frisius his fountaines (the report whereof how true it is, hath bene hitherto declared) is Brimstone digged vp at this day: nor I thinke euer was within the remembrance of our fathers. Neither is it true that Munster reporteth concerning the abundance of Brimstone: namely, that it is almost the onely merchandize and tribute of the Island. For whereas the Island is diuided into foure partes, the fourth part onely towards the North (nay, but euen the halfe thereof) doth vse it for merchandize, and there is not one crumme of Brimstone paid for tribute of the Island.

The same Author saith.

The twelfth Section.

There are so great store of fishes in this Island, that they are laid forth on piles to be sold in the open aire, as high as the tops of houses.

Munster.

IN the open aire. In deed we haue seen other countrey merchants doe so, vntill they had vnladen their ships of ourlandish wares, & filled the againe with fishes & with other of our countrey merchandize. But whether our men haue done the like at any time, it is not manifest. Certainly, that plentifull and ancient abundance of fish is now decayed, and the Islanders now begin to be pinched with the want of these and other good things, the Lord laying the iust scourge of our impietie vpon vs, which I pray God we may duely acknowledge.

Abundance of fish about Island diminished.

The thirteenth Section.

They haue most swift horses, which wil run without ceasing a continual course for the space of 30. leagues.

Frisius.

A Certaine Cosinographer in his Map of Island reporteth concerning the horses of one parish, that they will run 20. leagues at once in a continued race. But we account both to be impossible. For Munster writeth that those beasts which excell all other in swiftnesse & strength of body, called Rangiferi, cannot run about 30. leagues in 24. houres.

and emptie vessels, which they delight to toss vp and downe. It sometimes falleth out that Mariners thinking these Whales to be Islands, and casting out ankers vpon their backs, are often in danger of drowning. They are called in their tongue Trollwal Tuffelwalten, that is to say, the deuillish Whale.

Like vnto mountains. Loe here once againe (gentle Reader) Munsters falsifying eccho, and (as the prouerbe saith) his blind dreame. Such a false and sencelesse ouer-reaching doeth exceedingly disgrace an historie, and that by so much the more, by how much the lesse necessary it is. For to what purpose should an Historiographer make leasings, if history be a report of plaine trueth? Why should he vse such strange turnmountings? What is it that he would perswade, or whither would he rauish the Reader, if he propoundeth vnto himselfe nothing but the simple declaration of things?

Poets and Painters had leaue of old,
To feigne, to blaze, in all things to be bold.

But not Historiographers.

The backs of Whales which they thinke to be Islands. This fable, like all the rest, was bred of an old, ridiculous and vaine tale, the credite and trueth whereof is not woorth a strawe. And it is this that foloweth, namely, that the bishop of Breme (called by the ancient Norwales Brandan, and by Kranzius, if he be not deceiued, Alebrandus) in old time sent certaine Legates with a Couen of Friers to preach and publish in the North the popish faith, which was then thought to bee Christian: and when they had spent a long iourney in sailing towards the North, they came vnto an Island, and there casting their anker they went a shoze, and kindled fires, (for it is very likely that the Mariners were not a litle vexed with the nipping cold which they felt at sea) and so prouided victuals for the rest of their iourney. But when their fires grew very hote, this Island sanke, and suddenly vanished away, and the Mariners escaped drowning very narrowly with the boate that was present. This is the foundation of the matter, but how incredible it is, I appeale to the Reader. But what ailed these Mariners, or what meant they to doe, who in a tempestuous sea, seeing a rocke before their eyes, or (as Munster saith) a little Island, would not rather with all diligence haue auoided it for feare of running a shoze and shipwacke, then to rest in such a dangerous harbour? But in what ground should the anker be fastened? for Mariners for the most part are destitute of such long cables, wherby they may let downe an anker to the bottom of the maine sea, therefore vpon the backs of Whales, saith Munster. But then they had need first to bore a hole for the flouke to take hold in. Dilly Mariners, that in digging cannot discern Whales flesh fro lumps of earth, nor know the slippery skin of a Whale from the vpper part of the ground: without doubt they are woorth to haue Munster for a Pilot. Verily in this place (as likewise before creating of the land-miracles of Island) he gathereth fruits as they say, out of Cantalus his garden, and foloweth hard after those things which will neuer and no where be found, while he endeavoureth to proue here and there for miracles, perusing sea and land to suffice by his history: where not withstanding he cannot hunt out ought but feigned things.

But they are called in their language Trollwal. So not farther then your skil, Munster, for I take it you cannot skill of our tongue: and therefore it may be a shame for a learned man to teach others that which he knoweth not himselfe: for such an attempt is subiect to manifold errours, as we will shew by this your example. For while you take in hand to schoole others, & to teach them by what name a Whale-fish is to be called in our tongue, leauing out through ignorance the letter H, which almost alone maketh by the signification of the worde, you deliuer that which is not true: for val in our language signifieth not a Whale, but chusing or choise of the verbe Eg vel, that is to say, I chuse, or I make choise, from whence valis is deriued, &c. But a Whale is called Hvalur with vs, & therefore you ought to haue written Trollhvalur. Neither doeth Troll signifie the deuill, as you interpret it, but certaine Giants that liue in mountaines. You see therefore (and no maruel) how you erre in the whole word. It is no great iniurie to our language being in one word onely: because (doubtlesse) you knew not more then que.

Others also do offend in the same fault, for it is not to be allowed that a certaine man being about to publish a Map of Island receiued from Islanders themselves, had rather marre the fashion of all, or in very deed of the most names of Capes, Bales, mountaines, springs, riuers, homocks, valleis, hills & townes (because that being ignorant of our language, he was not able to read those things aright, which he receiued from our countrey men) he had rather (I say) depraue & corrupt them all, then learne of the Islanders themselves, which at that time, namely in the yeere 1585, liued in the vniuersitie of Hafnia, or Copen Hagen, how euery thing ought to be read and written. And we esteeme him for this his wilfull marrying of our native names and words, (whereupon it came came to passe that we reading the same, could acknowledge very few to be our owne) that he is no slight offender against our tongue, otherwile retaining the pure and the ancient propriety.

But now we haue after some tyme examined most of the myracles of Island, which our writers haue mentioned. Notwithstanding befoze we enter into any further matter, we thinke it good in this section to touch that which the last forenamed man (in this Map of Island, that he caused to be put forth in y^e foresaid yeere vnder his own name) hath giuen out concerning two other fountains besides the former: whereof the one should die white wooll black, & the other blacke wooll white. Which thing where he receiued it, or whence he had it, we can by no means imagine: for it is not to be found in our own writers, nor in y^e writers of other countries. But whence soeuer it be, it is but a tale, & hath not one iote of truth in it. And although it be incredible That black wooll may be died of a white colour, seeing it is affirmed by Plinie, that blacke wooll (of all other) will receiue no colour: notwithstanding there is some such thing reported by Theophrastus: namely, that there is a riuer in Macedonia which maketh blacke sheepe white. Also, that Norway pamphlet called the Roiall looking-glasse, which I mentioned befoze, doth attribute these fountains to Ireland, which is also called Hybernia, and not to Island. Which peradventure deceiued the Reader, reading in a strange language S in stead of R.

What be the Islandish writers?

That like wise deserueth no better credite which another Author writeth: That there is a certaine great stone in Island which runneth vp and downe the crags and clifs of mountaines by no outward force, but by the owne proper and naturall motion. Vee that will belceue this, what will he not beleue? For it is such a rare deuise that the Epicures themselves (who yet seemed to Lucian to haue fained many incredible things) I am sure neuer inuented the like: vntlesse perhaps the sayd Author doeth imagine, that a man (who is called of the Islanders by the proper name of Stein) should compasse about, and cline vp certaine rockes: which although it be ridiculous to put into a story of wonders, namely, that a man should mooue or walke, yet is it so to bee supposed to saue the credite of the Author, that we may not more seuerely condemne that fable, which is so senselesse of it selfe and not woorthy to be read.

They are guiltie of the same crime also who haue found out rautens, pies, hares and vultures, all white in Island: for it is wel known that vultures come very seldome, together with the Ise of the sea, vnto vs, as beares also, but they seldomer then vultures) and a certaine kind of crows called by the Islanders Isakraker. But as for white pies, hares, and rautens, Island neuer had any.

And these in a manner be the things which, in regard of our daily busines, we were able at this present to affoord, as touching the former part of our treatise, which were penned by me for this purpose (as in the beginning I did protest) that the errors of Authors concerning an unknown land, and the affected vanitie also of some men might be disclosed, for I am not desirous to diminish any mans good name: but because I consecrated these my labours to truth and to my country, I could not chuse but shew, that those things which hitherto haue bene reported by many concerning our Island deserue very litle credite: and so to addresse my selfe vnto the matters following concerning the Inhabitants.

Here endeth the first part of the Commentarie.

Auing hitherto finished the miracles of Island with certaine other particulars belonging to the first part, the which while writers doe wonder at, and diuersly extoll as it were the fountains of Agamemnon, yea, as things besides and against all nature, they haue bene very senselesse both of truth it selfe, & of their owne credite. Now the course of the present speech doeth aduonish mee to make haste vnto the other part of the treatise concerning the Inhabitants: wherein what I should first say, or where I should begin, I am altogether ignorant. For there be such monstrous, and so many mocks, reproches, skoffes, and taunts of certaine men against vs poore Islanders dwelling in the vtmost parts of the world (and amongst these also, some things of chits who take vpon them to profess most simple truth, namely Historiographers) insomuch, that to reckon by the particulars were nothing els but to tell the drops of the Scarian sea. But as I said in the beginning, we will not deale alike seuerely with all. For although Krantius, Munsterus, Frisius & others haue written many things too boldly of our nation: yet hauing otherwise deserued wel of learning by their monuments, they shalbe still in y^e same reputation to vs that they are woorthy of. Howbeit in the meane time, although a man would free the from the marke of slanderers, yet is it no small matter that they should by such senselesse, impossible & ridiculous things, such as those are which we have hitherto laid downe: as also that they should recorde in histories prophane and horrible vntruths, some of which kind shal now immediately be discussed. As for others, whatsoeuer they be, who vpheld the nation of Islanders with daily reproches, they are to haue that answer in a readinesse which such men deserue. In the number of whom, that scoffer is to be accounted, who by a company of rimers published in the German tongue, to the disgrace of our countrey, hath brought his name into everlasting ignominie.

Wherefore as our present businesse requireth, while we are in hand with the writings of Authors concerning this matter, although we meet with some things containing little reproch, notwithstanding we will examine most of them, noting the errors as hitherto wee haue done: in the meane time also when they shall alleage any trueth, we will in no case dissemble it. And after this manner, first we will heare Munster, Krantzius and Frisius, and others also, if there be any more, what they haue to say, reiecting that Parot and his Dutch rimers infected with fell slander, as he is woorthy, vnto the last place. First therefore the sayd Authors write concerning the faith or religion of the Islanders: and secondly, of their Maners, Customs, and course of life in manner following.

The first Section.

Adalbert Metropolitane of Hamburg in the yeere of Christ 1070. saw the Islanders conuerted vnto Christianitie: albeir, before the receiuing of Christian faith, they liued according to the lawe of nature, and did not much differ from our lawe: therefore at their humble request, he appointed a certaine holy man named Ilfie to be their first Bishop.

Krantzius in præfatione sue Norwegia.

KRantzius in these words, and Munster other where, doe seeme to attribute vnto the Islanders the prerogative of Christian faith: and they should deale both beleeving themselves and the trueth, if they did not in other places depyue vs of the same. For (to speake of Krantzius anone) that which Munster before reported concerning our faith or opinion about the place and situation of hell, is very farre from Christian pietie: namely, to be desirous to prye into those secrets which God hath kept close vnto himselfe alone, and which his pleasure is, should exceed our capacitie: for there is not any thing found in the holy Scriptures of this matter, where the place and situation of hell, or of eternall fire prepared for the deuill and his angels, and so for all damned soules, is bounded or compassed about. The holy Bible (I say) assigneth no locall or bodily situation beneath the earth, or vpon the earth, or in any other place of this world, so that prison of the damned: but it affirmeth that this earth shall perishe, and that a new earth, and new heavens shall be created for the habitation of iust and holy men, Reuel. 2. 2. Pet. 3. and Esay 65. wherefore a Christian man willingly giueth ouer to search into such hidden secrets: and he accounteth it vnlawful to reuele or deliuer vnto others, opinions (grounded vpon no plaine and manifest places of Scripture) for certainties and truerhs, Deut. 4. and 12. Esay 8. Matth. 27. 2. Tim. 3.

Further also that commendation wherewith Munster and Krantzius doe grace the Islanders, is meere contrary to Christian religion: namely, that they make al one reckoning of their whelps and of their children. But more of this matter anone in the 7. section. So therefore Munster dilagreeeth with himselfe, whereas those whom he affirmeth to be Christians, after ward he maketh to be master-builders of hell. Also Krantzius and Munster both together, when as these whom they affirme to be engrafted by faith into Christ, they exempt from all sense of pietie and honesty, in that they write that their soules are not dearer vnto them then their whelpes.

But to returne to the matter: In very deed we haue no great thing to say concerning our religion, what, or of what sort it was when Gentilisme was first put to flight. No more (I thinke) haue other Northern nations neere vnto vs to say concerning y^e beginning of their faith. For (alas) we must needs confesse & bewaile with deepe sighes, that vntill that day which shined vnto vs like the beginning of immortallitie, & brought vnto vs the pure doctrine of the gospel, our countrymen, as likewise other churches of the North, were ouer-spyed with more then Cimmerician darkness. But we may iustly and religiously thinke thus much, that among vs and our neighbors of Norway (for I wil not range out of my bounds, nor affirme any thing of vnknown people) after heathenish idolatry was rooted out, Christian faith & religion did flourish far more sincere and simple, as being lesse infected with the poison of poperie at that time, then after ward, when as the pestiferous leauen of the see of Rome being augmented, & the contagious mischief growing ripe, the poison thereof was disperfed through y^e whole world: for, as it shal afterward appeare, Island embraced Christ many yeeres before the new idolatry of the papists began to preuaile, and did sound forth nothing but faith in God the Father, the Sonne & the holy Ghost, like vnto those two most renowned kings of Norway, who as they had one common name, so had they one common care and profession to aduance the gospel of Christ. I meane Olaus the sonne of Thryggo, who was borne in the yere of Christ 968, attaining to the kingdom of Norway in the 27. yere of his age, and was the first, as we haue heard, that offered Christ vnto the Norwegians, other whom hee reigned fure yeres: and another of that name called Olaus Sanctus the sonne of Harald, who in the yere of Christ 1013. or thereabout, gouerned with more seueritie, & for the space of 17. yeres did boldly deliuer the doctrine of Christ. In the yere of Christ 1030. being vniustly slaine by wicked murderers, he shed his blood for the name of Christ in a town of Norway called Sticla Stodum.

The first christian king of Norway.

Our countrey also had, among many other, one man of excellent pietie whose name was Nialus, who about the yere of Christ 1000, liued in the village of Berthorsbuol situate in the parish of Island called Landehum: who also for his experience in humane affaires, for his great wisdom and sage counsell was accompted famous. For whereas in his time Island was turmoiled with many fierce mutinies, the inhabitants being in subiection to no superiour magistrate, he intermeddled not in any quarrels, sauing that by his discreet vertue & diligence, hee set thorough and brought to composition a great number: hee neuer did nor suffered violence, but onely upon the last day of his life. So carefully auoyded he all seditions and strifes: and gaue good assistance to others, who were desirous also to auoyd and escape them: neither did any man euer put in practise his counsell, but it turned to his especiall good: nor euer any did swerue therefrom, but with the danger of his life and possessions. The wordes or rather the oracles that came from him were so certaine, that it was wonderful from whence any man should haue so great and so sure forecast and counsell of things to come, as was found to be in him. Whereupon his discreet and prouident wisdom toynd with counsell became a prouerbe amongst vs Nials bytaraden: That is to say, the counsel of Nialus: or, the thing is done, or succedeth by Nialus his counsel: when any busines was atchieued prudently, and with admirable discretion. This man, when, for a slaughter committed by his sonne without his knowledge, he was in his owne house beset with a 100. men, who had conspired his death, and when his enemies began on all sides to set his house on fire, seeing his ende approach, at length he brake into these wordes. Doublesse these things happen by fate, that is, by the will of God. Howbeit, I put my hope and confidence in Christ, that we (meaning his wife, and himselfe) although this our fraile body shal vndergoe the corruption of death, in the fire of our enemies, yet, that it shal be deliuered from eternal flames. And so in the midst of these voyces, and in the fury of the flames, he with his wife and the manslayer his sonne, in the yere of Christ 1010. ended his life. A voyce vndoubtedly full well becoming the sonnes of God, arguing the notable comfort of his soule amidst the very pangs of death.

I therefore added those things to shew by what reason I was moued to thinke, that in the very beginning of Christianitie receiued amongst vs, mens minds were not so beguiled and ouerwhelmed in the darkenes of errors, as of late, a little before these our times, they haue bene.

But after the Lord God by Luther, and Luthers fellow-labourers in the vineyard of the Lord, and by his godly successors, did make the doctrine of saluation more manifest, and shaking off the heauie slothe, and thicke mist of our minds by the finger of his right hand, that is by his holy Spirit (Matth. 1. 2. v. 28.) did plucke the eares of our hearts, and opened our eyes, that we might behold his sauing health: We all, and every of vs do beleue and confesse, that God is a spirit (Iohn 4. v. 24.) eternal (Esay 40. v. 28.) infinite (Iere. 23. v. 24. Psal. 139. v. 7. 8. 9.) most good (Matth. 19. v. 17.) almighty (Gen. 17. 1. Reuel. 1. 8.) one in being, and nature: one in prouidence: one in the making and gouerning of all things (Deut. 6. 5. Ephe. 4. 5.) But distinguished by the persons of the Godhead and their properties, the Father, the Sonne, and the holy Ghost (Matth. 28. 19. & 3. 17.) God the Father the first person of the Godhead creator of heauen and earth, and all other things (Gen. 1. v. 1. and in those that follow) the vpholder & gouernor of all (Psa. 115. 3. Heb. 1. 3.) Father of our Lord Iesus Christ (Psal. 2. 7. and verses following) and our Father through him (Rom. 8. 15.) keeper of our soules and bodies (Luke 1. 2. 12.) And that Iesus Christ the second person of the Godhead is the sonne of God the Father (Iohn 1. 18. &c.) onely begotten (Iohn 1. 29. Heb. 1. 2.) equal to his Father (1. Chro. 17. 13. Ioh. 1. 1.) true God (Iohn 1. 2. &c.) foreappointed before the creation of all things (1. Pet. 1. 20. Reuel. 1. 8. &c.) and presently after mans fall promised to be the Messias (Gene. 3. 15. &c.) published elssoones vnto the holy Patriarches, as vnto Abraham (Gen. 1. 2. 3. &c.) vnto Isaac (Gen 26. 4.) vnto Iacob (Gene. 28. 14.) and confirmed by promises (Gen. 49. 9. Esa. 11. 1. 10.) prefigured by sacrifices of Moses (Leu. 1. 2. &c.) and by other types, as namely by the offering of Isaac (Gen. 22.) by the lifting vp of the brazen serpent (Num. 21.) by Ionas (Ionas 2. &c.) proclaimed by the testimony of the Prophets (Esa. 7. 14. and at length in the fulnesse of time truly exhibited: true man (Iohn 1. 14. &c. Gal. 4.) that he died for our sinnes, and was raised againe for our iustification (Rom. 4. 25. &c.) Ascending into heauen (Acts 1. 9. &c.) and making intercession for vs at the right hand of his Father without ceasing (1. Iohn 2. 1. &c.)

by his holy Spirit (which is the thirde person of the Godhead, coequal, and consubstantial to the Father and the Sonne, Acts. 5. 4.) gathering the Church to himselfe by the Word, and Sacraments (Matth. 16. 18. Rom. 10. 14. &c. and sanctifying it to eternal life, Acts. 9. 31. &c. And that one day at the end of the world he will come from heauen (Acts. 1. 11.) to iudge the quicke and the dead (1. Thesal. 4. 15.) that he will render vnto the wicked according to their workes, and that he will iudge them to eternal paines (Matth. 13. 42. & 25. 4.) but that he will reward them with eternal life, who beleue in his Name (Matth. 25. 34.) This Iesus Christ (I say) we acknowledge to be our redeemer (Matth. 1. 21.) our head (1. Corin. 12. 27.) and our Lord (Ephes. 4. 5.) And that wee in our holy baptisme do giue, and haue giuen our names vnto him (Acts. 2. 38.) and that we are engrafted into him by baptisme (1. Corin. 12. 13.) And this we do plainly, ingenuously, freely, and willingly confesse, and witnesse: And as for all others who inuent any other name in heauen giuen vnto men by which they may be saued, we doe earnestly detest, curse, and condemne them (Acts. 4. 12.) We holde his most holy Word to be the onely rule of our saluation: And that alone (all mans deuises being cast away and contemned) we propound vnto our selues as an infallible rule, and leuel of our faith (Galat. 1. 8. Esai 29. 13. Ezech. 20.) which we containe vnder the name of the olde and newe Testament (Hebr. 8.) deliuered by the Prophets and Apostles (Ephes. 2. 20.) by the singular and infinite goodnesse of God, preserved euer vnto this day and to be preserved hereafter alwayes in the Church (Matth. 28. last verse. Psal. 71. 18. 1. Cor. 11. 26.)

Therefore we render thanks vnto our most gracious and Almighty God from our soule, and from our whole heart, because that euen vnto vs being separated an huge distance from the rest of the body of his Church, and inhabiting the farthest parts of the world, hee would that this light graunted for the reuelation of the Gentiles, and prepared before the face of all people, and in olde time fauourably shewed to holy Simeon (for in Christ are all the treasures of wisdom hid) which now doeth enlighten and cherish with the sauing beames thereof our whole nation, that hee would (I say) this light should come vnto vs. This in brieffe (running ouer the very summe) is our faith, and our Religion, which by the direction of the holy Spirit, and of his Ministers in the vineyard of Christ, we haue drawn and that out of the fountaines of Israel.

Krantzius.

In the yeere of our Lord 1070. saw the Islanders conuerted vnto Christ, &c.

The most ancient Chronicles of Island.

IT is doubtfull vnto vs whether in these words Krantzius would haue said, that y^e Islanders were first conuerted vnto Christ in the yeere of our Lord 1070: or whether he doth not deny that they were indeed before conuerted, but saith that it was knowne first vnto Adalbert that yeere. But whether soeuer of these he affirmeth: not withstanding the yeerely records, and most auncient Chronicles of our nation testifying the contrary do make his credite to be suspected in this place, vnto which records and Chronicles, whether you had rather giue assent concerning our owne proper and domestical affaires, done within the bounds of our Island, or to Krantzius or any other being ignorant in the story of our countrey, I appeale (friendly reader) vnto your owne discretion. For my part I am enforced by many reasons to agree rather vnto our owne writers. For our countrey men affirme those things onely that be knowne, and in a manner domestical: he writeth matters forreine and vnknowne: they haue compiled their histories without the dissimling, disgracing or reprehending of any other nations, onely that they might assigne vnto their owne acts and exploits the true time or age thereof: he hath intermebled in his historie certaine things contrary to the truth, and that to the vpholding of our nation being most vnknowne vnto him, as it shall immediately appeare: they describe the names, yeeres, order, succession of all the Bishops of Island: he mentioneth onely one, & that farre otherwise then the truth. Furthermore, that I may make good the credite of our Countrey men, I will impart with strangers a fewe things which I found in our most ancient records of the conuersion of Island vnto Christ, and of the succession of Bishops in our Churches. Which although they be of little moment, and not altogether worthy to be written, yet must they of necessitie bee set downe for the defence of the truth of our affaires against Krantzius and others: Thus therefore standeth the certaintie thereof.

Island first inhabited.

In the yeere of Christ 874. Island (being indeed discovered before that time, as is aboue mentioned) was then first of all inhabited by certaine Noruagians. Their chiefe taine was one Ingulphus from whose name the East cape of Island is called Ingulfsi hoffdi. These planters are reckoned by by name in our records more then to the number of 400. together with those of their blood and kinred, and great families besides: neither onely is their number described, but it is also plainly set downe, what coasts, what shores, and what in-land places eche of them did occupie and inhabit, and what names the first inhabitants did giue vnto Streights, bays, harbours, necklands, creekes, capes, rocks, craggies, mountaines, hills, valleys, homocks, springs, floods, riuers. And to be short, what names they gaue vnto their graunges or houses, whereof many at this day are retained and vsed. Therefore the Norways with their company peopled all the habitable habitable parts of Island now occupied by them for the space of 60. yeeres or thereabout : but they remayned Ethnickes almost a 100. yeeres, except a very few which were baptised in Norwaie. But scarce a 100. yeeres from their first entrance being past, presently Christian Religion began to be considered upon, namely about the yeere of our Lord 974. Which thing about 20. yeeres together, was diversly attempted of many not without notable rebellion: amongst the rest there are mentioned two outlandish Bishops, who with others diligently laboured in converting the Island to Christian faith: the former was one Fridericus a Saxon boine, who in the yeere 981. came into Island, and behaved himselfe couragiously in the office of preaching, and prevailed so much, that in the yeere 984. Churches were bled in Island.

Domini 981.

But the other outlandish Bishop or preacher whom they called Thangbrandt came first into Island in the yeere 997.

Anno Domini
1000.

And then after 26. yeeres consulting about Religion, at length in the yeere 1000. it was decreed in a generall assembly of all the inhabitants by their whole consent, that the worship of heathenish Idoles being abandoned, they should embrace Christian Religion.

Again, in the yeere 1050. it was decreed in a solemn assembly of the inhabitants, that temporall or politique lawes (the constitutions whereof being brought out of Norwaie were communicated unto the Islanders by one Uffior in the yeere 926.) should euery where giue place to the Canon or diuine Lawe.

In the yeere 1056. one Isleif went beyond the seas out of Island to be consecrated bishop of Island. He came home consecrated into Island, and entred into the bishopricke of Schalholt in the yeere 1057. He died 1080. in the yeere of his age 74. The 4. of the Kalends of July.

These things perhaps will seeme trifling, short and base, not sufficiently worthy to be mentioned, together with many other matters which follow: but neither doe wee compile the Roman history, neither yet shall these things be so trifling, but that they may be of sufficient force to convince the errours of Kranzius and others, according to our purpose. And undoubtedly as touching the truth of our histories, it is euident that Saxo Grammaticus attributeth very much unto them: whose words in his preface of Denmarke be these: Neither is the diligence of the Thylenes (for so he calleth Islanders) to be smothered in silence: who when as by reason of the native barrennes of their soile, wanting nourishments of riot, they do exercise the duties of continuall sobrietie, and vse to bestow all the time of their life in the knowledge of other mens exploits, they supply their want by their wit. For they esteeme it a pleasure to know, and commit vnto memory the famous acts of other nations, reckoning it no lesse praiseworthy to discourse of other mens vertues, then to practise their owne. Whose treasures replenished with the monuments of historical matters, I more curiously searching into, haue compiled no smal part of this present worke by following of their relation: neither despised I to haue those men for my iudges, whom I knew to be skilfull in so great knowledge of antiquitie. Thus farre Saxo.

In

In these times therfore light is restored vnto our soules from heauen, and the gate of the kingdome of heauen is opened vnto vs by the sincere preaching of Christian doctrine. For in either of the Bishops seats there is a free schoole founded by the liberality and pietie of that most renowned King of Denmarke Christian the third: and afterward the same following the godly steppes of his most Christian father, the said free schooles by Lord Friderick the second, our most religious King, being called vnto his heauenly countrey in the yeare 1588, haue bene encreased and furthered: which at this day also doe prosper and flourish by the fauour and authoritie of the most gracious King and our Prince, Christian the fourth, wherein the youth of our *Ff*lande being instructed in the rudiments of liberall artes, and sacred diuinitie, are trained vnto knowledge and true godlinesse, that from hence ministers of Churches may proceede.

We are come at length in the register of the Bishops of *Ff*land downe to this present day, wherein the soynamed excellent men Gudbrandus Thorlacius, and Otto Enerus, the one at Hølen, and the other at Schalholt are Bishops of our Cathedral Church: both of which men, that it would please God long to preserve vnto his Church in health and life, for the glorie of his most holy name, we all doe earnestly and with feruent prayers beseech him.

The second section.

They inhabite for the most part in caues, or hollowe places within the sides of mountaines. And againe, They haue many houses and Churches built with the bones of fishes, and Whales. Againc, Many of them also to auoide the extremitie of colde, doe keepe themselves close in their caues, euen as the people of Africa doe to auoyde the heate of the sunne. Also Munster sayth: Many in *Ff*land at this day build their houses with the ribbes and bones of Whales.

Munster, Kranzius, Frisius.

Here the second member taketh his beginning concerning the course of life, and the manners of the inhabitants. And first of all what buildings or houses they doe vse: namely according to Munster, Kranzius, Frisius &c. Holes and caues of mountaines. But although in gorgeous buildings, and such other worldly braueries there is very little helpe to the attayning of a life truly happie: notwithstanding, wee can not in this place conceale the truth: and we plainly affirme that Cosmographers and Historiographers also doe erre in this point. For such habitations as they write to be common vnto the whole nation, are but in verie fewe places, and are either sheepe-cotes for shepherds, or cottages and receptacles for fishermen at that time of the yeere onely when they goe a fishing, and the others stande in neede to watch their focke. But for their houses themselves, and the very dwelling places of men, the *Ff*landers haue had them built from auncient time stately and sumptuously enough, according to the condition of the Countrey, with timber, stones, and turfes, vntill such time as traffike and exchange of wares beganne to cease betweenc them and the *Nor*uagians, who were wont to supply them with timber, and for that cause nowe our houses beginne to decay: when as neither we haue woods convenient for building, nor yet there are nowe a dayes, as there were in olde time, trees cast vpon our shores by the benefite of the sea, which may in any sort relieue vs: neither doe outlandish Merchants succour our necessities: whereupon many of our meanest countrey villages are much decayed from their auncient integritie, some whereof be fallen to the ground, and others bee very ruinous. Notwithstanding there be many farmes and villages which I cannot easily reckon vp, the buildings whereof doe resemble that auncient excellencie, the houses being very large, both in breadth and length, and for the most part in height also. As for example: farmes or granges which containe chambers in them, more then fiftie cubites in length, tenne in breadth, and twentie in height. And so other rooues, as a parier, a stoue, a buterie, &c. answering in proportion vnto the former. I could here name many of our countrey buildings both large and wide, neither illfaoured in shewe, nor base in regarde of their workmanship and costly firmenesse or strength, with certaine Churches also, or religious houses built of timber onely, according to auncient and artificiall seemliness and beautie: as the Cathedral Church of Hølen hauing a bodie the fise pillars whereof on both sides be foure elnes high, and about fise elnes thicke, as also beames and weather-bourdes, and the rest of the rooffe proportionally answering to this lower building. Our most gracious King Lord Friderick, whose memoery is most sacred vnto vs, in the yere 1588, did most liberally bestow timber for the reedifying of this body being cast downe in the yere 1584. by an horrible tempest. But the Church it selfe doch manifestly erected the body thereof in all quantity: also the inner part of the Church, which is commonly called the quier is somewhat lesse, both then the middle part of the Church, and also then the bodie.

*Traffike with the people of *Nor*way ceased.*

Drift wood not so plentyfull now, as many times past.

The Church of Schalholt was farre greater as I haue heard in olde time, then this our Cathedral, which hauing now beene twice burnt, is brought to a lesser scantling. Likewise there be some other Churches of our Island, although not matching, yet resembling the ancient magnificence of these. But here the matter seemeth not to require that I should runne into a long description of these things. For as wee doe not greatly extoll our houses and buildings, so are we nothing ashamed of them: because being content with our pouertie, we render vnto Christ immortall prayse who despiseth not to be retained of vs vnder a base rooſe, and concerneth not our temples and houses, (which Munster, Krantzius and Frisius doe not truly affirme to be built of fishes and Whales bones) more then the marble vaults, the painted walles, the square paucementes, and such like ornaments of Churches and houses in other countries.

The third section.

Krantzius,
Munsterus,

They and their cattell vse all one house, all one foode or victuals, all one state (here Krantzius hath it lodging.) Also. They liue onely by feeding of cattell, and sometimes by taking of fishes.

THese be the things together with those that followe, which Krantzius hath champed, and put into Munsters mouth, so that Munster shall not neede so much as once to chewe them, which may appeare by comparing them both together. For Munster, as hee swallowed these reproches, taking them out of Krantzius his preface vpon Norway, so he casteth by the verie same morsels vndigested and rawe against our nation, in his fourth booke of Cosinographie cap. 8. Those things which haue bene hitherto, although they haue sufficiently grieued vs, yet will we let them seeme moze tollerable: but this most malicious deuise, and those which followe we cannot easily brooke. It is our part therefore in this place also to auouch the truth, and to turne the leading vpon the authoꝝ owne head.

House, &c. First, that which they say concerning the same common house (as also liuing, and state) with our cattell, we plainly affirme to be false and erroneous, not onely the truth it selfe being our witnesse, if any man would make triall, but also the experience of manie strangers, that haue liued some yeeres amongst vs, and haue moze minde to speake the truth then to reuile our nation: who haue scene our houses and habitations with their owne eyes, and knewe that in euery particular farme or gravinge there were many seuerall roomes: namely, in those that were most simple and base, seuen or eight: In others which were greater, sometimes tenne, and sometimes twentie. In the greatest sometimes fortie, and sometimes fiftie. Which for the most part being seuered, both by roofes and walles, doe serue for the dayly and household affaires of one owner or master, seldome of two or thre, but almost neuer of moze: whereupon the Reader may easily iudge, howe true it is that the Islanders and their cattell haue all one house to lie in, when euery husbandman in this varietie of roomes hath seuerall ore-stalles, sheepe-cotes, stables, lammes-cots separated indifferent spaces one from another, which the seruants goe vnto so oft as neede requireth, and from thence returne backe to the dwelling houses.

But wher eas one noted in his Mappe of Island, concerning the prouince of Skagesfiord, that vnder the same rooſe, men, dogges, swine and sheepe liue all together, it is partly false, and partly no maruell: for sheepe, as it hath bene sayde, and specially for swine (when as that prouince hath no swine at all) it is vtterly false: for dogges it is no maruell, when as not kings courts were euer, or at this day are destitute of them, as it is well knowne to all men. But as touching dogges after ward in the seuenth section.

Victuals, &c. Whither beastsmeate may fitly be termed by the name of Victus, a man may iustly doubt: when Doletus interpreting a peece of Tullie, saith: As for Victus (sayth he) wee will so expound it with the Ciuiltians, namely that we comprehend vnder the word of Victus all things necessarye for the life of man, as meate, drinke, attire of the bodie, &c. And Vlpianus de verborum significatione defineth Victus in the very same words. But in this place the saide authoꝝ call beastsmeate by the name of Victus.

But let vs see what truth and plaine dealing is to be found in these men. We haue no labouring cattell besides horses and oxen: these haue grasse and hay (except where haye is wanting) for their fodder, and water to drinke. Now, the very same writers confesse, that the Islanders liue by fish, butter, flesh both beefe, and mutton, and corne also, though it bee scarce, and brought out of other countries. Therefore they haue not the same foode with brute beasts, which notwithstanding the sayde writers affirme in these wordes:

They

They and their cattell vse all one victuals or food. What Munsters meaning is in this clause, he himselfe a little before hath plainly taught.

Island (saith he) conteineth many people liuing onely with the food of cattell, and sometimes by taking of fishes. But what else is the food of cattell, but the meat of cattell, saith Doletus: Unless perhaps Munster calleth the food of cattell, cattell themselves slaine for the food of men: whom, as I thinke, the vse of the latine tongue doth gaine say, which hath taught vs that as men doe eate, so beasts doe feede, and hath termed the victuals of men, and the food or fodder of cattell. But may I thinke that Munster and Krantzius were so mad as to imagine that the Islanders liue vpon grasse and hay? To this passe of miserie was Nabuchodonozor brought vndergoing the yoke of Gods vengeance: Daniel 4. vers. 30. We will easily graunt that beasts, and cattell will not perhaps refuse many things, which men not onely of our countrey but of yours also eate, if the saide beasts be destitute of their vsuall food: as horses are fedde with cozne and barley loaves: they will drinke milke also (like vnto calves and lambs) and ale, if it be proffered them, and that greedily. And dogges in like manner will deuour any deinty dishes whatsoeuer. May any man therefore say that men vse the same common victuals with dogges and horses?

Now, whatsoeuer things haue happened in the time of greivous famine ought not to be recorded in historie for the generall custome of any countrey. As it is not lawfull for vs to write concerning other nations, that the people of this or that countrey, doe vsuallly liue by eating of dogs, mice, cats, although perhaps in the time of famine or seige or dearth of cozne, they haue often bene constrained so to doe.

But that the same drinke is some times common to many men with beasts, we will not greatly gaine say: namely most pure water, that naturall drinke created by God for all liuing creatures: which also in some respect Philosophers doe commend, yea, neither the Patriarkes themselves, nor our saviour Christ despised it.

As touching apparell (for we comprehend apparell also vnder the name of Victus) it is no wise common to vs with beasts. For nature hath clad them with haire & bristles (as I dare say Munster and Krantzius cannot be ignorant) men, being otherwise naked, stande in neede of clothes to couer their bodies. But I had not thought it might therefore haue properly bene sayde, that sheepe and we haue all one apparell. Men of other countreies also weare cloth of sheepes wooll, although it be moze finely wrought. But no moze concerning the attire of the bodie. For it is a meere folly to seeke for praise, and ambitious reputation by that, which argueth the infirmities of our nature.

Scare, &c. Now, it remaineth that we should speake of that state, which we are sayd to haue common with beasts: but of what kinde or maner it should be, or our writers would haue it to be, I cannot easily discern. State (saith Doletus) is either of the body, or of causes, or of order and condition. Doubtlesse, that there is another state of our bodies then of beasts (for besides our two feet, we haue hands also, and go with our bodies, and countenances lift vpright) and that we be of another order and condition from them, we are verily perswaded. As for these good fellows, if they know any such matter by themselves or others, let them disclose it. We doe altogether scozne these, being so vaine things, and breeding so great contempt against the Paiesy of God our creator, neither do we vouchsafe them any larger discourse.

But because it is our duty not so highly to regard either the loue of our countrey, or of any other thing whatsoeuer, but that we may be ready at all times, and in all places, to giue trueth the preheminence: I will say in a word what that was which perhaps might minister occasion to this infamous reproch of writers.

There be nere vnto Schallholt, vpon the South shore of Island, three small parishes standing betweene two most swift riuers Thiorfaa, and Olswis Aa, being in a maner destitute both of wood and turfe, which is the accustomed fuel of the countrey. And although most of the inhabitants of these parishes, and some of their neighbours, as they doe in time of yere prouide all things necessary for householde, so especially those things which belong to fires and bathes: notwithstanding there be certaine among them of the basest sort of people, who, because they want those things at home, and are not able to prouide them from other places, are constrained to vse straw for the dressing of their meat. But when the sharpe rigo of snow Winter cometh on, these poore people betake them to their ore stalles, & there setting by theds, & doing their necessary businesse in the day time, when they are not able to make fires, they borrow heat from their oven, as it hath bene reported to mee by others: And so they onely, being verie fewe in number, doe not willingly enioye, but are constrained to vse the same common house with their oven. But for their liuelihode and state it is farre otherwise with them then with their oven, of which thing I haue entreated before. This is the lot, & pouertie of certaine men in those petic parishes, the constitution whereof is theretore made a common by-woorde of the people amongst vs, though somewhat iniuriously. Where I would willingly demaund with what honestie men can impute that vnto the whole nation, which is hard and scanty true of these fewe poore men: I am wearie to stay any longer in this matter: onely, because I haue to doe with Diuines, let that of Salomon suffice, Prouerbs 17. verse 5. Hee that mocketh the poore, reprocheth him that made him.

And in very deepe, because this our nation is nowe, and heretofore hath bene poore and needie, and as it were a begger amongst many rich men, it hath sustained so many taunts and scoffes of strangers. But let them take heede whom they vphyaide. Verely if there were nothing else common vnto vs with them, yet we both consist of the same elements, and haue all one father and God,

The fourth section.

Kraetzius.
Munsterus.

They leade their liues in holy simplicitie, not seeking any more then nature doeth afforde. A happie Nation, whose pouertie no man doth enuie. But the English and Danish merchants suffer not the nation to be at rest, who frequenting that countrey to transport fishing, haue conueighed thither our vices, together with their manifold wares. For nowe, they haue learned to brew their water with corne, and beginne to despise, and loath the drinking of faire water. Now they couet golde and siluer like vnto our men, Simplicitie, &c. I am exceedingly glad, that the commendation of holy simplicitie is giuen vnto vs. But it grieueth vs that there is found so great a decay of iustice, and good lawes; and so great want of gouernement amongst vs, which is the cause of many thousande haynous offences: which all honest and godly men doe continually bewaile. This inconuenience both not happen through the negligence of the highest Magistrate, that is, of our most gracious King; but rather by our owne fault: who doe not present these thinges vnto his Maiestie, which are disorderly committed without his knowledge, and which are wanting in the inferior Magistrate.

Merchants, Moreover, Merchants, not onely of England and Denmarke, but especially of Germanie, as at this time, so heretofore frequenting our countrey, not to transport fishing; but fishes, taught not Islanders the arte of brewing corne with water. For y^e Noruagians themselves, the first, to our knowledge, that inhabited this Island, fro whom y^e Islanders are lineally descended, brought with them out of Norway that arte, as also golde and siluer coine, so that in old time there was no lesse vse of siluer and golde with vs, then there is at this day.

And it is certaine that befoze the often navigations of Danes, Germans, and English men vnto vs, our land was much more fertile then nowe it is (feeling the inconueniences of the ages and decayed worlde, both from heauen and earth) and brought forth, in certalne choyle places, corne in abundance.

Munsterus.
Kraetzius.

The King of Denmarke and Norway sendeth euery yeere a Lieutenant into the Countrey.

In the yeere of our Lord eight hundred fortie and sixe Harald Harfagre (which is to say, golden haire or faire clothes) was borne. Who afterward in the yeere eight hundred fiftie and eight, being cholen king of Norway, when he was growen to age, and full strength, chaanged the forme of the Noruagian gouernment. For whereas befoze it was deuised into pettie Princes (which they called Fylki, and the pettie kings that gouerned them, Fylkis konger) he reduced it by force of armes vnto a Monarchie. But when some inhabitants of the countrey, being mightie, and descended of good parentages, could not well brooke this hard dealing, they chose rather to be banished their countrey, then not to shake off the yoke of tyranny. Whereupon, they in the yeere aboue named eight hundred seuentie and foure, transported colonies into Island being befoze discovered by some men and found out, but vnepeopled as yet: And so being the first founders of our nation, they called themselves Islanders, which name their posteritie retaineth vnto this day. And therefore the Islanders liued a long time, namely, three hundred eightie and sixe yeeres, more or lesse, acknowledging no submission to any other Nation. And although Haquinus that crowned King of Norway, who reigned longest of any Noruagian king, namely, aboue fiftie sixe yeares, did oftentimes attempt by Ambassadors to make the Islanders become tributaries vnto him, notwithstanding at all times they constantly withstood him, till at length about the yeere of our Lord 1260, they performed homage vnto him. And afterward continued alwayes in their promised loyalty, being subiects to the king of Norway. But now at this day, since the Empire of the Noruagians was translated by Margaret Queene of Denmarke, Suedeland, and Norway vnto the Danes, they doe honour as their soueraigne Lord and King the most gracious king of Denmarke.

The sixt section.

All things are common among them except their wiues.

Krantzius.
Munsterus.

HERE Krantzius in the first place beginneth with such a gybe, There be many notable things in their manners, &c. Howeuer, your wit being too hasty in affirming things vnknewen, both here also deminish your credite. The experience as well of all things as of persons and times proueth your ouer greebie desire of noueltie, of fame and vaine-glorie, and argueth your great negligence in maintaining the truth. O worthy writers.

But whether the aforesayde things bee true or no, wee call the lawes of our Countrey to witnesse, which the Islanders from the beginning haue vled all one with the Noruages: of the King and his subiects: of the seate of iustice, and of law-cases which come to be decided there: of inheritances: of adoptions, marriages, theft, extortions, lending, bargaines, and the rest: all which, to what purpose should they be entoynd vnto them with whom all things are common? Wee call to witnesse so many broyles and contentions in our courts, and places of iudgement in Ifland concerning goods moouable, and immouable: we call to witnesse our kings, now of Denmarke, aforesayde of Norway, who by so many billes of supplication out of Ifland in old time, and of late haue bene often interrupted, for the setting throughe of controversies concerning possessions. Wee call Krantzius himselfe to witnesse against himselfe, whose wordes in the first section were these, Before the receiuing of Christian faith the Islanders liuing according to the lawe of nature did not much differ from our lawe, &c. If by the lawe of nature, then doubtlesse by that lawe of iustice, which giueth to euery man his owne: If by the lawe of iustice, then certainly distinctions of properties and possessions must needes haue taken place in our Nation: and although this very lawe is often transgressed, and that hapnously euen in the Church: notwithstanding both the Church, and also heathen men doe acknowledge it to be most iust and good.

They make all one reckoning of their whelpes, and of their children: except that of the poorer sort you shall easier obtaine their sonne then their shalke,

ALthough in the beginning of this Treatise I thought that Munster and other men of great name in those things which they haue left writtten concerning Iflande, were not to bee charged with slander, yet whether that fauour may here be shewed by any man whatsoever (be he neuer so fauourable, and neuer so sincere) I doe not sufficiently conceiue. For what should moue such great men, following the despighfull lies, and fables of mariners, to defame and staine our nation with so horrible and so shamefull a reproch? Surely nothing else but a carelesse licentiousnesse to deride and contemne a pooze and vnknewen Nation, and such other like vices.

But, be it knowne to all men that this vntrueth doth not so much hurt to the Islanders, as to the authors themselves. For in heaping by this, and a great number of others into their Histories, they cause their credite in other places also to be suspected: And hereby they gaine thus much (as Aristotle sayth) that when they speake trueth no man will beleue them without suspicion.

But attend a while (Reader) and consider with me the grauitie and wisdom of these great Clarkes: that we may not let passe such a notable commendation of Ifland. Krantzius and Munster haue hitherto taught, that the Islanders are Christians. Also: that before the receiuing of Christian faith they liued according to the lawe of nature. Also: that the Islanders liued after a law not much differing from the lawe of the Germanes. Also, that they liued in holy simplicitie.

Attend I say (good Reader) and consider, what markes of Christianitie, of the law of nature, of the Germanes law, of holy simplicitie, these authors require, and what markes they shew and describe in the Islanders. There was one of the sayd markes befoze: namely, that the Islanders doe place hell or the prison of the damned, within the gulfie and bottome of mount Hecla: concerning which, reade the first section of this part, and the seuenth section of the former. The seconde marke is, that with the Anabaptists they take away distinctions of properties and possessions : in the section next going before. The third and most excellent is this : those singular & naturall affections, that loue and tender care, and that fatherly and godly minde of the Islanders towards their children, namely that they make the same account of them, or lesse then they doe of their dogges. What? Will Munster and Krantzius after this fashion picture our vnto vs the law of Christ, the lawe of nature, the lawe of the Germanes, and holy simplicitie? A rare and excellent picture, though not altogether matching the skill of Apelles: A sharpe and wonderfull inuention, if authenticall: A knowledge moze then humane, though not at all diuine.

But wee Islanders (albeit the farthest of all nations and inhabiting a frozen clime) require farre other notes of Christianitie. For we haue the commandment of God, that euery man should loue his neighbour as himselfe. Nowe there is none (I suppose) that doeth not loue or esteeme moze of himselfe then of his dogge. And if there ought to bee so great fauour, so great estimation, so great loue vnto our neighbour, then how great affection doe wee owe vnto our children? The most neare and inseparable loue of whom, besides that nature hath most friendly settled in our mindes; the loue of God also commandeth vs to haue speciall regard in crapning them by (Exod. 12. 24. Ephes. 6. 4.) namely, that there may be in holy marriage certaine seminaries of Gods Church, and exercises of all pietie and honestie: according to the excellent saying of the Poet.

God will haue each family, a litle Church to be.

Also

Of humane life or mans societie, a Schole or Collegē is holy matrimonie.

That it may be manifest, that among Christians their sonnes are moze to be accounted of and regarded, then their dogges: and if any doe no otherwise esteeme of them, that they are no Christians.

But this naturall affection towards our most deare of-spring is plainly scene in the heathen themselves: that whomsoever you totally deprive of this, you denie them also to be men. The mothers of Carthage testifie this to be true, when as in the third Punic warre the most choise and gallant young men in all the Citie were sent as pledges into Sicilia; whom they followed vnto the shippes with most miserable weeping and lamentation, and some of them being with griefe separated from their deare sonnes, when they sawe the sayles hoisted, and the shippes departing out of the haven, for very anguish cast themselves headlong into the water: as Sabellicus witnesseth. Egæus doth testifie this, who when hee sawe the shippe of his sonne Theseus, returning out of Creete with blacke sayles, thinking that his sonne had perished, ended his life in the next waters: Sabel. lib. 3. cap. 4. Gordianus the elder, Proconsul of Africa, doth testifie this, who likewise, vpon rumors of the death of his sonne, hanged himselfe. Campoful. lib. 5. cap. 7. Also Iocasta the daughter of Creon, Auctolia daughter of Simon, Anius King of the Thuscans, Orodes King of the Parthians, and an infinite number of others. Concerning whom reade Plutarch star. lib. 2. and other authors &c. To these may be added that sentence, Loue descendeth, &c. So that you see, it is no lesse proper to a man entirely to loue his children, then for a bird to flie: that if our writers at any time haue confessed the Islanders to be men (much lesse to be Christians) they must, will they nill they, ascribe vnto them this loue and affection towards their children: If not, they doe not onely take from them the title and dignitie of men, but also they debase them vnder euery brute beast, which euen by the instinct of nature are bound with exceeding great loue, and tender affection towards their young ones.

I will not adde against this shamelesse vnt ruth most notable examples of our owne countrey men: I will omit our lawes of man-stealing, moze ancient then the Islanders themselves, being receiued from the Noruagians, and are extant in our booke of lawes vnder the title Man-helge cap. 5. Whosoever selleth a freeman (any man much moze a sonne) vnto strangers &c.

Now if any man be giuen to that hard fortune, that he must needs commit his owne sonne into the hands of some inhabitant or stranger, being vnged thereunto by famine, or any other extreame necessity, that he may not be constrained to see him hungerstarued for want of sustenance, but keepeth his dogge still for his owne eating, this man is not to be sayd, that he esteemeth equally or moze basely of his sonne then of his dogge: whether Islanders or any other countrey men do the same,

of this slander.

The Germane or the Danish mariners might perhaps find amongst vs certaine beggars laden with children (for we haue here a great number of them) who in tedious maner for they are much

giuen to trifling talke, might say : Giue me this, or sell me that : and when the stranger should aske, What will you giue me for it? the begger might answer; I haue ten or foureteeen children, I will giue you some one or more of them, &c. For this rabble of beggers blerch thus fondly to prate with strangers. Now if there be any well disposed man, who pittyng the need and folly of these beggers, releaseth them of one sonne, and doth for Gods sake by some meanes prouide for him in another countrey : doth the begger therefore (who together with his sonne being ready to die for hunger and pouerty, yeelbeth and committeth his sonne into the hands of a mercifull man) make lesse account of his sonne then of his dogge? Such works of lotte and mercie haue bene performed by many, aswell Islanders themselves as strangers : one of which number was that honourable man Accilius Iulius, being sent by the most gracious King of Denmarke into Island in the yere of our Lord 1552, who, as I haue heard, tooke, and carried with him into Denmarke fiftene poore boyes : where afterward it was reported vnto me, that by his good meanes euerie one of them being bound to a seuerall trade, proued good and thristie men.

What if some man be driuen to that passe, that he doth not onely sell his sonne, but not finding a chapman, his owne selfe killeth and eateth him? Examples of this kinde be common, namely of the unwilling and forced cruelty of parents towards their children, not being pricked on through hate, or want of naturall affection, but being compelled thereunto by vrgent necessity. Shall any man hereupon ground a generall reproch against a whole nation? We reade that in the siege of Samaria, two mothers slew their sonnes, and eat them sodden : 4. King. chap. 6. We reade in the siege of Ierusalem, how lamentable the voice of that distressed mother was, being about to kill her tender child : My sweet babe, sayth she (for I will repoze Eusebius owne words, concerning this matter, though very common, that the affection of a mother may appeare) borne to miserie and mishap, for whom should I conueniently reserue thee in this tumult of famine, of warre, and sedition? If we be subdued to the gouernment of the Romans, we shall weare out our vnhappy dayes vnder the yoke of slavery. But I thinke famine will preuent captiuitie. Besides, there is a rout of seditious rebels much more intollerable then either of the former miseries. Come on therefore, my sonne, be thou meat vnto thy mother, a fury to these rebels, and a by-word in the common life of men, which one thing onely is wanting to make vp the calamities of the Iewes. These sayings being ended, she killeth her sonne, roasting and eating one halfe, and reseruing the other, &c. Eusebius lib. 3. cap. 6. Now, what man will not beleue that this unhappy mother would full gladly haue passed ouer this her sonne into the possession of some master or chapman, if she could haue happened vpon any such, with whom she thought he might haue bene preferred? That famine is well known which oppressed Calagurium, a city of Spaine, when in olde time Cneius Pompeius layed siege thereunto (Valerius lib. 7. cap. 7.) the citizens whereof conuerthed their wiues and children into meat for the satisfiing of their extreame hunger, whom doubtlesse they would with all their hearts haue solde for other victuals. That famine also is well known which in the yere of our Lord 851 (Vincent. lib. 25. cap. 26.) afflicted Germany, insomuch that the father was glad to deuoure his owne sonne. It is well known after the death of the Emperour Henry the senenth, in a famine continuing thre whole yeres, how the parents would deuoure their children, and the children their parents, and that especially in Polonia and Bohemia. And that we may not onely allege ancient examples : it is reported that there was such a grieuous dearth of cozne in the yeres 1586, and 1587, throughout Hungary, that some being compelled for want of food were faine to sell their children vnto the most bloudy and barbarous enemy of Christians, and so to enthrall them to the perpetuall yoke of Turkish slavery : and some are sayd to haue taken their children, whom they could no longer sustaine, and with cruell mercy to haue cast them into Danubius, and drowned them. But should these stories and the like make any man so mad as to affirme that this or that nation accustometh to kill their children for their owne food, and to sell them willingly vnto the Turks, or to drowne and strangle them willingly in the water? I cannot thinke it. So neither (because beggers in Island being enforced through extreame and biting necessitie, do willingly part with their sonnes) is this custome generally to be imputed vnto the whole nation, and that by way of disgrace, by any man, except it be such an one who hath taken his leaue of all modesty, plaine dealing, humanity, and truth.

But I could wish that the loue of dogges in Islanders might be more sparingly reprehended by those people, whose matrons, and specially their noble women, take so great delight in dogs, that they carry them in their bosomes thorow the open streetes : I will not say in Churches : which fashion Cæsar blamed in certaine strangers, whom he saw at Rome carrying about yong apes and whelpes in their armes, asking them this question : Whether women in their countrey brought forth children or no? signifying heerby, that they do greatly offend, who bestow vpon beasts beads these naturall affections, where with they should be invited to the loue of mankind, and specially of their owne offspring: which strange pleasure neuer ouertooke, nor possessed the nation of the Islanders. Wherefore now (Munster and Krantzius) you must finde vs out other marks of Christianity, of the law of nature, of the Germans law, and of holy simplicity.

The eighth section.

Krantzius.
Munsterus.

They honour their Bishop as their King: vnto whose command all the whole people haue respect. Whatsoeuer he prescribeth out of the law, the scriptures, or the customes of other nations, they do full holily obserue.

There was indeed at the beginning, about the time of the reformation of religion, great reuerence had vnto the bishop; but neuer so great, that our politique lawes at the bishops command should giue place to ourlandish lawes & customes. Neither in the time of Albertus Krantzius, much lesse of Munster (of which two the first deceased in the yere of our Lord 1517, and the second 1552) the bishops of Island had the authority of kings, when as many of the country which were of the richer sort, would not doubt to rebell against them; which thing is too well known in our countrey. Yet in the meane time, the bishops being terrible with their authority of excommunication, reduced some vnder their subiection, and others at that time they cruelly persecuted. Moreouer, albeit at that time the bishop was had in great, yea, in exceeding great reuerence; yet now adayes, the darknesse of popery being dispelled, the deuill assaulteth men after another sort, and euen here amongst vs, he is not slacke to arme their minds with contempt, and peruerse stubburnesse against God, and his holy ministry.

The ninth section.

Munsterus.

They liue there for the most part vpon fishes, because of their great want of corne, which is brought in from the port townes of other countreys: who cary home fishes from thence with great gaine. Also Munster sayth, they do there vse stockefish in stead of bread, which groweth not in that countrey.

Consider (friendly reader) how Munster is delighted to harpe vpon one string, that when he can twize nothing of an vnknown nation which may cary any shew with it, he is faine either to bring in fallshood, or often to repeat the same things, & so to become tedious vnto his reader: for he sayd a little before, that the Islanders liue vpon fish. His words aboue recited were these: Island containeth many people liuing onely with the food of cattell, and sometimes by taking off fishes. And that I may omit the rest in which some trifle might be noted: whereas he sayeth that bread groweth not in Island: it is most true: which I thinke is common therewith to Germany also, because bread groweth not there neither, except it be in Munsters field where naturall wineger also both marueilously encrease. But these topes, by the liberty of rethoricke forth, shall be out of danger. Howbeit, vnto these reproches, which strangers do gather from the meats and drincks of the Islanders, we will hereafter briefly answer, Sect. 15.

The tenth section.

Munsterus.
Krantzius.

The inhabitants do celebrate the actes of their ancestours, and of their times, with songs, and they graue them in rocks and promontories, that they may not decay with posterity, but onely by the defect of nature.

Frisius.

There be diuers found amongst them that be minstrels, and can play vpon the lute, who with their delectable musicke do ensnare and take both fowles and fishes.

The Islanders
preserue in writing the acts of their ancestours.

We denie not but that some woorthy actes of our forefathers be reserved in the songs and poems of our countreymen, as also in prose: but that the same things haue beene engrauen by vs, or by our ancestours, in rocks or promontories, we may in no case acknowledge that praise to be due vnto vs, nor yet the other of minstrels, and taking of birds and fishes. For we holde it to be the part of an honest and ingenuous mind, as to refute false crimes, so not to challenge undeserued praise vnto himselfe, nor to accept it being offered.

The eleventh section.

But now, let this be the end of our controuersie with the authours aforesayd, being other wise men of excellent learning, and of great renoume, who notwithstanding so inconsiderately haue entermedled these things in their writings. And now the better part of my labour is finished.

But

But yet there remains that viperous German brood, the mother whereof would haue it come to light, as it were at a second birth, without name, that it might so much the more freely wound the fame of the Islanders with venomous sting.

Howeuer, although I be not afraid to encounter with this beast, yet would I haue all men to know with what minde I undertake this enterprize, namely, not that I meane to contend with his pestiferous rancour, by reproches, and railing speeches (for as it is in the common prouerbe:

I know, that if I strive with dung most vile,

How ere it be, my selfe I shall defile)

but that I may sacrifice all honest and well affected men; euen strangers themselves, who shall hereafter reade or heare, or haue heretofore heard that Germane pasquill, least they also should thinke that we woozily sustaine so monstrous a disgrace: and also that I may from henceforth, if it be possible, restraime others (who vse those venomous Germane rimcs to the vphabding of our nation, and from hence borrow their scoffes, and reprochfull taunts to the debasing of vs Islanders) from that libertie of backbiting.

Therefore, that I may not be tedious to the reader with long circumstances, I will come to the rehearsing of those things which that railing Germane hath heaped vp in his lewd pasquill: whom also I could bring in, repeating his friendly verses of the Islanders, within the compasse of this my booke, but that I doe foresee that the sayd slanderous libell being stuffed with so many and diuers reproches, might breed offence to all honest men, and deterre them from reading it, with the filthinesse thereof.

I will therefore repeat the principall matters (omitting those things which he hath common with others, or that heretofore haue bene examined) but farre more modestly then he, least (as I sayd) I cause good and learned mens eares to tingle at his lewd and vnseemely rimcs: they that are desirous to see or heare him, let them enquire at the Stationers. It is no part of our meaning (I say) to defile these papers with his stinking slanders, or with the filthy linke of his reproches.

First therefore, this our goodly Germane Historiographer objecteth that there be many Pastours in Island, which preach not to their people once in two yerres, as it is read in the former edition of this pasquill, which notwithstanding the latter edition doth refuse: saying that the sayd Pastours vse to preach but fve times in an whole yeere: which two, how well they agree together, let the reader be iudge, seeing it is manifest that the authour himselfe, presently after the first edition, had scarce scene Island. So oftentimes one lie betrayeth another, according to that saying: Trueth agreeth vnto trueth; but falshood agreeth neither to trueth nor to falshood.

But sith it is our part not to dissemble the trueth in any place, we will not denie that holy sermons, about the time wherein this tyrophant liued in Island, namely in the yere 1554, were seldom in vse then they are at this day, namely, the darkenesse of popery being scarcely at that time dispelled. Which also is to be understood concerning the Psalmes of David mumbled by the common people in Latine, as he catterth vs in the teeth: for the Papists grounding all the hope of their saluation in the Masse, did little regard the sermon, or doctrine. But after we were freed from that mist, it hath bene (God be thanked) farre otherwise with vs: although we cannot altogether excuse the dullnesse, slouth, and preposterous care of cerceine of our Pastours, Which, whether it agreeth to any of their countrey men or no, let other nations iudge.

Secondly, the trifler shamefully reporteth, that adulteries and whoredomes are not onely publique, and common vices amongst Islanders: but that they are not accounted by them for vices.

The first obiection of reproch.

Although indeed these most filthy abominations, euen in our common wealch, be not altogether vnusuall: notwithstanding, since all men know that they are farre more common in other nations, where be greater multitudes of people, he did vncleruedly, and maliciously note the Islanders rather with this reproch, then other people and nations, who are more infamous with this crime then our countrey men.

And albeie I with with all mine heart that vices and enozimities were much lesse wincked at in our countrey, then we see they are, yet notwithstanding this iugler, by reason of his naturall inclination to backbiting, hath added this in his last reproch: namely, that these vices by the Islanders are not accounted for vice. For, in what common wealch dare the impudent companion affirme this to be true? What? in that common wealch which hath sworn to obserue the law contained in our statute booke vnder the title of Manhelge chap. 28, whereby it is enacted, that whosoever committeth adultery with another mans wife the second time, his goods being confiscated,

lifeate, he shall be punished with death: Or in that common wealth, which not long since hath inflicted the penalty of 80 dalters vpon a seruant committing adultery with his masters wife: Or in that common wealth which hath decreed, that if he doth not pay, nor lay in sureties at the day appointed, he shall be banished the countrey: Or in that common wealth the politike lawes whereof doe streighly command that whosoever be according to law found in adultery with another mans wife, by her hus band, if he escape, he shall vndergoe the punishment of manslaughter: Or in that common wealth, the politike lawes whereof do also enioyne a man that is taken in carnall copulation with the mother, daughter, or sister, by the sonne, father, or brother, to redeme his life with the one halfe of that which he ought to haue payed, if he had shed the innocent blood of the sayd party: Or in that common wealth the politike lawes whereof haue noted and condemned adultery vnder the name of a most heinous offence: and do straightly command that he which is taken the third time in that beastly act shall be punished with death.

You see therefore (friendly readers) what an iniurious Notary we haue, affirming that adultery and whozesome in Island deserueth not the name of sinne and wickednesse: for although some officers let slip this or that vice unpunished, yet ought not the whole nation, nor the lawes, nor all good and godly men, in that regard, to be accused or euill spoken of.

The thirteenth section.

The third reproch.

The third reproch is, whereby he doth brand the Islanders with the marke of deceit and treachery toward the Germans.

Doubtles the authoz of this libell was some vagabond buckster or pedler, and had gone particularly into many corners of Island to vetter his trumpery wares, which he also testifieth of himselfe in his worthy rimes, that he had trauailed thorow the greatest part of Island, whereupon when he had played the cousining mate with others (for often times deceit and lying are ioyned together, and he hath sufficiently proued himselfe to be a liar, by this triall of his wit) peradventure himselfe was beguiled by them whom he before time had defrauded.

From hence proceedeth this slander against our whole Nation: dissembling in the meane time with what honestie certaine Germans; making perely voyages into Island, deale with our men. But seeing by this complaint I haue not determined to reproch others, but to lay open the undeserued reproches of others against our nation, I do here of purpose surcease.

The foureteenth section.

The 4, 5, 6, & 7 reproches.

Fourthly, he sayth that in bankets none of the ghests vse to rise from the table: but that the good wife of the house reacheth to euery one a chamber-pot, so oft as need requireth. Moreouer, he noteth much vnmanerlinesse of eating and drinking at bankets.

Fifthly, he obiecteth customes of lying in bed, and of dining: namely that ten persons, more or lesse, men and women lie altogether in the same bed, and that they eat their meat lying in bed: and that in the meane time they do nothing but play at dice or at tables.

Sixtly, he reporteth that they wash their hands and their faces in piss.

Seuenthly, he despiightfully abaseth our solemnizings of marriages, spousals, birth-dayes, and our customes at burials.

These, and a number of such like reproches hath this impure slanderer spured forth against an innocent nation, yea and that nation which hath deserued right well of him and his countreimen. Which are of the same kind with these, in so much that we also ther disbeigne to make answer vnto them. For, that we may graunt (which notwithstanding we will in no case yeelde vnto) that this worthy Germane notarie obserued some such matter among bafe companions, and the very of-scouring of the common people, with whom he was much moze conuersant then with good and honest persons (for he had lined, as his rimes testifie, somewhat long vpon the coast of Island, whither a confused rout of the meanest common people, in fishing time do perely resort, who being naught as well through their owne lewdnesse, as by the wicked behaviour of outlandish mariners, often times doe leade a badde and dishonest life) notwithstanding we are in this place moze manifestly wronged through the knauery of this one varlet, and desperate hypocphant by his defaming of the whole nation (as others also usually do) then that it should neede any refutation at all. Of which thing strangers themselves, who are not a little conuersant in our Island, may be most sufficient witnesses.

I could also gather together many such filthy, vmannerly, and baudie fashions noted by others euen in his own countrey. But I detest this dogged eloquence, neither take I any pleasure to be witty in the disgracing of others : and yet I will not shew my selfe such a milke-soppe as to be daunted with light wordes. Onely, let all honest and good men consider, what disposition it argueth, for one to obiect against a whole nation certaine misdeemeanours committed by some one or other particular man. If any man should trauell thozowout all the cities and towne of Germanie or any other nation, and heaping together the offences, and most lewd manners, the robberies, manslaughterers, murders, whoredomes, adulteries, incests, riots, extortions, and other prophane, and filthy acts, should affirme them to be common to all Germans, or other wise to any other whole nation, and should exaggerate all these things with notozious lies, is he to be accounted one that spends his time in a good argument : But what marnaille is it, though a varlet, and, that I may giue him his true title, a filthy hogge, that rimer (I say) hath bewrayed his nature and disposition in such like reproches : For it is well known that swine, when they enter into most pleasant gardens, do not plucke lillies, or roses, or any other most beautifull and sweet flowers; but thrusting their snouts into the ground, doe tumble and rolle vp and downe whatsoeuer burr and dung they can finde, untill they haue rooted vp most vnclane things, namely such as are best agreeable to their nature, wherewith they greedily glut themselves : Euen so this hoggish Rimer lightly passeth ouer the best and most commendable things of our Common wealth, but as for the worst, and those which haue bene committed by none, or by very few, namely, such things as best fit his humour and disposition (that he might indeed shew himselfe to be the same which we haue termed him) those things (I say) hath he scraped vp together : whercupon hereafter by my consent, for his manners and disposition let him enioy the name of a swine.

The fifteenth section.

W E will heere rehearse the ninth reproch, which that slanderous hogge hath drawn from the maner of liuing, and specially from the meat and drinke of the Iflanders, and that not in one or a few wordes, but in a large inuectiue : namely, that they eate olde and vnflauoury meates, and that, without the vse of bread. Also, that they eate diuers kinds of fishes which are vnknown to strangers : and that they mingle water and whey together for drinke. All which this venemous pasquill, with eloquent railing and witty slander hath set out at the full.

The ninth reproch.

And albeit we doe scarce vouchsafe to stand longer about answering of him, yet in regard of others, who at this day partly wonder at the matter, and partly obiect it to our nation, we thought good to adde some few things in this place.

First therefore we will diuide this our nation into two parts : into beggers, and those that susteine both themselves, and, amongst others, beggers also. As touching all kinds of meats wherewith beggers and other poore men satisfie their hunger, it is no easie matter to rehearse and examine them : neither, because extreame necessity hath at some times compelled them to eate this or that, therefore is it meet to prescribe certaine kindes and number of meats to the rest of the nation. For we haue also a law among the canons apostolicall, which forbiddeth to eat things strangled : in the obseruing of which cautions, antiquity hath seemed to be very deuout.

Moreover, we will make a distinction of times also, that it may seeme no strange accident in the time of famine, though many things are, and haue bene used by a great number of men to satisfie their hunger, which at other times are scarce meat for dogges. As very lately in the yeere 1590 we heard concerning the citizens of Paris, being enuironed with the most streight siege of Henrie the fourth, King of Nauarre, suffering (as Petrus Lindebergius speaketh) the famine of Saguntum ; insomuch that they did not onely eate their horses, but also taking the flesh of dead men, and beating their bones to powder in a moyster, they mingled therewith a handfull or two of meale, esteeming it dainties. And it is well known also of other nations, who in the like urgent necessities haue liued by eating of mice, cats and dogs. In like manner sometimes are we Iflanders constrained to doe, not being besieged by our enemies (although hitherto we haue abstained from mans flesh, yea, and to our knowledge, from dogs, mice, and cats) for wherreas we prouide things necessary for food out of the land and sea, & no sustenance, or very little, is brought vnto vs by strangers : so often as God withholdeth his gifts of land and sea, then must follow and ensue a deadly scarcitie of victuals, whercupon the inhabitants are sometimes vexed with grievous famine. And therefore it is likely that they amongst vs which used to liue from hand to mouth, and had not some prouision of former yeeres remaining, haue bene diuened to great extremities, so often as need hath enforced them therunto. But whether this thing ought woorthily to minister occasion to a publique and perpetuall reproch against the Iflanders, more then other nations, I referre it to the iudgement of indifferent and honest mindes.

Moreover,

Want of salt in Island.

The Islanders
meanes of preserving their meats with

Howeuer, whereas diuers vse to obiect concerning the proper & accustomed fare of our country, especially of flesh, fish, butter being long time kept without salt: also concerning white-meats, want of cozne, drinking of water, and such like: in most places of Island (for there be many of our countreinmen also, who, after the maner of the Danes and Germans so farre forth as ought in a meane to suffice chaste and temperate minds, although we haue not any great varietie of fauce, being destitute of Apothecaries shops, are of ability to furnish their cable, and to liue moderately) we cōfesse it to be euen so: namely that the foresaid kinds of victuals are vsed in most places without the seasoning of salt. And I wil further adde, that the very same meats, which certaine strangers abhorre so much as to name, yet strangers themselves, when they are among vs do vse to eat them with delight. For albeit for the most part we haue no cozne, nor meale, nor yet salt the prouocation of gluttony, for the seasoning of our victuals, is common to vs all: yet notwithstanding almighty God of his goodnesse hath taught our men also the way, how they should handle, and keepe in store those things which belong to the sustentation of life, to the end it may appeare, that God in nourishing and sustaining of vs Islanders, is not tyed to bread and salt.

But whereas strangers boast that all their victuals are more pleasant and wholesome: yet we denie that to be a sufficient reason, why they should vppraid vs in regard of ours: neither do we thinke God to be a debtor vnto our deinty mouthes; but rather we giue him thanks with our whole hearts, that he vouchsafeth without this delicate and nice fare, which is esteemed to be so pleasant and wholesome, to grant euen vnto the men of our countrey many yeeres, and a good age as also constant health, and flourishing strength of body; all which we account to be signes of wholesome and conuenient nourishment, and of a perfect constitution. Besides, our wits are not altogether so grosse and barren, as the philosophers seeme to assigne vnto this our aier, and these nourishments, which perhaps many of our countrey men could much rather verifie in deeds then in words, if (as the Poet sayth) enuious pouerty did not holde vs downe.

But here the iudgement of the common people, as often in other matters, doth too plainly deceiue (I except all good and well experienced men) some of them which would seeme to be wise: namely, that whatsoeuer they vse doth not admit, or that they haue not scene, nor had triall of beforetime, they presently condemne. As for example, he that neuer saw the sea will not be persuaded that there is a mediterrane sea: so doe they measure all things by their owne experience and conceit, as though there were nothing good and profitable, but that onely where with they mainteine their liues. But we are not grown to that pitch of folly, that because we haue heard of certaine people of Aethiopia, which are fed with locusts, being therefore called by Diodorus, Acridophagi, and of a certaine nation of India also, whom Clicarchus & Megasthenes haue named Mandri, as Agararchides witnesseth, or of others that liue vpon frogs or sea-crabs, or round shrimps, which thing is at this day commonly knownen, that (I say) we should therefore presume to make them a laughing stocke to the common people, because we are not accustomed to such sustenance.

The tenth re-
proch.

Tenthly, that vnciuill beast casteth our men in the teeth with their good hospitality. They do not (sayth he) carry about money with them in their purses, neither is it any shame to be entertained in a strange place, and to haue meat and drinke bestowed of free cost. For if they had any thing which they might impart with others, they would very gladly. Howeouer, he maketh mention of certaine churches or holy chappels (as of a bale thing) which many of the Islanders haue built in their owne houses: & that first of all in the morning, they haue recourse thither, to make their prayers, neither do they suffer any man before they haue done their deuotion, to interrupt them. These be the things which he hath set downe as some notable disgrace vnto the Islanders. And no maruell:

For filthy swine detest all cleanly ones,

And hogs vncleane regard not precious stones.

Which I feare, least it may be too cruelly affirmed of this slanderer, as it is manifest out of these two last obiections.

Howbeit, sithens he himselfe is a most sufficient witness of his owne vertues, we will referre the reader, who is desirous to know more of him vnto his booke of rimes against Island, which we haue now examined in our former sections: at whose railing & filthy speeches we haue bene ashammed on his behalfe: inso much that those things which he with satyrical, satyrical: nay satheanical biting and reuiling of our nation, hath not blushed to write, are irksome for vs to repeat: so great & abominable is his insolency, & his reproches so heinous. Good God! whosoever shall view this earlode of slanders (for we haue mentioned the least part thereof, because I was loth to lose my labour, or, as the wise man sayth, to answer a foole according to his foolishnesse, whereas in his times there is not one word without a reproch) will he not iudge the authour of this pasquill to haue bene a most lewde man, yea the very diabol of mankind, without pietie, without humanitie:

But here I haue iust occasion to doubt whether the authour of these reuillings hath bene the moze iniurious to Islanders, or the Printer thereof Ioachim Leo (and whatsoeuer else they be who in their editions bare neither profite their owne name, nor the name of their Citie) which Leo hath nowe twise; if not oftner, published the saide pamphlet at Hamburg. Doe you suffer this to goe vnpunished, O ye counsell and commons of Hamburg? What? Haue you determined to gratifie Island in this sort, which these many yeeres, by reason of your abundant traffique with vs, and your transporting home of all our commodities, of our beeces and muttons, and of an incredible deale of butter and fishes, hath bene vnto your Citie in stead of a storehouse? In times past also, certaine Cities of England and of Holland haue reaped the commodities of this Isle: Forcouer, there hath bene ancient traffique of Denmarke, Brema, and Lubeck with the Islanders. But they neuer gained by any of their chapmen such commendations, and such thanks, as are contained in this libell: It hath in your, in your Citie (I say) bene bred, brought forth, iterated, if not the thirde time published: which hath armed other people, vnto whom the name of Island was otherwise scarce knowne, to the disdain and contempt of this our Nation: and this iniurie offered by a Citizen of yours, hath Island sustained these 30. yeeres and moze, and doeth as yet susteine. But many such accidents often come to passe without the knowledge of the magistrats, neither do we doubt but that good men are grieued at such infamous libells, and do take diligent heed that they be not published: for such editions are contrarie to the lawe of nature: Doe not that to another which thou wouldest not haue done vnto thy selfe: and to the lawes Imperial of infamous libels: wherein is enioyned a most grieuous penaltie vnto those, who inuent, write, vtter, or cause such libels to be bought or sold, or do not presently vpon the finding thereof teare them in peeces.

But now time bids vs to sound a retreat: and to returne home vnto thee Island (our most deare mother) whom neither pouertie, nor colde, nor any other such inconueniences shall make irksome vnto vs, so long as thou ceaseest not to giue heartie and willing entertainment vnto Christ: where, first we doe earnestly exhort thee to the serious and ardent affection, and loue of God, and of the heavenly knowledge reueiled vnto vs in Christ: that thou wouldest preferre this before all things, being enflamed with desire of doctrine, and of the worde: that thou wouldest not lightly esteeme; contemne or hate the holy ministrerie and ministers, but reuerence, cherish, and loue them. Accompting those that practise the contrary as wicked and prophane: and managing all thine affaires both priuate and publique, according to the prescript rule of pietie and honestie, that vnto this, thy states and orders Ecclesiasticall and politique may in all things be conformed: and so in either kinde of life relying thy selfe vpon that leuell and line of equitie and iustice, and auoyding others, who vpon stubbernesse and impietie swerne therefrom. That thou wouldest also inflict iust punishments vpon offenders: All which we doubt not but the Magistrats will haue respect vnto. But especially that thou admittest none to be Magistrats, but men of approued fidelitie and honestie, and such as may adioyne vnto these vertues others hereto belonging, by which meanes inconueniences may sitly be preuented. For if this matter be well handled, namely that they which are the best of all good men be chosen to beare publique authoritie, wicked and vnfit men being altogether reiected; the condition of the subiects shalbe most prosperous: the liues and manners of all men shal proue by so much the moze commendable: godlinesse also and honestie shal become the moze glorious. But on the contrary, if pastours of Churches be not answerable to their function, either in life or doctrine; if all men without respect or difference be admitted to the gouernment of the common wealth, who aspire thereunto by their owne rashnesse, ambition, or auarice, and desire of honour, yea though they be suspected or conuicted of crimes and dishonestie, or be protectours or vnjust fauourers of such persons as are suspected and conuicted; then what will be thy state, oh Island? What wil be thy outward shew or condition? Doubtlesse most miserable. Neither shalt thou by any other meanes moze suddenly approach to thy ruine and destruction, then if thou committest thy selfe to the gouernment of such men, who to the vttermost of their power, although they be of thine owne blood, dayly seeke thine overthrow for their owne priuate aduantage and secret malice. Wherefore (to be short) let these be to aduertise my deare Country, how behouefull it is that the matters aforesaid be put in practise.

But whilst I am speaking these things vnto thee (my Countrey) oh that my deepe and dolefull sighes, which lie hid in the former speech, might pierce the cares of our Kings most excellent Maiestie, before whom, on thy behalfe I doe bewaile the publique miseries, which in this respect especialy doe arise, because wee are so farre distant from the seate and royall presence of our King, that many therefore take moze libertie, and promise moze securitie of offending vnto themselves. But we will commit all these matters to the most iust Judge of heauen and earth who beholdeth all things in equitie.

Nowe it remaineth (my beloued Countrey) that thou wouldest take in good part these my labours enployed in thy seruice, and accept them with that fauourable and courteous minde which I haue expected. And although they be not of such worth as I could wish, yet such a willing minde is worth all, I would not therefore giue ouer because I mistrusted my selfe as one insufficient to contend for thine innocencie, for thy reputation, and thine honour, my deare Countrey. But rather whatsoeuer it be (if it be ought) and how mickle-soeuer which for my slender abilitie I was able to afford in thy defence, I thought good not to suppress it: for I esteeme not those men worthy of commendation, who despairing

To ouergrow the limmes of Lycos floute,
Neglect to cure their bodies of the goutte,

And in very deed, it doeth no whit repent me of my labour, if this little treatise shall tend neither to thine, nor to mine owne disgrace. But if it shall any thing auail to thine honour or defence, I will thinke my trauaile right well bestowed. Yea, if by this my slender attempt I may but onely excite other of thy children, and my native Countreymen, being farre my superiours both in learning and industrie to take thy cause in hand, either nowe or hereafter, what reason is there why any man should say that it is not worth my labour? Nowe, if they addresse themselves to write, howsoeuer my fame shalbe obscured, yet will I comfort my selfe with their excellencie, who are like to impaire my credite: for albeit a man ought to haue speciall regard of his name and fame, yet is he to haue more of his Countrey, whose dignitie bring safe and sound, we also must needs esteeme our selues to be in safetie.

Quòd verò ad antiquitatis monimèta attinet, quæ hic extare creduntur, nihil sanè est (præter illa, quorum in Commentario isto de Islandia, quem vidisse te scribis, fit mentio) de hac nostra insula lectu scriptuue dignum, quod cum humanitate tua communicem. De vicinis itidem terris pauca, præter historiam Regum Noruegiæ, seu veriùs eiusdem historiæ fragmenta; quæ alijs aliter descripta sunt: sunt tamen talia, quæ Krantzius non attigerit, aut eorum certè pauca. De vicina quoque Gronlandia, id veterum opinione habemus, eam magno circuitu ab extrema Noruegia, vbi ß Biarmlandia nuncupatur, & à qua haud vasto interuallo sita sit, circum quasi Islandiam exporrigi. The same in English.

To the reuerend, learned, and vertuous, Master Hugh Branham minister of the Church of Harewich in England, his brother and fellow-pastour, &c.

I Much maruelled (euen as your selfe, reuerend sir, coniectured that I would) at the first sight of your letters, that being a stranger I should be saluted in writing by one altogether unknown unto mee. Howbeit, reading a litle further, I found my selfe, if not other wise, yet by name at least (which proceedeth of your condescension) known unto you: And also, for that I sawe you desirous of the credite and honest report of vs Islanders, I greatly reioiced. Wherefore I my selfe will be a meane, that your vertue and good name (because you congratulate with vs for the Gospel of Christ here published, and doe thinke and write so louingly and honourably of our nation) may cease hereafter to be unknown amongst vs.

As touching the monuments of antiquitie which are here thought to be extant, there is, in verie deepe, nothing (except those particulars, whereof mention is made in the Commentary of Island, which you write unto me that you haue seene) worthy to be read or written, which I may communicate with you. And as concerning our neighbour Countreys we haue litle to shewe, besides the history of the Kings of Norway, (or rather some fragments of the same history) which others haue other wise described: howbeit they are all in a manner such things as Cranzius neuer mentioned: vnlesse it be some fewe relations. Moreover, as touching Gronland, we holde this from the opinion of our auncetours; that, from the extreme part of Norway, which is called Biarmia, and from whence the saide Gronland is not farre distant, it fetcheth about the Northen coast of Island with an huge circuit in maner of an halfe Moone. Our Chronicles likewise doe testifie that our owne countrey men in times past resorted thither for traffique, and also that the very same countrey of Gronland had certaine Bishops in the dayes of Poperie. Howe then this we cannot auaunch. But now it is reported that your Englishmen (whom I may almost call the lordes of the Ocean sea) make yeerely voyages vnto Gronland: concerning which matter if you please to giue me further aduertisement, you shall doe me an especial fauour. Moreover, whatsoeuer newes you heare concerning the affaires of England or of other Countreys thereabout, I pray you make vs acquainted therewith. Thus (reuerend sir) wishing you long life, for the seruice of God, for the increase of learning, and the benefit of the people committed to your charge, I bid you farewel. From Island vpon the feast of the visitation of the blessed Virgine Mary, Anno Dom. 1595.

The miraculous victory atchieued by the English Fleete, vnder the discreet and happy conduct of the right honourable, right prudent, and valiant lord, the L. Charles Howard, L. high Admirall of England, &c. Vpon the Spanish huge Armada sent in the yeere 1588, for the inuasion of England, together with the wofull and miserable successe of the said Armada afterward, vpon the coasts of Norway, of the Scottish Western Isles, of Ireland, of Spaine, of France, and of England, &c. Recorded in Latine by Emanuel van Meteran in the 15. booke of his history of the low Countreys.

Quing in part declared the strange and wonderfull euents of the yeere rightie eight, which hath bene so long time foretold by ancient prophecies; we will now make relation of the most notable and great enterprise of all others which were in the foresaid yeere atchieued, in order as it was done. Which exploit (although in verie deed it was not performed in any part of the low Countreys) was intended for their ruine and destruction. And it was the expedition which the Spanish king, hauing a long time determined the same in his minde, and hauing consulted thereabout with the Pope, set forth and undertooke against England and the low Countreys. To the end that he might subdue the Realme of England, and reduce it vnto his catholique Religion, and by that meanes might be sufficiently reuenged for the disgrace, contempt and dishonour, which hee (hauing 34. yeeres before enforced them to the Popes obedience) had endured of the English nation, and for diuers other iniuries which had taken deepe impression in his thoughts. And also for that hee deemed this to be the most readie and direct course, whereby hee might recouer his hereditarie possession of the low Countreys, hauing restrained the inhabitants from sayling vpon the coast of England.

Which verily, upon most weighty arguments and evident reasons, was thought would undoubtedly come to passe, considering the great abundance and store of all things necessary wherewith those men were furnished, which had the managing of that action committed vnto them. But now let vs describe the matter more particularly.

The preparation of the Spanish King to subdue England and the Iowes Countreys.

The Spanish King hauing with small fruite and commoditie, for aboute twentie yeeres together, waged warre against the Netherlanders, after deliberation with his counsellors thereabout, thought it most convenient to assault them once againe by Sea, which had bene attempted sundry times heretofore; but not with forces sufficient. Vnto the which expedition it stood him now in hand to ioyn great puissance, as hauing the English people his professed enemies; whose Island is so situate, that it may either greatly helpe or hinder all such as saile into those parts. For which cause hee thought good first of all to inuade England, being perswaded by his Secretary Escouedo, and by diuers other well experienced Spaniards and Dutchmen; and by many English fugitiues, that the conquest of that Island was lesse difficult then the conquest of Holland and Zeland. Whereouer the Spaniards were of opinion, that it would bee farre more behouefull for their King to conquire England and the Iowes Countreys all at once, then to be constrained continually to maintaine a warlike flauie to defend his East and West Indie Fleetes, from the English Drake, and from such like valiant enemies.

And for the same purpose the king Catholique had giuen commandement long befoze in Italy and Spaine, that a great quantitie of timber should be felled for the building of shippes; and had besides made great preparation of things and furniture requisite for such an expedition; as namely in founding of brassen Ordnance, in storing vp of corne and victuals, in traying of men to vse warlike weapons, in leauing and mustering of souldiers: insomuch that about the beginning of the yeere 1588. he had finished such a mightie flauie, and brought it into Lisbon hauen, as neuer the like had befoze that time sailed vpon the Ocean Sea.

A very large and particular description of this flauie was put in print and published by the Spaniards; wherein were set downe the number, names, and burthens of the shippes, the number of Mariners and souldiers throughout the whole flauie; likewise the quantitie of their Ordnance, of their armour, of bullets, of match, of gun-powder, of victuals, and of all their Maual furniture was in the saide description particularized. Vnto all these were added the names of the Gouernours, Captaines, Noblemen and gentlemen voluntaries, of whom there was so great a multitude, that scarce was there any family of account, or any one principall man throughout all Spaine, that had not a brother, sonne or kinsman in that flauie: who all of them were in good hope to purchase vnto themselves in that flauie (as they termed it) inuincible, endlesse glory and renowne, and to possesse themselves of great Seigniories and riches in England, and in the Iowes Countreys. But because the said description was translated and published out of Spanish into diuers other languages, we will here onely make an abridgement or brieue rehearfall thereof.

The number and quantitie of the ships in the Spanish flauie, with the souldiers, Mariners, and pieces of Ordnance.

Portugal furnished and set forth vnder the conduct of the duke of Medina Sidonia generall of the flauie, ten Galeons, two Zabazas, 1300. Mariners, 3300. souldiers, 300. great pieces, with all requisite furniture.

Biscay, vnder the conduct of Iohn Martines de Ricalde Admiral of the whole flauie, set forth tenne Galeons, 4. Bataches, 700. mariners, 2000. souldiers, 250. great pieces, &c.

Guipusco, vnder the conduct of Michael de Oquendo, tenne Galeons, 4. Bataches, 700. mariners, 2000. souldiers, 310. great pieces.

Italy with the Leuant Islands, vnder Marins de Vertendona, 10. Galeons, 800. mariners, 2000. souldiers, 310. great pieces, &c.

Castile, vnder Diego Flores de Valdez, 14. Galeons, two Bataches, 1700. mariners, 2400. souldiers, and 380. great pieces, &c.

Andaluzia, vnder the conduct of Petro de Valdez, 10. Galeons, one Batache, 800. mariners, 2400. souldiers, 280. great pieces, &c.

Item, vnder the conduct of Iohn Lopez de Medina, 23. great Flemish hulkes, with 700. mariners, 3200. souldiers, and 400. great pieces.

Item, vnder Hugo de Moncada, foure Galliasles containing 1200. gally-flaues, 460. mariners, 870. souldiers, 200. great pieces, &c.

Item, vnder Diego de Mandrana, foure Gallies of Portugall, with 888. gally-flaues, 360. mariners, 20. great pieces, and other requisite furniture.

Item, vnder Anthonie de Mendoza, 22. Bataches and Zabazas, with 574. mariners, 488. souldiers, and 193. great pieces.

Besides the ships aforesmentioned there were 20. carauels rowed with oares, being appointed to performe necessary seruices vnto the greater ships: insomuch that all the ships appertaining to this Naue amounted vnto the summe of 150, eche one being sufficiently prouided of furniture and victuals.

The number of Pariners in the saide Fleete were about 8000. of slaues 2088, of souldiers 20000. (besides noblemen and gentlemen voluntaries) of great cast pieces 2650. The foresaid ships were of an huge and incredible capacitie and receipt. For the whole Fleete was large enough to containe the burthen of 60, thousand tunnes.

The Galeons were 64. in number, being of an huge bignesse, and very stately built, being of martiallous force also, and so high, that they resembled great castles, most fit to defend themselves and to withstand any assault, but ingtuing any other ships the encounter farre inferiour vnto the English and Dutch ships, which can with great dexterity weild and turne themselves at all assaies. The upper worke of the saide Galeons was of thickeesse and strength sufficient to beare off musket-shot. The lower worke and the timbers thereof were out of measure strong, being framed of planks and ribs foure or five foote in thickeesse, insonmuch that no bullets could pierce them, but such as were discharged hard at hand: which afterwarde proued true, for a great number of bullets were founde to sticke fast within the massie substance of those thicke planks. Great and well pitched Cables were twined about the masts of their shippes, to strengthen them against the battery of shot.

A description of the Galeons.

The Gallialles were of such bignesse, that they contained within them chambers, chapels, turrets, pulpits, and other commodities of great houses. The Gallialles were rowed with great oares, there being in eche one of them 300. slaues for the same purpose, and were able to do great service with the force of their Disbance. All these together with the residue aforesaid were furnished and beautified with trumpets, streamers, banners, warlike ensignes, and other such like ornaments.

A description of the Gallialles.

Their pieces of brasse ordnance were 1600. and of yron a 1000.

The bullets thereto belonging were 120, thousand.

Item of gun-powder 5600. quintals. Of matche 1200. quintals.

Of muskets and calciuers 7000. Of halberts and partisans 10000.

The great Disbance, bullets, gun-powder, and other furniture.

Moreover they had great store of canons, double-canons, culuerings and field-pieces for land seruices.

Likewise they were prouided of all instruments necessary on land to conueigh and transport their furniture from place to place; as namely of carts, wheeles, wagons, &c. Also they had spades, mattocks and baskets to set psoners on worke. They had in like sort great store of mules and horses, and whatsoever else was requisite for a land-armie. They were so well stored of biscuit, that for the space of halfe a yeere, they might allow eche person in the whole Fleete halfe a quintall euery moneth; whereof the whole summe amounteth vnto an hundredeth thousand quintals.

Their provision of victuals and other things necessary.

Likewise of wine they had 147, thousand pipes, sufficient also for halfe a yeeres expedition. Of bacon 6500. quintals. Of cheese thre thousand quintals. Besides ally, rife, beanes, pease, oile, vineger, &c.

Moreover they had 12000. pipes of fresh-water, and all other necessary provision, as namely candles, lanternes, lampes, sailles, hempe, ore-hibes and lead to stop holes that should be made with the battery of gunshot. To be shor, they brought all things expedient either for a Fleete by sea, or for an armie by land.

This Naue (as Diego Pimentelli afterwarde confessed) was esteemed by the King himselfe to containe 32000. persons, and to cost him euery day 30, thousand ducates.

There were in the saide Naue five terzaes of Spaniards, (which terzaes the Frenchmen call Regiments) vnder the command of five gouernours termed by the Spaniards, Maisters of the field, and amongst the rest there were many olde and expert souldiers chosen out of the garisons of Sicilie, Naples, and Terçera. Their Captaines or Colonels were Diego Pimentelli, Don Francisco de Toledo, Don Alonso de Lucón, Don Nicolas de Isla, Don Augustin de Mexia; who had eche of them 22. companies vnder their conduct. Besides the which companies there were many bands also of Castilians and Portugals, euery one of which had their peculiar gouernours, captaines, officers, colours and weapons.

A Spanish terza consisted of 3200. souldiers.

It was not lawfull for any man, vnder grieuous penaltie, to cary any women or harlots in the Fleete: for which cause the women hired certaine shippes, wherein they sailed after the Naue: some of the which being driuen by tempest arriued vpon the coast of France.

The generall of this mightie Naue, was Don Alonso Perez de Guzman duke of Medina Sidonia, Lord of S. Lucar, and knight of the golden fleece: by reason that the Marques of Santa Cruz appointed for the same dignitie, deceased befoze the time.

John Martines de Ricalde was Admirall of the Fleete.

Francis Bouadilla was chiefe Marshall: who all of them had their officers fit and requisite for the guiding and managing of such a multitude. Likewise Martin Alorcon was appointed Vicar general of the Inquisition, being accompanied with more then a hundred Donkes, to wit, Iesuites, Capuchines, and friers mendicant. Besides whom also there were Physicians, Chirurgicalians, Apothecaries, and whatsoeuer else pertained vnto the hospitall.

ouer and besides the forenamed gouernours and officers being men of chiefe note, there were 124. very noble and worthie Gentlemen, which went voluntarily of their owne costs and charges, to the ende they might see fashions, learne experience, and attaine vnto glozy. Amongst whom was the prince of Ascoli, Alonzo de Leiu, the marques de Pennafiel, the marques de Ganes, the marques de Barlango, count de Paredes, count de Yeluas, and diuers other marqueses and earles of the honourable families of Mendoza, of Toledo, of Pachieco, of Cordoua, of Guzman, of Manriques, and a great number of others.

The preparation of the duke of Parma to aide the Spaniards.

While the Spaniards were furnishing this their Maie, the duke of Parma, at the direction of king Philip, made great preparation in the low Countreys, to giue ayd & assistance vnto the Spaniards; building ships for the same purpose, and sending for Pilots and ship-wrights out of Italy.

In Flanders hee caused certaine deepe chanel to be made, and among the rest the chanel of Yper commonly called Yper-lee, employing some thousands of workemen about that seruice: to the end that by the said chanel he might transport ships from Antwerp and Ghend to Bruges, where hee had assembled aboue a hundred small ships called hoyes being well stozed with victuals, which hoyes hee was determined to haue brought into the sea by the way of Sluys, or else to haue conueyed them by the saide Yper-lee being now of greater depth, into any port of Flanders whatsoeuer.

In the riuer of Waen he caused 70. ships with flat bottomes to be built, euery one of which should serue to cary 30. hozses, hauing eche of them brydges like wise for the hozses to come on boord, or to goe forth on land. Of the same fashion he had provided 200. other vessels at Neuport, but not so great. And at Dunkerk hee procured 28. ships of warre, such as were there to be had, and caused a sufficient number of Mariners to be leued at Hamburg, Breme, Emden, and at other places. Hee put in the ballast of the said ships, great stozes of beames of thicke planks, being hollow and beset with iron pikes beneath, but on eche side full of claspes and hookes, to ioyne them together.

Hee had likewise at Greueling provided 20. thousand of calke, which in a short space might be compact and ioyned together with nailes and cords, and reduced into the forme of a brydge. To be short, whatsoeuer things were requisite for the making of brydges, and for the barring and stopping vp of haucns mouthes with stakes, posts, and other meanes, he commanded to be made ready. Moreover not farre from Neuport haue, he had caused a great pile of wooden fagots to be layd, and other furniture to be brought for the rearing vp of a mount. The most part of his ships contained two ordens a peece to bake bread in, with a great number of saddles, brydles, and such other like apparell for hozses. They had hozses likewise, which after their landing should serue to conuey, and draw engines, field-pieces, and other warlike prouisions.

Neere vnto Neuport he had assembled an armie, ouer the which he had ordained Camillo de Monte to be Camp-master. This armie consisted of 30. bands of ensignes of Italians, of tenne bands of Wallons, eight of Scots, and eight of Burgundians, all which together amount vnto 56. bands, euery band containing a hundred persons. Neere vnto Dixmud there were mustered 80. bands of Dutch men, fiftie of Spaniards, fixe of high Germans, and seuen bands of English fugitiues, vnder the conduct of sir William Stanlie an English knight.

In the suburbs of Correight there were 4000. horsemen together with their hozses in a readinesse: and at Waen 900. hozses, with the troupe of the Marques del Gwasto Captaine generall of the horsemen.

Vnto this famous expedition and presupposed victorie, many potentates, princes, and honourable personages hied themselves: out of Spaine the prince of Melito called the duke of Pastrana and taken to be the sonne of one Ruygomes de Silua, but in very deed accompted among the number of king Philips base sonnes. Also the Marques of Burgrauc, one of the sonnes of Archduke Ferdinand and Philippa Welsera. Vespasian Gonsaga of the family of Mantua, being for chivalry a man of great renowne, and heretofore Vice-roy in Spaine. Item Iohn Medices base sonne vnto the duke of Florence. And Amadas of Sauoy, the duke of Sauoy his base sonne, with many others of inferiour degrees.

Likewise Pope Sixtus quintus for the setting forth of the foresaid expedition, as they vse to do against Turkes & infidels, published a Cruzado, with most ample indulgences which were printed in great numbers. These baine buls the English and Dutchmen deriding, sayd that the deuil at all passages lay in ambush like a chiefe, no whit regarding such letters of safe conduct. Some there be which affirme that the Pope had bestowed the realme of England with the title of Defensor fidei, vpon the king of Spaine, giuing him charge to inuade it vpon this condition, that hee should enioy the conquered realme, as a vassall and tributarie, in that regard, vnto the sea of Rome. To this purpose the said Pope proffered a million of gold, the one halfe thereof to be paid in ready money, and the other halfe when the realme of England or any famous port thereof were subdued. And for the greater furtherance of the whole businesse, he dispatched one D. Allen an English man (whom hee had made Cardinall for the same ende and purpose) into the Low countries, vnto whom he committed the administration of all matters ecclesiasticall throughout England. This Allen being enraged against his owne native countrey, caused the Popes bull to be translated into English, meaning vpon the arrival of the Spanish fleet, to haue it so published in England. By which Bull the excommunications of the two former Popes were confirmed, and the Queenes most sacred Maiestie was by them most vniufully deppriued of all princely titles and dignities, her subiects being enioined to performe obedience vnto the duke of Parma, and vnto the Popes Legate.

But that all matters might be performed with greater secretie, and that the whole expedition might seeme rather to be intended against the Low countries, then against England, and that the English people might be perswaded that all was but bare words & threatenings, and that nought would come to effect, there was a solenne meeting appointed at Borborch in Flanders for a treatie of peace betwene her maiestie and the Spanish king.

Against which treatie the vniued prouinces making open protestation, vsed all meanes possible to hinder it, alleaging that it was more requisite to consult how the enimie now pressing vpon them might be repelled from off their frontiers. Howbeit somethere were in England that greatly urged and prosecuted this league, saying, that it would be very commodious vnto the state of the realme, as well in regard of traffique and nauigation, as for the auoiding of great expenses to maintaine the warres, affirming also, that at the same time peace might easily and vpon reasonable conditions be obtained of the Spaniard. Others thought by this meanes to diuert some other way, or to keepe backe the navy now comming vpon them, and so to escape the danger of that tempest. Howsoeuer it was, the duke of Parma by these wiles enchanted and dazled the eyes of many English & Dutch men that were desirous of peace: whereupon it came to passe, that England and the vniued prouinces prepared in deed some defence to withstand that dreadfull expedition and huge Armada, but nothing in comparison of the great danger which was to be feared, albeit the constant report of the whole expedition had continued rise among them for a long time before. Howbeit they gaue eare vnto the relation of certaine that sayd, that this nauie was prouided to conduct and waite ouer the Indian fleets: which seemed the more probable because the Spaniards were deemed not to be men of so small discretion as to aduenture those huge and monstrous ships vpon the shallow and dangerous chanel of England.

At length when as the French king about the end of May signified vnto her Maiestie in plaine termes that he should stand vpon her guard, because he was now most certainly enioined, that there was so dangerous an inuasion imminent vpon her realme, that he feared much least all her land and sea-forces would be sufficient to withstand it, &c. then began the Queens Maiestie more carefully to gather her forces together, & to furnish her own ships of warre, & the principall ships of her subiects with souldiers, weapons, and other necessary prouision. The greatest and strongest ships of the whole navy she sent vnto Plimmouth vnder the conduct of the right honorable Lord Charles Howard, lord high Admirall of England, &c. Under whom the renowned Knight Sir Francis Drake was appointed Vice-admirall. The number of these ships was about an hundredeth, The lesser ships being 30. or 40. in number, and vnder the conduct of the lord Henry Seimer were commanded to lie between Douer and Calcis.

On land likewise throughout the whole realme, souldiers were mustered and trained in all places, and were committed vnto the most resolute and faithfull captaines. And whereas it was commonly giuen out that the Spaniard hauing once vniued himselfe vnto the duke of Parma, ment to inuade by the river of Thames, there was at Tilburie in Essex ouer-against Gratesend, a mightie army encamped, and on both sides of the river fortifications were erected, according to the prescription of Frederike Genebelli an Italian enginier. Likewise there were certaine ships brought to make a bridge, though it were very late first. Vnto the sayd army came in proper person the Queenes most roiall Maiestie, representing Tomyris that Scythian warlike princeesse, or rather diuine Pallas her selfe. Also there were other such armies leuied in England.

The principall catholique Recusants (least they should stirre by any tumult in the time of the Spanish inuasion) were sent to remaine at certaine conuenient places, as namely in the Isle of Ely 20 treatie of peace, to the end that England and the vniued prouinces might be secure of inuasion.

Her maiesties warlike preparation by sea.

Ely and at Wisbich. And some of them were sent vnto other places, to wit, vnto sundry bishops and noblemen, where they were kept from endangering the state of the common wealth, and of her sacred Maietie, who of her most gracious clemencie gaue expresse commandement, that they should be intreated with all humanitie and friendship.

The preparation of the vnted prouinces.

The prouinces of Holland and Zeland, &c. giuing credite vnto their intelligence out of Spain, made preparation to defend themselves: but because the Spanish ships were described vnto them to be so huge, they relied partly vpon the shallow and dangerous seas all along their coasts. Wherefore they stood most in doubt of the duke of Parma his small and flat-bottomed ships. Howbeit they had all their ships of warre to the number of 90. and aboue, in a readinesse for all assayes: the greater part whereof were of a small burthen, as being more meete to saile vpon their riuers and shallow seas: and with these ships they besieged all the hauens in Flanders, beginning at the mouth of Scheld, or from the towne of Lillo, and holding on to Greueling and almost vnto Calcis, & fortified all their sea-townes with strong garrisons.

Against the Spanish fleets arrival, they had prouided 25. or 30. good ships, committing the gouernment of them vnto Admirall Lonck, whom they commanded to ioinz himselfe vnto the lord Henry Seymer, lying betweene Douer and Cales. And when as the foresaid ships, (whereof the greater part besieged the haven of Dunkerke) were diuinen by tempest into Zeland, Iustin of Nassau the Admirall of Zeland supplied that Squadron with 35. ships being of no great burthen, but excellently furnished with gunnes, mariners and souldiers in great abundance, and especially with 1200. brave Musquetiers, hauing bene accustomed vnto sea-fights, and being chosen out of all their companies for the same purpose: and so the said Iustin of Nassau kept such diligent ward in that Station that the duke of Parma could not issue forth with his nauy into the sea out of any part of Flanders.

The Spanish fleet set saile vpon the 19. of May.

In the meane while the Spanish Armada set saile out of the haven of Lisbon vpon the 19. of May, An. Dom. 1588. vnder the conduct of the duke of Medina Sidonia, directing their course for the Baie of Corunna, alias the Groine in Galicia, where they tooke in souldiers and warlike prouision, this port being in Spaine the nearest vnto England. As they were sailing along, there arose such a mightie tempest, that the whole fleet was dispersed, so that when the duke was returned vnto his company, he could not scry aboue 80. ships in all, whereunto the residue by litle and litle ioyned themselves, except eight which had their mastes blown ouer-board. One of the foure gallies of Portingal escaped very hardly, retiring her selfe into the haven. The other three were vpon the coast of Baion in France, by the assistance and courage of one David Gwin an English captiue (whom the French and Turkish slaues aided in the same enterpryse) utterly disabled and vanquished: one of the three being first overcome, which conquered the two other, with the slaughter of their gouernours and souldiers, and among the rest of Don Diego de Mandrana with sundry others: and so those slaues arriving in France with the three Gallies, set themselves at libertie.

They set saile from the Groine vpon the 11. of Iulij. The Spaniards come within kenning of England. Capitaine Fleming.

The nauy hauing refreshed themselves at the Groine, & receiuing daily commandement from the king to hasten their iourney, hoised vp sailes the 11. day of Iulij, and so holding on their course till the 19. of the same month, they came then vnto the mouth of the narrow seas or English channel, from whence (striking their sailes in the meane season) they dispatched certaine of their small ships vnto the duke of Parma. At the same time the Spanish fleet was escried by an English pinnasse, captaine whereof was M. Thomas Fleming, after they had bene aduertised of the Spaniards expedition by their scouters and espials, which hauing ranged along the coast of Spaine, were lately returned home into Plimmouth for a new supply of victuals and other necessaries, who considering the foresayd tempest, were of opinion that the nauy being of late dispersed and tossed vp and downe the maine Ocean, was by no means able to performe their intended voiage.

Howeouer, the L. Charles Howard, high admirall of England had receiued letters from the court, signifying vnto him that her Maietie was aduertised that the Spanish fleet would not come forth, nor was to be any longer expected for, and therefore, that vpon her Maiesties commandement he must send backe foure of her tallest and strongest ships vnto Chertam.

The L. Admirall shew warre vpon the 19. of Iulij.

The lord high Admirall of England being thus on the sudden, namely vpon the 19. of Iulij about foure of the clocke in the afternoone, enformed by the pinnasse of captaine Fleming aforesaid, of the Spaniards appoach, with all speed and diligence possible he warped his ships, and caused his mariners and souldiers (the greater part of whom was absent for the cause aforesayd) to come on board, and that with great trouble and difficultie, insomuch that the lord Admirall himselfe was faine to lie without in the road with sixe ships onely all that night, after the which many others came forth of the haven. The very next day being the 20. of Iulij about high noone, was the Spanish fleet escried by the English, which with a Southwest wind came sailing along, and passed passed by Plimmouth: in which regard (according to the iudgement of many skilfull navigators) they greatly ouerthot themselves, whereas it had bene more commodious for them to haue staied themselves there, considering that the English men being as yet vnpprouided, greatly relied vpon their owne forces, and knew not the estate of the Spanish nauy. Moreover, this was the most conuenient port of all others, where they might with greater securitie haue bene aduertised of the English forces, and how the commons of the land stood affected, and might haue stirred by some mutinie, so that hither they should haue bent all their puillance, and from hence the duke of Parma might more easily haue conuected his ships.

But this they were prohibited to doe by the king and his counsell, and were expressly commanded to vnite themselves vnto the souldiers and ships of the said duke of Parma, and so to bring their purpose to effect. Which was thought to be the most easie and direct course, for that they imagined that the English and Dutch men would be vterly daunted and dismaied thereat, and would each man of them retire vnto his owne Portuince and Port for the defence thereof, and transporting the armie of the duke vnder the protection of their huge nauy, they might inuade England.

It is reported that the chiefe commanders in the nauy, and those which were more skilfull in navigation, to wit, Iohn Martines de Ricalde, Diego Flores de Valdez, and diuers others found fault that they were bound vnto so strict directions and instructions, because that in such a case many particular accidents ought to concurre and to be respected at one and the same instant, that is to say, the opportunitie of the wind, weather, time, tide, and ebbe, wherein they might faile from Flanders to England. Oftentimes also the darkenesse and light, the situation of places, the depths and shoals were to be considered: all which especially depended vpon the conueniencie of the windes, and were by so much the more dangerous.

But it seemeth that they were enioined by their commission to ancre neere vnto, or about Calais, whither the duke of Parma with his ships and all his warrelike prouision was to resort, and while the English and Spanish great ships were in the midst of their conflict, to passe by, and to land his souldiers vpon the Downes.

The Spanish captiues reported that they were determined first to haue entred the riuer of Thames, and thereupon to haue passed with small ships by to London, supposing that they might easily winne that rich and flourishing Citie being but meanely fortified and inhabited with Citizens not accustomed to the wares, who durst not withstand their first encounter, hoping moreover to finde many rebels against her Maiestie and popish catholiques, or some fauourers of the Scottish queene (which was not long before most iustly beheaded) who might be instruments of sedition.

Thus often aduertising the duke of Parma of their approach, the 20. of Iuly they passed by Plimmouth, which the English ships pursuing and getting the wind of them, gaue them the chase and the encounter, and so both fleets frankly exchanged their bullets.

The day following which was the 21. of Iuly, the English ships approached within musquet shot of the Spanish: at what time the lord Charles Howard most hotly and valiantly discharged his Ordnance vpon the Spanish Vice-admirall. The Spaniards then well perceiving the nimblenesse of the English ships in discharging vpon the enimie on all sides, gathered themselves close into the foyme of an halfe moone, and slackened their sailes, least they should outgoe any of their companie. And while they were proceeding on in this maner, one of their great Gallies was so furiously battered with shot, that the whole nauy was faine to come by rounder together for the safegard thereof: whereby it came to passe that the principall Gallieon of Siuill (wherein Don Pedro de Valdez, Valques de Silua, Alonzo de Sayas, and other noble men were imbarqued) falling soule of another shippe, had her fore-mast broken, and by that meanes was not able to keepe way with the Spanish fleet, neither would the sayde fleet stay to succour it, but left the distressed Galeon behind. The lord Admirall of England when he saw this ship of Valdez, & thought he had bene voyd of Hariners and Souldiers, taking with him as many ships as he could, passed by it, that he might not loose sight of the Spanish fleet that night. For Sir Francis Drake (who was notwithstanding appointed to beare cut his lanterne that night) was giuing of chase vnto five great hulkes which had separated themselves from the Spanish fleet: but finding them to be Easterlings, he dismissed them. The lord Admirall all that night following the Spanish lanterne in stead of the English, found himselfe in the morning to be in the midst of his enemies fleet, but when he perceiued it, hee cleanly conueyed himselfe out of that great danger.

The day following, which was the two and twentieth of Iuly, Sir Francis Drake espied Valdez his shippe, whereunto hee sent forth his pinnasse, and being aduertised that Valdez himselfe selfe was there, and 450. persons with him, he sent him word that he should yeeld himselfe. Valdez for his honours sake caused certaine conditions to be propounded unto Drake: who answered Valdez that he was not now at laisure to make any long parle, but if he would yeeld himselfe, he should find him friendly and tractable: howbeit if he had resolved to die in fight, he should pzoove Drake to be no dastard.

Upon which answer Valdez and his company understanding that they were fallen into the hands of unfortunate Drake, being mooued with the renoume and celebritye of his name, with one consent yeelded themselves, and found him very fauourable vnto them. Then Valdez with 40. or 50. noblemen and gentlemen pertaining vnto him, came on board sir Francis Drakes ship. The residue of his company were carried vnto Plimmouth, where they were detained a yere & an halfe for their ranfome.

Valdez comming vnto Drake and humbly kissing his hand protested vnto him, that he and his had resolved to die in battell, had they not by good fortune fallen into his power, whom they knew to be right courteous and gentle, and whom they had heard by generall report to bee most fauourable vnto his vanquished foe: insomuch that he sayd it was to bee doubted whether his enemies had more cause to admire and loue him for his great, valiant, and prosperous exploitcs, or to dread him for his singular felicitie and wisdom, which euer attended vpon him in the warres, and by the which hee had attained vnto so great honour. With that Drake embraced him and gaue him very honourable entertainment, feeding him at his owne table, and lodging him in his cabbin.

Here Valdez began to recount vnto Drake the fortunes of all the Spanish Fleet, and how foure mightie Gallies were separated by tempest from them: and also how they were determined first to haue put into Plimmouth hauent, not expecting to bee repelled thence by the English ships which they thought could by no meanes withstand their impregnable forces, perswading themselves that by means of their huge Fleet, they were become lords and commaunders of the maine Ocean, for which cause they marueled much how the English men in their small ships durst appoach within musket shot of the Spaniards mightie woaden castles, gathering the wind of them with many other such like attempts.

Immediately after, Valdez and his company, being a man of principal authoritie in the Spanish Fleet, and being descended of one and the same familie with that Valdez, which in the yere 1574. besieged Leiden in Holland, were sent captiues into England. There were in the sayd ship 55. thousand ducates in ready money of the Spanish kings gold, which the souldiers merily shared among themselves.

So great this came ship taken by the English.

The same day was set on fire one of their greatest shippes, being Admirall of the Squadron of Guipusco, and being the shippe of Michael de Oquendo Vice-admirall of the whole Fleet, which contained great store of gunpowder and other warrelke prouision. The upper part onely of this shippe was burnt, and all the persons therein contained (except a very few) were consumed with fire. And thereupon it was taken by the English, and brought into England with a number of miserable burnt and scorched Spaniards. Howbeit the gunpowder (to the great admiration of all men) remained whole and unconsumed.

In the meane season the lord Admirall of England in his ship called the Arke-royall, all that night pursued the Spaniards so neere, that in the morning hee was almost left alone in the enemies Fleet, and it was foure of the clocke at afternoone before the residue of the English Fleet could ouertake him.

At the same time Hugo de Moncada gouernour of the foure Galliasles, made humble sute vnto the Duke of Medina that he might be licenced to encounter the Admirall of England: which libertie the duke thought not good to permit vnto him, because hee was loth to exceed the limites of his commission and charge.

The 23. of July.

Upon Tuesday which was the thre and twentie of July, the navy being come ouer against Portland, the wind began to turne Northerly, insomuch that the Spaniards had a fortunate and fit gale to inuade the English. But the Englishmen hauing lesser and nimbler Ships, recoured againe the vantage of the winde from the Spaniards, whereat the Spaniards seemed to bee more incensed to fight then before. But when the English Fleet had continually and without intermission from morning to night, beaten and battered them withall their shot both great and small: the Spaniardes uniting themselves, gathered their whole Fleet close together into a roundell, so that it was apparant that they ment not as yet to inuade others, but onely to defend themselves and to make halt vnto the place prescribed vnto them, which was neere vnto Dunkerke, that they might ioine forces with the duke of Parma, who was determined to haue proceeded secretly with his small shippes vnder the shadow and protection of the great ones, and so had intended circumspectly to perfoyme the whole expedition.

This was the most furious and bloodie skirmish of all, in which the lord Admirall of England continued fighting amidst his enemies Fleet, and seeing one of his Captaines as farre off, hee spake vnto him in these wordes: Oh George what doest thou? Wilt thou now frustate my hope and opinion conceived of thee? Wilt thou forsake mee now? Which wordes hee being enflamed, approached forthwith, encountered the enemy, and did the part of a most valiant Captaine. His name was George Fenner, a man that had bene conuersant in many Sea-fights.

In this conflict there was a certaine great Venetian ship with other small ships surprized and taken by the English.

A great Venetian ship and other small ships taken by the English.

The English nauie in the meane while increased, whereunto out of all Hauens of the Realme resorted ships and men: for they all with one accord came flocking thither as vnto a set field, where immortall fame and glozy was to be attained, and faithfull seruice to bee perfoymed vnto their pynce and country.

In which number there were many great and honourable personages, as nainely, the Eries of Oxford, of Northumberland, of Cumberland, &c. with many Knights and Gentlemen: to wit, Sir Thomas Cecill, Sir Robert Cecill, Sir Walter Raleigh, Sir William Hatton, Sir Horatio Palauicini, Sir Henry Brooke, Sir Robert Carew, Sir Charles Blunt, Master Ambrose Willoughbie, Master Henry Nowell, Master Thomas Gerard, Master Henry Dudley, Master Edward Darcie, Master Arthur Gorge, Master Thomas Woodhouse, Master William Haruie, &c. And so it came to passe that the number of the English shippes amounted vnto an hundred: which when they were come before Douer, were increased to an hundred and thirtie, being notwithstanding of no proportionable bignesse to encounter with the Spaniards, except two or three and twentie of the Quenes greater shippes, which onely, by reason of their presence, bred an opinion in the Spaniards mindes concerning the power of the English Fleet: the mariners and souldiers whereof were esteemed to be twelue thousand.

The foure and twentie of Iuly when as the sea was calme, and no winde stirring, the fight was onely betweene the foure great Gallies and the English shippes, which being rowed with Oares, had great vantage of the sayde English shippes, which notwithstanding for all that would not bee forced to yeeld, but discharged their chaine-shot to cut asunder their Cables and Cordage of the Gallies, with many other such Stratagemes. They were now constrained to send their men on land for a newe supplie of Gunne-powder, whereof they were in great scarcitie, by reason they had so frankly spent the greater part in the former conflicts.

The same day, a Counsell being assembled, it was decreed that the English Fleet should bee deuised into foure squadrons: the principall whereof was committed vnto the lord Admirall: the second, to Sir Francis Drake: the third, to Captaine Hawkins: the fourth, to Captaine Frobisher.

The Spaniards in their sailing obserued very diligent and good order, sayling three and foure, and sometimes more ships in a ranke, and following close by one after another, and the stronger and greater ships protecting the lesser.

The five and twentie of Iuly when the Spaniards were come ouer-against the Ile of Wight, the lord Admirall of England being accompanied with his best ships, (namely the Lion, Captaine whereof was the lord Thomas Howard: The Elizabeth Ionas under the commandement of Sir Robert Southwel sonne in lawe vnto the lord Admirall: the Beare under the lord Sheffield nephew vnto the lord Admirall: the Victorie vnder Captaine Barker: and the Galeon Leicester vnder the forenamed Captaine George Fenner) with great valour and dreadfull thundering of shot, encountered the Spanish Admiral being in the very midst of all his fleet. Which when the Spaniard perceiued, being assisted with his strongest ships, he came forth and entered a terrible combate with the English: for they bestowed each on other the broad sides, and mutually discharged all their Ordnance, being within one hundred, or an hundred and twentie yards one of another.

The 25. of Iuly.

At length the Spaniards hoisted by their sayles, and againe gathered themselves by close into the forme of a roundel. In the meane while Captaine Frobisher had engaged himselfe into a most dangerous conflict. Whereupon the lord Admirall comming to succour him, found that hee had valiantly and discretely behaued himselfe, and that hee had wisely and in good time ouer the sight, because that after so great a batterie he had sustained no damage.

For which cause the day following, being the five and twentieth of July, the lord Admirall rewarded him with the order of knighthood, together with the lord Thomas Howard, the lord Sheffield, Sir John Hawkins and others.

The same day the lord Admirall received intelligence from Newhaven in France, by certaine of his Minnasses, that all things were quiet in France, and that there was no preparation of sending aide unto the Spaniards, which was greatly feared from the Guisian faction, and from the Leaguers: but there was a false rumour spread all about, that the Spaniards had conquered England.

The Spaniards ancre before Calais.

The seven and twentieth of July, the Spaniards about the sunne-setting were come over-against Dover, and rode at ancre within the sight of Calais, intending to hold on for Dunkerk, expecting there to ioyne with the duke of Parma his forces, without which they were able to doe little or nothing.

Likewise the English Fleet following by hard upon them, ancred lust by them within culling-shot. And here the lord Henry Seymer united himselfe unto the lord Admiral with his fleet of 30. ships which roode before the mouth of Thames.

As the Spanish naute therefore lay at ancre, the duke of Medina sent certaine messengers unto the duke of Parma, with whom upon that occasion many Noblemen and Gentlemen went to refresh themselves on land: and amongst the rest the prince of Ascoli, being accounted the kings base sonne, and a very proper and towardly yong gentleman, to his great good, went on shore, who was by so much the more fortunate, in that hee had not opportunitie to returne on boord the same ship, out of which he was departed, because that in returning home it was cast away upon the Irish coast, with all the persons contained therein.

The duke of Parma being aduertised of the Spanish Fleets arrivall upon the coast of England, made all the haste hee could to bee present himselfe in this expedition for the performance of his charge: vainely perswading himselfe that now by the meanes of Cardinall Allen, hee should be crowned king of England, and for that cause hee had resigned the gouernement of the Lowe countries unto Count Mansfeld the elder. And having made his bowes unto S. Mary of Hall in Henaulc (whom he went to visite for his blind deuotions sake) hee returned toward Bruges the 28. of July.

The 29. of July.

The next day traueilling to Dunkerk hee heard the thundering Ordinance of either Fleet: and the same evening being come to Dixmud, hee was giuen to understand the hard successe of the Spanish Fleet.

The 30. of July.

Upon Tuesday which was the thirtieth of July, about high moone, hee came to Dunkerk, when as all the Spanish Fleet was now passed by: neither durst any of his ships in the meane space come forth to assist the sayd Spanish Fleet for feare of fire and thirtie warrelike ships of Holland and Zeland, which there kept watch and warde vnder the conduct of the Admirall Iustin of Nassau.

The foresayd fire and thirtie shippes were furnished with most cunning mariners and olde expert souldiers, amongst the which were twelue hundred Musketers, whom the States had chosen out of all their garisons, and whom they knew to haue bene heretofore experienced in sea-fights.

This haue was giuen especially in charge not to suffer any shippe to come out of the Hauen, nor to permit any Zabraes, Pataches or other small vessels of the Spanish Fleet (which were more likely to aide the Dunkerkers) to enter therein, for the greater ships were not to be feared by reason of the shallow sea in that place. Howbeit the prince of Parma his forces being as yet vnready, were not come on boord his shippes, onely the English fugitiues being seven hundred in number vnder the conduct of Sir William Stanley, came in fit time to haue bene embarked, because they hoped to giue the first assault against England. The residue shewed themselves vnwilling and loath to depart, because they sawe but a few mariners, who were by constraint drawne into this expedition, and also because they had very bare provision of bread, drinke, and other necessary victuals.

Moreover, the shippes of Holland and Zeland stood continually in their sight, threatening shot and powder, and many inconueniences unto them: for feare of which shippes, the Spaniards and Sea-men secretly withholde themselves both day and night, least that the duke of Parma his souldiers should compell them by maine force to goe on boord, and to breake through the Hollanders Fleet, which all of them iudged to bee impossible by reason of the straightnesse of the Hauen.

But

But it seemeth that the Duke of Parma and the Spaniards grounded upon a baine and presumptuous expectation, that all the ships of England and of the Low countreys would at the first sight of the Spanish and Dunkerke flanie have betaken themselves to flight, peelding them sea roome, and endeavouring onely to defend themselves, their haucns, and sea coasts from inuasion. Wherefore their intent and purpose was, that the Duke of Parma in his small and flat-bottomed shippes, should as it were vnder the shadow and wings of the Spanish fleet, comey ouer all his troups, armour, and warlike prouision, and with their forces so united, should inuade England; or while the English fleet were busied in fight against the Spanish, should enter vpon any part of the coast, which he thought to be most conuenient. Which inuasion (as the captiues afterward confessed) the Duke of Parma thought first to haue attempted by the riuer of Thames; vpon the banks whereof hauing at his first arriual landed twenty or thirtie thousand of his principall souldiers, he supposed that he might easily haue woonne the Citie of London; both because his small shippes should haue followed and assisted his land-forces, and also for that the Citie it-selfe was but meanely fortified and easie to ouercome, by reason of the Citizens delicacie and discontinuance from the warres, who with continuall and constant labour might be vanquished, if they peelded not at the first assault. They were in good hope also to haue mette with some rebels against her Maiestie, and such as were discontented with the present state, as Papists, and others. Likewise they looked for ayde from the fauourers of the Scottish Queene, who was not long before put to death; all which they thought would haue stirred vp seditions and factions.

Whenas therefore the Spanish fleet rode at anker before Caleis, to the end they might consult with the Duke of Parma what was best to be done according to the Kings commandement, and the present estate of their affaires, and had now (as we will afterward declare) purposed vpon the second of August being Friday, with one power and consent to haue put their intended business in practise; the L. Admirall of England being admonished by her Maiesties letters from the Court, thought it most expedient either to driue the Spanish fleet from that place, or at leastwise to giue them the encounter: and for that cause (according to her Maiesties prescription) he tooke forthwith eight of his woost & batest ships which came next to hand, & disburthening them of all things which seemed to be of any value, filled them with gun-powder, pitch, brimstone, and with other combustible and fry matter; and charging all their ordinance with powder, bullets, and stones, he sent the sayd ships vpon the 28 of July being Sunday, about two of the clocke after midnight, with the winde and tide against the Spanish fleet: which when they had proceeded a good space, being forsaken of the Pilots, and set on fire, were directly carried vpon the King of Spaines flanie: which fire in the dead of the night put the Spaniards into such a perplexity and horrour (for they feared lest they were like vnto those terrible ships, which Frederic Ienebelli three yeeres before, at the siege of Antwerpe, had furnished with gun-powder, stones, and dreadfull engines, for the dissolution of the Duke of Parma his bridge, built vpon the riuer of Scheld) that cutting their cables whereton their ankers were fastened, and hoisting vp their sailes, they betooke themselves very confusedly vnto the maine sea.

In this sudden confusion, the principall and greatest of the foure galliasses falling fowle of another ship, lost her rudder: for which cause when she could not be guided any longer, she was by the force of the tide cast into a certaine howld vpon the shore of Caleis, where she was immediatly assaulted by diuers English pinasses, hopes, and drumblers.

And as they lay battering of her with their ordinance, and durst not boord her, the L. Admirall sent thither his long boat with an hundred choise souldiers vnder the command of Captaine Amias Preston. Vpon whose approach their fellows being more emboldened, did offer to boord the galliasse: against whom the gouernour thereof and Captaine of all the foure galliasses, Hugo de Moncada, stoutly opposed himselfe, fighting by so much the more valiantly, in that he hoped presently to be succoured by the Duke of Parma. In the meane season, Moncada, after he had endured the conflict a good while, being hitte on the head with a bullet, fell downe sturke dead, and a great number of Spaniards also were slaine in his company. The greater part of the residue leaping ouer-boord into the sea, to saue themselves by swimming, were most of them drowned. Howbeit there escaped among others Don Anthonio de Manriques, a principall officer in the Spanish fleet (called by them their Veador generall) together with a few Spaniards besides: which Anthonio was the first man that carried certaine newes of the successe of their fleet into Spaine.

This huge and monstrous galliasse, wherein were contained three hundred slaues to lug at the oares, and foure hundred souldiers, was in the space of three houres rided in the same place; and there were found amongst diuers other comodities 50000 ducats of the Spanish kings treasure.

The Spaniards baine or common conceit being their own fleet.

At length when the slaues were released out of their fetters, the English men would haue set the sayd ship on fire, which Monsieur Gourdon the gouernoz of Caleis, for feare of the damage which might thereupon ensue to the Towne and Hauens, would not permit them to do, but draue them from thence with his great ordinance.

fight before
29 of Iulij.

Upon the 29 of Iulij in the morning, the Spanish Fleet after the foresayd tumult, hauing arranged themselves againe into order, were, with in sight of Greueling, most brauely and furiously encountered by the English; where they once againe got the winde of the Spaniards: who suffered themselves to be deprived of the commodity of the place in Caleis rode, and of the advantage of the winde neere vnto Dunkerk, rather then they would change their array or separate their forces now conioyned and vnitied together, standing onely vpon their defence.

And albeit there were many excellent and warlike ships in the English fleet, yet scarce were there 22 or 23 among them all which matched 90 of the Spanish ships in bignesse, or could conveniently assault them. Wherefore the English shippes vsing their prerogative of nimble stirrage, whereby they could turne and wield themselves with the winde which way they listed, came often times very neere vpon the Spaniards, and charged them so close, that now and then they were but a pikes length asunder: & so continually giuing them one broad side after another, they discharged all their shot both great and small vpon them, spending one whole day from morning till night in that violent kinde of conflict, vntill such time as powder and bullets failed them. In regard of which want they thought it convenient not to pursue the Spaniards any longer, because they had many great vantages of the English, namely for the extraordinary bignesse of their ships, and also for that they were so neerely conioyned, and kept together in so good array, that they could by no meanes be fought withall one to one. The English thought therefore, that they had right well acquitted themselves, in chasing the Spaniards first from Caleis, and then from Dunkerk, and by that meanes to haue hindered them from ioyning with the Duke of Parma his forces, and getting the winde of them, to haue giuen them from their owne coasts.

The Spaniards that day sustained great losse and damage hauing many of their shippes shot thorow and thorow, and they discharged likewise great store of ordinance against the English; who indeed sustained some hinderance, but not comparable to the Spaniards losse: for they lost not any one shippe or person of account. For very diligent inquisition being made, the English men all that time wherein the Spanish many sayled vpon their seas, are not found to haue wanted aboute one hundreth of their people: albeit Sir Francis Drakes shippe was pierced with shot aboute forty times, and his very cabben was twice shot thorow, and about the conclusion of the fight, the bedde of a certaine gentleman lying weary thereupon, was taken quite from vnder him with the force of a bullet. Likewise, as the Earle of Northumberland and Sir Charles Blunt were at dinner vpon a time, the bullet of a demi-culuering brake thorow the middle of their cabbin, touched their feet, and strooke downe two of the standers by, with many such accidents befalling the English shippes, which it were tedious to rehearse. Whereupon it is most apparant, that God miraculously preserved the English nation. For the L. Admirall wrote vnto her Maestie that in all humane reason, and according to the iudgement of all men (euery circumstance being duly considered) the English men were not of any such force, whereby they might, without a miracle, dare once to approach within sight of the Spanish Fleet: inasmuch that they freely ascribed all the honour of their victorie vnto God, who had confounded the enemy, and had brought his counsels to none effect.

Three Spanish
suncke in the fight.

The same day the Spanish ships were so battered with English shot, that that very night and the day following, two or three of them suncke right downe: and among the rest a certaine great ship of Biscay, which Captaine Crosse assaulted, which perished euen in the time of the conflict, so that very few therein escaped drowning; who reported that the gouernours of the same shippe slew one another vpon the occasion following: one of them which would haue precluded the shippe was suddenly slaine; the brother of the slaine party in reuenge of his death slew the murderer, and in the meane while the ship suncke.

Two galeons taken and caried into Ze-
land.

The same night two Portugall galeons of the burthen of seuen or eight hundreth tunnes a piece, to wit the Saint Philip and the Saint Mathew, were forsaken of the Spanish Fleet, for they were so torne with shotte, that the water entered into them on all sides. In the galeon of Saint Philip was Francis de Toledo, brother vnto the Count de Orgas, being Colonell ouer two and thirtie bands: besides other gentlemen; who seeing their mast broken with shotte, they shaped their course, as well as they could, for the coast of Flanders: whither when they could not attaine, the principall men in the ship committing themselves to their skiffe, arriued at the next towne, which was Ostend; and the ship it selfe being left behinde with the residue of their company, was taken by the Allishingers.

In the other galeon, called the S. Marthew, was embarked Don Diego Pimentelli another camp-maister and colonell of 32 bands, being brother vnto the marques of Tannares, with many other gentlemen and capitaines. Their ship was not very great, but exceeding strong, for a great number of bullets which had battered her, there were scarce 20 wherewith she was pierced or hurt: her upper worke was of force sufficient to beate off a musket shot: this shippe was shot thorow and pierced in the sight before Greueling; insomuch that the leakage of the water could not be stopped: whereupon the duke of Medina sent his great skiffe vnto the gouernour thereof, that he might saue himselfe and the principall persons that were in his ship: which he, vpon a haile courage, refused to do: wherefore the Duke charged him to saile nere vnto himselfe: which the night following he could not performe, by reason of the great abundance of water which entered his ship on all sides; for the auoiding wherof, and to saue his ship from sincking, he caused 50 men continually to laboꝛ at the pumpe, though it were to small purpose. And seeing himselfe thus forsaken & separated from his admirall, he endeouored what he could to attaine vnto the coast of Flanders: where, being espied by 4 or 5 men of warre, which had their station assigned them vpon the same coast, he was admonished to yeeld himselfe vnto them. Which he refusing to do, was strongly assaulted by them altogether, and his ship being pierced with many bullets, was brought into farre worse case then before, and 40 of his souldiers were slaine. By which extremity he was enforced at length to yeeld himselfe vnto Peter Banderduels & other capitaines, which brought him and his ship into Zeland; and that other ship also last before mentioned: which both of them, immediately after the greater and better part of their goods were vnladen, suncke right downe.

For the memoꝛy of this exploit, the foresayd capitaine Banderduels caused the banner of one of these shippes to be set vp in the great Church of Leiden in Holland, which is of so great a length, that being fastened to the very roofoe, it reached downe to the ground.

About the same time another small ship being by necessity driuen vpon the coast of Flanders, about Blankenberg, was cast away vpon the sands, the people therein being saued. Thus almighty God would haue the Spaniards huge ships to be presented, not onely to the view of the English, but also of the Zelanders; that at the sight of them they might acknowledge of what small ability they had bene to resist such impregnable forces, had not God endued them with courage, prouidence, and fortitude, yea, and sought for them in many places with his owne arme.

The 29 of Iulij the Spanish fleet being encountered by the English (as is aforesayd) and lying close together vnder their fighting sailes, with a South-west winde sailed past Dunkerke, the English ships still following the chase. Of whom the day following when the Spaniards had got lea room, they cut their maine sailes; whereby they sufficiently declared that they meant no longer to fight but to flee. For which cause the L. Admirall of England dispatched the L. Henrie Seymer with his Squadron of small ships vnto the coast of Flanders, where, with the helpe of the Dutch ships, he might stop the prince of Parma his passage, if perhaps he should attempt to issue forth with his army. And he himselfe in the meane space pursued the Spanish fleet vntill the second of August, because he thought they had set saile for Scotland. And albeit he followed them very neere, yet did he not assault them any more, for want of powder and bullets. But vpon the fourth of August, the winde arising, when as the Spaniards had spread all their sailes, betaking themselves wholly to flight, and leauing Scotland on the left hand, trended toward Norway, (whereby they sufficiently declared that their whole intent was to saue themselves by flight, attempting for that purpose, with their battered and crazed ships, the most dangerous navigation of the Northzen seas) the English seeing that they were now proceeded vnto the latitude of 57 degrees, and being vnwilling to participate that danger wherein the Spaniards plunged themselves, and because they wanted things necessary, and especially powder & shot, returned backe for England; leauing behinde them certaine pinasses onely, which they enioyned to follow the Spaniards aloofe, and to obserue their course. And so it came to passe that the fourth of August, with great danger and industry, the English arrived at Harwich: for they had bene tossed vp and downe with a mighty tempest for the space of two or thre dayes together, which it is likely did great hurt vnto the Spanish fleet, being (as I sayd before) so maimed and battered. The English now going on shore, provided themselves forthwith of victuals, gunne-powder, and other things expedient, that they might be ready at all assaies to entertaine the Spanish fleet, if it chanced any more to returne. But being afterward more certainly informed of the Spaniards course, they thought it best to leaue them vnto those boisterous and uncouth Northzen seas, and not there to hunt after them.

The Spaniards seeing now that they wanted foure or fve thousand of their people and hauing diuers maimed and sicke persons, and like wise hauing lost 10 or 12 of their principall ships, they consulted among themselves, what they were best to doe, being now escaped out of the hands of the English, because their victuals failed them in like sort, and they began also to want cables, cordage, anchors, masts, sails, and other nauall furniture, and vntirely despaired of the Duke of Parma his assistance (who verily hoping and vndoubtedly expecting the returne of the Spanish Fleet, was continually occupied about his great preparation, commanding abundance of anchors to be made, & other necessary furniture for a flauoy to be prouided) they thought it good at length, so soone as the winde should serue them, to fetch a compasse about Scotland and Ireland, and so to returne for Spaine.

For they well vnderstood, that commandement was giuen throughout all Scotland, that they should not haue any succour or assistance there. Neither yet could they in Norway supply their wants. Wherefore, hauing taken certaine Scottish and other fisher boats, they brought the men on board their owne ships, to the end they might be their guides and pilots. Fearing also least their fresh water should faile them, they cast all their horses and mules oner-board: and so touching no where vpon the coast of Scotland, but being carried with a fresh gale betweene the Orcaades and Faar-Iles, they proceeded farre North, euen vnto 61 degrees of latitude, being distant from any land at the least 40 leagues. Where the Duke of Medina generall of the Fleet commanded all his followers to shape their course for Biscay: and he himselfe with twenty or fife and twenty of his ships which were best prouided of fresh water and other necessities, holding on his course ouer the maine Ocean, returned safely home. The residue of his ships being about forty in number, and committed vnto his Vice-admirall, fell neerer with the coast of Ireland, intending their course for Cape Clare, because they hoped there to get fresh water, and to refresh themselves on land. But after they were diuened with many contrary windes, at length, vpon the second of September, they were cast by a tempest arising from the Southwest vpon diuers partes of Ireland, where many of their ships perished. And amongst others, the shippe of Michael de Oquendo, which was one of the great Gallies: and two great ships of Venice also, namely, la Ratta and Belanzara, with other 36 or 38 ships more, which perished in sundry tempests, together with most of the persons contained in them.

Likewise some of the Spanish ships were the second time carried with a strong West winde into the chanell of England, whereof some were taken by the English vpon their coast, and others by the men of Rochel vpon the coast of France.

Moreover, there arrived at Newhauen in Normandy, being by tempest inforced so to doe, one of the foure great Gallies, where they found the ships with the Spanish women which followed the Fleet at their setting forth. Two ships also were cast away vpon the coast of Norway, one of them being of a great burthen; howbeit all the persons in the sayd great ship were saued: insomuch that of 134 ships, which set saile out of Portugall, there returned home 53 onely small and great: namely of the foure Gallies but one, and but one of the foure Gallies. Of the 91 great galleons and hulks there were missing 58, and 33 returned: of the pataches and zabazas 17 were missing, and 18 returned home. In briefe, there were missing 81 ships, in which number were Gallies, Gallies, galleons, and other vessels both great and small. And amongst the 53 ships remaining, those also are reckoned which returned home before they came into the English chanell. Two galleons of those which were returned, were by misfortune burnt as they rode in the haue; and such like mishaps did many others vndergo. Of 30000 persons which went in this expedition, there perished (according to the number and proportion of the ships) the greater and better part; and many of them which came home, by reason of the toiles and inconueniences which they sustained in this voyage, died not long after their arrivall. The Duke of Medina immediately vpon his returne was deposed from his authority, commanded to his priuate house, and forbidden to repaire vnto the Court; where he could hardly satisfie or peeple a reason vnto his malicious enemies and backbiters. Many honourable personages and men of great renowne deceased soone after their returne; as namely Iohn Martines de Ricalde, with diuers others. A great part also of the Spanish Nobility and Gentry employed in this expedition perished either by sight, diseases, or drowning, before their arrivall; & among the rest Thomas Perenor of Granduell a Dutchman, being earle of Cantebroi, and sonne vnto Cardinall Granduell his brother.

Vpon the coast of Zeland Don Diego de Pimentell, brother vnto the Marques de Tamaras, and kinsman vnto the earle of Beneuentum & Calia, and Colonell ouer 32 bands with many other in the same ship was taken and detained as prisoner in Zeland.

Into England (as we sayd before) Don Pedro de Valdez, a man of singular experience, and greatly honoured in his countrey, was led captiue, being accompanied with Don Vasquez de Silua, Don Alonzo de Sayas, and others.

Likewise vpon the Scottish Westerne Isles of Lewis, and Ila, and about Cape Cantyre vpon the maine land, there were cast away certaine Spanish shippes, out of which were saued di-uers Captaines and Gentlemen, and almost foure hundred souldiers, who for the most part, after their shipwracke, were brought vnto Edenborough in Scotland, and being miserably naked and naked, were there clothed at the liberality of the King and the Marchants, and afterward were secretly shipped for Spaine; but the Scottish fleet wherein they passed touching at Yarmouth on the coast of Norfolk, were there stayed for a time vntill the Councels pleasure was knowne; who in regard of their manifold miseries, though they were enemies, wincked at their passage.

The shippe was wrecked of the Spaniards vpon the Irish coast.

Of 134 ships of the Spanish fleet, there returned home but 53.

Vpon the Irish coast many of their Noblemen and Gentlemen were drowned; and diuers slaine by the barbarous and wilde Irish. Howbeit there was brought prisoner out of Ireland, Don Alonzo de Lucón, Colonell of two and thirtie bandes, commonly called a terza of Naples; together with Rodorigo de Lasso, and two others of the family of Cordoua, who were committed vnto the custodie of Sir Horatio Palauicini, that Monsieur de Teligny the sonne of Monsieur de la Nouë (who being taken in fight neere Antwerpe, was detained prisoner in the Castle of Turney) might be ransomed for them by way of exchange. To conclude, there was no famous nor woorthy family in all Spaine, which in this expedition lost not a sonne, a brother, or a kinsman.

For the perpetuall memorie of this matter, the Zealanders caused newe coine of Silver and brasse to be stamped: which on the one side contained the armes of Zeland, with this inscription: GLORY TO GOD ONELY: and on the other side, the pictures of certaine great ships, with these words: THE SPANISH FLEET: and in the circumference about the ships: IT CAME, WENT, AND WAS. Anno 1588. That is to say, the Spanish fleet came, went, and was vanquished this yere; for which, glory be giuen to God onely.

Likewise they coined another kinde of money; vpon the one side whereof was represented a ship fleeing, and a ship sincking: on the other side foure men making prayers and giuing thanks vnto God vpon their knees; with this sentence: Man purposeth; God disposeth. 1588. Also, for the lasting memorie of the same matter, they haue stamped in Holland diuers such like coines, according to the custome of the ancient Romans.

While this wonderfull and puissant Raute was sayling along the English coastes, and all men did now plainly see and heare that which before they would not be perswaded of, all people throughout England prostrated themselves with humble prayers and supplications vnto God: but especially the outlandish Churches (who had greatest cause to feare, and against whom by name, the Spaniards had threatened most grievous torments) enioyned to their people continuall fastings and supplications, that they might turne away Gods wrath and fury now imminent vpon them for their sinnes: knowing right well, that prayer was the onely refuge against all enemies, calamities, and necessities, and that it was the onely solace and reliefe for mankinde, being visited with affliction and misery. Like wise such solenne dayes of supplication were observed throughout the vniued Provinces.

Also a while after the Spanish Fleet was departed, there was in England, by the commandement of her Maiestie, and in the vniued Provinces, by the direction of the States, a solenne festiuall day publickly appointed, wherein all persons were enioyned to resort vnto the Church, and there to render thanks and praises vnto God: and the Preachers were commanded to exhort the people thereunto. The foresayd solemnity was observed vpon the 29 of Nouember; which day was wholly spent in fasting, prayer, and giuing of thanks.

Like wise, the Queenes Maiestie herselfe, imitating the ancient Romans, rode into London in triumph, in regard of her owne and her Subjects glorious deliuerance. For being attended vpon very solemnely by all the principall estates and officers of her Realme, she was carried throughout her sayd City of London in a triumphal chariot, and in robes of triumph, from her Palace vnto the Cathedral Church of Saint Paul, out of the which the ensignes and colours of the vanquished Spaniards being displayed. And all the Citizens of London in their Liuries stood on either side the street, by their severall Companies, with their ensignes and banners: and the streets were hanged on both sides with Blew cloth, which, together with the foresayd banners, peelded a very stately and gallant prospect. Her Maiestie being entered into the Church, together with her Clergie and Nobles gaue thanks vnto God, and caused a publicke Sermon to be preached before her at Pauls crosse; wherein none other argument was handled, but that praise, honour, and glory might be rendered vnto God; and that Gods name might be extolled by thanksgiving. And with her owne princely voice she most Christianly exhorted the people to doe the same: whereupon the people with a loud acclamation wished her a most long and happy life, to the confusion of her foes.

These coines stamped for the memorie of the Spaniards overthrow.

The people of England and of the vniued provinces, pray, fast, and giue thanks vnto God.

Thus the magnificent, huge, and mighty fleet of the Spaniards (which themselves termed in all places invincible) such as sailed not upon the Ocean sea many hundred yeeres before, in the yeere 1588 vanished into smoake; to the great confusion and discouragement of the authorrs thereof. In regard of which her Maiesties happy successes all her neighbours and friends congratulated with her, and many verses were penned to the honour of her Maiesty by learned men, whereof some which came to our hands we will here annere,

Deuoured the deuourer to his smart:

And made his ships a pray vnto the sand,

That meant to pray vpon anothers land.

And now, O Queene, above all others blest,

For whom both windes and waues are prest to fight,

So rule your owne, so succour friends oppress,

(As farre from pride, as ready to do right)

That England you, you England long enjoy,

No lesse your friends delight, then foes annoy.

A brieft and true report of the Honorable voyage vnto Cadiz, 1596. of the ouerthrow of the kings Fleet, and of the winning, sacking, and burning of the Citie, with all other accidents of moment, thereunto appertaining,

After that the two most Noble and Renowned Lords Generals: The L. Robert Earle of Essex, and the L. Charles Howard L. High Admirall of England, were come vnto Plymmouth (which was about the beginning of May last, 1596.) being there accompanied with diuers other noble Peeres, as the Earle of Suffex, the L. Thomas Howard, the L. Harbert, the L. Warden Sir Walter Raleigh: the L. Marshall Sir Francis Vere: the L. Burk, Don Christopher young Prince of Portingall, young Count Lodouick of Naslaw, and the Admirall of the Hollanders, Sir Iohn Vanderfoord: besides many other most worthy Knights and Gentlemen of great woorth attending vpon this most honorable Action: It pleased them, there to make their abode for the time of that moneth, as well for the new furnishing and reuictualing of her Maiesties Royall Manie: as also for the expecting of some other ships, which were to come from diuers places of the Realme, and were as yet wanting: making that place as it should seeme the Rendezous for all the whole Fleet, there to complete the full number of all such companies both for sea and land: as was in their noble and deepe wisdomes thought meete and agreed vpon.

All the time of this their abode there, there was a most zealous and diligent care had for the holy seruice of God, dayly and reuerently to be frequented: and also for other good and ciuill orders of militarie discipline to be obserued, to the exceeding great comfort and reioycing of all the hearts of the godly and well disposed.

And for that it might the better appeare, that there was small hope of pardon to be expected of the offenders, if they did at any time neglect their duties, about due obseruation of matters of importance: Their orders, lawes, and decrees being once published: about the 8. or 9. of the same moneth, there were two offenders executed a little without the towne, in a very fayre pleasant greene, called the Ho: the one for beginning of a muteny in his company, the other for running away from his Colours.

And about the same time in the Dutch Regiment, an other for murthering of one of his companions, about a quarrell betweene themselves, rising as it was supposed, vpon their drinke, was by order of Martiall law, presently tryed to the partic to murthered, and forthwith both of them cast into the sea.

Moreover, about the 28. of the same moneth, a certaine Lieutenant (whose name I will forbear) was by sound of Drumme publicly in all the streetes disgraced, or rather after a sorte disgraced, and cashiered for bearing any farther Office at that time, for the taking of money by way of corruption, of certaine yest souldiers in the Countrey; and for laking of others in their roomes, more unfit for seruice, and of lesse sufficiency and abilitie. This seuerer executing of iustice at the very first did breed such a deepe terror in the hearts of the whole armie, that it seemed to cut off all occasion of the like disorder for euer afterwards to be attempted.

And here before their departure fro Plymmouth, it pleased their Lordships to publish in print, and make knowne to all the world, especially to such as whom it concerned, and that both in the Latine, French, Dutch, English and Spanishe tongue, what were the true, iust, and vrgent causes, that at this time prouoked her Maiestie, to undertake the preparing and setting forth of this so great a Manie, annexing thereunto a full declaration, what was their good will and pleasure should be done and performed of all them that ment not to incurre their owne priuate present dangers, or else were willing to auoyde her Maiesties future indignation and displeasure.

Likewise now, at the same instant, their owne most prouident and godly decrees, which they had deuised for the honest cariage of euery particuler person in their degrees and vocation, were made knowne to all men, and published in sundry writings, with diuers great punishments, set downe and appointed for the wilfull offenders and breakers of the same.

Thus then, all things being in very good order and well appointed, the most holy name of our Omnipotent God being most religiously and deuoutly called vpon, and his blessed and sacred Communion being diuers times most reuerently and publicly celebrated: These two most noble personages, with all their honorable Afforciats, and most famous worthy Knights, Gentlemen, Captaines, Leaders, and very willing and expert Souldiers, and Mariners, being furnished with 150. good sayle of shippes or thereabout: In the name of the most High & everlasting God,

God, and with all true and faithfull obedience, to her sacred Maestie, to the infinite good and tranquillitie of our Countrey, and to the perpetuall glory, and triumphant renoume of the eternall memory of their honorable names to all posterity, the first day of June embarked themselves, weighed Ancre, and hoysed by sayle, and put to sea onward their iourney from the Sownds of Plymmouth.

The winde, at the first setting forth, seemed very fauourable: but yet in the euening growing very scant, and all that night falling moze and moze against vs, and we hauing sayled no further then to a certaine place called Dodman head: we were constrained the next day, to make our returne to the road of Plymmouth againe, and there in the Sownds to lie at ancre for that night.

About this time, and in this very place, by good fortune there came to my handes a prayer in English, touching this present Action, and made by her Maestie, as it was voyced: The prayer seemed to me to be most excellent, aswell for the matter, as also for the manner, and therefore for certaine diuers good motiues which then presently came to my minde, and whereof hereafter in his moze conuenient time and place, I will make farther mention, I presumed at that very instant to translate it into Latine.

The Prayer is thus.

Most Omnipotent maker and guide of all our worlds masse, that onely searchest and fastest the bottome of all our hearts conceits, and in them seest the true originals of all our actions intended: thou that by thy foresight doest truly discern, how no malice of reuenge, nor quittance of iniury, nor desire of bloodshed, nor greedinesse of lucre hath bred the resolution of our now set out Army, but a heedfull care, & wary watch, that no neglect of foes, nor ouer-suretie of harme might breed either daunger to vs, or glory to them: these being the grounds wherewith thou doest enspire the mind, we humbly beseech thee with bended knees, prosper the worke, and with best forewindes guide the iourney, speed the victorie, and make the returne the aduancement of thy glory, the tryumph of their fame, and surety to the Realme, with the least losse of the English blood. To these deuout petitions Lord giue thou thy blessed grant.

My homely translation is thus.

Summè præpotens Deus, immensæ huius totius nostri mundi molis fabricator & Rector, qui solus perscrutaris intimos cordis nostri sensus, & ad fundum vsq; nostrorum cogitationum explorando penetras, ac in eis, quid verè, & ex animo cogitemus, & quæ sint actionum nostrarum rationes, ac fundamenta, cognoscis: Tu, qui ea, quæ in te est, ab omni æternitate præscienria, vides, quòd nec aliqua vlciscendi malitiosa cupiditas; nec iniuriarum referendarum desiderium, nec sanguinis effundendi sitis, nec alicuius lucri, quæstusue auiditas ad istam classem præparandam, & emittendam nos commouerit: sed potius, quòd prouida quædam cura, solersque vigilantia huc nos impulerit: ne vel inimicorum nostrorum neglectus, vel status nostri firmitatis nimium secura cogitatio, aut illis gloriam, & honorem, aut nobis damnum & periculum pariat: Cum, inquam, hæc sint nostri, quicquid attentatur, negotii fundamenta: cumque tu hunc nobis animum, mentemq; inieceris, vt istud aggredieremur: curuatis genibus a te humillimè petimus, vt velis hoc nostrum inceptum secundissimè fortunare, totum iter prosperis flatibus dirigere, celerem & expeditâ victoriam nobis concedere, reditumq; talem nostris militibus elargiri, qualis & nomini tuo incrementum gloriæ, & illis famæ, laudisque triumphum, & Regno nostro firmam tranquillitatem possit apportare: idque cumminimo Anglorum sanguinis dispendio. His nostris religiosis petitionibus concede, Domine, sacrosancam & annuentem voluntatem tuam.

After that we had anchored at Plymmouth that night, as I haue said, the third of June very early in the morning, hauing a reasonable fresh gale of winde, we set sayle, and kept our course againe, and the ninth of the same moneth comming something neere to the North cape, in a maner in the same altitude, or not much differing, which was about xliii. degrees, and something moze, yet bearing so, as it was impossible to bee descried from the land: There it pleased the Lord to call a select Councell, which was alwayes done by hanging out of a flagge of the armes of England, and shooting off of a great warning peece. Of this select or priuie Councell, were no moe then these: The two Lords Generall, the Lord Thomas Howard, the Lord Warden Sir Walter Raleigh, the Lord Partiall Sir Francis Vere, Sir George Cary master of the Ordnance, Sir Coniers Clifford, and Sir Anthony Ashley, Clarke of the sayde Councell.

Counsell. And when it pleased the Lords Generall to call a common Counsell (as often times they did upon weightie matters best known to their honours) then they would cause an other kinde of flagge to be hanged out, which was the Redcrosse of S. George, and was very easie to be discerned from the other that appertained onely to the select Counsell; and so often as this flagge of Saint George was hanged out, then came all the Masters and Captaines of all the ships, whose opinions were to be demaunded, in such matters as appertayned vnto this sayd select Counsell: It was presently concluded, that our course in sayling should shortly be altered, and that we should beare more into the West, for some purposes to them best known.

At that very instant many letters of instructions were addressed and sent to euery particular Master and Captaine of the Ships: That the contenters of those letters of instructions were it was not as yet knowne vnto any, neither was it held meet to be enquired or knowne of any of vs. But vnder the titles and superscriptions of euery mans particuler letter these wordes were endozed. Open not these letters on pain of your liues, vnles we chance to be scattered by tempest, and in that case open them, and execute the contents thereof: but if by mishap you fall into your enemies hand, then in any case cast them into the sea, sealed as they are. It should seeme that these letters did containe in them the principall place and meaning of this intended action, which was hitherto by their deepe foresights kept so secret, as no man to my knowledge either did, or coulde so much as suspect it, more then themselves, who had the onely managing thereof. A conceite in my iudgement of greatest moment in the world, to effect any matter of importance. I meane, to entertaine those two vertues, Fidem, & Taciturnitatem: so much commended by the old writers. And if there was euer any great designement, in this our age, and memorie, discretely, faithfully, and closely caried, I assure my selfe it was this, and though it were but in respect of that popce onely: yet for such faithfull secretie, it deserueth immortall praise.

All this while, our ships, God be thanked, kept in a most excellent good order, being deuided into five squadrons: that is to say, The Earle of Essex, the Lord Admirall, the Lord Thomas Howard, the Lord Warden Sir Walter Raleigh, and the Admirall of the Hollanders. All which squadrons, albeit they did euery day separate themselves of purpose, by the distance of certaine leagues, as well to looke out for such shippes as were happily vnder sayle, as also for the better procuring of sea-roome: yet alwayes commonly epyther that day, or the next day, towards euening, they came all together, with friendly salutations and gratulations one to another: which they terme by the name of Hayling: a ceremonie done solemnly, and in verie good order, with sound of Trumpets and noyse of cheerefull voyces: and in such sort performed as was no small encouragement one to the other, beside a true report of all such accidents, as had happened in their squadrons.

Whitherto, as I sayde, our journey was most prosperous, and all our shippes in very good plight, more then that the Mary Rose, by some mischance, either sprang or spent her fore-parde; and two dayes after Sir Robert Crosse had in a manner the like mischance.

Naue being thus betwene the North cape, and cape S. Vincent, and yet keeping such a course a loose, that by no meanes, those from the shoare might be able to descric vs: The tenth of Iune, a French Barke, and a Fleming comming from the coast of Barbarie were brought in by some of our companie: but they were both of them very honourably and well bled by the Lords Generall: and so after a few dayes tarrying, were peaceably sent away, after that they had conferred with them about such matters, as was thought good in their honozable wisdomes.

The twelfth of the same moneth, Sir Richard Lunsion Knight, assisted with Sir Christopher Blunt, fought with three Hamburgers, and in that fight slawe two of them; and hurt eleuen, and in the ende brought them all thre in: and this was the very first handell and maydenhead (as it were) of any matter of importance, or expleyt woortly obseruation that was done in the way outward of this honozable voyage, and was so well performed of those most woortly Gentlemen, as euery man highly commended them for their great valure, and discretion, and no lesse reioyced at this their fortunat successe.

The next day after, Sir Richard Weston meeting with a Fleming, who refused to vake his foretoppe, with the like good courage and resolution, attempted to bring him in: The fight continued very hot betwene them, for a good space: in the end the Swan, wherein the sayd Sir Richard was, had her forebeake strooken off: and hauing spent befoze in fight the one side of her stire of Ordnance, while she prepared a cast about, and to bestow on him the other side, in the meane time the Fleming taking this opportunity, did get almost halfe a league from him: and so for that time made his escape. And yet the next day after, the sayd Fleming being in a manner got to the very mouth of the Riuer vp to Lisbone, was taken, and brought in by M. Dorrell.

being Captaine of the John and Francis of London. Thus by deviding their Squadrons, and spreading the whole sea ouer a mighty way, there could not so much as the least pinke passe but she was elpted and brought in.

The 13. 14. and 15. daies, certaine little stragling Carauels were taken by certaine of the Fleete, and in one of them a young beggarly Fryer utterly vnlearned; with a great packet of letters for Lisbon: the poore wretches were maruellously well vsed by the Lords Generall, and that Carauel, and the like still as they were taken were commaunded to giue their attendance, and their Honors did vnderstand what they might of these poore men, of the estate of Spaine for that present.

About this time and in this place it was, that first in all my life time I did see the flying fishes, who when they are hardly pinched and chaled by the Bonitoes and other great fishes, then to auoyde the daunger, they presently mount vp, and forsake the water, and betake themselves to the benefite of their winges and make their flight, which commonly is not aboue five or sixe score, or there about, and then they are constrained to fall downe into the water againe, and it is the Mariners opinion that they can fly no longer then their wings be wet. The fishie selfe is about the bignesse of a Hackrell or a great white Pearing, and much of that colour and making, with two large wings shaped of nature very cunningly, and with great delight to behold, in all the world much like to our Gentlewomens dutch Fans, that are made eicher of paper, or parchment, or silke, or other stufte, which will with certaine pleighes easily ruine and fold themselves together. One of these flying fishes was presented to my L. Admirall by a fisher man, and newly taken in his L. returne from Cadiz, and then I had good leasure and opportunity to view it.

The 18. day early in the morning wee tooke an Irish man, and he came directly from Cadiz, hauing bene there but the day before at twelue of the clocke at high noone. This man being examined, told truly that there was now great store of shipping at Cadiz, and with them xviij. or xix. gallies in a readinesse, and that among those ships there were diuers of the kings best: and namely, that the Philip of Spaine was amongst them, but what their intent was, hee could not tell. This man was commaunded also to giue his attendance.

The 20. of Iune being Sunday, we came before Cadiz very early in the morning, and in all this time as yet, the whole Flaue had not lost eicher by sicknesse or by any other manner of wayes fire men to my knowledge: as for the Dutch company, I am not able precisely to say what happened there, for that they were no part of our charge to be looked vnto, but were a regiment entire of themselves, and by themselves to be prouided for, eicher for their diet, or for the preservation of their healths by physicke.

Thus then I say, being all in good plight and strong, the 20. of Iune wee came to Cadiz, and there very early in the morning presented our selues before the Towne, ryding about a league or something lesse, from it. The sea at that instant went maruelous high, and the winde was exceeding large. Notwithstanding, a Councell being called; our Lords Generall sodrthwith attempted with all expedition to land some certaine companies of their men at the West side of the Towne, by certaine long boats, light bozemen, pynnelles, and barges made for the purpose, but could not compasse it, and in the attempting thereof, they chanced to sinke one of their Barges, with some foure score good souldiers well appointed in her, and yet by good hap and great care, the men were all saued excepting viij. And therefore they were constrained to put off their landing till an other more conuenient time.

That morning very timely, there lighted a very faire doue vpon the maine part of the L. Admirals ship, and there she sat very quietly for the space of 3. or 4. houres, being nothing disturbed all that while, euery man gazed and looked much vpon her, and spake their minds and opinions, yet all concluding by no meanes to disquiet her: I for my part, tooke it for a very good omen and boading, as in cruethe (God be thanked) there fell out nothing in the end to the contrary. And as at our very first comming to Cadiz this chanced, so likewise on the very last day of our departing from the same towne, another Doue presented her selfe in the selfe same order into the same ship, and presently grew wonderfull came and familiar to vs all, and did so still keepe vs company, euen till our arriual here in England.

We no sooner presented our selues, but presently a goodly sort of tall Spanish ships came out of the mouth of the Bay of Cadiz, the Gallies accompanying them in such good order, and so placed as all of them might well succour each other, and there withall kept themselves very close to their towne, the castle, and the forts, for their better guard and defence, abiding there still, and expecting our farther determination. All that day passed, being very rough and boysterous, and little or nothing could be done, more then that about the euening there passed some friendly and kinde salutations salutations sent one from the other in warlike maner, by discharging certain great peeces, but to my knowledge no hurt done at all, or else very little.

A carefull and diligent watch was had all that night thorough out the whole armie, and on monday morning being the 21. day, the winde and weather being become moderate and favourable, betweene five and sixe of the clocke in the morning, our ships in the name of almighty God, and in defence of the honour of England, without any farther delay, with all speed, courage, and alacritie, did set vpon the Spanish ships, being then vnder sayle, and making out of the mouth of the Bay of Cadiz, vpon toward Puente de Suago on Granada side, being in number thirteen ships, with xix. or xx. Gallies attending vpon them, sorted in such good order, and a reasonable distance as they might still annoy vs, and alwayes relieue themselves interchangeably: hauing likewise the Castle, Forts, and Towne, continually to assist them and theirs, and alwayes ready to play vpon vs and ours.

In most mens opinions it seemed that the enemy had a wonderful auantage of vs, all circumstances being well weighed, but especially the straightnesse of the place, and the naturall forme and situation of the Bay it selfe, being rightly considered, for albeit the very Bay it selfe is very large and exceeding beautifull, so that from Cadiz to Port S. Mary, is some vi. or vii. English miles ouer or there abouts, yet be there many rockes, shelues, sands and shallowes in it, so that the very channell & place for sea room, is not about 2. or 3. miles, yea and in some places, not so much, for the ships of any great burthen, to make way in, but that they must either be set on ground or else constrained to run fowle one on another. All this notwithstanding, with great and inuincible courage, the Lordes generall presently set vpon them, and sorting out some such conuenient ships, as to their honorable wisdomes seemed fittest for that times seruice, they were driuen to take some other course then befoze had beene by them intended. Wherefoze vpon a gaue consultation had by a select Counsell, what great dangers might ensue vpon so mightie a disadvantage as appeared in all probability, if it were not by good and sound iudgement prevented, & therewithall in their singular wisdomes foreseeing that some great stratageme might be practised by the enemy, either by fire-woke, or some other subtil politike deuise, for the hazarding of her Maiesties ships of honoz in so narrow a place, thus with al expedition they concluded that the Vice-admirall, the L. Thomas Howard, that most noble L. Howard (whose exceeding great magnanimity, courage, & wisdom, toynd with such an honozable kind of sweet courtellie, bountie, and liberalltie, as is not able by me & my weakenes to be exprested, hath wonne him all the faithfull louing hearts of as many as euer haue had any maner of dealing with him) This L. Thomas, I say, in y Non Pareille for that time, & the Reare Admirall Sir Walter Raleigh (a man of maruelous great worth & regard, for many his exceeding singular great vertues, right fortitude & great resolucenes in all matters of importance) in the Warpsight afforiated with diuers most famous wozyty knights, namely, Sir Francis Vere the L. Partiaill in the Rainbow, Sir George Cary D. of the Ordinance, in the Mary rose, Sir Robert Southwell in the Lyon, gentlemen for all laudable good vertues, and for perfect courage & discretion in all military actions, of as great praise & good desert as any gentlemen of their degree whosoeuer, hauing with them some of y ships of London, and some of the Dutch Squadron of reasonable burthen, should leade the dance, & giue the onfet, and that the two most noble Lordes generall with some others of their companies, should in their conuenient time & order, second the maine battell. The fight being begunne and growen very hot, the L. Generall the Earle of Essex, (whose infinite princely vertues, with triumphant fame, deserue to be immortalized) being on Port S. Mary side, vpon a sudden & vnlooked for of others, thrust himselfe among the foremost into the maine battell. The other most honozable L. Generall (whose singular vertues in all respects are of such an excellencie & perfection, as neither can my praise in any part increase them, nor any mans enuy any whit blennish or diminish the) understanding, the most noble Earle to be in fight among them, & perceiving by the D. of his ship, the Arke royall, that for lacke of water, it was not possible, that he might put any neerer, without farther delay, called presently for his Wympesse, and in the same Wympesse put himselfe, and his honozable son L. William Howard that now is, aboord the Honor de la mer, & there remained in the fight till the battell was ended. The fight was very terrible, and most hideous to the beholder by the continuall discharging of those roaring thundering great peeces, on all sides, and so continued doubtful till about one or two of the clocke in the afternoone: about which time the Philip, whom in very truth, they had all most fancie vnto, began to peeble and giue ouer, her men that remained alike thisting for themselves as they were able, and swimming and running a shoare with all the hast that they could possibly, & therewithall, at the very same instant themselves fired their ship, and so left her, & presently thereupon a great Argollie, with an other mighty great ship, fired themselves in y like maner. Immediately hereupon, the residue of the ships, ran themselves on ground, as farre from vs as they could, and thereby purchased their owne safety, or rather breathing space for the time. Of them all two faire ships only were boorded and taken by our men with most part of their furniture in them, the one called S. Marthy, a ship by estimation of some xii. hundred tunne, and the other S. Andrew, being a ship of not much lesser burthen. The Gallies, seeing this suddaine great victorious ouerthrow, made all the hast they could toward the Bridge called Puente de Suago, and there shewded themselves in such sort as our shippes could not by any means possible come nigh them for lacke of water.

The Spanish ships in all were lix. & as is sayd, all tall ships & very richly furnished and well appointed, wherof some of them were bound for the Indies, and other freighted and furnished for Lisbon, as themselves affirme: and had we not come that very time that we did, (which for my part, I do not attribute so much vnto meere chance, as to some secret deepe insight and foreknowledge of the two most worthy Lords generall, who no doubt spared for no cost or labour for true intelligence) we had certainly mist of them all.

Of what great wealth and riches these ships were, that I leaue to other mens iudgement and report, but sure I am, that themselves offered two millions and a halfe of ducats for the redemption of the goods and riches that were in them: which offer of theirs, albeit it was accepted of the Lords Generall, and should haue bene receiued, yet we were defeated of it, as hereafter shall be moze at large declared.

What manner of fight this was, & with what courage performed, and with what terror to the beholder continued, where so many thundering tearing peeces were for so long a time discharged, I leaue it to the Reader to thinke & imagine. Yet such was the great mercy & goodnes of our liuing God, that in all this cruell terrible fight, in the end, there were not either slaine or hurt by any manner of means (excepting one mischance that happened, wherof I will by & by make mention) many aboute the number of 100. of our men: notwithstanding diuers of our shippes were many times shot thorow and thorow: yea and some of them no lesse then two and twentie times, as I was enformed by credible report of the Captaines and Masters themselves. I knowe not of any other hurt done, sauing onely that Sir Robert Southwell, who alwayes shewed himselfe a most valiant resolute knight in all this action, making a litle too much haste with his pinnesse to boord the Philip, had there his said pinnesse burnt with the Philip at the same instant, and yet by good care and diligence his men were saued.

One other mischance (as I said) there happened, and it was thus: One of the Flemings flibots, who had, in all the conflict before, caried himselfe very well and valiantly, about ten of the clocke while the fight continued sharpest, chanced by great negligence and misfortune, to be fired and blowen by by his owne powder, who could not haue any fetter in him, then one hundred fighting men by all supposall, and so in the very twinkling of an eye, both shippe and men were all cast away, excepting vii. or viii. which by very good fortune, and great care and diligence of some of the other ships were saued.

Immediately vpon this notable victorie without any farther stay in all the world, the Lord generall the Earle of Essex put to shor, and landed about 3000. foot, & pikemen: of the which number the one halfe was presently dispatched to the bridge Puente de Suago, vnder the conduct of three most famous worthy knights, Sir Christopher Blunt, Sir Coniers Clifford, & Sir Thomas Gerard: with the other halfe, being about fiftene hundred, the most noble Earle of Essex himselfe, being accompanied with diuers other honorable Lords, namely the Earle of Suffex, the Lord Harbert, the Lord Burk, Count Lodouick of Nassaw, the Lord Martiall Sir Francis Vere, with many other worthy Knights, and men of great regard, who all in that dayes seruice did most valiantly behaue themselves, with all expedition possible marched on foote toward the towne of Cadiz, which was about three English miles march. That time of the day was very hot and faint, and the way was all of dry deepe syding sand in a manner, and beside that, very bneuen, and by that meanes so tiresome and painefull as might be. The enemye hauing reasonable companie both of horse and footemen, stood in a readinesse some good distance without the towne to welcome vs, and to encounter the Lorde Generall. But the most famous Earle with his valiant Troopes, rather running in deede in good order, then marching, hastened on them with such vnspokeable courage and celeritie, as within one houres space and lesse, the horsemen were all discomfited and put to flight, their leader being strooken downe at the very first encounter, wherat the footemen being wonderfully dismayed and astonished at the vnexpected manner of the Englishmens kinde of such fierce and resolute fight, repyed themselves with all the speede possible that they could, to recouer themselves into the Towne againe, which being done by them, with farre swifter legges then manly courage, our men were enforced to skale the walles: which thing in very deede, although it was not without without great danger and difficulty to be performed: Yet such was the invincible resolution, and the wonderfull dexterity of the English, that in one halfe houre or thereabout, the enimie was repulsed, and the towne wall possessed, by the noble Earle himselfe, being in all this action, either the very first man or els in a maner ioined with the first.

The towne walles being then possessed, and the English Ensigne being there displayed vpon them, with all speede possible they proceeded on to march through the towne, making still their waie with sword and shot so well as they could, being still fought withall at euery turne.

Immediately vpon this most famous entrie, the noble Earle, (according to their resolutions, as I take it, put downe before) was seconded by the noble L. Admirall in person, who was accompanied, with the noble L. Thomas Howard, the most worthy gentleman his sonne, now L. Howard, Sir Robert Southwell, Sir Richard Lewison, and with diuers other gentlemen, his L. followers of good account: his colours being aduanced by that valiant resolute gentleman, (a man beautified with many excellent rare gifts, of good learning and understanding) S. Edward Hobby Knight. And thus he likewise marching with al possible speede on foote, notwithstanding his L. many yerres, the intolerable heate for the time, and the ouertiring tedious deepe sands, with other many impediments: Yet in good time, ioined himselfe with the Earle and his companies, and gaue them the strongest, and best assistance that he could.

Thus then the two Lords Generall with their companies being ioined together, and proceeding so farre as the market place, there they were hotly encountered; where and at what time, that worthy famous knight Sir Iohn Winkfield, being sore wounded before on the thigh, at the very entrie of the towne, and yet for all that no whit respecting himselfe; being caried away with the care he had to encourage and direct his company, was with the shot of a musket in the head most vnsortunately slaine.

And thus before eight of the clocke that night were these two most noble Lords General, Masters of the market place, the forts, and the whole Towne and all, onely the Castle as yet holding out, & from time to time as they could, still annoying them with seuen battering pieces. By this time night began to grow on, and a kind of peace or intermission was obtained by them of the Castle: to whome the Lords Generall had signified: that vntill before the next day in the morning they would absolutely render themselves, they should looke for no mercy, but should euery one be put to the sword: vpon which message they tooke deliberation that night: but in the morning before break of day they hanged out their flag of truce, and so without any further composition did yeeld themselves absolutely to their mercy, and deliuered vnto the Castle.

And yet notwithstanding all this, in the night time while they had this respite to pause, and deliberate about the peacemaking, there were diuers great and suddaine alarms giuen: which did breed some great outrages and disorder in the towne. At euery which alarme, the two Lords Generall shewed themselves maruelous ready & forward, insomuch that at the very first alarme, skant well furnished with any more defence then their shirts, hose, and dublets, & those too altogether in a maner vntied, they were abroad in the streetes themselves, to see the uttermost of it. But for that it is not as yet very well knowne (or at the least not well knowne vnto me) either wherefore, or by whom these alarmes were attempted: I am therefore to intreat, that a bare report, that such a thing was done, may suffice.

These things being done, and this surrender being made, present proclamation was published, that the fury now being past, all men should surcease from all manner of blood and cruell dealing, and that there should no kind of violence or hard usage be offered to any, either man, woman or child, vpon paine of death: And so permitting the spoyle of so much of the towne as was by them thought meete, to the common souldiers for some certaine dayes, they were continually in counsell about other graue directions, best knowne to their honorable wisdomes.

This honorable and mercifull Edict I am sure was streightly and religiously obserued of the English: But how well it was kept by the Dutch, I will neither affirme, nor yet denie. For I perceiue betweene them and the Spaniards there is an implacable hartburning, and therefore as soone as the Dutch Squadron was espied in the sight, immediately thereupon both they of Siuil and S. Lucar and also some of some other places did not onely arrest all such Dutch ships, as dealt with them friendly by the way of traffick & Marchandise, and so confiscated their goods, but also imprisoned the Marchants and Owners of the same, and, as the report goeth, did intreat many of them with extreme cruelty thereupon.

In the meane while the very next day being the two and twenty day of June, all the Spanish Shippes which were left on ground in the Bay of Cadiz, where the great overthowe had bene but the day before, were by the Spaniards themselves there set on fire; and so from that time forward they neuer left burning of them, till euery one of them, goods and all, as farre as wee know were burnt and consumed. This their doing was much marvelled at of vs, and so much the more, for that, as I sayd before, there had bene made some offer for the redemption and saving of the goods, and it was not to them unknown that this their offer was not disliked, but in all probability should have bene accepted. The common opinion was, that this was done either by the appointment of the Duke de Medina Sidonia, or els by expresse commandment from the higher powers.

Not long after the same time (three dayes as I remember) the gallies that were runne on ground, did quitte themselves also out of that place, and by the bridge of the Island called Puente de Suago, made their way round about the same Island, and so by putting themselves to the maine sea, escaped to a towne called Rotta, not farre off, but something by towards the Towne of Saint Lucars, and there purchased their safety by that meanes.

Thus was this notable victorie, as well by sea as by land, both begunne and in effect per-fourmed, within the compasse, in a maner, of fourteene houres: A thing in truesh so strange and admirable, as in my iudgement will rather bee wondered at then beleueed of posteritie. And if euer any notable exploit in any age was comparable to Cæsars Veni, Vidi, Vici, certainly in my pooze opinion it was this.

Were it is to be wished (and perchance of some too it is looked for) that every mans particular worthy acte in this dayes service, with the parties names also, should be put downe, that thereby both they and their good deserts might be registred to all posteritie: and for my part I would it were so, and wish I were able to doe it. But for that I confesse it is a matter that passeth my power, yea, and for that I thinke it also a thing impossible to be precisely perfourmed by any other, I am to craue pardon for that I rather leaue it out altogether, then presume to doe it maymely: and in this point I referre the Reader onely to the Happe that is set forth of this journey, where it is in some parte conueniently touched and specified.

The Towne of it selfe was a very beautifull towne, and a large, as being the chiefe See of the Bishop there, and hauing a goodly Cathedral Church in it, with a right goodly Abbey, a Monnery, and an exceeding fine College of the Iesuites, and was by naturall situation, as also by very good fortification, very strong, and tenable enough in all mens opinions of the better iudgement. Their building was all of a kind of hard stone, euen from the very foundation to the top, and every house was in a manner a kind of a fort or Castle, altogether flat-roofed in the toppes, after the Turkish manner, so that many men together, and that at ease, might walke thereon: hauing vpon the house top, great heapes of weighty stoanes piled by in such good order, as they were ready to be throwen downe by every woman most easily vpon such as passed by, and the streetes for the most part so exceeding narrow, (I thinke to auoide the intolerable great heat of the Sunne) as but two men or three at the most together, can in any reasonable sorte march thorough them, no streete being broader commonly then I suppose Wallingstreete in London to be.

The towne is altogether without glasse, excepting the Churches, yet with faire comely windowes, and with faire grates of iron to them, and haue very large folding leanes of wainscot, or the like. It hath very fewe Chimnies in it, or almost none at all: it may be some one chimney in some one or other of the lower out rooines of less account, seruing for some necessary vses, either to wash in, or the like, or els nowe and then perchance for the drying of a bit of meate, hauing, as it should seeme vnto me, alwayes a greater care and respect how to keepe themselves from all kind of great heat, then how to prouide for any store of great colde. It had in it by report of them that should best know it, some foure thousand and moe, of very good able fighting men, and five hundred horsemen at the least. No question but that they were well furnished of all things appertaining thereunto, especially so many good ships lying there, and being so well stored with all manner of munition, shot, and powder, as they were.

Whether they had knowledge of our coming or no, I can say nothing to it: They themselves giue it out that they vnderstood not of it, but onely by a Carauel the Friday at euening before we came. But whether they knew it or no, thus much I dare boldly affirme, that if the English had bene possessed of that or the like Towne, and had bene but halfe so well prouided as they were, they would haue defended it for one two moneths at the least, against any power whatsoever in all Christendome. But surely G D is a mighty G D, and hath a wonderfull secret stroke in all matters, especially of weight and moment. Whether their hearts were killed at the mighty overthrow by sea, or whether they were amazed at the inuincible courage of the English, which was more then ordinary, caring no more for either small shot or great, then in a maner for so many hailestones, or whether the remorse of a guilty conscience toward the English nation, for for their dishonorable and diuelish practises, against her Sacred Majestie, and the Realme, (a matter that easily begetteth a faine heart in a guilty minde) or what other thing there was in it I know not, but be it spoken to their perpetuall shame and infamie, there was neuer thing more resolutely perfourmed of the couragious English, nor more shamefully lost of the bragging Spaniards.

Of what wealth this towne should be, I am not able to resolve the asker: for I confesse that for mine owne part, I had not so much good lucke, as to be partaker so much as of one pennie, or penny worth. Howbeit my ill fortune maketh that towne neuer a whit the poorer. But as it should appeare by the great pillage by the common souldiers, and some mariners too, and by the goodly furnitures, that were defaced by the baser people, and thereby utterly lost and spoiled, as not woorth the carrying away, and by the ouer great plenty of Wine, Oyle, Almonds, Oliues, Raisins, Spices, and other rich grocery wares, that by the intemperate disorder of some of the rather soft were knockt out, and lay trampled vnder fecte; in euery common high way, it should appeare that it was of some very mighty great wealth to the first owners, though perchance, not of any such great commoditie to the last subduers, for that I iudge that the better part was most rycously and intemperately spent and consumed. A disorder in mine opinion very much to be lamented, and if it might be by any good meanes remedied, in my conceit, it were a most honourable deuiice.

The Wednesday, Thursday, and Friday following, the Lords Generall spent in counsell, about the disposing of all matters, aswell touching the towne and prisoners, as also concerning all other matters, thought meete of them in their honourable wisdomes, and in all that meane while did shew such honourable bounty and mercy, as is not able to be exprest. For not onely the liues of euery one were spared, but also there was an especial care had, that al the Religious, as wel men as women, should be well and fauourably intreated, whom freely without any manner of rancome or other molestation, they caused to be safely transported ouer to Port Saint Marie, a towne in a manner as farre as Cadiz: but at that time, as the case did stand, certainly knowen to be of no wealth in the world, and it was some fife or seuen miles distant ouer against Cadiz, in a maner as Pauls is against Southwarke, on the other side of the Bay, in a part of Andaluza, subiect to the territtory of the Duke de Medina Sidonia.

Moreouer, at the same instant they did appoint that worthy knight Sir Amias Preston, and some others in some conuenient Barkes, to transport ouer to the sayd Towne safely and in good order, a hundred or more of the better sort of ancient gentlewomen, and marchants wiues, who were suffered to put vpon themselves, some of them two, yea, some three sures of apparel, with some conuenient quantitie of many Jewels, Chaines, and other ornaments belonging to their estate and degree. Such was the heroicall liberality, and exceeding great clemencie, of those most honourable Lords Generall, thereby, as it should seeme vnto mee, beating downe that false surmised opinion, which hath bene hitherto commonly spread abroad, and settled among the Spaniards: which is, That the English doe trouble them and their cuntries, more for their golde, riches and pearle &c. then for any other iust occasion. Whereas by these their honourable dealings it is manifest to all the world, that it is onely in respect of a iust reuenge for the manifold iniuries, and most dishonourable practises that haue bene from time to time attempted by them against vs and our nation, and also in the defence of the true honour of England: which they haue sought, and daylie doe seeke, by so many sinister and reprochfull deuices, so much as in them lieth, to deface.

Upon Saturday being the 26. Sir Iohn Winkfield knight was buried, in honourable and warlike manner, so farre forth as the circumstances of that time and place could permit. At whose funerals the Maie discharged a great part of their Ordinance, in such order, as was thought meete and conuenient by the Lords Generals commandement.

The twenty seuen day being Sunday, in the Abbey the diuine seruice was had, and a learned Sermon was made there by one Master Hopkins, the right honour. de Earle of Essex his Preacher, a man of good learning and sweete betterance, and euen there the same day, something before the sermon was made, these worthie Gentlemen following were knighted by the Lords General. And here I am to signifie by the way that two of these were knighted three or foure dayes before, and some three or foure more were knighted after that time, vpon certaine occasions: but yet I holde it best (and I trust without offence) to recite their names in this place altogether.

I am not curious in placing these gentlemen, but put them downe at a venture. Only I haue obserued, as neere as I could, the iust day and time when they were created. And I trust where the place of it selfe is so worthy and equall, there the bare naming and placing of the parties, shal breed no offence, or make a disparity. The two gentlemen that were last knighted receiued their knighthoed in the way of our returne from Cadiz: the one of them vpon the sea; not farre from the Bay of the Groyne, at what time our ships stood vpon their states for a space; while certaine Pinnasses were sent to descrite what shipping was at the Groine: The other at Plimmouth in the open streete, when the Lords Generall came from the Sermon. The one a man of long service, and good desert among the Dutch: the other of so many good parts of a worthy gentleman, as the like are seldeome scene to concurre in any.

I spake in the beginning of her Maiesties praier, which I presumed (though but worthy) to translate into Latine: and now at this very time, there was some opportunity offered, for to make some vse of that translation. For now being in Cadiz, attending vpon my most honourable good Lord, I talked with certaine of the Religious men, such as I found learned, whereof indeed there were some, though not very many. I talked also with the Bishop of Cusco there, a graue aged comely man; and being of late chosen to that Bishopricke, he was as then to haue gone to the Indies, had not we then taken him prisoner, and so stayed his iourney for that time. With these men euery as occasion did serue, I did seeke now and then to spende some speerch, and to entertaine time withall, I would breake with them of this our victorie, and of the iniuries and bad dealings of their Prince and Countrey offered to her Maiestie, whereby shee was prouoked, and in a manner drawen to this action: though otherwise of her own most excellent princely princcely good nature, she was altogether giuen to peace, and quietnes. And alwayes in some part of our conferences. I would shew them a copie of her Maiesties praier in Latine, which I had alwaies of purpose ready about me, wherby it might the better appeare vnto them, how vnwillingly, and vpon how great & vrgent occasions her Maiesty was, as it were enforced to vndertake this action: and therewithall I did vse now and then to bestow vpon them a copy of the same in writing. They seemed in all outward shew to allow of my speeches, and to praise her Maiesties good inclination, and earnestly to wish that there might be a firme concord and peace againe.

It pleased the Lords general to deale exceedingly fauourably with this said Bishop of Cusco: for it was their good pleasure to giue him his free passage without any rancome, and therewithall to let him to vnderstand, that they came not to deale with Church-men, or vnarmed men, or with men of peace, weaklings & children, neither was it any part of their meaning to make such a voyage for gold, siluer, or any other their wealth and riches, &c. But that their only conning was to meet with their dishonorable practises, and manifold iniuries, & to deale with men of warre and valour, for the defence of the true honour of England: and to let them to vnderstand, that whensoever they attempted any base-conceited & dishonorable practise to their soueraigne Queene, their Distresse, that it should be reuenged to the bettermost, &c.

In this meane space, while the Lords general continued at Cadiz, there came to them certain pooze wretched Turks, to the number of 38, that had bin a long time gally-slauess, and either at the very time of the fight by sea, or els immediately thereupon, taking the opportunity, did then make their escape, and did swim to land: pceding themselves to the mercy of their most honorable Lordships. It pleased them with all speed to apparel them, and to furnish them with money, and all other necessaries, and to bestow on them a barke, and a Pilot, to see them freely and safely conueied into Barbary, willing them to let the countrey vnderstand what was done, and what they had seene. Whereby I doubt not, but as her Maiesty is a most admirable Prince already ouer all Europe, all Africk, and Asia, and throughout Christendome: so the whole worlde hereafter shall haue iust cause to admire her infinite Princcely vertues, and thereby bee prouoked to confesse, that as she hath bin mightily protected from time to time, by the powerful hand of the almighty, so vndoubtedly, that she is to be iudged and accounted of vs, to be his most sacred handmaide, and chosen vessel. And therefore, whatsoeuer wicked designement shalbe conspired and plotted against her Maiesty hereafter, shalbe thought to be conspired, plotted, and intended against the almighty himselte: and for that cause, as I trust, shalbe by the infinite goodnes and mercy of that almighty, mightily frustrate and ouerthrowen.

The 28. day being Sunday, the L. Admiral came aboord the Arke againe, minning there to remaine for a space, as indeed he did, and vpon the aduise of his Physicion, to deale something in physicke, for that his L. found his body something out of frame. At that time it pleased his L. to write certain letters to the Duke of Medina Sidonia, for the deliurance of English captiues, who were remaining in the gallies. For by this time, it was reported, that the saide Duke was come downe in person with some power, and that he was either at Port S. Mary, or els at Rotta, or thereabout. His L. did endite the letters himselte, but his pleasure was, they should be turned into Latine by another: and so to be sent (as indeed they were) in the latine tongue vnto the Duke.

Illustrissimo Principi Duci de Medina Sidonia.

Illustrissime Princeps, ex nonnullis quibusdam Hispanis intelligimus, Excellentiam vestram iam nunc esse apud portum S. Mariae. Et quoniam in anno Domini 1588. id nobis tunc muneris assignatum erat a sereniss. nostra Regina domina mea, vt contra vos, vestrasq; copias, Ego solus pro eo tempore Generalis essem constitutus: Idcirco non opinamur vobis ignotum esse, quam mite quoddam, & humanum bellandi genus, tum hic iam in hoc ipso tempore, a duersus huius loci populum atq; incolas vsurpauerimus: tum etiam saepius antehac quam humaniter, benignèq; eos omnes tractauerimus, quos ex vestris iure belli captiuos acceperimus. Ex quorum numero quam multa millia, etiam gratis, nullo accepto pretio, liberare donauerimus, id puram omnibus esse testatur, quam vt. a quoquā denegetur. Quocirca, neq; vllō modo nobis in mentem venire potest, vt dubitemus, quin parem etiam in vobis humanitatem aduersus nostros captiuos simus reperturi. Cum igitur nobis compertū iam sit, habere vos in vestris galeis, ex Reginae nostrae serenissimae Dominae meae subditis vnum & quinquaginta captiuos: non equidem dubitamus, quin eos omnes sitis relaxaturi, & ad nos missuri: ea lege, ac conditione, vt totidem ex vestris hic captiuis eundem loci atq; ordinis, melioris etiam fortassis notæ, ac conditionis, homuncios, ad vos vicissim remittamus, Id quod nos facturos data fide spondemus, quàm primùm nostros captiuos ex vestris manibus acceperimus. Hac in re si nostro desiderio ac voluntati parum satisfactum erit, aliud profectò tunc posthac belli genus ingrediemur, aliùmque bellandi morem cogemur, etiam inuiti, & contra voluntatem prosequi. Ex Regia Anglicana classe apud Cadiz vltimo Iunij, stylo antiquo. 1596. Carolus Howard.

These letters were sent by a Spaniard, and an answer was brought from the Duke with all conuenient speed, and as it should seeme by the L. Admirals next answer returned to him in writing, which immediately hereafter foloweth, the Duke de Medina Sidonia his letters were honorable, and with good regard.

Illustrissimo Principi Duci de Medina Sidonia.

Illustrissime Princeps, literas ab excellentia vestra hodiè accepimus: quæ verò nostra sic ad illas responsio, nobiles isti viri, qui vestras literas ad nos pertulerunt, plenius declarabunt. Hoc interim cupimus esse penitus persuasum Excellentie vestre, nos sedulo operam daturus, vt in omni honorificæ benignitatis humanitatisque genere, expectationi vestræ omni ex parte respondeamus. Quod ad Anglicos nostros captiuos attinet, quos ab Excellentia vestra huc ad nos crastino die missum iri expectamus, in eare pollicemur Excellentia vestra, quòd plenius à nobis vestra voluntati satisfactum erit: & quòd pro illis captiuis tales nos captiuos vobis remitteremus, quales tū ab ipso Dom. Mendoza, tum ab alijs illustrib. viris, qui à Dom. Porta Carero in illorum ad nos fauorè mittebantur, communi cum consensu erant ab ipsis approbati, Si verò quis alius iam captiuus est vel posthac futurus erit in nostra potestate, pro cuius redemptione nondum plenè conueniunt est & stipulatum de certo pretio persoluendo: concedimus Excellentia vestre, vt in hoc etiā casu vos, vestro pro arbitrio; de illis quicquid velitis, imperetis. Ex Regia classe Anglicana, apud Cadiz, 3. die Iulij stylo antiquo. 1596.

Carolus Howard.

The next day after, being the 4. of July, the L. General caused the town of Cadiz to be set on fire, and rased & defaced so much as they could, the faire cathedral Church, and the religious houses only being spared, and left unblemished. And with the town all such prouision for shipping, & other things, as were seruiciable for use, & yet were not either so conuenient for vs to be carried away, or els such as we stood no whit at all in need of, were likewise at the same instant consumed with fire. And presently therupon, their Lordships, with as conuenient speed as they could, and the whole army in such good order and leisure, as they thought best, came aboard.

The next day being the 5. of July, the L. General with all the armie being under saile, & now making for England, & but as yet passing the very mouth of the bay of Cadiz, a galley full of English prisoners, with a flag of truce, met vs frō Rorta, sent by the D. of Medina Sidonia, & sent as it should seeme, one day later then his promise: but yet their flag being either not big enough, or not wel placed in the galley, or not wel discerned of our men, or by what other mischance I know not: but thus it was: by one of our smallest ships y sailed for most, as soone as the said galley came within gunshot, there was a great peece discharged vpon her, & at that instant there was one man slaine outright, and 2. other grievously hurt. The error being espied and perceiued, our ship gaue ouer immediatly from any farther shooting. As soone as the galley came neere vs, my L. Admiral caused a gracious salutation to be sounded with his trumpets, & willed the captains forthwith to come aboard his ship: which they did, and then he feasted them with a very fine and honorable banquet, as the time and place might serue. And then by them vnderstanding of that vnfortunate mischance that had hapned by the shot of the said ship, he was very sorry for the same, and yet such was the mercifull prouidence of almighty God; that euen in this mischance also, he did hold his holy hand ouer the English. And al the harme that was done did light only vpon the poore Turk, and the Spaniard himselfe. When this Lord had well banqueted them, hee presently called for his barge, and did accompanie the said galley to the Lord general the Earle of Essex, who then did ride with his ship a good distance off: and there they being in like manner most honorably receiued, and intertaind, the Spanish gentlemen deliuered vp their prisoners the English captiues, of whō some had bin there 6. yeere, some 8. or ten: yea, and some 22. yeere, and byward, and some of them but lately taken in S. Francis Drakes last voyage to the Indies. The number of the prisoners deliuered were but 39. and no mo; and were brought in, and deliuered by Don Antonio de Cordolla and his brother, and by Don Pedro de Cordua, and certaine others. If you demaund why, of one and fiftie Captiues, there were no moe deliuered then was; I presuppose, (and I thinke it true to) that at that time the residue were farther off in some remote places of Spaine bestowed, and so by that meanes, not able at this time to bee in a readinesse, but yet like enough enough that there is some good order taken for them hereafter, to be redeemed, and sent over into England.

If any man presume here so farre, as to enquire how it chanced, that the Lords generall rested so long at Cadiz, and went no farther, and why Port S. Mary being so faire a towne, and so neere to them, was forborne: and why Sheres alias Xeres? And why Roita and the like: And why this or that was done: And why that or this left undone: I will not answer him with our common English proverbe, as I might, which is: That one foole may aske more questions in one houre, then ten discrete men can wel answer in five dayes.

But that graue auncient wriiter, Cornelius Tacitus, hath a wise, briefe, pithy saying, and it is this: Nemo tenet aut inquirere in columnas Herculis, sanctiusq; ac reuerentius habitum est de factis Deorum credere, quam scire. Which saying, in my fancy, fitteth macculous well for this purpose: and so much the rather, for that this Cadiz is that very place, (at least by the common opinion) where those said pillars of Hercules were thought to be placed: and, as some say, remaine as yet not farre off to be seene. But to let that passe, the saying beareth this discrete meaning in it, albeit in a pretty kind of mystical manner uttered: That it becometh not inferiour persons to be curious, or too inquisitive after Princes actions, neither yet to be so sawcy and so malapert, as to seeke to diue into their secrets, but rather alwayes to haue a right reuerend conceite and opinion of them, and their doings: and thereon so resting our inward thoughtes, to seeke to go no further, but so to remaine ready alwayes to arme our selues with dutifull minds, and willing obedience, to performe and put in execution that which in their deepe insight and heroicall designements, they shall for our good, and the care of the common wealth determine vpon.

This, and much lesse so, might suffice to satisfie any honest minded man. But yet if any will needs desire to be a little farther satisfied, albeit it neede not, yet then, thus much I dare say and affirme, that vpon my knowledge, the chiefeest cause why Port Saint Mary, and the rest were left vntouched, was this: For that it was most certainly known, that they were townes not woorth the saluting of such a royal companie, in which there was no maner of wealth in the world left, more then bare houses of stone, and standing walles, and might well haue serued rather as a scale, perchance, to haue entrapped, then as a meanes to haue enriched. And it had bin more then a suspicion of follie, for such an army as this, to haue sought to fight with the aire, and to haue laboured with great paine and charges, yea, and with some euident danger too, to haue ouerthrowen that, which could very little or nothing haue profited, being destroyed: and yet nowe, can doe as little harme being left, as it is, vntouched.

And thus much for our iourney to Cadiz: for the accidents that happened by the way, for the winning, spoiling, and burning of the said towne, for the ouerthrowe of the Spanish Fleet there, and for al other by-matters that happened, as appendances to the same, both in the time of our abode there, as also at the very last houre of our comming from thence.

As for our returne home, and our entrance into a part of Portingal by the way, with the taking, spoyling, and burning of the towne of Faraon there, and marching into the Spanish confines therabouts, &c. I minde to leaue it to some other, whose chance was to be present at the action, as my selfe was not, and shalbe of more sufficient ability to performe it.

TO THE RIGHT HONORABLE

Sir Robert Cecil Knight, principall Secretarie to her Maiestie, master of the Court of Wardes and Liueries, and one of her Maiesties most honourable priuie Counsell.

Ight honorable hauing newly finished a Treatise of the long Voyages of our Nation made into the Leuant within the Streight of Gibraltar, & from thence ouer-land to the South and Southeast parts of the world, all circumstances considered, I found none to whom I thought it fitter to bee presented then to your selfe: wherein hauing begun at the highest Antiquities of this realme vnder the gouernment of the Romans; next vnder the Saxons; and thirdly since the conquest vnder the Normans, I haue continued the histories vnto these our dayes. The time of the Romans affoordeth small matter. But after that they were called hence by iorren inuasions of their Empire, and the Saxons by degrees became lords in this Iland, and shortly after receiued the Christian faith, they did not onely trauell to Rome, but passed further vnto Ierusalem, and therewith not contented, Sigelmus bishop of Shireburne in Dorcestshire caried the almes of king Alfred euen to the Sepulcher of S. Thomas in India, (which place at this day is called Maliapor) and brought from thence most fragrant spices, and rich iewels into England: which iewels, as William of Malmesburie in two sundry treatises writeth, were remaining in the aforesayd Cathedrall Church to be scene euen in his time. And this most memorable voyage into India is not onely mentioned by the aforesayd Malmesburie, but also by Florentius Wigornienfis, a graue and woorthy Author which liued before him, and by many others since, and euen by M. Foxe in his first volume of his Acts and Monuments in the life of king Alfred. To omit diuers other of the Saxon nation, the trauels of Alured bishop of Worcester through Hungarie to Constantinople, and so by Asia the lesse into Phoenicia and Syria, and the like course of Ingulphus, not long afterward Abbot of Croiland, set downe particularly by himselfe, are things in mine opinion right worthy of memorie. After the comming in of the Normans, in the yeere 1096, in the reigne of William Rufus, and so downward for the space of aboue 300 yeeres, such was the ardent desire of our nation to visite the Holy land, and to expell the Saracens and Mahumetans, that not onely great numbers of Erles, Bishops, Barons, and Knights, but euen Kings, Princes, and Peeres of the blood Roiall, with incredible deuotion, courage and alacritie intruded themselues into this glorious expedition. A sufficient prooffe hereof are the voiages of prince Edgar the nephew of Edmund Ironside, of Robert Curtois brother of William Rufus, the great beneuolence of king Henry the 2. and his vowe to haue gone in person to the succour of Ierusalem, the personall going into Palestina of his sonne king Richard the first, with the chiuallrie, wealth, and shipping of this realme; the large contribution of king Iohn, and the trauels of Oliuer Fitz-Roy his sonne, as is supposed, with Ranulph Glanville Erle of Chester to the siege of Damietta in Ægypt: the prosperous voyage of Richard Erle of Cornwall, elected afterward king of the Romans, and brother to Henry the 3, the famous expedition of prince Edward, the first king of the Norman race of that name; the journey of Henry Erle of Derby, duke of Hereford, and afterward king of this realme, by the name of Henry the 4. against the citie of Tunis in Africa, and his preparation of ships and gallies to go himsele into the Holy land, if he had not on the sudden bene prevented by death; the trauele of Iohn of Holland brother by the mothers side to king Richard the 2 into those parts. All these, either Kings, Kings sonnes, or Kings brothers, exposed themselves with inuincible courages to the manifest hazard of their persons, liues, and liuings, leauing their ease, their countries, wines and children, induced with a zelous deuotion and ardent desire to protect and dilate the Christian faith. These memorable enterprises in part concealed, in part scattered, and for the most part vnlooked after, I haue brought together in the best Method and breuitie that I could deuise. Whereunto I haue annexed the losse of Rhodes, which although it were originally written in French, yet maketh it as honourable and often mention of the English nation, as of any other Christians that serued in that most violent siege. After which ensueth the princely promise of the bountifull aide of king Henry the 8 to Ferdinando newly elected king of Hungarie, against Solymán the mortall enemy of Christendome. These and the like Heroicall intents and attempts of our Princes, our Nobilitie, our Clergie, & our Chiuallry, I haue in the first place exposed and set forth to the view of this age, with the same intention that the old Romans set up in wax in their palaces the Statuas or images of their worthy ancestors; whereof Salust in his treatise of the warre of Iugurtha, writeth in this maner: Sæpe audiui ego Quintum maximum, Publium Scipionem, præterea ciuitatis nostræ præclaros viros solitos ita dicere, cum maiorum imagines intuerentur, vehementissimè animum sibi ad virtutem accendi. Scilicet non ceram illam, neq; figuram, tantam vim in sese habere, sed memoria rerum gestarum flammam eam egregijs viris in pectore crescere, neq; prius sedari, quàm virtus eorum famam & gloriam adæquauerit. I haue often heard (quoth he) how Quintus maximus, Publius Scipio, and many other worthy men of our citie were wont to say, when they beheld the images and portraitures of their ancestors, that they were most vehemently inflamed vnto vertue. Not that the sayd wax or portraiture had any such force at all in it selfe, but that by the remembring of their woorthy actes, that flame was kindled in their noble breasts, and could neuer be quenched, untill such time as their owne valure had equalled the fame and glory of their progenitors. So, though not in wax, yet in record of writing haue I presented to the noble courages of this English Monarchie, the like images of their famous predecessors, with hope of like effect in their posteritie. And here by the way if any man shall think, that an vniuersall peace with our Christian neighbours will cut off the employment of the couragious increasing youth of this realme, he is much deceived. For there are other most conuenient employments for all the superfluitie of euery profession in this realme. For, not to meddle with the state of Ireland, nor that of Guiana, there is vnder our noses the great & ample countrey of Virginia; the In-land whereof is found of late to bee so sweete and wholesome a climate, so rich and abundant in siluer mines, so apt and capable of all commodities, which Italy, Spaine, and France can afford, that the Spaniards themselves in their owne writings printed in Madrid 1586, and within few moneths afterward reprinted by me in Paris, and in a secret mappe of those partes made in Mexico the yeere before for the king of Spaine, (which originall with many others is in the custodie of the excellent Mathematician M. Thomas Hariot) as also in their intercepted letters come vnto my hand, bearing date 1595. they acknowledge the In-land to be a better and richer countrey then Mexico and Nueua Spania it selfe. And on the other side their chiefeest writers, as Peter Martyr ab Angleria, and Francis Lopez de Gomara, the most learned Venetian Iohn Baptista Ramusius, and the French Geographers, as namely, Popiliniere and the rest, acknowledge with one consent, that all that mightie tract of land from 67. degrees Northward

The Epistle dedicatorie.

Northward to the latitude almost of Florida was first discovered out of England, by the commandement of king Henry the seventh, and the South part thereof before any other Christian people of late hath bene planted with diuers English Colonies by the royal consent of her sacred Maiestie vnder the broad seale of England, whereof one as yet remaineth, for ought we know, aline in the countrey. Which action, if vpon a good & godly peace obtained, it shal please the Almighty to stirre vp her Maiesties heart to continue with her fauourable countenance (as vpon the ceasing of the warres of Granada, hee stirred vp the spirite of Isabella Queene of Castile, to aduance the enterprise of Columbus) with transporting of one or two thousand of her people, and such others as vpon mine owne knowledge will most willingly at their owne charges become Aduenturers in good numbers with their bodies and goods; she shall by Gods assistance, in short space, worke many great and vnlooked for effects, increase her dominions, enrich her cofers, and reduce many Pagans to the faith of Christ. The neglecting hitherto of which last point our aduersaries daily in many of their bookes full bitterly lay vnto the charge of the professors of the Gospell. No sooner should we set footing in that pleasant and good land, and erect one or two conuenient Fortes in the Continent, or in some Iland neere the maine, but enery step we tread would yeeld vs new occasion of action, which I wish the Gentrie of our nation rather to regard, then to follow those soft vnprofitable pleasures wherein they now too much consume their time and patrimonie, and hereafter will doe much more, when as our neighbour warres being appeased, they are like to haue lesse emploiment then nowe they haue, vnlesse they bee occupied in this or some other the like expedition. And to this ende and purpose giue me leaue (I beseech you) to impart this occurrent to your honourable and prouident consideration: that in the yere one thousand five hundred eighty and seuen, when I had caused the foure voyages of Ribault, Landonniere, and Gourges to Florida, at mine owne charges to bee printed in Paris; which by the malice of some too much affected to the Spanish faction, had bene aboue twentie yeeres suppressed, as soone as that booke came to the view of that reuerend and prudent Counsellor Monsieur Harlac the lord chiefe Iustice of France, and certaine other of the wisest Iudges, in great choler they asked, who had done such intollerable wrong to their whole kingdome, as to haue concealed that woorthie worke so long? Protesting further, that if their Kings and the Estate had thoroughly followed that action, France had bene freed of their long ciuill warres, and the variable humours of all sortes of people might haue had very ample and manifold occasions of good and honest emploiment abroad in that large and fruitfull Continent of the West Indies. The application of which sentence vnto our selues I here omit, hastening vnto the summarie recapitulation of other matters contained in this worke. It may please your Honour therefore to vnderstand, that the second part of this first Treatise containeth our auncient trade and traffique with English shipping to the Ilands of Sicilie, Candie, and Sio, which by good warrant herein alleaged, I find to haue bene begun in the yeere 1511. and to haue continued vntill the yeere 1552. and somewhat longer. But shortly after (as it seemeth) it was intermitted, or rather giuen ouer (as is noted in master Gaspar Campions discreet letters to master Michael Lock and master William Winter inserted in this booke) first by occasiō of the Turkes expelling of the foure and twentie Maunces or gouernours of the Genouois out of the Ile of Sio, and by taking of the sayd Iland wholie into his owne hand in Aprill, 1566. sending thither Piali Basha with fourescore gallies for that purpose; and afterward by his growing ouer mightie and troublesome in those Seas, by the cruell inuasion of Nicosia and Famagusta, and the whole Ile of Cyprus by his lieutenant Generall Mustapha Basha. Which lamentable Tragedie I haue here againe reniued, that the posteritie may neuer forget what trust may bee giuen to the oath of a Mahumetan, when hee hath aduantage and is in his choler.

Lastly, I haue here put downe at large the happie renuing and much increasing of our in-interrupted trade in all the Leuant, accomplished by the great charges and speciall industrie of the worshipfull and worthy Citizens, Sir Edward Osborne Knight, M. Richard Staper, and M. William Hareborne, together with the league for traffike onely betweene her Maiestie and the Grand Signior, with the great priuileges, immunities, and fauours obteyned of his imperiall Highnesse in that behalfe, the admissions and residencies of our Ambassadors in his stately Porch, and the great good and Christian offices which her Sacred Maiestie by her extraordinary fauour in that Court hath done for the king and kingdome of Poland, and other Christian Princes: the traffike of our Nation in all the chiefe Hauens of Africa and Egypt: the searching and haunting the very bottome of the Mediterran Sea to the ports of Tripoli and Alexandretta, of the Archipelagus, by the Turkes now called The white sea, euen to the walles of Constantinople: the voyages ouer land and by riuer through Aleppo, Birrha, Babylon and Balsara, and downe the Persian gulfe to Ormuz, and thence by the Ocean sea to Goa, and againe ouer-land to Bisnagar, Cambaia, Orix, Bengala, Aracan, Pegu, Malacca, Siam, the Iangomes, Quichen, and euen to the Frontiers of the Empire of China: the former performed diuerse times by sundry of our nation, and the last great voyage by M. Ralph Fitch, who with M. John Newbery and two other consorts departed from London with her Maiesties letters written effectually in their fauour to the kings of Cambaia and China in the yere 1583, who in the yere 1591. like another Paulus Venetus returned home to the place of his departure, with ample relation of his wonderfull trauailes, which he presented in writing to my Lord your father of honourable memorie.

a. King cap. 5.
2. Chron. cap. 2.

Now here if any man shall take exception against this our new trade with Turkes and misbeleeuers, he shall shew himseife a man of small experience in old and new Histories, or wilfully lead with partialitie, or some worse humour. * For who knoweth not, that king Salomon of old, enired into league vpon necessitie with Hiram the king of Tyrus, a gentile? Or who is ignorant that the French, the Genouois, Florentines, Raguseans, Venetians, and Polonians are at this day in league with the Grand Signior, and haue beene these many yeeres, and haue vsed trade and traffike in his dominions? Who can deny that the Emperor of Christendome hath had league with the Turke, and payd him a long while a pension for a part of Hungarie? And who doth not acknowledge, that either hath trauailed the remote parts of the world, or read the Histories of this later age, that the Spaniards and Portugales in Barbarie, in the Indies, and elsewhere, haue ordinarie confederacie and traffike with the Moores, and many kindes of Gentiles and Pagans, and that which is more, doe pay them pensions, and vse them in their seruice and warres? Why then should that be blamed in vs, which is vsuall and common to the most part of other Christian nations? Therefore let our neighbours, which haue found most fault with this new league and traffike, thanke themselves and their owne foolish pride, whereby we were urged to seeke further to prouide vent for our naturall commodities. And herein the old Greeke prouerbe was most truly verified, That euill counsaile proueth worst to the author and deuiser of the same.

Having thus farre intreated of the chiefe contents of the first part of this second Volume, it remayneth that I briefly acquaint your Honor with the chiefe contents of the second part. It may therefore please you to vnderstand, that herein I haue likewise preserued, disposed, and set in order such Voyages, Nauigations, Traffikes, and Discoveries, as our Nation, and especially the worthy inhabitants of this citie of London, haue painefully performed to the South and Southeast parts of the world, without the Streight of Gibraltar, vpon the coasts of Africa, about the Cape of Buona Sperança, to and beyonde the East India. To come more neere vnto particulars, I haue here set downe the very originals and insancie of our trades to the Canarian Ilands, to the kingdomes of Barbarie, to the mightie riuers of Senega and Gambra, to those of Madrabumba, and Sierra Leona, and the Isles of Cape Verde, with twelue sundry voyages to the sultry kingdomes of Guinea and Benin, to the Isle of San Thomé, with a late and true report of the weake estate of the Portugales in Angola

The Epistle dedicatorie.

Angola, as also the whole course of the Portugale Caracks from Lisbon to the barre of Goa in India, with the disposition and qualitie of the climate neere and vnder the Equinoctiall line, the sundry infallible markes and tokens of approaching vnto, and doubling of The Cape of good Hope, the great variation of the compasse for three or foure pointes towards the East betweene the Meridian of S. Michael one of the Islands of the Azores, and the aforesaid Cape, with the returne of the needle againe due North at the Cape Das Agulias, and that place being passed outward bound, the swaruing backe againe thereof towards the West, proportionally as it did before, the two wayes, the one within and the other without the Isle of S. Laurence, the dangers of priue rockes and quicksands, the running seas, and the perils thereof, with the certaine and vndoubted signes of land. All these and other particularities are plainly and truly here deliuered by one Thomas Steuens a learned Englishman, who in the yeere 1579 going as a passenger in the Portugale Fleete from Lisbon into India, wrote the same from Goa to his father in England: Whereunto I haue added the memorable voyage of M. James Lancaster, who doth not onely recount and confirme most of the things aboue mentioned, but also doth acquaint vs with the state of the voyage beyond Cape Comori, and the Isle of Ceilon, with the Isles of Nicubar and Gomes Polo lying within two leagues of the rich Island Samatra, and those of Pulo Pinaom, with the maine land of Iunçalaon and the streight of Malacca. I haue likewise added a late intercepted letter of a Portugall reuealing the secret and most gainefull trade of Pegu, which is also confirmed by Caesar Fredericke a Venetian, and M. Ralph Fitch now lining here in London.

And because our chiefe desire is to find out ample vent of our wollen cloth, the naturall commodity of this our Realme, the fittest places, which in al my readings and obseruations I find for that purpose, are the manifold Islands of Iapan, & the Northern parts of China, & the regions of the Tartars next adioyning (whereof I read, that the countrey in winter is Affrica como Flandes, that is to say, as cold as Flanders, & that the riuers be strongly ouerfrozen) and therefore I haue here inserted two speciall Treatises of the sayd Countries, the one beginning pag. 68, the other, pag. 88: which last discourse I hold to be the most exact of those parts that is yet come to light, which was printed in Latine in Macao a citie of China, in China-paper, in the yeere a thousand five hundred and ninetie, and was intercepted in the great Carack called Madre de Dios two yeeres after, inclosed in a case of sweete Cedar wood, and lapped vp almost an hundred fold in fine calicut-cloth, as though it had beene some incomparable iewel.

But leaning abruptly this discourse, I thinke it not impertinent, before I make an end, to deliuer some of the reasons, that moued me to present this part of my trauailes vnto your Honour. The reuerend antiquitie in the dedication of their workes made choyse of such patrons, as eyther with their reputation and credite were able to countenance the same, or by their wisdom and understanding were able to censure and approoue them, or with their abilitie were likely to stand them or theirs in steade in the ordinarie necessities and accidents of their life. Touching the first, your descent from a father, that was accounted Pater patriæ, your owne place and credite in execution of her Maiesties inward counsailes and publike seruices, added to your well discharging your forren employment (when the greatest cause in Christendome was handled) haue not onely drawen mens eyes vpon you, but also forcibly haue moued many, and my selfe among the rest to haue our labours protected by your authoritie. For the second point, when it pleased your Honour in sommer was two yeeres to haue some conference with me, and to demand mine opinion touching the state of the Country of Guiana, and whether it were fit to be planted by the English: I then (to my no small ioy) did admire the exact knowledge which you had gotten of those matters of Indian Nauigations: and how carefull you were, not to be ouertaken with any partiall affection to the Action, appeared also, by the sound arguments which you made pro & contra, of the likelihood and reason of good or ill successe of the same, before the State and common wealth (wherein you haue an extraordinarie voyce) should be further engaged. In consideration whereof I thinke my selfe thrise happie to haue these my trauailes censured by your Honours so well approued iudgement. Touching the third and last motiue I cannot but acknowledge my selfe much indebted for your fauourable letters heretofore written in my behalfe in mine honest causes. Whereunto I may adde, that when this worke was to passe vnto the presse, your Honour did not onely intreate a worthy knight, a person of speciall experience, as in many others so in marine causes, to ouersee and peruse the same, but also vpon his good report with your most fauourable letters did warrant, and with extraordinarie commendation did approue and allow my labours, and desire to publish the same. Wherefore to conclude, seeing they take their life and light from the most cheerefull and benigne aspect of your fauour, I thinke it my bounden dutie in all humilitie and with much bashfulnesse to recommend my selfe and them vnto your right Honorable and fauourable protection, and your Honour to the mercifull tuition of the most High. From London this 24. of October. 1599.

Your Honors most humble to be commanded,

Richard Hakluyt preacher.

¶ That the Brittons were in Italie and Greece with the Cimbrians and Gaules, before the incarnation of Christ. M. Wil. Camden, pag. 33.

Britannos autem cum Cimbris & Gallis permixtos fuisse in expeditionibus illis in Italiam & Græciam videtur.
Nam præter nomen commune in Britannico Triadum libro vetustissimo, vbi tres maximi exercitus, quæ Britannis conscripti erant, memorantur, proditum est, exterum quandam ducem longè maximum exercitum hinc contraxisse, qui, populata magna Europæ parte, tandem ad Græcum mare (fortitan Gallatiam inuuit) confederit.

Triadum liber.

Britomærum item ducem inter illos militarem, cuius me-minit Florus & Appianus, Britonem fuisse nomē euincit, quod Britonem magnum significat. Nec torquebo illud Strabonis, qui Brennum natione Prausum fuisse scribit, vt natione Britonem faciam.

The same in English.

It is not unlike that the Britons accompanied the Cimbrians and Gaules in those expeditions to Italy and Greece. For besides the common name, it is recorded in that most ancient Written booke called Liber Triadum, (wherein also mention is made of three huge armies that were leued out of Britaine) that a certaine outlandish Captaine gathered from hence a mightie armie; who hauing wasted a great part of Europe, at length tooke vp his abode (perhaps the Author mea-neth in Gallatia) nere vnto the sea of Greece.

Likewise, that the warrelike captaine Britomærus (of whom Florus and Appian doe make repor) was himselfe a Briton, his very name doeth testifie, which signifieth A great Briton. Neither will I wrest that testimonie of Strabo (who reporteth Brennus to haue bene a Praue by birth) that I may pꝛoue him also to haue bene a Briton boꝛne.

¶ The trauaile of Helena.

Elena Flavia Augusta serenissimi Coeli Britannici Regis Hæres, & vnica filia, Helena Flauia Augusta, the heire and onely daughter of Coelus sometime the most excellent King of Britaine, the mother of the Emperour Constantine the great, by reason of her singular beautie, faith, religion, goodnesse and godly chastitie (according to the testimonie of Eusebius) was famous in all the world. Amongst all the women of her time, there was none either in the liberall arts more learned, or in instruments of musike more skilfull, or in the diuers languages of nations more abundant then her selfe. She had a naturall quicknesse or excellency of wit, eloquence of speech, and a most notable grace in all her behauiour. She was seene in the Hebrew, Greeke and Latine tongues.

Her father (as Virumnius reporteth) had no other childe to succeed in the kingdome after him but her, and therefore caused her to be instructed in these things by the best teachers, that thereby she might the better in time gouerne the Realme: so that by reason of her passing beautie, and other her excellent giftes of body and minde, Constantius Chlorus the Emperour married her, and had by her a sonne called Constantine the great, while hee remained in Britaine. Who at length deceasing at Dyke, this Helena (no otherwise then Anna of whom mention is made in the new Testament) continued a vertuous and holy widow to the end of her life.

There are some writers which doe affirme, that persecution ceased, and peace was granted to the Christian Churches by her good meanes.

After the light and knowledge of the Gospel, she grew so skilfull in diuinitie, that she wrote and composed diuers booke, and certaine Greeke verses also, which (as Ponticus reporteth) are yet extant. Being warned by some visions she went to Ierusalem, and visited all the places there, which Christ had frequented. She liued to the age of fourescore yeeres, and then died at Rome the 15. day of August, in the yeere of our redemption 337. Octauius being then king of Britaine, and her sonne Constantine the Emperour then also liuing, and her body is to this day very carefully preserved at Venice.

The life and trauels of Constantine the great, Emperour and King of Britaine.

Laius Constantinus cognomento Magnus post Genitorem Cōstantium Britannorum Rex, ac Romanorum Caesar Augustus, ex Britannica matre in Britannia natus, & in Britannia creatus Imperator, patriam natalem magnificè suæ gloriæ participem fecit. Profligatis Alemanis, Hispanis, & Francis, eorūque Regibus pro spectaculo bestijs obiectis, Galliam subiectam tenuit: Tres Helenæ matris auunculos Britannos, Leolinum, Traherum, & Marium, quos cæteris semper fidentiores habuerat in suis fortunis, Italis à Maxentij tyrannide feliciter liberatis, in Senatorum ordinem Romæ promouit. Innumeræ in eo (vt Eutropius habet) claruere tam animi, quàm corporis virtutes, dum appetentissimus esset gloriæ militaris, successu semper in bellis prospero. Inter literas tam Græcas quàm Latinas, à Christianissima matre Helena Christi fidem edoctus, eos honorabat præcipue, qui in Philosophia Christiana vitam reclinaissent. Vnde ab Oceani finibus nempe Britannis incipiens, ope fretus diuina, religionis curam in medijs superstitionum tenebris cepit, ab Occiduis ad Indos, innumeras ad æternæ spem vitæ erigens gentes. Animum diuinis exercendo studijs, noctes trahebat infomnes, & quæsitæ scribendi diuerticula per otium frequentabat: Imperium oratione, ac Sanctis operationibus continendum ratus, Egregius Christianæ disciplinæ præco, filios ac proceres docuit, pietatem diuitijs omnibus, atque adeò ipsi anteferre totius mundi Monarchiæ. Falsorum deorum euesor, Imaginum cultus per Græciam, Ægyptum, Persiam, Asiam, & vniuersam ditionem Romanam, repositis abrogat legibus, iubens per edicta Christum coli, Euangelium prædicari sacrum, Ministris honores, & alimenta dari, atque idolorum vbique destrui templa. Et vt fidei forma cunctis videretur, Euangelium Iesu Christi ante se semper ferri fecit, & Biblia sacra ad omnes prouincias destinati, diademaque Monarchicum primus Britannis regibus dedit: Ecclesijs infinita præstitit præstitit agros, annonam, stipendium egenis, ægris, viduis, ac orphanis, pro quibusque ut pater sollicitus. Eusebium, Lactantium, & similes, familiarissimos habuit, & hæc ad Deum orationem indies ipsis in eius vita testibus fudit. Vnum te Deum esse nouimus, vnum te Regem intelligimus, appellamus adiutorem, nobis abs te victoria cecidit, ex te Adversarium fudimus, &c. Pro delictis labuit, ut Sextus Aurelianus tradit, literarum studia colere, bonos artes fouere, legere, scribere, meditari: composuit Græcæ & Latine multos libros & Epistolas. Eius vita Nicomædie discessit Senex, ætatis suæ Anno 66, & Imperij 32, à Christi verò incarnatione 339. Constantinopoli sepultus, Octavio in Britannijs regnante. Eius vitam in quatuor libris Eusebius Cæsariensis Græcæ scripsit, & Ioannes Portesius Gallus in Latinum transtulit sermonem.

FLAUUS Constantine, surnamed the great, king of the Brittaines after his father, and Emperour of the Romanes, bozne in Britanie of Helena his mother, and there created Emperour, made his native countrey partaker of his singular glory and renoume.

Hauing conquered and put to flight the Almaines, Spaniards, Frenchmen, and their Kings for a spectacle shewen out to wild beasts, he held France it selfe as subiect vnto him: and hauing happily deliuered the Italians from the tyrannie of Maxentius, he preferred thence of his mothers vncles, all Brittaines, namely, Leoline, Trahere, and Marius, when in all his actions he had found more faith vnto him then any others, to be of the order of the Romane Senators.

Eutropius reporteth, that he infinitely excelled in the vertues both of the mind and body also, and that hauing a pleasure in the practise of warre, and in the iust commendation of Martiall prowesse, he neuer pitched his field but his successe in the battel was alwayes victorious. His mother Helena hauing instructed him in the faith of Christ, although hee made much of all men that were learned in the Greeke and Latine tongues, yet he preferred speciall honoz to those that spent their time in the studie of Diuinitie, which he called Christian Philosophie: so that beginning at the furthest part of the Ocean sea, which then was taken to be his owne native soyle of Britaine, and trusting in the assistance of God, when the darkenes of superstition was most thicke, then hee undertooke a care of Religion, stirring by innumerable nations from the West as farre as India it selfe, to the hope of eternall life.

Hee passed many nightes without sleepe, hauing his minde occupied in diuine studies: and whensoever his leisure from greater affaires did permit him, his vacante times should be spent in the vse of writing and other good exercises, assuring himselfe that his kingdomes and Empire were to be continued and strengthened to him by prayer and holy workes: and oftentimes taking vpon him as it were the person of a notable preacher of Christian discipline, he would teach his children and nobilitie, that godlinesse was to be preferred before riches, yea, before the Honourchie of all the world.

He ouerthrew the false gods of the heathens, and by many lawes often reuiled, he abrogated the worshipping of Images in all the countreies of Greece, Egypt, Persia, Asia, and the whole Romane Empire, commanding Christ onely by his Edicts to be worshipped, the sacred Gospell to be preached, the Ministers thereof to be honoured and relieved, and the temples of Idoles euerie where to be destroyed.

Whither soeuer he went hee caused the booke of the Gospell of Christ to be still carried before him, that thereby it might appeare to be a forme of faith to all men, and to appertaine generally to all nations.

He was the first that appointed an Imperiall Diademe, or Crowne to the Kings of Britaine. He was most beneficiall to all Churches, bestowing vpon them lands and fields, and vpon the poore, sicke persons, widowes and orphans, coine and wood, being as careful of them as if hee had bene their naturall father.

He used learned men most familiarly, as Eusebius, Lactantius and others, and they are witness that this was his vsuall prayer to God, O Lord we know thee to be the onely God, we are sure that thou art the onely King, and we call vpon thee as our helper: though thee we haue gotten the victorie, and by thee we haue ouerthruen the enemy.

Sextus Aurelius reporteth, that it was his greatest delight to embrace the studie of learning, to fauour good Arts, to read, write and meditate, and that he composed many bookes and Epistles both in the Greeke and Latine tongues.

He died at Nicomedia, being then 66. yeeres of age, in the 32. yeere of his reigne, and in the 339. yeere after the Incarnation of Christ, and was buried at Constantinople, Octavius being then King of Britaine: whose life Eusebius bishop of Cæsarea hath written in Greeke in 4. bookes, which afterwards were translated into the Latine tongue by Iohn Portes a Frenchman.

¶ The life and trauailes of Pelagius borne in Wales.

Pelagius Cambrius ex ea Britannia parte oriundus, famati illius Collegij Banochorensis a Cestria non procul, praepositus erat, in quo Christianorum philosophorum duo millia ac centum, ad plebis in Christo commoditatem militabant, manuum suarum laboribus, iuxta Pauli doctrinam victitantes. Postquam plures exhibitos, pro Christiana Repub. labores, vir eruditione insignis, & tum Graece, tum Latine peritus, vt Tertullianus alter, quorundam Clericorum laceffitus iniurijs, grauati tulit, ac tandem a fide defecit.

Peragratu igitur deinceps Gallijs, in Aegyptum, & Syriam aliasque orientis Regiones demum peruenit. Vbi ex earum partiu Monacho praesul ordinatus, sui nominis haeresim fabricabat: asseriens hominem sine peccato nasci, ac solo voluntatis imperio sine gratia saluari posse, vt ita nefarius baptismum ac fidem tolleretur. Cum his & consimilibus impotricis doctrinae fecibus in patriam suam reuersus, omnem illam Regionem, Iuliano & Caestino Pseudoepiscopis fautoribus, conspurcabat. Verum ante lapsum suum studia tractabat honestissima, vt post Gennadium, Bedam, & Honorium alij ferunt auctores, composuitque multos libros ad Christianam vtilitatem. At postquam est Hereticus publicatus, multo plures edidit haeresi succurrentes, & ex diametro cum vera pietate pugnantes, vnde erat a suis Britannis in exilium pulsus, vt in Epistola ad Martinum 5. Valdenus habet. Claruit anno post Christum incarnatum, 390. sub Maximo Britannorum Rege.

Pelagius, borne in that part of Britaine which is called Wales, was head of gouernour of the famous Colledge of Bangor, not farre from Chester, wherin liued a Societie of 2100. Diuines, of Students of Christian philosophie, applying themselves to the profite of the Christian people, and liuing by the labours of their owne handes, according to Pauls doctrine. He was a man excellently learned, and skilfull both in the Greeke and Latine tongues, and as it were another Tertullian, after his long and great trauailes for the good of the Christian common wealth, seeing himselfe abused, and iniuriouly dealt withall by some of the Clergie of that time, he tooke the matter so grienously, that at the last he relapsed from the faith.

Whereupon he left Wales, and went into France, and hauing gone through France, hee went therehence into Egypt, Syria, & ther Countryes of the East, and being made Priest by a certaine Ponke of those partes, he there hatched his heresie, which according to his name was called the heresie of the Pelagians: which was, that man was borne without sinne, and might be saued by the power of his owne will without grace, that so the miserable man might take away faith and baptisme. With this and the like dregges of false doctrine, hee returned againe into Wales, and there by the meanes of the two false Prelates Iulian and Celestine, who fauoured his heresie, hee infected the whole Countrey with it. But before his fall and Apostasie from the faith, he exercised himselfe in the best studies, as Gennadius, Beda, Honorius, and other authoys doe report of him, and wrote many bookes seruing not a litle to Christian vtilitie: but being once fallen into his heresie, hee wrote many more erroneous bookes, then he did before honest, and sincere: whereupon, at the last his owne Countrey men banished him, as Walden testifieth in his Epistle to Pope Martine the fift. He flourished in the yere after the Incarnation, 390. Maximus being then King of Britaine.

¶ Certaine Englishmen sent to Constantinople by the French

King to Iustinian the Emperour, about the yeece of Christ, 500. out of the fourth booke of Procopius de Bello Gothico.

Britanniam insulam tres numerosissimae gentes incolunt: Quorum vnicuique suus Rex imperat. Nominantur haec gentes Angli, Frisones, & qui eiusdem sunt cum insula cognominis Britones. Tanta vero hominum multitudo esse videtur, vt singulis annis inde magno numero cum vxoribus & liberis ad Francos emigrant. Illi autem in eorum terram, quae maximè deserta videtur, excipiunt. Vnde insulam sibi vindicare ferunt.
Vtique non ita pridem, cum Francorum Rex quosdam e suis Constantinopolim ad Iustinianum legaret, Anglos etiam misit, ambitiosius vendicans, quasi haec insu-la suo subesset imperio.

The Isle of Britaine is inhabited by three most populous nations, euery of which is gouerned by a severall king. The sayd nations are named Angli, Frisones, and Britones, which last are called after the name of the Island. In this Isle there are such swarmes of people, that euery peere they goe soozth in great numbers with their wiues and children into France. And the Frenchmen right willingly receiue them into their lande, which seemeth very desolate for want of inhabitants. Whereupon it is sayd that the French doe challenge the foresayd Island vnto themselves. For not long since, when the king of the Frankes sent certaine of his subiects ambassadours to Constantinople vnto Iustinian the Emperour, he sent English men also, ambitiously boasting, as though the sayd Isle had bene vnder his iurisdiction.

A testimonie of the sending of Sighelmus Bishop of Shirburne, by King Alphred, vnto Saint Thomas of India in the yeare of our Lord 883, recorded by William of Malmesburie, in his second booke and fourth Chapter de gestis regum Anglorum.

Eleemosynis intentus priuilegia ecclesiarum, sicut pater statuerat, roborauit; & trans mare Romam, & ad sanctum Thomam in Indiam multa munera misit. Legatus in hoc missus Sighelmus Shirburnensis Episcopus cum magna prosperitate, quod quiuis hoc seculo miretur, Indiam penetrauit; inde rediens exoticos splendores gemmarum, & liquores aroniatum, quorum illa humus ferax est, reportauit.

King Alphred being addicted to giuing of almes, confirmed the priuileges of Churches as his father had deterrmined; and sent also many giftes beyond the seas vnto Rome, and vnto S. Thomas of India. His messenger in this businesse was Sighelmus bishop of Schirburne; who with great prosperitie (which is a matter to be wondered at in this our age) trauailed thorough India, and returning home brought with him many strange and precious vnions and costly sppees, such as that countrey plentifully yeeldeth.

A second testimony of the foresaid Sighelmus his voyage vnto Saint Thomas of India &c. out of William of Malmesbury his second booke
de gestis pontificum Anglorum, cap. de episcopis Schireburnensibus Salisburyensibus, Wiltunensibus.

Sighelmus trans mare, causa eleemosynarum regis, & etiam ad Sanctum Thomam in Indiam missus, mira prosperitate, quod quiuis in hoc seculo miretur, Indiam penetrauit; inde quē rediens exotici generis gemmas, quarum illa humus ferax est, reportauit. Nonnullæ illarum adhuc in ecclesiæ monumentis visuntur.

Thomas* of India, very prosperously (which a man would woonder at in this age) passed through the sayde countrey of India, and returning home brought with him diuers strange and precious stones, such as that climate affourderth. Many of which stones are as yet extant in the monuments of the Church.

Iohn Erigene a Britane, descended of honourable parents, and borne in the Towne of S. Daulid in Wales, seeing the Englishmen to be oppressed with the warres and rapines of the cruell Danes, and all the land in a hurle burlie, he in the meane time undertooke a long iourney, euen as farre as Athens, and there spent many yeres in the studie of the Greeke, Chaldie, and Arabian tongues: he there frequented all the places and schooles of the Philosophers, and the oracle also of the Sunne, which Aesculapius had built vnto himselfe. And hauing found at length that which he had with long trauell searched, he returned againe into Italie, and France, where for his singular learning, he was much fauoured of the two Kings Charles and Lewes, and in his being there, he translated into Latine the bookes of Dionysius Areopagita concerning the Heauenly Hierarchie, which were sent from Constantinople in the yere 858. After this hee came backe againe into his owne Countrey, and was schoolemaster vnto Alphred then King of England, and his sonnes: and vpon his request, at his times of leasure, he translated Aristotles Morals, of the Secrets of Secrets, of the right gouernement of Princes, out of Greeke into these three tongues, Chaldie, Arabian, and Latine, which he did very exquisitely. At the last, being in the Abbie of Malmsburie, whither he went for his recreation, and there according to his manner disputing, and reading to the Students, some of them mistaking and hating him, rose against him, and slue him in the yere of Christ, 884.

Andreas Leucander aliàs Whiteman (iuxta Lelandum) Monachus, & Abbas Ramesiensis Cænobij tertius fuit. Hic bonis artibus studio quodam incredibili noctes atque dies inuigilabat, & operæ præcium ingens inde retulit. Accessit præterea & ardens quoddam desiderium, ea proprijs & apertis oculis videnti loca, in quibus Seruator Christus redemptionis nostræ mysteria omnia consummauit, quorum prius sola nomina ex scripturarum lectione nouerat: vnde & sacram Hierosolymorum urbem, miraculorum, prædicationis, ac passionis eius testem inuisit, atque domum rediens factus est Abbas. Claruisse fertur anno nati Seruatoris, 1020. sub Canuto Dano.

Andrew Leucander otherwise called Whiteman (as Leland reporteth) was by profession a Monk, and the third Abbat of the Abbey of Ramsie: he was exceedingly giuen to the studie of good artes, taking paines therein day & night, and profited greatly thereby. And amongst all other things, he had an incredible desire to see those places with his eyes, wherein Christ our Sauour perfozmed and wrought all the mysteries of our redemption, the names of which places he onely knew before by the reading of the Scriptures. Whereupon he began his iourney, and went to Ierusalem a witnesse of the miracles, preaching, and passion of Christ, and being againe returned into his countrey, he was made the aforesayd Abbat. He flourished in the yere of Christ 1020. vnder Canutus the Dane.

Swanus peruersi ingenij & infidi in regem, multoties a patre & fratre Haroldo desciuit: & pirata factus, prædis maritimis virtutes maiorum polluit. Postremò pro conscientia Brunonis cognati interempti, (& vt quidam dicunt) fratris Ierosolimam abiit: indeque rediens, a Saracenis circumuentus, & ad mortem casus est.

Swanus being of a peruerse disposition, and faithlesse to the king, often times disagreed with his father and his brother Harold: and afterwards proving a pirate, he stained the vertues of his ancestors with his robberies vpon the seas. Last of all, being guilty vnto himselfe of the murder of his kinsleman Bruno, and (as some do report) of his owne brother, he traualled vnto Ierusalem: and in his returne home, being taken by the Saracenis, was beaten, and wounded vnto death.

A voyage of three Ambassadors, who in the time of K. Edward the Confessor, and about the yere of our Lord 1056, were sent vnto Constantinople, and from thence vnto Ephesus, together with the occasion of their sending, &c. recorded by William of Malmesburie, lib. 2. de gestis regum Anglorum, capite 13.

Die sancti paschatis ad mensam apud Westmonasterium assederat, diademate fastigatus, & optimatum turma circumuallatus. Cumque alij longam quadragesimam in edam recentibus cibis compensantes, acriter comederent, ille a terrenis reuocato animo, diuinum quiddam speculatus, mentes conuiuantium permouit ampliores perfusus in risum: nulloque causam lætitiæ perquirere præsumente, tunc quidam ita taciturni, donec edendi satietas obsonijs finem imposuit. Sed remotis mensis, cum in triclinio regalibus exueretur, tres optimates cum prosequenti, quorum vnus erat comes Haroldus, secundus abbas, tertius episcopus, familiaritatis ausu interrogant quid riserat: mirum omnibus nec immentò videri, quare in tanta serenitate diei & negotij, tacentibus cæteris, scurrilem cachinnum eiecerit. Stupenda (inquit) vidi, nec ideo sine causa risi. Tum illi, vt moris est humani ingenij, sciscitari & quærere causam ardentius, vt supplicibus dignantè rem impertiatur. Ille multum cunctatus tandem instantibus mira respondit: septem dormientes in monte Cælio requiescere iam ducentis annis in dextro iacentes latere: sed tunc in hora ipsa risus sui, latus inuertisse sinistrum: futurum vt septuaginta quatuor annis ita iaceant: dirum nimirum miseris mortalibus omen. Nam omnia ventura in his septuaginta quatuor annis, quæ dominus circa finem mundi prædixit discipulis suis: gentem contra gentem surrecturam, & regnum aduersus regnum, terramotus per loca, pestilentiam & famem, terrores de cælo, & signa magna, regnorum mutationes, gentilium in Christianos bella, item Christianorum in paganos victorias. Tanta mirantibus inculcans passionem septem dormientium, & habitudines corporum singulorum, quas nulla docet litera, ita promptè disseruit: ac sicum eis quotidianò victitaret contubernio. His auditis, comes militem, episcopus clericum, abbas monachum, ad veritatem verborum exculpandam, Manichæi Constantinopolitano imperitori misere, adiectis regis sui literis & muneribus. Eos ille benignè secum habitos episcopo Ephesi destinauit, epistola pariter, quam sacram vocant, comitante: vt ostenderentur legatis regis Angliæ septem dormientium marruriales exuiæ. Factumque est vt vaticinium regis Edwardi Græcis omnibus comprobatum, qui se a patribus accepisse iurarent, super dextrum illos latus quiescere: sed post introitum Anglorum in speluncam, veritatem peregrinæ prophetiæ contubernalibus suis prædicarunt. Nec moram festinatio malorum fecit, quin Agareni, & Arabes, & Turci, alienæ scilicet a Christo gentes, Syriam, & Lyciam, & minorem Asiam omnino, & maioris multas vrbes, inter quas & Ephesum, ipsam etiam Hierosolimam depopulati, super Christianos inuaderent.

Vpon Easter day king Edward the Confessor being crowned with his kingly diadem, and accompanied with diuers of his nobles, sate at dinner in his pallace at Westminster. And when others, after their long abstinence in the Lent, refreshed themselves with dainty meats, and fed thereupon very earnestly, he lifting vp his mind from earthly matters and meditating on heavenly visions (to the great admiration of those which were present) brake forth into an exceeding laughter: and no man presuming to enquire the cause of his mirth, they all kept silence till dinner was ended. But after dinner, as hee was in his bed-chamber putting off his solemne robes, thre of his Nobles, to wit earle Harold, an Abbot, and a Bishop, being moze familiar with him then the rest, followed him in, and boldly asked him what was the occasion of his laughter: for it seemed very strange vnto them all, what should moue him at so solemne a time and assembly, while others kept silence, to laugh so exressively. I saw (quoth he) admirable things, and therefore laughed I not without occasion. Then they (as it is the common guise of all men) demaunded and enquired the cause moze earnestly, humbly beseeching him that hee would vouchsafe to impart impart that secret vnto them. Whereupon musing a long while vnto himselfe, at length he told them wonderfull things: namely that seuen Sleepers had rested in mount Calius two hundred yeeres, lying vpon their right sides; but in the very houre of his laughter, that they turned themselves on their left sides; and that they should continue so lying for the space of 74. yeeres after; being a dismal signe of future calamitie vnto mankind. For all things should come to passe within those 74. yeeres, which, as our Saviour Christ foretold vnto his disciples, were to be fulfilled about the ende of the world; namely that nation should rise against nation, and kingdome against kingdome, and that there should bee in many places earthquakes, pestilence, and famine, terrible apparitions in the heauens, and great signes, together with alterations of kingdomes, warres of infidels against the Christians, and victories of the Christians against the infidels. And as they wondered at these relations, he declared vnto them the passion of the seuen Sleepers, with the proportion and shape of eache of their bodies (which things no man liuing had as then committed vnto writing) and that so plainly and distinctly, as if he had conuersed a long time in their company. Whereupon the earle sent a knight, the bishop a cleрке, and the abbot a menke vnto Maniches the Emperour of Constantinople, with the letters and gifts of their King. Who giuing them friendly entertainment, sent them ouer vnto the bishop of Ephesus; and wrote his letters vnto him giuing him charge, that the English Ambassadors might be admitted to see the true, and material habitments of the seuen Sleepers. And it came to passe that King Edwards vision was approued by all the Greekes, who protested they were aduertised by their fathers, that the foresaid seuen Sleepers had alwayes before that time rested vpon their right sides; but after the Englishmen were entered into the caue, those Sleepers confirmed the truth of the outlandish prophetic, vnto their countrey men. Neither were the calamities foretold, any long time delayed: for the Agarens, Arabians, Turkes and other unbeleeuing nations inuading the Christians, harried and spoiled Syria, Lycia, the lesser Asia, and many cities of Asia the greater, and amongst the rest Ephesus, yea, and Ierusalem also.

In the yere of our Lord 1058. Alured bishop of Worcester, very solemnely dedicated a Church (which himselfe had founded and built in the citie of Glocester) vnto the honour of S. Peter the chiefe Apostle: and afterward by the kings permission ordained Woltan a Monk of Worcester of his owne choice, to be Abbat in the same place. And then hauing left his Bishopricke which was committed vnto him ouer the Church of Wilton, and hauing resigned the same vnto Hermannus about mentioned, passed ouer the seas, and traualled through Hungarie vnto Ierusalem, &c.

The voyage of Ingulphus Abbat of Croiland vnto Ierusalem, performed (according to Florentius Wigornienſis) in the yeere of our Lord,

A.D. 1064.

Ego Ingulphus humilis minister Sancti Guthlaci Monasterijq; sui Croilandensis, natus in Anglia, & a parentibus Anglicis, quippe vrbis pulcherimæ Londoniarum, pro literis addiscendis in teneriori ætate constitutus, primum Westmonasterio, postmodum Oxonienſi studio traditus eram. Cumque in Aristotele arripiendo supra multos coetaneos meos profectissem, etiam Rheoricam Tullij primam & secundam talo tenus induebam. Factus ergo adoleſcentior, fastidienſ parentum meorum exiguitatem, paternos lares relinquere, & palatia regum aut principum affectans, mollibus vestri, pomposisque lacinijs amicti indies ardentius appetebam. Et ecce, inclutus nunc rex noster Angliæ, tunc adhuc hic comes Normanniæ Wilhelmus ad colloquium tunc regis Angliæ Edwardi cognatus, A.D. 1051, cum grandi ministrantium comitatu Londoniam aduentabat. Quibus citius insertus, ingerens me ubique ad omnia emergentia negotia peragenda, cum prosperè plurimè perfectissem, in breui agnitus illustrissimo comiti & aristotissimè adamiatus, cum ipso Normanniam enauigabam. Factus ibidem scriba eius, pro libito totam comitis curiam, ad nonnullorum inuidiam regebam; quosque volui humiliabam, & quos volui exaltabam. Cumque iuuenili calore impulsus in tam cello statu supra meos natales consistere caderem, quin semper ad altiora contendere, instabili animo, ac nimium pruriens affectu, ad erubescèntiam ambitiosus auidissimè desiderarem: nuntiatur per vniuersam Normanniam plurimos archiepiscopos imperij cum nonnullis alijs terræ principibus velle pro merito animarum suarum more peregrinorum cum debita deuotione Hierosolymam proficisci. De familia ergo comitis domini nostri plurimi tam milites quàm clerici, quorum primus & præcipuus ego eram, cum licentia, & domini nostri comitis beneuolentia, in dictum iter nos omnes accinximus: & Alemanniam petentes, equites triginta numero & amplius domino Maguntino coniuncti sumus. Parati namque omnes ad viam, & cum dominis episcopis connumerari septem millia, pertranseuntes prosperè multa tetrarum spatia, tandem Constantinopolim peruenimus. Vbi Alexium Imperatorem eius adorantes Agiosophiam vidimus, & infinita sanctuaria osculari sumus. Diuertentes inde per Lyciam, in manus Arabicorum latronum incidimus; cuiusceratque de infinitis pecunijs, cum moribus multorum, & maximo vitæ nostræ periculo vix euadentes, tandem desideratissimam ciuitatem Hierosolymam læto introitu tenebamus. Ab ipso tunc patriarcha Sophronio nomine, viro veneranda canicie honestissimo ac sanctissimo, grandi cymbalorum tonitru, & luminarium immenso fulgore suscepti, ad diuinissimam ecclesiam sanctissimi sepulchri, tam Syrorum, quàm Latinorum solenni processione deducti sumus. Ibi quot preces inorauimus, quot lachrymas inieciimus, quot suspiria inspirauimus, solus eius inhabitator nouit D. noster Iesus Christus. Ab ipso itaque gloriosissimo sepulchro Christi ad alia sanctuaria ciuitatis inuisenda circumducti, infinitam summam sanctarum ecclesiarum, & oratoriorum, quæ Achim Soldanus dudum destruxerat, oculis lachrymosis vidimus. Et omnibus ruinis sanctissimæ ciuitatis, tam extra, quàm intra, numerosis lachrymis intimo affectu compassi, ad quorundam restaurationem datis non paucis pecunijs, exire in patriam & sacratissimo Iordane intingi, vniuersaque Christi vestigia osculari, desiderantissima deuotione suspirabamus. Sed Arabum latrunculi qui omnem viam obseruabant, longius a ciuitate euagari, sua rabiosa multitudo innumera non sinebant. Vere igitur accedente, stolidus nauum lanuensium in porta Toppensi applicuit. In quibus, cum sua mercimonia Christiani mercatores per ciuitates maritimas commutassent, & sancta loca similiter adorassent, ascendentes omnes mari nos commisit. Et iactati fluctibus & procellis innumeris tandem Brundisium, & prospero itinere per Apuliam Romam petentes, sanctorum Apostolorum Petri & Pauli limina, & copiosissima sanctorum martyrum monumenta per omnes stationes osculati sumus. Inde archiepiscopi, ceterique principes imperij Alemanniam per dextram repetentes, nos versus Franciam ad sinistram declinantes, cum inenarrabilibus & gratijs & osculis ab inuicem discessimus. Et tandem de triginta equitibus, qui de Normannia pingues exiimus, vix viginti pauperes peregrini, & omnes pedites, macie multa attenuati, reuersi sumus.

Ingulphus an humble seruant of reuerend Guthlac and of his monastery of Croiland, borne in England, and of English parents, at the beautifull citie of London, was in my youth, for the attaining of good letters, placed first at Westminster, and after ward sent to the Uniuersitie of Oxford. And hauing excelled diuers of mine equals in learning of Aristotle, I inuaded my selfe somewhat vnto the first & second Rhetorique of Tullie. And as I grew in age, disdayning my parents meane estate, and forsaking mine owne native soyle, I affected the Courts of kings and princes, and was desirous to be clad in silke, and to weare braue and costly attyre. And loe, at the same time William our soueraigne king now, but then Erle of Normandie, with a great troupe of followers and attendants came vnto London, to conferre with king Edward the Confeſſour his kinsman. Into whose company intruding my selfe, and proffering my seruice for the performance of any speedy or weigheie affayres, in short time, after I had done many things with good successe, I was knowen and most entirely beloued by the victorizous Erle himselfe, and with him I sayled into Normandie. And there being made his secretarie, I gouerned the Erles Court (albeit with the enuie of some) as my selfe pleased, yea whom I would I abased, and preferred whom I thought good. When as therefore, being carried with a youthfull heat and lustie humour, I began to be wearie euen of this place, wherein I was aduanced so high above my parentage, and with an inconstant minde, and affection too too ambitious, most vehemently aspired red at all occasions to climbe higher: there went a report throughout all Normandie, that diuers Archbishops of the Empire, and secular princes were desirous for their soules health, and for deuotion sake, to goe on pilgrimage to Ierusalem. Wherefore out of the family of our lord the Earle, sundry of vs, both gentlemen and clerkes (principall of whom was my selfe) with the licence and good will of our sayd lord the earle, sped vs on that voyage, and trauailing thirtie hoxles of vs into high Germanie, we ioyned our selues vnto the Archbishop of Mentz. And being with the companies of the Bishops seuen thousand persons sufficiently provided for such an expedition, we passed prosperously through many prouinces, and at length attained vnto Constantinople. Where doing reuerence vnto the Emperour Alexius, we sawe the Church of Sancta Sophia, and kissed diuers sacred reliques. Departing thence through Lycia, we fell into the hands of the Arabian theues: and after we had bene robbed of infinite summes of money, and had lost many of our people, hardly escaping with extream danger of our liues, at length wee ioyfully entered into the most wished citie of Ierusalem. Where we were receiued by the most reuerend, aged, and holy patriark Sophronius, with great melodie of cymbals and with torch-light, and were accompanied vnto the most diuine Church of our Sauour his sepulchre with a solemne procession aswell of Syrians as of Latines. Here, how many prayers we uttered, what abundance of teares we shed, what deepe sighs we breathed forth, our Lord Iesus Christ onely knoweth. Wherefore being conducted from the most glorious sepulchre of Christ to visite other sacred monuments of the citie, we saw with weeping eyes a great number of holy Churches and oratories, which Achim the Soubdan of Egypt had lately destroyed. And so hauing bewailed with sadde teares, and most sorrowful and bleeding affections, all the ruines of that most holy city both within and without, and hauing bestowed money for the reedifying of some, we desired with most ardent deuotion to go forth into the countrey, to wash our selues in the most sacred river of Iordan, and to kille all the steppes of Christ. Howbeit the theruill Arabians lurking vpon euery way, would not suffer vs to trauell farre from the city, by reason of their huge and furious multitudes. Wherefore about the syem there arrived at the port of Ioppa a fleet of ships from Genoa. In which fleet (when the Chyrstian merchants had exchanged all their wares at the coast townes, and had likewise visited the holy places) wee all of vs embarked, committing our selues to the seas: and being tossed with many stormes and tempests, at length wee arrived at Brundisium: and so with a prosperous iourney trauelling thow Apulia towards Rome, we there visited the habitations of the holy apostles Peter and Paul, and did reuerence vnto diuers monuments of holy martyrs in all places thowout the city. From thence the archbishops and other princes of the empire trauelling towards the right hand for Alemain, and we declining towards the left hand for France, departed asunder, taking our leaues with unspeakable thankes and courttesies. And so at length, of thirtie hoxlemen which went out of Normandie fat, lusty, and frolique, we returned thither scarce twenty poore pilgrims of vs, being all footmen, and consumed with scannelle to the bare bones.

¶ Diuers of the honourable family of the Beauchamps, with Robert Curtoys sonne of William the Conqueror, made a voyage to Ierusalem 1096.

Hol pag. 22. vol. 2.

Dope Vibane calling a counsell at Clermont in Auuergne, exhorted the Chyrstian princes so earnestly to make a iourney into the Holy land, for the recovery thereof out of the Saracens hands, that the saide great and generall iourney was concluded vpon to be taken in hand, wherein many noble men of Chyrstendome went vnder the leading of Godfrey of Bouillon & others, as in the Chronicles of France, of Germanie, and of the Holy land doeth more plainly appeare. There went also among other diuers noble men forth of this Realme of England, specially that worthily bare the surname of Beauchampe.

¶ The voyage of Gutuere an English Lady married to Balduine brother of Godfreide duke of Bouillon, toward Ierusalem about 1097. And the 11. yeere of William Rufus King of England.

The Chyrstian armie of Godfre of Bouillon passing the citie of Iconium, alias Agogna in the countrey of Licaonia, and from thence by the city of Heracia, came at length vnto the citie of Marasia, where they encamped, and sojourned there three whole dayes, because of the wife of Balduine brother germane of the duke of Lorraine. Which Lady being long time vexed with a grieuous malady, was in eremitie, where at length paying the debt due to nature, she changed this transitorie life, for life eternall; Who, in her life time, was a very worthy and vertuous Lady, bozne in England; and descended of most noble parentage named Gutuere; Which, according to her degree, was there most honourably enterred, to the great griefe of all the whole armie. As reporteth William Archbishop of Tyre, lib. 3. cap. 17. hist. belli sacri. The same authoꝝ in the 10. booke & first chapter of the same historie concerning the same English Lady, writeth further as followeth, Baldwine hauing folowed the warres for a time, gaue his minde to marriage, so that being in England he fell in loue with a very honourable and noble Lady named Gutuere, whom he married and carried with him in that first happy expedition, wherein he accompanied his brethren the Loꝝes, duke Godfrey and Eustace, persons very commendable in all vertues and of immortall memorie. But he had hard fortune in his iourney, because his foresaid wife, being wearied with a long sickness finished her life with a happie end neere the citie of Marasia, before the Christian armie came vnto Antioch, where she was honourably buried, as we haue declared before.

EAc in regione Marefch vxor Baldewini nobilissima, quam de regno Anglię eduxit, diutina corporis molestia aggrauata, & duci Godefrido commendata, vitam exhalauit, sepulta Catholicis obsequiis; cuius nomen erat Godwera.

In this prouince of Marefch the most noble wife of Baldwine, which he carried with him out of England being visited with dayly sicknesses and infirmities of body, and commended to the custody of duke Godfrey, departed out of this life, and was buried after the Christian maner. Her name was Godwera.

¶ The voyage of Edgar the sonne of Edward which was the sonne of Edmund surnamed Ironside, brother vnto K. Edward the confessor, (being accompanied with valiant Robert the sonne of Godwin) vnto Ierusalem, in the yeere of our Lord 1102, Recorded by William of Malmesburie, lib. 3. histo. fol. 58.

SVbsequenti tempore cum Roberto filio Godwini milite audacissimo Edgarus Hierosolymam pertendit. Illud fuit tempus quo Turci Baldwinum regem apud Ramas obsederunt: qui cum obsidionis injuriam ferre nequiret, per medias hostium acies effugit, solius Roberti opera liberatus præeuntis, & euaginato gladio dextra leuaque Turcos cædentis. Sed cum successu ipso truculentior, alacritate nimia procurreret, ensis manu excidit. Ad quem recolligendum cum se inciinasset, omnium incursu oppressus, vinculis palmas dedit. Inde Babyloniam (vt aiunt) ductus, cum Christum abnegare noller, in medio foro ad signum positus, & sagittis terabratus, martyrium consecrauit. Edgarus amisso milite regressus, multa que beneficia ab Imperatoribus Græcorum, & Alemannorum adeptus (quippe qui etiam eum retinere pro generis amplitudine tentassent) omnia pro natalis soli desiderio spreuit. Quosdam enim profecto fallit amor patriæ, vt nihil eis videatur iucundum, nisi consuetum hauserint cælum. Vnde Edgarus fatua cupidine illusus Angliam redijt, vbi (vt superius dixi) diuerso fortunæ ludicio rotatus, nunc remotus & tacitus, canos suos in agro consumit.

Afterward Edgar being sonne vnto the nephewe of Edward the confessor, traueiled with Robert the sonne of Godwin a most valiant knight, vnto Ierusalem. And it was at the same time when the Turkes besieged king Baldwin at Rama: who not being able to endure the straight siege, was by the helpe of Robert especially, going before him, and with his drawn sword making a lane, and slaying the Turkes on his right hande and on his left, deliuered out of that danger, and escaped through the midst of his enemies campe. But vpon his happie successe being moze eager and fierce, as he went forward somewhat too hastily, his sword fell out of his hand. Which as he stouped to take vp, being oppressed with the whole multitude, hee was there taken and bound. From whence (as some say) being carried vnto Babylon or Alcair in Egypt, when he would not renounce Christ, he was tyed vnto a stake in the midst of the market place, and being shot through with arrowes, died a martyr. Edgar hauing lost his knight returned, and being honoured with many rewards both by the Greekish and by the Germane Emperour (who both of them would right gladly haue entertained him still for his great nobilitie) contemned all things in respect respect of his native soile. For in very deepe some are so inueagled with the loue of their countrey, that nothing can seeme pleasant vnto them, vlesse they breathe in the same aire where they were bred. Wherefore Edgar being mislede with a fond affection, returned into England; and afterward being subiect vnto diuers changes of fortune (as we haue aboue signified) he spendeth * now his extreme olde age in an obscure and priuate place of the countrey.

When the author was writing of this history.

¶ Mention made of one Godericus, a valiant Englishman, who was with his ships in the voyage vnto the Holy land in the second yeere of Baldwine King of Ierusalem, in the third yeere of Henry the first of England.

Ghronicon Hierosolymitanum lib. 9. cap. 9. Verum dehinc septem diebus euolutis rex ab Assur exiens, nauem quæ dicitur Buza ascendit, & cum eo Godericus pirata de regno Angliæ, ac vexillo hastæ præfixo & elato in aëre ad radios solis vsque, Iaphet cum paucis nauigauit, vt hoc eius signo ciues Christiani recognito, fiduciam vitæ regis haberent, & non facile hostium minis pauescunt, turpiter diffugium facerent, aut urbem reddere cogerentur. Sciebat enim eos multum de vitæ & salute eius desperare. Saraceni autem viso eius signo, & recognito, ea parte quæ urbem nauigio eingebar illi in galeis viginti & Carinis tredecim, quas vulgo appellant Cazh, occurrerunt, volentes Buzam regis coronare. Sed Dei auxilio vndis maris illis ex aduerso tumescentibus ac reluctantibus, Buza autem regis facili, & agili cursu inter procillas labente, ac volitante, in portu Ioppæ delusis hostibus subito affuit, sex ex Saracenis in arcu suo in nauicula percussis, ac vulneratis. Intrans iraque ciuitatem dum incolumis omnium pareret oculis, reuiuixit spiritus cunctorum gementium & de eius morte hæctenus dolentium, eo quod caput & rex Christianorum & princeps Hierusalem adhuc viuus & incolumis receptus sit.

At seven dayes afterward, the King comming out of the towne of Assur entred into a shippe called a Buffle, and one Godericke a pirate of the kingdome of England with him, and fastening his banner on the toppe of a speare, and holding it by aloft in the aire against the beames of the Sunne, sailed vnto Iaphet with a small company; That the Christian Citizens there seeing this his banner, might conceiue hope that the King was yet liuing, and being not easily terrified with the threats of the enemies might shamefully runne away, or be constrained to yeeld by the citie. For hee knew that they were very much out of hope of his life and safetie. The Saracens seeing and knowing this his banner, that part of them which enuironed the Citie by water made towards him with twentie Gallies and thirteene shippes, which they commonly call Cazh, seeking to inclose the Kings shippe. But, by Gods helpe the billowes of the Sea swelling and raging against them, and the Kings shippe gliding and passing through the waues with an easie and nimble course arriued suddenly in the haven of Ioppa, the enemies frustrated of their purpose; and sixe of the Saracens were hurt and wounded by shot out of the Kings shippe. So that the King entering into the Citie, and now appearing in safetie in all their sightes, the spirits of all them that mourned for him, and vntill then lamented as though hee had bene dead, reuiued, because that the head and King of the Christians, and prince of Ierusalem was yet aliue, and come againe vnto them in perfect health.

¶ Mention made of one Hardine of England one of the chiefeest personages, and a leader among other of two hundred saile of ships of Christians that landed at Ioppa in the yeere of our Lord God 1102.

Chronicon Hierosolymitanum libro 9. cap. 11. Interea dum hæc obsidio ageretur 200. naues Christianorum nauigio Ioppen appulsæ sunt, vt adorarent in Hierusalem. Horum Bernardus Witrach de terra Galatiæ, Hardinus de Angliæ, Otho de Roges, Hadewerck, vnus de præpotentibus Westfalorum, primi & duces fuisse referuntur, &c. Erat autem tertia feria Iulij mensis, quando hæc Christianorum copiæ, Deo protegente, huc nauigio angustiatæ & obfessis ad opem collatæ sunt. Saracenorum autem turmæ, videntes quia Christianorum virtus audacter facie ad faciem vicino sibi hospitio proximè iungebatur, media nocte orbi incubente, amois tentorijs amplius milliari subtraçtæ confederunt, dum luce exorta consilium iuurent, vtrum Ascalonem redirent, aut ciues Iaphet crebris assultibus vexarent.

The same in English.

While the Sarazens continued their siege against Ioppa, two hundred saile of Christian ships arrived at Ioppa, that they might performe their deuotions at Hierusalem. The chiefe men and leaders of these Christians are reported to haue bene: Bernard Wirazh of the land of Galaria, Hardine of England, Orho of Roges, Haderwerck one of the chiefe noble men of Westphalia, &c. This Christian power through Gods speciall prouision, arrived here for the succour and reliefe of the distressed & besieged Christians in Ioppa, the third day of July, 1102. and in the second yeere of Baldwine king of Ierusalem. Whereupon the multitude of the Sarazens, seeing that the Christian power toynded themselves boldly, close by them euery face to face in a lodging hard by them, the very next night at midnight, remooued their tents, and pitched them more then a mile off, that they might the next morning bee aduised whether they should returne to Ascalon, or by often assaults bere the citizens of Iaphet.

Chronicon Hierosolymitanum, eodem libro 9. cap. 12. continueth this historie of these two hundred saile of ships, and sheweth how by their prouesse chiefly, the multitude of the Sarazens were in short space vanquished and ouerthrowen: The words are these; Ab ipso vero die terribis dum sic in superbia & elatione sua multitudinis immobiles Saraceni peristerent, & multis armorum terroribus Christianum populum vexarent, sexta feria appropinquante, Rex Baldwinus in tubis & cornibus Iaphet egrediens, in manu robusta equitum & peditum virtutem illorum crudeli bello est aggressus, magnis hinc & hinc clamoribus intonantes. Christiani quoque qui nauigio appulsi sunt horribili pariter clamore cum Rege Baldwino, & graui strepitu vociferantes, Babylonios vehementi pugna sunt aggressi, saeuissimis atq; mortiferis plagis eos affigentes, donec bello fatigati, & ultra vim non sustinentes fugam versus Ascalonem iniierunt. Alij vero ab infecutoribus eripi existimantes, & mari se credentes, intolerabili procellarum fluctuatione absorpti sunt. Et sic ciuitas Ioppe cum habitatoribus suis liberata est. Ceciderunt hac die tria millia Saracenorum: Christianorum vero pauci perisse inuenti sunt.

The same in English.

Yet notwithstanding, after the said third day of July, the Sarazens persisted high minded and insolent, by reason of their great multitude, and much annoied the Christian people with their many forceable and terrible weapons; whereupon, on the sixth day of July early in the morning king Baldwine issued out of Iaphet, his trumpets and cornets yeelding a great and loud sound, and with a very strong armie as well of horsemen as footemen, who on euery side making great shoutes and outcries, with fierce and sharpe battell set on the maine power of their enemies. The Christians also who arrived in the nauie, rearing great clamours and noyses, with loud voices and shoutings in horrible wise together, with king Baldwine assaulted likewise with strong battell the Babylonians, and afflicted them with most sore and deadly wounds, until the Sarazens being wearied with fighting, not able longer to endure and hold out against the valure of the Christians, fled towards Ascalon. And other of them hoping to escape from them that pursued them, leapt into the sea, and were swallowed by in the waues thereof. And so the citie of Ioppa with the inhabitants thereof were freed of their enemies. There were slaine this day three thousand Sarazens, and but a few of the Christians perished.

¶ A Fleete of Englishmen, Danes, and Flemmings, arrived at Ioppa in the Holy land, the seventh yeere of Baldwine the second king of Hierusalem. Written in the beginning of the tenth booke of the Chronicle of Hierusalem, in the 8. yeere of Henry the first of England.

Cap. 1.

At the same time also in the seventh yeere of the raigne of Baldwine the Catholike king of Hierusalem, a very great warrelike Fleete of the Catholike nation of England, to the number of about seuen thousand, hauing with them more men of warre of the kingdom of Denmarke, of Flanders and of Antwerpe, arrived with ships which they call Busses, at the haven of the citie of Iaphet, determining there to make their abode, until they hauing obtained the kings licence and safeconduct, might safely worship at Hierusalem. Of which nauie the chiefeest and best spoken repairing to the king, spake to him in this maner. Christ preserue the Kings life, and prosper his kingdome from day to day; Wee, bring men and souldiours of Christian profession, haue, through the helpe of God, sayled hither through mightie and large seas, from the farre countreys of England, Flanders, and Denmarke, to worship at Ierusalem, and to visite the sepulchre of our Lord. And therefore we are assembled to intreat your clemency touching the matter, that by your fauour and safe conduct we may peaceably goe by to Ierusalem, and worship there, and so returne.

Chap. 2.

The king fauourably hearing their whole petition, granted vnto them a strong band of men to conduct them, which brought them safely from all assaults and ambushes of the Gentiles by the known wayes vnto Ierusalem and all other places of deuotion. After that these pilgrims, & new Christian strangers were brought thither, they offering vnto our Lord their bowes in the temple of the holy sepulchre, returned with great joy, and without all let vnto Ioppa; where finding the king, they bowed that they would assist him in all things, which should seeme good vnto him: who, greatly commending the men, and commanding them to be well entertained with hospitality, answered that he could not on the sudden answer to this point, vntill that after he had called his nobles together, he had consulted with my lord the Patriarch what was most meet and conuenient to be done, and not to trouble in vaine so willing an army. And therefore after a few dayes, calling vnto him my lord the Patriarch, Hugh of Tabaria, Gunfride the keeper and lieutenant of the tower of David; and the other chiefe men of warre, he determined to haue a meeting in the city of Rames, to consult with them what was best to be done.

Chap. 3.

Who, being assembled at the day appointed, and proposing their diuers opinious & iudgements, at length it seemed best vnto the whole company to besiege the city Sagitta, which is also called Sidon, if peradventure, through Gods helpe, and by the strength of this new army, by land and sea it might be overcome. Whereupon all they which were there present, and required that this city should be besieged, because it was one of those cities of the Gentiles which continually rebelled, were commended, and admonished of the king euery one to go home, and to furnish themselves with things necessary, and armour for this expedition. Euery one of them departed home; likewise Hugh of Tabaria departed, being a chiefe man of warre against the inuasions of the enemies, which could neuer be wearied day nor night in the countie of the Pagans, in pursuing them with warre and warlike stratagies all the dayes of his life. Immediately after this consultation the king sent ambassadours to all the multitude of the English men, requiring them not to remoue their campe nor fleet from the city of Iaphet, but quietly to attend the kings further commandement. The same ambassadours also declared vnto the whole army, that the king and all his nobility had determined to besiege and assault the city Sagitta by sea and by land, and that their helpe and forces would there be needfull: and that for this purpose, the king and the patriarch were coming downe vnto the city of Acres, and that they were in building of engins, and warlike instruments, to inuade the walles and inhabitants thereof: and that in the meane season they were to remaine at Iaphet, vntill the kings further commandement were knowne. Whereupon they all agreed that it should be done according to the kings commandement; and answered that they would attend his directions in the haue of Iaphet, & would in all points be obedient vnto him vnto the death.

Chap. 4.

The king came downe to Acres with the patriarch, and all his family, building, and making there by the space of fortie dayes engins, and many kindes of warlike instruments: and appointing all things to be made perfectly ready, which seemed to be most conuenient for the assaulting of the city. Also, as this purpose and intent of the king was come vnto the eares of the inhabitants of Sagitta, and that an inuincible power of men of warre was arrived at Iaphet to helpe the king, they were greatly affonied, fearing that by this meanes, they should be consumed and subdued by the king by dint of sword, as other cities, to wit, Casaria, Asfur, Acres, Cayphas, and Tabaria were vanquished and subdued. And therefore laying their heads together, they promised to the king by secret mediators, a mighty masse of money of a coyne called Byzantines: and that further they would yeerely pay a great tribute, vpon condition that ceasing to besiege and inuade their city, he would spare their liues. Whereupon these businesses were handled from day to day betweene the king and the citizens, and they solicited the king for the ransoming both of their city and of their liues, proffering him from time to time more greater gifts. And the king for his part, being carefull and perplexed for the payment of

of the wages which he ought vnto his souldiers, harkened wholly vnto this offer of money. Wherebeit because he feared the Christians, least they should lay it to his charge as a fault, he durst not as yet meddle with the same.

Chap. 5.

In the meane space Hugh of Tabaria being sent for, accompanied with the troopes of two hundred horsemen and foure hundred footmen, inuaded the countrey of the Grosse Carle called Suert, very rich in gold and siluer most abundant in cattle frontering vpon the countrie of the Damascenes, where hee tooke a pray of inestimable riches and cattle, which might haue sufficed him for the besiege of Sagitta, whereof he ment to impart liberally to the king, and his companie. This pray being gathered out of sundry places thereabout, and being led away as farre as the citie of Belinas, which they call Caesaria Philippi, the Turkes which dwelt at Damascus, together with the Saracens inhabitants of the countrie perceiuing this, flocking on all partes together by troopes, pursued Hughes companie to rescue the pray, and passed forth as farre as the mountaines, ouer which Hughes footemen did driue the pray. There beganne a great skirmish of both partes, the one side made resistance to keepe the pray, the other inuaded with all their might to recouer it, vntill at length the Turkes and Saracens preuailling, the pray was rescued and brought backe againe: which Hugh and his troopes of horsemen, suddenly understanding, which were on the side of the mountaines, incontinently rid backe vpon the spurre, among the straight and craggie rockes, skirmishing with the enemies, and succouring their footemen, but as it chanced they fought vnforsunately. For Hugh, being vnarmed, and immediatly rushing into the midst of all dangers, and after his wonted manner inuading and wounding the infidels, being behinde with an arrowe shot through the backe which pierced thorough his liuer and breast, he gaue vp the ghost in the hands of his owne people. Whereupon the troopes of the Gentiles being returned with the recovered pray, and being deuided through the secret and hard passages of the craggie hilles, the souldiers brought the dead bodie of Hugh, which they had put in a litter, into the citie of Nazareth, which is by the mount Thaber, where with great mourning and lamentation, so worchie a prince, and valiant champion was honourably and Catholikely interred. The brother of the said Hugh named Gerrard, the same time lay sicke of a grieuous disease. Which hearing of the death of his brother, his sicknesse of his body increasing more vehemently through griefe, he also deceased within eight dayes after, and was buried by his brother, after Christian maner.

Chap. 6.

After the lamentable burials of these so famous Princes, the King, taking occasion of the death of these principall men of his armie, agreed, making none priuie thereto, to receiue the money which was offered him for his differing off the siege of the citie of Sagitta, yet dissimbling to make peace with the Saracens, but that he ment to go through with the worke, that he had begunne. Whereupon sending a message vnto Iaphet, hee aduised the English souldiers to come downe to Acres with their fleet, and to conferre and consult with him touching the besieging and assaulting of the citie of Sagitta, which rising immediatly vpon the kings commaundement, and forthwith hoysing by the sayles of their shippes aloft with pendants and streamers of purple, and diuerse other gloriois colours, with their flagges of scarlet colour and silke, came thither, and casting their anchors, rode hard by the citie. The king the next day calling vnto him such as were priuie & acquainted with his dealings, opened his griefe vnto the chiefe Captaines of the English men and Danes, touching the slaughter of Hugh, and the death of his brother, and what great confidence he reposed in them concerning these warres: and that now therefore they being departed and dead, he must of necessity differre the besieging of Sagitta, & for this time dismisle the armie assembled. This resolution of the king being spred among the people, the armie was dissolued, and the Englishmen, Danes and Flemings, with sailes and oares going aboard their fleet, saluted the king, and returned home vnto their native countries.

English men were the guard of the Emperours of Constantinople in the reigne of Iohn the sonne of Alexius Comnenus. Malmesburiensis, Curopolata and Camden, pag. 96.

Aminde Anglia non minus belli gloria, quam humanitatis cultu inter Florentissimas orbis Christiani gentes inprimis floruit. For Iohn the sonne of Alexius Comnenus, as our countreyman William of Malmesburie reporteth, highly esteeming their fidelity, vsed them very nere about him, recommending them euer to his sonne: so that long time afterwards the guard of those Emperours were English halbertiers, called by Nicetas Choniata, Inglini Bipenniferi, and by Curopolata, Barangi, which alwayes accompanied the Emperour with their halberds on their shoulders, which they held up when the Emperour coming from his Oratorie shewed himselfe to the people; and clashing their halberds together to make a terrible sound, they in the English tongue wished vnto him long life.

Henrie the second King of England, Anno Dom. 1177. wherein mention is made that certaine of king Henries Noble men and subiects were present with the sayd Emperour in a battell of his against the Soldan of Iconium. Odem anno Manuel Constantinopolitanus imperator, habito prælio campeltri cum Soltano Iconij & illo devicto, in hac forma scripsit Domino regi Angliæ.

Manuel in Christo deo Porphyrogenitus, diuinitus coronatus, sublimis, potens, excelsus, semper Augustus, & moderator Romanorum, Comnenus, Henrico nobilissimo regi Angliæ, charissimo amico suo, salutem & omne bonum. Cum imperium nostrum necessarium reputet notificare tibi, vt dilecto amico suo, de omnibus quæ sibi obueniunt; ideò & de his quæ nunc acciderunt ei, opportunum iudicauit declarare tuæ voluntari. Igitur a principio coronationis nostræ imperium nostrum aduersus dei inimicos Persas nostrum odium in corde nutriuit, dum cerneret illos in Christianos gloriarî, eleuarique in nomen dei, & Christianorum dominari regionibus. Quocirca & alio quidem tempore indifferenter inuasit eos, & prout deus ei concessit, sic & fecit. Et quæ ab ipso frequenter parata sunt ad contritionem ipsorum & perditionem, imperium nostrum credit nobilitatem tuam non latere. Quoniam autem & nunc maximum exercitum contra eos ducere proposuit, & bellum contra omnem Persidem mouere, quia res cogebat. Et non vt voluit multum aliquem apparatus fecit, sicut ei visum est. Veruntamen prout tempus dabat & rerum status, potenter eos inuasit. Collegit ergo circa se imperium nostrum potentias suas: sed quia carpenta ducebat armorum, & machinarum, & aliorum instrumentorum conferentium ciuitatum expugnationibus, pondera portantia: idcirco nequaquam cum festinatione iter suum agere poterat. Amplius autem dum adhuc propriam regionem peragraret, antequam barbarorum aliquis aduersus nos militaret in bellis aduersarius, ægritudo difficillima fluxus ventris inuasit nos, qui diffusus per agmina imperij nostri pertransibat, depopulando & interimendo multos, omni pugnatore grauior. Et hoc malū inualefcens maximè nos contriuit. Ex quo verò fines Turcorum inuasimus, bella quidem primum frequentia concrepabant, & agmina Turcorum cum exercitibus imperij nostri vndique dimicabant. Sed Dei gratia ex toto à nostris in fugam vertebantur barbari. Post verò vbi ei qui illic adjacet angustia loci, quæ à Persis nominatur Cibrilcimam, propinquauimus, tot Persarum turnæ peditum & equitum, quorum pleræque ab interioribus partibus Persidis occurrerant in adiutorium contribulium suorum, exercitui nostro superuenerunt, quot penè nostrorum excederent numerum. Exercitu itaque imperij nostri propter viæ omnino angustiam & difficultatem, vsq; ad decem millia extenso; & cum neque qui præbant possent postremos defendere, neque versa vice rursus postremi possent præuere iuuare, non mediocriter ab inuicem hos distare accidit. Sane primæ cohortes permultum ab acie imperij nostri diuidebantur, postremarum oblita, illas non præstolantes. Quoniam igitur Turcorum agmina ex iam factis prælijs cognouerant, non conferre sibi à fronte nobis repugnare, loci angustiam bonum subuentorem cum inuenissent, posteriora statuerunt inuadere agmina, quod & fecerunt. Arctissimo igitur vbique loco existente, instabant barbari vndique, à dextris & à sinistris, & aliundè dimicantes, & tela super nos quasi imbres descendencia interimiebant viros & equos complures. Ad hæc itaque imperium nostrū vbi malum superabundabat, reputans secum oportunū iudicabat retrò expectare, atque illos qui illic erant adiuuare, expectando vtique contra infinita illa Persarum agmina bellum sustinuit. Quanta quidem, dum ab his circumdaretur, patrauerit, non opus est ad tempus sermonibus pertexere, ab illis autem qui interfuerunt, forsitan discet de his tua nobilitas. Inter hæc autem existente imperio nostro, & omne belli grauamen in tantum sustinente, postremæ cohortes vniuersæ Græcorum & Latinorum, & reliquorum omnium generum conglobatæ, quæ iaciebantur ab inimicis tela non sustinentes, impactione vtuntur, & ita violentè ferebantur, dum ad adiacentem ibi collem quasi ad propugnaculum naculum festinarent: sed prece dentes impellunt nolentes. Multo autem elcuato pulnere, ac perturbante oculos, & neminem permittente videre quæ circa pedes erant, in præcipitium quod aderat profundissimæ vallis alius super alium homines & equi sic incontinentiè portati corruerunt, quod alij alios conculcantes ab inuicem interemerunt non ex gregarijs tantum, sed ex clarissimis & intimis nostris consanguineis. Quis enim inhibere poterat tantæ multitudinis importabilem impulsus? At verò imperium nostrum tot & tantis confectum barbaris sauci-ans, sauciarumque, adeo vt non modicam in eos moueret perturbationem, obstupentes perseuerantiani ipsius, & non remittebatur, benè iuuante deo, campum obtinuit. Neque locum illum scandere aduersarios permisit, in quo dimicauit cum barbaris. Nec quidem equum suum illorum timore incitauit, celerius aliquando ponere vestigia. Sed congregando omnia agmina sua, & de morte eripiendo ea, collocauit circa se: & sic primos attigit, & ordinatim proficiscens ad exercitus suos accessit. Ex tunc igitur videns Soltanus, quod post tanta quæ acciderant exercitibus nostris, imperium nostrum, sicut oportuenerat, rem huiusmodi dispensauit, vt ipsum rursùm inuaderet: mittens supplicauit imperio nostro, & deprecatorijs vsus est sermonibus, & requisuit pacem illius, promittens omnem imperij nostri adimplere voluntatem, & seruitium suum contra omnem hominem dare, & omnes qui in regno suo tenebantur captiuos absolueret, & esse ex toto voluntatis nostræ. Ibidein ergo per duos dies integros, in omni potestate morati sumus, & cognito quod nihil poterat fieri contra ciuitatem Iconij, perditis testudinibus & machinis bellicis, eo quod boues cecidissent a telis in modo pluuiæ iactis, qui eas trahebant: Simul autem eo quod & vniuersa animalia nostra irruente in illa difficillima ægitudine laborabant, suscepit Soltani depræcationem & scedera & iuramenta peracta sub vexillis nostris, & pacem suam ei dedit. Inde ingressum imperium nostrum in regionem suam regreditur, tribulationem habens non mediocrem super his quos perdidit consanguineis, maximas tamen Deo gratias agens, qui per suam bonitatem & nunc ipsum honorauit: Gratum autem habuimus, quod quosdam nobilitatis tuæ principes accidit interesse nobiscum, qui nar- rabunt de omnibus quæ acciderant, tuæ voluntati seriem. Caterùm autem, licet contristati simus propter illos qui ceciderunt: oportu- num tamen duximus, de omnibus quæ acciderant, declarare tibi, vt dilecto amico nostro, & vt per multum coniuncto imperio nostro, per puerorum nostrorum intimam consanguinitatem. Vale. Data mense Nouembris, indictione tertia.

In the yeere 1177, Manuel the emperour of Constantinople hauing fought a field with the Soldan of Iconium, and vanquished him, wrote vnto Henry the second king of England in manner following.

Manuel Comnenus in Christ the euerliuing God a faithfull emperour, descended of the linage of Porphyrie, crowned by Gods grace, high, puissant, mighty, alwayes most souereigne, and gouernour of the Romans; vnto Henry the most famous king of England, his most deare friend, greeting and all good successe. Whereas our imperiall highnesse thinketh it expedient to aduertise you our welbeloued friend of all our affaires: We thought it not amisse to signifie vnto your royall Maiestie certaine exploits at this present atchieued by vs. From the beginning therefore of our inauguration our imperiall highnes hath mainteined most deadly feod and hostility against Gods enemies the Persians, seeing them so to triumph ouer Christians, to exalt theselues against the name of God, and to vsurpe ouer Christian kingdomes. For which cause our imperiall highnesse hath in some fox encountered them heretofore, and did as it pleased God to giue vs grace. And we suppose that your Maiestie is not ignorant, what our imperiall highnesse hath often performed for their ruine and subuersion. For euen now, being vrged thereunto, we haue determined to leade a mighty army against them, and to wage warre against all Persia. And albeit our forces be not so great as we could wish they were, yet haue we according to the time, and the present state of things, strongly inuaded them. Therefore our Maiestie imperiall hath gathered our armies together: but because we had in our army sundry carts laden with armour, engines, & other instruments for the assault of cities, to an exceeding weight we could not make any great speed in our iourney. Moreover, while our imperiall highnesse was yet marching in our owne dominions, before any barbarous enemy had fought against vs: our people were visited with the most grievous disease of the fluxe, which being dispersed in our troups destroyed and slew great numbers; more then the sword of the enemy would haue done. Which mischiefe so preuailing, did woonderfully abate our forces. But after we had inuaded the Turkish frontiers, we had at the first very often and hot skirmishes, and the Turks came swarming to fight against our imperiall troups. Howbeit by Gods assistance those miscreants were altogether scattered and put to flight by our souldiers. But as we approached vnto that straight passage which is called by the Persians Perſians Cibailciman, ſo many bands of Perſian footemen and horſemen (moſt whereof came from the innermoſt parts of Perſia, to ſuccour their Allies) encountered our army, as were almoſt ſuperiour vnto vs in number. Wherefore the army of our Imperiall highneſſe, by reaſon of the ſtraightneſſe and difficultie of the way, being ſtretched ten miles in length; and the fiſt not being able to be lpe the laſt, nor yet contrarywiſe the laſt to reſcure the fiſt, it came to paſſe that they were very farre diſtant aſunder. And in very need the ſozermoſt troups were much ſeparated from the guard of our imperiall perſon, who forgetting their fellowes behind, would not ſtay any whit for them. Becauſe therefore the Turkiſh bands knew full well by their ſozer conflicts that it was bootleſſe for them to aſſaile the forefront of our battell, and perceiuing the narrowneſſe of the place to be a great aduantage, they determined to ſet vpon our rereward, and did ſo. Wherefore our paſſage being very ſtraight, and the infidels aſſayling vs vpon the right hand and vpon the left, and on all ſides, and diſcharging their weapons as thicke as hailſtones againſt vs, ſlew diuers of our men and horſes. Whereupon, the ſlaughter of our people ſtill encreasing our maieltie imperiall deemed it requiſite to ſtay behind; and to ſuccour our bands in the rereward, and ſo expecting them we ſuſtained the ſierce encounter of many thouſand Perſians. What exploits our Imperiall perſon atchieued in the ſame ſkirmiſh, I hold it needleſſe at this time to recount: your maieltie may perhaps vnderſtand moze of this matter by them which were there preſent. Howbeit our Imperiall highneſſe being in the middeſt of this conflict, and enduring the ſight with ſo great danger, all our hindermoſt troups, both Greekes, Latines, and other nations, retiring themſelues cloſe together, and not being able to ſuffer the violence of their enemies weapons, preſſed on ſo hard, and were caried with ſuch maine force, that haſtning to aſcend the next hill for their better ſafegard, they byged on them which went beſore, whether they would or no. Whereupon, much duſt being raiſed, which ſtopped our eyes and vicerly depriued vs of ſight, and our men and horſes preſſing ſo ſore one vpon the necke of another, plunged themſelues on the ſudden into ſuch a ſteepe and dangerous valley, that treading one vpon another, they quelled to death not onely a multitude of the common ſouldiours, but diuers moſt honourable perſonages, & ſome of our neere kinſmen. For who could reſtraine the irreſiſtable thiong of ſo huge a multitude? Howbeit our Imperiall highneſſe being emironed with ſuch ſwarmes of Infidels, and giuing and receiuing wounds (inſomuch that the miſerants were greatly diſmaited at our conſtancie) we gaue not ouer, but by Gods aſſiſtance wonne the field. Neither did we permit the enemy to aſcend vnto that place, from whence we ſkirmiſhed with him. Neither yet ſpurred wee on our horſe any faſter for all their aſſaults. But marſhallling all our troups together, and deliuering them out of danger, we diſpoſed them about our Imperiall perſon; and ſo we ouertooke the ſozermoſt, and marched in good order with our whole army. Nowe the Soldan perceiuing that notwithstanding the great damages which we had ſuſtained, our Imperiall highneſſe provided to giue him a freſh encounter, humbly ſubmitting himſelfe vnto vs, and vſing ſubmiſſe ſpeeches, made ſuite to haue peace at our hands, and promiſed to fulfill the pleaſure of our maieltie Imperiall, to doe vs ſeruiſe againſt all commers, to reſcave all our ſubiects which were captiues in his realme, and to reſt wholly at our commaund. Here therefore we remained two dayes with great authoritie; and conſidering that wee could attempt nought againſt the citie of Iconium, hauing loſt all our warlike engines both for defence and for battell, for that the oxen which drew them were ſlaine with the enemies weapons, falling as thicke as hailſtones: and alſo for becauſe all our beaſts in a manner were moſt grievouſly diſeaſed; our maieltie Imperiall accepted of the Soldans petition, league, and oath being made and taken vnder our enſignes, and granted our peace vnto him. Then returned we into our owne dominions, being greatly grieved for the loſſe of our deere kinſmen, and preſiding vnto God moſt humble thanks, who of his goodneſſe had euen now giuen vs the victoꝝ. We are right glad likewise that ſome of your maielties princes and nobles accompanied vs in this action, who are able to repoꝛt vnto you all things which haue happened. And albeit we were exceedingly grieved for the loſſe of our people; yet thought it we expedient to ſignifie vnto you the ſucceſſe of our affaires, as vnto our welbeloſed friend, & one who is very neerly allied vnto our highneſſe Imperiall, by reaſon of the conſanguinitie of our children. Farewell. Given in the moneth of Nouember, and vpon the tenth Indiction.

¶ The woorthy voiage of Richard the fiſt, K. of England into Asia, for the recouerie of Ieruſalem out of the hands of the Saracens, drawen out of the booke of Acts and Monuments of the Church of England, written by M. Iohn Foxe.

Richard the fiſt of that name, for his great valure ſurnamed Ceur de Lion, the ſonne of Henry the ſecond, after the death of his father remembering the rebellions that he had vndoutiſſully raiſed againſt him, ſought for abſolution of his treſpaſſe, and in part of satisfaction for the same, agreed with Philip the French king to take his voyage with him for the recouerie of Christs patrimonie, which they called the Holy land : whereupon the sayd king Richard immediately after his Coronation, to prepare himselfe the better towards his iourney, vnder diuers meanes to take vp summes of money, and exacted a tenth of the whole Realme, the Christians to make threescore and ten thousand pounds, and the Jewes which then dwelt in the Realme threescore thousand.

Having thus gotten sufficient money for the exploit, he sent certaine Earles and Barons to Philip the French king in the time of his Parliament at S. Denis, to put him in mind of his promise made for the recouerie of Christs holy patrimonie out of the Saracens hands : To whom he sent word againe in the moneth of December, that he had bound himselfe by sollemne othe, depoling vpon the Euangelists, that he the yere next following, about the time of Easter, had certainly prepared to aduise himselfe toward that iourney, requiring him likewise not to faile, but to bee ready at the terme about limited, appointing also the place where both the Kings should meete together.

In the yere therfore 1190. King Richard hauing committed the gouernment of his realme in his absence to the bishop of Ely then Chancelloz of England, aduanced forward his iourney, and came to Turon to meet with Philip the French king, & after that went to Vizeliac, where the French king & he ioyning together, for the more continuance of their iourney, assured themselves by sollemne othe, swearing fidelitie one to the other : the forme of whose oth was this.

That either of them should defend and maintaine the honour of the other, and beare true fidelitie vnto him, of life, members & worldly honor, and that neither of them should faile one the other in their affaires : but the French King should aide the King of England in defending his land and dominions, as he would himselfe defend his owne Citie of Paris if it were besieged : and that Richard king of England likewise should aide the French king in defending his land and Dominions, no otherwise then he would defend his owne Citie of Roan if it were besieged, &c.

The oth of fidelitie betwixt King Richard, and the French king.

Concerning the lawes and ordinances appointed by K. Richard for his Flaue, the forme thereof was this.

1. That who so killed any person on shipboord, should be tied with him that was slaine, and throwen into the sea.
2. And if he killed him on the land, he should in like maner be tied with the partie slaine, and be buried with him in the earth.
3. He that shall be convicted by lawfull witnes to draw out his knife or weapon to the intent to strike any man, or that hath stricken any to the drawing of blood, shall loose his hand.
4. Also he that striketh any person with his hand without effusion of blood, shall be plunged thrice times in the sea.
5. Item, who so speaketh any opprobrious or contumelious wordes in reuiling or cursing one another, for so oftentimes as he hath reuiled, shall pay so many ounces of siluer.
6. Item, a thiefe or felon that hath stolen being lawfully couicted, shall haue his head shorne, and boyling pitch powred vpon his head, and feathers or downe strawed vpon the same, whereby he may be knowne, and so at the first landing place they shall come to, there to be cast by.

The discipline and orders of the king.

These things thus ordered, king Richard sending his Flaue by the Spanish seas, and by the streights of Gibraltar, betwene Spaine and Africa, to meete him at Marsilia, hee himselfe went as is said to Vizeliac to the French king. Which two kings from thence went to Lions, where the bridge ouer the flood Rhodanus with preele of people brake, and many both men and women were drowned : by occasion whereof the two kings for the combrance of their traines, were constrained to disuener themselves for time of their iourney, appointing both to meet together in Sicily : and so Philip the French king tooke his way to Genua, and king Richard to Marsilia, where he remained 8. dayes, appointing there his Flaue to meete him. From thence crossing ouer to Genua where the French king was, he passed forward by the coasts of Italy, and entred into Tiber not farre from Rome.

King Richard staying in Marsilia 8. dayes for his Flaue which came not, he there hired 20. Gallies, and ten great barkes to ship ouer his men, and so came to Naples, and so partly by horse and wagon, and partly by the sea, passing to Falernum, came to Calabria, where after that he had heard that his ships were arrived at Messana in Sicilie, he made the more speed, and so the 23. of September entred Messana with such a noyle of Trumpets and Shalmes, with such a rout and shew, that it was to the great wonderment and terror both of the Frenchmen, and of all other that did heare and behold the sight.

To the said towne of Messana the French king was come before the 16, of the same month of September, and had taken up the pallace of Tancredus king of Sicily for his lodging: to whom king Richard after his arrivall estoones resorted, and when the two kings had communed together, immediately the French king tooke shipping and entered the seas, thinking to saile towards the land of Jerusalem: but after he was out of the haven, the winde rising contrary againt him, returned him backe againe to Messana. Then king Richard (whose lodging was prepared in the suburbs without the Citie) after he had resorted againe and talked with the French king, and also had sent to Tancredus king of Sicily, for deliuerance of loane his sister (who had bin sometimes Queene of Sicily) and had obtained her to be sent vnto him, the last day of September passed ouer the streight del Fare, and there getting a strong hold called de la Baguare, or le Bamare, and there placing his sister with a sufficient garrison, he returned againe to Messana.

The 2, of October king Richard wan another strong hold, called Monasterium Griffonum, situated in the midst of the streight del Fare, betweene Messana & Calabria, from whence the Honks being expelled, he reposed there all his store and provision of victuals, which came from England or other places.

The Citizens of Messana seeing that the king of England had wonne the castle and Island de la Baguare, and also the Monasterie of the Griffons, and doubting least the king would extend his power further to inuade their Citie, & get if he could the whole Isle of Sicilie, began to stirre against the Kings armie, and to shut the Englishmen out of the gates, and kept their walles against them. The Englishmen seeing that, made to the gates, and by force would haue broken them open, insomuch that the King riding amongst them with his staffe, and breaking diuers of their heads, could not assuage their fiercenesse, such was the rage of the Englishmen againt the citizens of Messana. The King seeing the furie of his people to be such that hee could not stay them, tooke boate, and went to the pallace of king Tancred, to talke of the matter with the French king, in which meane time the matter was so taken up by the wise handling of the ancients of the citie, that both parts laying downe their armour, went home in peace.

The fourth day of the sayd moneth of October, came to king Richard the Archbishop of Messana with two other Archbishops also with the French king, and sundry other Cardes, Barons, and Bishops, to intreat of peace, who as they were together consulting, and had almost concluded vpon the peace, the Citizens of Messana issuing out of the towne, some went up vpon the mountaine, some with open force inuaded the mansion or lodging of Hugh Brune an English captaine. The people wherof comming to the eares of the King, hee suddenly breaking off talke with the French king and the rest, departed from them, and comming to his men, commanded them forthwith to arme themselves. Who then with certaine of his souldiours making up to the top of the mountaine (which seemed to passe their power to climbe) there put the Citizens to flight, chaling them downe the mountaine, vnto the very gates of the citie, whom also certaine of the kings seruants pursued into the citie, of whom five valiant souldiers & twentie of the kings seruants were slaine, the French King looking vpon, and noe once willing to rescue them, contrary to his othe, and league before made with the king of England: for the French king with his men being there present, rode in the midst of them safely, and without any harme too and fro, and might well haue eased the Kings partie, more then he, if it had so liked him.

This being knowen to the English hoste how their fellowes were slaine, and the Frenchmen permitted in the citie, and that they were excluded and the gates barred against them, being also stopped from buying of victuall, & other things, they vpon great indignation gathered themselves in armes, brast open the gates, and scaled the wals, and so winning the citie, set by their flags with the English armie vpon the wals: which when the French King did see, he was mightily offended, requiring the King of England that the Armes of France might also be set up, & ioyned with his: but King Richard to that would in no case agree, notwithstanding to satisfie his minde, he was contented to take downe his Armes, and to commit the custodie of the citie to the Hospitallaries and Templaries of Jerusalem, till the time that Tancred king of Sicily and he should agree together vpon conditions.

These things being done the fift and sixt day of October, it followed then vpon the eight day of the same, that peace was concluded among the kings. In which peace, first king Richard, & Philip the French king renewed againe their oth and league before made, concerning their mutual aide and societie, during the time of that peregrination.

Secondly, peace also was concluded betweene king Richard and Tancred king of Sicily asforesaide, with conditions, that the daughter of Tancrede in case king Richard should die without issue, should be married to Archur Duke of Britaine the kings Nephew and next heire to his crowne, wherof a formall charte was drawn, and letters sent thereto of Pope Clement being being dated the ninth of November.

From this time vntill Februarye the next yeere, these two kings kept still at Messina; either for lacke of winde and weather, or for the repairing of their shippes. And in the aforesayde Februarye, in the yeere 1191: King Richard sent ouer his gallies to Naples, there to meete his mother Elinore, and Berengaria the daughter of Zanctius king of Nauarre, whom he was purposed to marry, who by that time were come to Brundisium, vnder the conduct of Philip Earle of Flanders; and so proceeding vnto Naples, they found the kings shippes wherein they sayled to Messina.

In this meane space, king Richard he wedd himselfe exceeding bounteous and liberall to all men: to the French king first he gaue diuers shippes, vpon others likewise he bestowed riche rewardes, and of his treasure and goods he distributed largely to his souldiers and seruants about him, of whom it was reported, that he distributed moze in one moneth, then any of his predecessors did in a whole yeere: by reason whereof he purchased great loue and fauour, which not onely rebounded to the aduancement of his fame, but also to his singular vtile and profite, as the sequel afterwarde prouoed.

The first day of March following, he left the cite of Messina, where the French King was, and went to Cathesia; a cite where Tancredus king of Sicily then lay, where he was honorably receiued, and there remained with king Tancredus three dayes and thre nights. On the fourth day when he should depart, the aforesaid Tancredus offered him many rich presents in gold and siluer, and precious silkes, wherof king Richard would receiue nothing, but one little ring for a token of his good will: for the which king Richard gaue againe vnto him a riche sworde. At length when king Richard should take his leaue, king Tancred would not let him so depart, but needes would giue him 4. great shippes, and 15. gallies, and further moze hee himselfe would needes accompanie him the space of two dayes iourney, to a place called Tauernium.

Then the next morning when they should take their leaue, Tancredus declared vnto him the message, which the French King a little before had sent vnto him by the Duke of Burgundie, the contents whereof were these: That the King of England was a false Traytour, & would neuer keepe the peace that was betweene them: and if the sayd Tancredus would warre against him, or secretly by night would invade him, he with all his power would assist him, to the destruction of him and all his armie. To whom Richard the King protested againe, that he was no traytour, nor neuer had bene: and as touching the peace begun betwixt them, the same should neuer be broken through him: neither could he beleue that the French King being his good lord, and his woynne Compartner in that voyage, would utter any such wordes by him. Which when Tancredus heard, he byingeth forth the letters of the French King, sent to him by the Duke of Burgundie, affirming mozeouer, that if the Duke of Burgundie would denie the byinging of the said letters, he was ready to trie it with him by any of his Dukes. King Richard receiuing the letters, and musing not a little vpon the same, returneth againe to Messina. The same day that King Richard departed, the French king came to Tauernium to speake with Tancred, and there abode with him that night, and on the morowe returned to Messina againe.

From that time King Richard moued in somacke against King Philip, neuer shewed any gentle countenance of peace & amitie, as he before was wont: whereat the French king greatly marueling, and enquiring earnestly what should be the cause thereof; word was sent him againe by Philip earle of Flanders from king Richard, what wordes he had sent to the king of Sicily, and for testimony thereof the letters were shewed, which he wrote by the duke of Burgundie to the king of Sicily: which when the French king vnderstood, first he held his peace as guilty in his conscience, not knowing well what to answer. At length turning his tale to another matter, he began to quarrell with king Richard, pretending as though he sought causes to breake with him, and to maligne him: and therfore he forged (sayd he) these lies vpon him, and all because he by that meanes would auoid to marry with Alike his sister, according as he had promised. Adding mozeouer that if he would so do, and would not marry the said Alike his sister according to his oth, he would be an enemy to him, and to his, while he liued.

To this king Richard sayd againe, that he could by no meanes marry that woman, forsomuch as his father had carnall copulation with her, and also had by her a sonne: for prooffe whereof he had there presently to bying forth diuers & sundry witnesses to the kings face, to testifie with him.

In conclusion, through counsell and perswasion of diuers about the French king, agreement at last was made, so that king Philip did acquite king Richard from this bond of marrying his sister, and king Richard againe should be bound to pay to him euery yeere for the space of five yeeres, two thousand markes, with certaine other conditions besides, not greatly materiall for this place. And thus peace being betweene them concluded the 28 day of the sayd moneth of

March,

March, the French king lanching out of the haven of Messina, the 22 day after in the Easter weeke, came with his armie to the siege of Achon.

King Richard.

After the departure of the French king from Messina, king Richard with his armie yet remaining behinde, arriued Queene Alinor the kings mother, bringing with her Berengaria the king of Nauars daughter, to be espoused to king Richard: which being done, king Richard in April following, about the 20 day of the sayd moneth, departed from the haven of Messina with 150 great ships, and 53 great gallies well manned and appointed, and tooke his journey toward Achon: who bring vpon the Seas on Good Friday about the ninth houre, rose a mighty South winde with a tempest, which disseuered and scattered all his Flaue, some to one place, and some to another. The king with a few ships was driuen to the Ile of Creta, and there before the haven of Rhodes cast anchor. The ships that caried the kings sister, queene of Sicily, and Berengaria the king of Nauars daughter, with two ships were driuen to the Ile of Cyprus.

The king making great mone for the ships of his sister, and Berengaria his wife that should be, not knowing where they were become, after the tempest was ouerblown, sent forth his gallies diligently to seeke the rest of his Flaue dispersed, but especially the shippe wherein his sister was, and the maiden whom he should marry, who at length were found safe and merry at the port of Lymsem in the Ile of Cyprus, notwithstanding the two other ships, which were in their company before in the same haven, were drowned with diuers of the kings seruantes and men of woz ship, among whom was M. Roger, called Malus Carulus, the kings Vicechancellour, who was found with the kings seale hanging about his necke.

The king of Cyprus was then Isakius (called also the Emperour of the Gryffons) who tooke and imprisoned all English men, which by shipwracke were cast vpon his land, also inuegled into his hands the goods and prizes of them which were found drowned about his coastes, neither would suffer the ships wherein the two ladies were to enter within the port.

The tidings of this being brought to king Richard, he in great wrath gathering his gallies and ships together, boordeth the land of Cyprus, where he first in gentle wise signifyeth to king Isakius, how he with his English men, comming as strangers to the supportation of the holy land, were by distresse of weather driuen vpon his bounds, and therefore with all humble petition besought him in Gods behalfe, and for reuerence of the holy crosse, to let go such prisoners of his as he had in captiuitie, and to restore againe the goods of them that were drowned, which he deteined in his hands, to be employed for the behoofe of their soules. And this the king once, twice, and thise desired of the Emperour: but he proudly answering againe, sent the king word, that he wether would let the captiues go, nor render the goods of them which were drowned.

When king Richard heard this, how light the Emperour Isakius made of his so humble and honest petition, & how that nothing could be gotten without violent force, eissoones giue th commandement thorowout all his hoste to put themselves in armour and follow him, to reuenge the iniuries receiued of that proud and cruell king of Cyprus, willing them to put their trust in God, and not to misdoubt but that the Lord would stand with them, and giue them the victorie. The Emperour in the meane time with his people stood warding the Sea coastes, where the English men should arriue, with swords, billes, and lances, and such other weapons as they had, setting boozdes, stoles, and chesses before them as a wall: few of them were harnessed, and for the most part all vnerpert and vnskillfull in the feates of warre.

Then king Richard with his souldiers issuing out of their ships, first set his bowemen before, who with their shot made a way for others to followe. The Englishmen thus winning the land vpon them, so fiercely pressed vpon the Gryffons, that after long fighting and many blowes, at last the Emperour was put to flight, whom king Richard balliantly pursued, and slue many, and diuers he tooke alive, and had gone neere also to take the Emperour, had not the night come on and parted the battell. And thus king Richard with much spoyle, and great victorie, returning to the port Towne of Lymsem, which the Townesmen had left for feare, found there great abundance of cozne, wine, oyle and victuals.

The day after the victorie gotten, Ioanna the Kings sister, and Berengaria the mayden, entred the Porte and Towne of Lymsem, with 50. great ships, and 14. galliots: so that all the whole Flaue there meeting together, were 254. tall shippes, and about threescore galliots. Then Isakius the Emperour, seeing no way for him to escape by Sea, the same night pitched his tentes five miles off from the English army, swearing that the third day after, he would surely giue battell to king Richard: but he preuenting him before, suddenly the same morning before the day of battell should be, setteth vpon the tentes of the Gryffons early in the morning, they being vnawares and a sleepe, and made of them a great slaughter, insomuch that the Emperour was faine to runne away naked, leauing his tents and pavillions to the Englishmen, full of hozes and rich creature, treasure, also with the Imperial standerd, the lower part whereof with a costly streamer was covered, and wrought all with golde.

King Richard returning with victorie and triumph to his sister and Berengaria, shortly after in the moneth of May next following, and the 12. day of the said moneth, married the said Berengaria daughter of Zancius, king of Nauarre, in the yle of Cyprus at Lynszem.

The king of Cyprus seeing himselfe ouermatched, was driuen at length to peeble himselfe with conditions to giue king Richard 20000. markes in golde for amends of such spoyles as he had gotten of them that were drowned, also to restore all the captiues againe to the king: and furthermoze, he in his owne person to attend vpon the king to the lande of Ierusalem, in Gods seruice and his, with 400. horsemen, and 500. footemen: in pledge whereof he would giue to his hands his castles, and his onely daughter, and would hold his kingdome of him.

This done, and the Emperour swearing fidelitie to king Richard before Guido king of Ierusalem, and the prince of Antioche (who were come thither to king Richard a little before) peace was taken, and Isakius committed to the warde of certaine keepers. Notwithstanding shortly after he breaking from his keepers, was againe at defiance with the King: whereupon king Richard besetting the Island of Cyprus round about with shippes and gallies, did in such sort pzeuaile, that the subjects of the land were constrained to peeble themselves to the King, and at last the daughter of the Emperour, and the Emperour himselfe, whom king Richard caused to be kept in fetters of gold and siluer, and to be sent to the citie of Tripolis.

These things thus done, and all set in order touching the possession of the yle of Cyprus, the keeping whereof he committed to Radulphe sonne of Godfrey Lord Chamberlaine, being then the first day of Iune vpon the first of the saide moneth, king Richard departed from the yle of Cyprus, with his shippes and gallies toward the siege of Achon, and on the next morrowe came to Tyrus, where by procurement of the French king he was restrained by the Citizens to enter. The next day after, which was the first day of Iune, crossing the seas, he met with a great carak fraught with souldiers and men of warre: to the number of a thousand and fure hundred, which pretending to be Frenchmen, and setting forth their flagge with the French armes, were indeede Saracens, secretly sent with wilde fire and certaine barrells of unknown serpents to the defence of the towne of Achon, which king Richard at length perceiuing, esloones set vpon them and so vanquished them, of whom the most were drowned and some taken aliue: which being once knowne in the citie of Achon, as it was a great discomfort to them, so it was a great helpe to the Christians for winning the citie.

The next day after which was the seventh of Iune, king Richard came to Achon, which at that time had bene long besieged by the Christians. After whose coming it was not long, but the Pagans within the citie, seeing their wals to be undermined and towers ouerthrowen, were driuen by compulsion to escape with life and limme, to surrender the citie to the two kings.

King Richard arrived at Achon.

Another great helpe to the Christians in winning the citie, was this. In the said city of Achon there was a secret Christian among the Saracens, who in time of the siege thereof vsed at sundry times to cast ouer the wals into the campe of the Christians, certaine bills written in Hebrew, Greeke, and Latine, wherein he disclosed to the Christians from time to time, the doings and counsels of the enemies, aduertising them how and what way they should worke, and what to beware, and alwayes his letters began thus. In nomine Patris, & Filij, & Spiritus sancti Amen. By reason whereof the Christians were much advantaged in their proceedings: but this was a great heauines vnto them, that neither he would utter his name, nor when the citie was got did they euer understand who he was.

To make of a long siege a short uacration. Vpon the twelfth day of Iuly the peere aforesaid, the Princes and Captaines of the Pagans, vpon agreement resorted to the tent of the Templaries to commune with the two kings touching peace, and giuing vp of their citie: the forme of which peace was thus.

- 1 That the Kings should haue the citie of Achon freely and fully deliuered vnto them, with all which was therein.
- 2 That 500. captiues of the Christians should be restored to them, which were in Achon.
- 3 That the holy crosse should be to them rendyed, and a thousand Christian captiues with two hundred horsemen, whoseuer they themselves would chole out of all them which were in the power of the Saladine.
- 4 That they would giue vnto the Kings two hundred thousand Byssants, so that they themselves should remaine as pledges in the Kings hands, for the performance hereof, that if in fourie daies, the aforesayd couenants were not accomplished, they should abide the Kings mercie touching life and limme.

The forme of peace concluded betwene the Kings and the Princes of Achon.

These covenants being agreed vpon, the Kings sent their souldiers and seruants into the citie, to take a hundredeth of the richest & best of the city, to close them by in towers vnder strong keeping, & the residue they committed to be kept in houses and in streetes, ministering vnto them according to their necessities: to whom notwithstanding this they permitted, that so many of them as would be baptized and receiue the faith of Christ, should be free to goe whither they would: wherupon many there were of the Pagans, which for feare of death pretended to be baptized, but after ward so soone as they could, reuolted againe to the Saladine: for the which it was after ward commaunded by the Kings, that none of them should be baptized against their wils.

The thirteenth day of the said moneth of Iuly, King Philip of France, and king Richard, after they had obtained the possession of Achon, deuided betweene them all things therein contained as well the people as golde and siluer, with all other furniture what soeuer was remaining in the citie: who in deuiding the spoyle, were so good caruers to themselves that the Knights and Barons had but litle to their share, wherupon they began to shew themselves somewhat discontented, which being knowen of the kings, they sent them answer that their wils should be satisfied.

The twentieth day of Iuly, king Richard speaking with the French King, desired him that they two with their armies, would binde themselves by othe to remaine there still in the land of Ierusalem the space of 3. yeeres, for the winning and recouering againe of those countreys: but he sayd he would sweare no such othe, and so the next day after king Richard with his wife and sister entred into the citie of Achon, and there placed himselfe in the kings pallace: The French king remayning in the houses of the Templaries, where he continued till the end of that moneth.

About the beginning of the moneth of August, Philip the French king after that he and King Richard had made agreement betweene Guido & Conradus the Marques, about the kingdome of Ierusalem, went from Achon to Tyrus, notwithstanding king Richard & all the Princes of the Christian armie with great intreatie desired him to tarry, shewing what a shame it were for him to come so farre, and now to leaue vndone that for which he came, and on the 3. day of August departed from Tyrus, leauing the halfe part of the Citie of Achon, in the hands of the aforesayd Conradus Marques.

After his departure the Pagans refused to keepe their covenants made, who neither would restore the holy Crosse nor the money, nor their captiues, sending word to king Richard, that if he beheaded the pledges left with him at Achon, they would choppe off the heads of such captiues of the Christians, as were in their hands.

Shorly after this the Saladine sending great gifts to king Richard, requested the time limited for beheading of the captiues to be proroged, but the king refused to take his gifts, and to graunt his request, wherupon the Saladine caused all the Christian captiues within his possession forthwith to be beheaded, which was the 28. of August: which albeit king Richard vnderstood, yet would not he preuent the time before limited for the execution of his prisoners, being the 20. day of August: vpon which day he caused the prisoners of the Saracens openly in the sight of the Saladines armie to loose their heads: the number of whom came to two thousand and five hundredeth, saue onely that certaine of the principal of them he reserued for purposes and considerations, especially to make exchange for the holy Crosse, and certaine other of the Christian captiues.

After this king Richard purposed to besiege the Citie of Ioppe, where by the way betweene Achon and Ioppe, neere to a towne called Asfur, Saladine with a great multitude of his Saracens came fiercely against the kings rereward, but through Gods mercifull grace in the same battell, the kings warriers acquitted themselves to well, that the Saladine was put to flight, whom the Christians pursued the space of 3. miles, & he lost that same day many of his Nobles & Captaines, in such sort (as it was thought) that the Saladine was not put to such confusion 40. yeeres before, and but one Christian Captaine called Iames Auernus in that conflict was ouerthrowen.

From thence king Richard proceeding further went to Ioppe, and then to Ascalon, where he found first the citie of Ioppe forsaken of the Saracens, who durst not abide the kings coming: Ascalon the Saladine threw downe to the ground, & likewise forsooke the whole land of Syria, though all which land the king had free passage without resistance: neither durst the Saracene Prince encounter after that with K. Richard. Of all which his atcheuances the sayd K. Richard sent his letters of certificate as well into England, as also to the Abbot of Clara vally in France, well hoping if God willing should be able to make his repaire againe to them by Easter next.

Many other famous acts were done in this voyage by these two Kings, and moe should haue bene, had not they falling into discorde disseuered themselves, by reason whereof Philip the French king returned home againe within short space: who being returned againe erst soones inuaded the countrey of Normandy, exciting also Iohn the brother of king Richard, to take on him the kingdome of Englande in his brothers absence: who then made league vpon the same with the French king, and did homage unto him, which was about the fourth yeere of king Richard. Who then being in Syria, and hearing thereof, made peace with the Turkes for thre yeeres: and not long after, king Richard the next spring following returned also, who in his returne driven by distresse of weather about the parts of Histria, in a towne called Synaca, was there taken by Lymbold, Duke of the same countrey, and so solde to the Emperour for sixtie thousand Markes: who for no small toy thereof, writeth to Philip the French king, these letters here following.

The letter of the Emperour to Philip the French king, concerning the taking of King Richard.

Henicus Dei gratia Romanorum Imperator, & semper Augustus, Dilecto & speciali amico suo, Philippo illustri Francorum Regi salutem, & sincera dilectionis affectum. Quoniam Imperatoria Celsitudo non dubitat Regalem Magnificentiam tuam latiore effici, de vniuersis quibus omnipotentia creatoris nostri nos ipsos, & Romanum Imperium honorauerit & exaltauerit, nobilitati tue tenore presentium declarare duximus, quod inimicus Imperij nostri, & turbator Regni tui Rex Anglia, quum esset in transseundo mare ad partes suas reuersurus, accidit ut ventus rupta navi sua, in qua ipse erat, induceret eum in partes Histrie ad locum qui est inter Aquileiam, & Venetias. Vbi Rex, Dei permissione passus naufragium cum paucis euasit.

Quidam itaq; fidelis noster Comes, Maynardus de Grooxce, & populus regionis illius, audito quod in terra erat, & considerato diligentius, qualem nominatus Rex in terra promissionis prodicionem & traditionem, & perditionis sue cumulum exercuerat, insecuti sunt, intendentes eum captinare. Ipso autem Rege in fugam conuerso, ceperunt de suis octo milites: Postmodum processu Rex ad Burgum in Archiepiscopatu Salsburgensi, qui vocatur Frisorum, ubi Fridericus de Betesow, Rege cum tribus tantum versus Austriam properante, noctu sex milites de suis cepit: Dilectus autem Consanguineus noster Lymboldus Dux Austrie, obseruata strata sapē, dictum Regem iuxta Denam in villa viciniore in domo despectu captiuauit.

Cum itaq; in nostra nunc habeatur Potestate, & ipse semper tua molestauit, & turbationis operam prestiterit, ea quae praemisimus, nobilitati tuae insinuare curauimus: scientes ea dilectioni tuae beneplacita existere, animo tuo uberrimam importare letitiam. Datum apud Rubeountum 5. Kalendas Ianua.

King Richard being thus traiterously taken, and solde to the Emperour by the Duke of Austridge for 60000. markes, was there kept in custodie a yeere and 3. moneths.

In some stories it is affirmed, that King Richard returning out of Asia, came to Italy with prosperous winde, where he desired of the Pope to be absolued of an othe made against his will and could not obtaine it: and so setting out from thence towards England, passing by the Countrey of Conradus the Marquis, whose death (he being slaine a litle before) was falsely imputed by the French king to the king of England, there traiterously was taken (as is aforesayde) by Limpoldus Duke of Austridge.

Albeit in another storie I finde the matter more credibly set forth: which saith thus. That king Richard slewe the brother of this Limpoldus, playing with him at Chess in the French Kings Court: and Limpoldus taking his vantage, was more cruel against him and deliuered him (as is sayde) to the Emperour. In whose custodie he was detained during the time aboue mentioned, a yeere & 3. moneths. During which time of the kings enduranc, the French king in the meane season stirred warre in Normandie: and Earle Iohn the Kings brother, made stirre and invaded England, but the Barons and Bishops of the land mightily withstood him.

At length it was so agreed and concluded with the Emperour, that king Richard should be released for a hundredth and foure thousand pound: of which money part should remaine to the Duke of Austridge, the rest should be the Emperours. The summe of which money was here gathered and made in England of chalices, crosses, shrines, candlestickes and other Church plate, also with publike contribution of Friers, Abbots, and other subiects of the Realme: whereof part was presently paid, and for the residue remaining, hostages and pledges were taken, which was about the fift yeere of his reigne: and then it was obtained of the Pope, that Priests might celebrate with Chalices of latten and tinne.

At what time this aforesayde money was payde, and the hostages giuen for the ransom of the King, I haue an olde historie which saith, that the aforesaid Duke of Austridge was shortly after plagued by God, with 5. sundry plagues.

The last indig-ment of God
vpon the Duke of Austria.

First, with the burning of his chiefe Townes,

2 With drowning of some thousand of his men in a flood happening no man can tell how.

3 By turning all the eares of his coine fieldes into wormes.

4. By taking away almost all the Nobles of his land by death.

5. By breaking his owne leg falling from his horse, which leg he was compelled to cut off with his owne hands, and afterwards died of the same: who then at his death is reported to forgive R. Richard 50000, marks, and sent home the hostages that were with him. And further a certaine booke intituled Eulogium declareth, that the sayd Limpoldus duke of Aultrich fell in displeasure with the bishop of Rome, and died excommunicate the next yeere after, Anno 1196.

But thus, as you haue heard, Richard the King was ransomed & deliuered from the couetous captiuitie of the Emperoz, and returning home made an ende of his voyage for Asia, which was both honourable to himselfe and to all Chyistian states, but to the Saracens the enemies of Chyistianitie, terrible and dishonourable.

This historie of King Richard's voiage to Ierusalem is very excellently and largely written in Latine by Guilielmus Neobrigensis, and Roger Howeden.

The life and trauailes of Baldwinus Deuonius, sometime Archbishop of Canterbury.

Baldwinus Deuonius, tenui loco Excestria natus, vir ore facundus, excelsus Philosophus, & ad omne studiorum genus per illos dies aptissimus inueniebatur. Scholarum rector primum erat, tum postea Archidiaconus, eruditione ac sapientia in omni negotio celebris: fuit præterea Cisterciensis Monachus, & Abbas Fordensis Cœnobij, magnus suorum æstimatione, ac vniuersæ eorum societati quasi Antesignanus: fuit deinde Wigorniensis præsul, fuit & mortuo demum Richardo Cantuariorum Archiepiscopus, actorius Angliæ Primas. Cui muneri Baldwinus sollicitè inuigilans, egregium se pastorem exhibuit, dominicum semen, quantum patiebatur eius temporis iniquitas, vbique locorum spargens. Richardus Anglorum rex, acceptis tunc regni insignijs, summo studio classem, ac omnia ad Hierosolymitanum bellum gerendum necessaria parauit. Secutus est illic regem in Syriam, & Palestinam vsque Baldwinus, vt esset in tam Sancto (vt ipse putabat) itinere laborum, dolorum, ac periculorum particeps. Præfuit Cantuariensi Ecclesiæ sex 6, annis, & Richardum regem in Syriam secutus, anno Salutis nostræ 1190. Tyri vitam finiuit, vbi & sepultus est.

Baldwine a Deuonshire man borne in Excester of mean parentage, was a very eloquent man, an exact Philosopher, and in those dayes very excellent in all kind of studies. He was first of all a Schoolmaster; afterwards he became an Archdeacon, very famous for his learning & wisdom in all his doings. He was also a Cistercian Monke and Abbot of Foord Monasterie, and the chiefe of all those that were of his order: he grew after this to be bishop of Worcester, and at last after the death of Archb. Richard he was promoted & made Archbishop of Canterbury, and Primate of all England. In the discharge of which place he being very vigilant, shewed himselfe a worthy Pastor, sowing the seed of Gods word in euery place as farre forth as the iniquitie of that time permitted. In his time king Richard with all indour prepared a fleet and all things necessary for waging of warre against the Infidels at Ierusalem, taking with him the standers and ensignes of the kingdome. This Baldwin effected so folowed the king into Syria and Palestina, as one desirous to be partaker of his trauailes, paines, and perils in so holy a voyage. Hee was Archbishop of Canterburie almost six yeres: but hauing followed the king into Syria, in the yeere 1190, he died at Tyre, where he was also buried.

¶ An annotation concerning the trau ailes of the sayd Baldwine, taken out of Giraldus Cambrensis, in his Itinerarium Cambriae, lib. 2. Cap. 14. Fol. 229.

Inter primos Thomæ Becketi successor hic secundus, audita saluatoris & salutiferæ Cruels Iniuria nostris (proh dolor) diebus per Saladinum irrogata, cruce signatus, in eiusdem obsequijs, tam remotis finibus quam propinquis, prædicationis officium vitiliter assumpsit. Et postmodum iter accipiens, nauigioque surgens apud Marsiliam, transcurso tandem pelagi profundo, in portu Tyrensi in columis applicuit: & inde ad exercitum nostrum obsidentem pariter & obfessum Aconem transiit: ubi multos ex nostris inueniens, & fere cunctos principum defectum, in summa desolatione iam posuit, & desperatione, alios quidem longa expectatione fatigatos, alios fame & inopia grauius afflictos, quosdam vero aeris inclementia distemperatos, diem scilicet in terra sacra clausurus extremum, singulos pro posse vinculo charitatis amplectens, sumptibus & impensis, verbis, & vitæ meritis confirmauit.

This Baldwine being the second successor vnto Thomas Becker, after he had heard þ wrong which was done to our Sauour, and the signe of the Crosse by Saladine the Sultan of Egypt, taking vpon him the Lords Character, he couragiously perfourmed his office of preaching in the obedience thereof, as well in farre distant Countreys as at home. And afterwards taking his iourney and imbarcking himselfe at Marseils, hauing at length passed þ Leuant sea, he arriued safely in the Hauen of Tyrus, and from thence went ouer to Achon vnto our armie, besieging the Towne, and yet (as it were) besieged it selfe: where finding many of our Countreymen, and almost all men remaining in wonderfull pensiuenesse and despaire, though the withdrating of the Princes, some of them tyred with long expectation, others grieuouly afflicted with hunger and pouertie, and others distempered with the heate of the weather, being ready happily to end his dayes in the Holy land, embracing euery one according to his abilitie in the bond of loue, he apayed them at his coses and charges, and strengthened them with his wordes and good examples of life.

¶ A note drawen out of a very ancient booke remaining in the hands of the right worshipfull M. Thomas Tilney Esquire, touching Sir Frederike Tilney his ancestor, knighted at Acon in the Holy land for his valour, by K. Richard the first, as foloweth.

Retinuic iste liber prius Frederico Tilney de Boston, in comitatu Lincolnæ militi facto apud Acon in terra Iudææ anno regis Richardi primi tertio. Vir erat iste magnæ stature & potens in corpore: qui cum patribus suis dormit apud Tirrington iuxta villam sui nominis Tilney in Mersland. Cuius altitudo in salua custodia permanet ibidem vsque in hunc diem. Et post eius obitum sexdecim militibus eius nominis Tilney hæreditas illa successiue obuenit, quorum vnus post alium semper habitabat apud Boston prædictum: dum fratris senioris hæreditas hæredi generali deuoluta est, quæ nupta est Iohanni duci Norfolkæ, Eorum miles vltimus fuit Philippus Tilney nuper de Shelleigh in Comitatu Suffolciæ, pater & genitor Thomæ Tilney de Hadleigh in Comitatu prædicto Armigeri, cui modò attinet iste liber, Anno ætatis suæ 64. Anno Domini 1556.

¶ The same in English.

This booke pertained in times past vnto Sir Frederick Tilney of Boston in the Countie of Lincolne, who was knighted at Acon in the land of Iurie, in the third yeere of the reigne of king Richard the first. This knight was of a tall stature, and strong of body, who restreth interred with his forefathers at Tirrington, nere vnto a towne in Marshland called by his owne name Tilney. The iust height of this knight is there kept in safe custody untill this very day. Also, after this mans decease, the inheritance of his landes fell successiue vnto sixteene sundry knights called all by the name of Tilney, who dwelt alwayes, one after another, at the towne of Boston aforesayd, vntill such time as the possessions of the elder brother fell vnto an heire general, which was married vnto Iohn duke of Northfolke. The last knight of that name was sir Philip Tilney late of Shelleigh in the Countie of Suffolke, predecessor and father vnto Thomas Tilney of Hadleigh in the Countie aforesayd Esquire, vnto whom the sayd booke of late appertained. In the yeere of his age 64. and in the yeere of our Lord, 1556.

Richardus Canonicus ad Trinitatis sanum Londini Regularis, ab ipsa pueritia, bonarum artium literas impense amauit, excoluit, ac didicit. Qui ex continuo labore atque exercitatione longa, talis tandem euasit orator, & Poeta, quales ea ætas rarissimos nutrebat. Ob id Richardo Anglorum tunc Regi charus, longam cum eo peregrinationem in Palestinam ac Syriam, dum expugnaret Turcas, suscepit. Vnde in Angliam tum demum reuersus, omnia quæ præfens vidit in versibus, agris, ac militum castris, fidelis narratione, tam carmine quam prosa descripsit. Neque interim omisit eiusdem Regis mores, & formam, per omnia corporis lineamenta designare, addiditque præclaro suo operi hoc apulissimum pro titulo, nomen, scilicet, Itinerarium Regis Richardi. Claruit anno redemptionis nostræ 1200. sub Ioanne Anglorum Rege.

The same in English.

Richard surnamed Canonicus an obseruant Friar of Trinitie Church in London, was in great loue with the studies of good Artes, and tooke paines in them and learned them. And at last by his continuall endeavour and long exercise therein, hee grew to be such an Orator and Poet, as fewe were in that age liuing, by reason whereof hee grew in fauour with Richard then King of England, and undertooke that long voyage with him into Palestina and Syria agaynst the Turkes. From whence being returned againe into England, hee faithfully described both in Verse and Prose all such things as hee had seene in the Cities, fieldes and tentes of the fouldiours, where hee was present, and omitted not to note the behaviour, forme, and proportion of body in the foresayd king, giuing to his notable worke this most apt name for the title, The Iournall of King Richard. He flourished in the yeere of our Redemption 1200. vnder Iohn king of England.

¶ The trauailes of Gulielmus Peregrinus.

Gulielmus Peregrinus, Poeta quidem per eam ætatem excellens, genere Anglus florebat, literarum, vt multum erant, amator maximus, & qui bona tempora melioribus impenderat studijs. Hic cum accepisset, expeditionem in Saracenos per Regem Richardum parari, accinxit se ad iter illud, non tantum vt miles, sed etiam peregrinus. Vidit ea quæ in Mari Hispanico fiebant, vidit quæ in Syria & Palestina commissa fuerunt, in Sultanum Babylonie Regem, ac perfidos Saracenos. Omnia hæc scripsit, & viuus depinxit coloribus, ita vt quasi præ oculis, totum poneret negotium, idemque Argumentum cum Richardo Canonico non infeliciter, Heroico pertractauit carmine, opulq; iam absolutum Huberto Cantuariorum Archiepiscopo, & Stephano Turnhamo Capitano rerum bellicarum expertissimo dedicauit, addito hoc titulo, Odeporicon Richardi Regis. Multaque alia edidisse Poetam talem non dubito, sed num extent illa eius scripta, mihi non constat. Hoc tamen satis constat, eum fuisse in pretio, Anno à salutifero virginis partu 1200. sub Anglorum Rege Ioanne.

The same in English.

William the Pilgrime, a very excellent Poet in those dayes and an Englishman borne, was of great fame, being much giuen to good letters, (as many then were) and bestowed his good time in the best kinde of studies. Hee vnderstanding of the preparation of king Richard against the Saracens, prepared himselfe also for the same voyage, not onely as a Souldiour, but as a Pilgrime also. He sawe those things which happened in the Spanish Seas, and which were done in Syria and Palestina, against the Sulcan the king of Babylon, and the trecherous Saracens. All which things he wrote and expressed them as it were in liuely colours, as if they had bene still in doing before his eyes, and handled the same Argument in Heroicall verse which the foresnamed Richard Canonicus did. And hauing finished his worke he dedicated it to Hubert Archbishop of Canterburie, and to Stephen Turnham a most expert Captaine of the warres, giuing it this Title, The expedition of King Richard. And I doubt not but that so good a Poet as hee was published many other things, but whether they be extant yea or no, I know not: but this I know, that he was a man well accounted of, and flourished in the yeere after the birth of Christ 1200. vnder king Iohn.

The large contribution to the succour of the Holy land, made by king Iohn king of England, in the third yeere of his reigne 1201. Matth. Paris and Holmsh. pag. 164.

At the same time also the kings of France and England gaue large money towards the maintenance of the army which at this present went forth vnder the leading of the earle of Flanders and other, to warre against the enemies of the Christian faith at the instance of pope Innocent. There was further more granted vnto them the fortieth part of all the reuenues belonging vnto ecclesiasticall persons, towards the ayde of the Christians then being in the Holy land: and all such as wel of the nobility, as other of the weaker sort, which had taken vpon them the crosse, and secretly layed it downe were compelled of necessity to receiue it now againe.

The trauailes of Hubert Walter bishop of Sarisburie.

Hubertus Walterus Sarisburiensis Episcopus, vir probus, ingenioq; ac pietate clarus, inter præcipuos vnus eorum erat, qui post Richardum regem expugnandorum Saracenorum gratia in Syriam proficiscebantur. Cum ex Palestina rediens, audiret in Sicilia, quod idem Richardus in inimicorum manus incidisset, omisso itinere incepto, ad eum cursim diuertebat: Quem & ille statim in Angliam misit, vt illic regij Senatus auctoritate, indicto pro eius redemptione tributo pecuniam colligeret, quod & industrius fecit ac regem liberauit. Inde Cantuariorum Archiepiscopus factus, post eius mortem Ioanni illius fratri ac successori paria fidelitatis officia præstitit. Longa enim oratione toti Anglorum nationi persuasit, quod vir prouidus, præstans, fortis, genere nobilissimus, & imperio dignissimus esset: quo salutaris a populo fuit, atque in regem coronatus. Composuit quædam opuscula, & ex immenso animi dolore demum obijisse fertur, Anno salutis humanæ 1205. cum sedisset annos 11. Menses octo, & dies sex: quum vidisset ex intestinis odijs, omnia in transmarinis regionibus pefsum ire, regnante Ioanne.

The same in English.

Hubert Walter bishop of Sarisburie, a vertuous man, and famous for his good wit and piety, was one of the chiefest of them that followed king Richard into Syria going against the Saracens. As he returned from Palestina and came in his iourney into Sicilia, he there heard of the ill fortune of the king being fallen into his enemies handes, and thereupon leauing his iourney homewards, he went presently and in all haste to the place where the king was captiued, whom the king immediatly vpon his comming sent into England, that by the authoripie of the counsell, a tribute might be collected for his redemption: which this Hubert performed with great diligence, and deliuered the king. After this he was made Archbishop of Canterburie, and after the death of king Richard he shewed the like duties of fidelitie and trust to his brother Iohn that succeeded him. For by a long oration he perswaded the whole nation of the English men, that he was a very circumpect man, vertuous, valiant, bozne of noble parentage, and most woorthy of the crowne. Whereupon he was so receiued of all the people and crowned king. He wrote certaine books, and died at the last with very great grieve of minde, in the yeere 1205, hauing bene archbishop the space of 11 yeres 8 moneths and five dayes, by reason of the ciuil discords abroad, whereby all things went tople turuy, and in the reigne of king Iohn.

The trauailes of Robert Curson.

Robertus Curson ex nobili quodam Anglorum ortus genere, disciplinistum prophanis, tum sacris studiosus incubuit, idque (quantum ex coniecturis colligo) in celebratissima Oxonijs Academia. Præstantissimis illic institutoribus vsus, ex summa circa ingenuas artes industria, & assiduo literarum labore, famam sibi inter suos celeberrimam comparauit. Ampliora deinde meditarus Parisiorum Lutetiam, atque Romam ipsam perijt, illic Theologus Doctor, hic verò Cardinalis effectus. Vnde vterque Matthæus Parisius, ac Westmonasterius, hoc de ipso testimonium adferunt: hic libro 2. ille, 8. suorum Chronicorum. Anno Domini 1218 (inquiunt) in captione Daniaræ Egypti vrbis, sub Ioanne Brenno Hierosolymorum rege, fuit cum Pelagio Albanensi Magister Robertus de Curson, Anglus, Clericus celeberrimus, genere nobilis, ac Romanæ Ecclesiæ Cardinalis, &c. Roberth Curson descended of a noble family of England, vsed great diligence aswell in prophane as in diuine studies in the famous Vniuersity of Oxford (as I coniecture.) He had there the best schoolmasters that were to be gotten, and was most industrious in the arts and continual exercises of learning : by meanes whereof he grew to be of great renoune where he liued. Afterward thinking of greater matters he went to Paris, and thence to Rome it selfe, and at Paris he proceeded doctor of Diuinity, at Rome he was made cardinall : whereupon both Matthew Paris & Matthew of Westminster produce this testimony of him, the one in his second booke, the other in his eight booke of Chronicles. In the yere of our Lord (say they) 1218, at the taking of Damirra a city of Egypt vnder Iohn Brenne king of Ierusalem, pp. Robert Curson an English man, a most famous cleerke of noble parentage, and cardinall of the church of Rome, was there with Pelagius Albanensis, &c. Boston of Burie in Suffolke in his catalogue reporteth, that he wrote diuers books. He flourished in the yere aforesayd by the witnessses aforesayd. Henry the third sonne of king Iohn being then king of England : and by the further testimony of Boston, this Curson was legate into England in the dayes of Honorius the third, bishop of Rome.

In the yere 1218, Ranulph earle of Chester was sent into the Holy land by king Henry the third with a goodly company of souldiers and men of warre, to ayde the Chyistians there against the Infidels, which at the same time had besieged the city of Damirra in Egypt. In which enterpryse the valiancy of the same earle after his comming thither was to his great praise most apparant. There went with him in that iourney Saer de Quincy earle of Winchester, William de Albanie earle of Arundel, besides diuers barons, as the lord Robert firz Walter, Iohn constable of Chester, William de Harecourt, and Oliuer firz Roy sonne to the king of England, and diuers others.

Ranulphus Glanuille Cestræ Comes, vir nobilissimi generis, & vtroque iure eruditus, in albo illustrium virorum à me merito ponendus venit. Ita probè omnes adolescentiæ suæ annos legibus tum humanis tum diuinis consecrauit, vt non prius in hominem per ætatem euaserit, quàm nomen decusque ab insigni eruditione sibi comparauerit. Cum profecti essent Francorum Heroes Prolemaidem, inito cum Ioanne Brenno Hierosolymorum rege concilio, Damiatam Egypti vrbe obsidendam constituebant, anno salutis humanæ 1218. Misit illuc Henricus rex, ab Honorio 3 Rom. Pontifice rogatus, cum magna armorum manu Ranulphum, ad rem Christianam iuandam. Cuius virtus, Polydoro teste, in eo bello miris omnium laudibus celebrata fuit. Quo confecto negotio, Ranulphus in patriam reuersus, scripsit, De legibus Angliæ librum vnum, Fertur præterea, & alia quædam scripsisse, sed tempus edax rerum, ea nobis abstulit. Claruit anno à Seruatoris nostri natiuitate 1230 confectus senio, dum Henricus tertius sub Antichristi tyrannide in Anglia regnaret.

Ranulph Glanuille earle of Chester, a man of a very noble house, and learned in both the Lawes, deserues of duetie to be here placed by me in the catalogue of woorthy and notable men. He applied so well all the yeres of his youth to the study of humane and diuine Lawes, that he came not so soone to the age of a man, as he had purchased to himselfe by reason of his singular gular learning, renowne and honour. When the noble men of France went to Prodomais, vpon the counsell of Iohn Brenne king of Ierusalem, they resolved to besiege Damara a city of Egypt, in the yere 1218. And then Henry the king vpon the motion of Honorius the third, bishop of Rome, sent thither this earle Ranulph with a great power of armed souldiers, to further the enterprise of the Christians: whose valure in that warre (by the testimonie of Polidor Virgil) was marueilously commended of all men. After the end of which businesse, he being returned into his countrey, wrote a booke of the lawes of England. It is also repoied that he wrote other books, but time the destroyer of many memoizials, hath taken them from vs. He flourished in the yere after the natiuitie of Christ 1230, being very aged, and in the reigne of R. Henry the third.

The voyage of Petrus de Rupibus bishop of Winchester, to Ierusalem

IN the yere of grace 1231, and in the moneth of Iuly, Peter bishop of Winchester hauing spent almost fife whole yeres in fulfilling his vow of pilgrimage in the Holy land with great pompe, returned into England, about the Kalends of August, and coming into Winchester was receiued with solenne procession into his cathedrall church.

The honourable and prosperous voyage of Richard earle of Cornwall, brother to king Henry the third, accompanied with William Longespee earle of Sarisburie, and many other noble men into Syria.

IN the 24 yere of king Henry the third, Richard earle of Cornwall the kings brother, with a nauy of ships sailed into Syria, where in the warres against the Saracens he greatly advanced the part of the Christians. There went ouer with him the earle of Sarisburie, William Longespee, and William Bassett, Iohn Beauchampe, Geoffrey de Lucie, Iohn Neucl, Geoffrey Beauchampe, Peter de Brense, and William Furniuall.

Simon Montfort earle of Leicester went ouer also the same time: but whereas the earle of Cornwall tooke the seat Marseils, the earle of Leicester passed thorow Italy, and tooke shipping at Brindize in Apulia: and with him went these persons of name, Thomas de Furniuall with his brother Gerard de Furniuall, Hugh Wake, Almerike de S. Aumond, Wiscard Ledet, PUNCHARD de Dewin, and William de Dewin that were brethren, Gerard Pefmes, Fouke de Baugie, and Peter de Chauntenay.

Shortly after also Iohn earle of Albemarle, William Fortis, and Peter de Mallow a Poictouin, men for their valiancy greatly renowned, went thither, leauing with them a great number of Christian souldiers, Matth. Paris. Matth. West. Holensh. pag. 225. col. 2.

The coming of the Emperour of Constantinople called Baldwin

in the yere 1248, and in the 32 yere of the reigne of Henry the third, king of England.

LEwis the French king being recovered of his sicknesse which he fell into, in the yere 1234, vowed thereupon for a free will sacrifice to God, that he (if the Councell of his realme would suffer him) would in his owne person visit the Holy land: which matter was opened and debated in the Parliament of France held in the yere 1247. Where at length it was concluded, that the king according to his vow should take his iourney into Asia, and the time thereof was also also prefixed, which should be after the feast of S. Iohn Baptiste the next yeece ensuing.

At which time William Longespee a worthy warrior, with the bishop of Worcester and certaine other great men in the Realm of England (moued with the example of the Frenchmen) prepared themselves likewise to the same iourney.

It fell out in this enterprize, that about the beginning of October, the French king assaulted and tooke Damiera, being the principall fort or hold of the Saracens in all Egypt, Anno 1249, and hauing fortified the Citie with an able garrison left with the Duke of Burgundie, he remooued his tents from thence to goe Eastward. In whose armie followed William Longespee, accompanied with a piked number of English warriors retaining vnto him. But such was the disdain of the Frenchmen against this William Longespee and the Englishmen that they could not abide them, but flouted them after an opprobrious maner with English tailes, inasmuch that the French king himselfe had much adoe to keepe peace betwene them.

So fort won by
men.

The originall cause of this grudge betwene them began thus. There was not farre from Alexandria in Egypt a strong fort or castle replenished with great Ladies and rich treasure of the Saracens: which hold it chanced the sayd William Longespee with his company of English soldiers to get, more by politike dexterity then by open force of armes, wherewith he & his retinue were greatly enriched. When the Frenchmen had knowledge hereof (they not being made priue hereto) began to conceiue an heart burning against the English souldiers, & could not speake well of them after that.

So rich bootie also gotten by
men.

It hapned againe not long after, that the sayd William had intelligence of a company of rich merchants among the Saracens going to a certaine Faire about the parts of Alexandria, hauing their camels, asses and mules, richly laden with silkes, precious iewels, spices, gold, & silver, with cart loades of other wares, beside victuall and other furniture, whereof the souldiers then stood in great need: he hauing secret knowledge hereof, gathered all the power of Englishmen vnto him that he could, and so by night falling vpon the merchants, some he slew with their guides and conducters, some hee tooke, some hee put to flight: the carts with the diuers, and with the oxen, camels, asses and mules, with the whole cariage and victuals hee tooke & brought with him, looting in all the skirmish but one souldier, and eight of his seruitors: of whom notwithstanding some he brought home wounded to be cured.

This being knownen in the Campe, forth came the Frenchmen which all this while loytered in their pavillions, and meeting this cariage by the way, tooke all the foresayd praie whole to themselves, rating the sayd William and the Englishmen for aduenturing and issuing out of the Campe without leaue or knowledge of their Generall, contrary to the discipline of warre. William said againe he had done nothing but he would answere to it, whose purpose was to haue the spoyle deuided to the behoofe of the whole armie.

Will. Longespee
multy foils keth the French king.

When this would not serue, hee being sore grieved in his minde so cowardly to be spoiled of that which he so aduenturously had traualled for, went to the King to complaine: But when no reason nor complaint would serue by reason of the proude Earle of Artoys the Kings brother, which vpon spight and disdain stood agaynst him, he bidding the King farewell sayd hee would serue him no longer: and so William de Longespee with the rest of his company breaking from the French hoste went to Achon. Upon whose departure the earle of Artoys sayd, Now is the army of French men well rid of these tailed people, which words spoken in great despight were ill taken of many good men that heard them.

But not long after, when the keeper of Cayro & Babylonia, bearing a good mind to the Christian religion, and being offended also with the Soldan, promised to deliuer the same to the French king, instructing him what course was best for him to take to accomplish it, the king hereupon in all haste sent for William Longespee, promising him a full redresse of all his iniuries before received: who at the kings request came to him againe, and so ioyned with the French power.

After this, it happened that the French king passing with his armie towards Cayro aforesayd, came to the great riuer Nilus, on the further part whereof the Soldan had pitched himselfe to withstand his coming ouer: there was at this time a Saracen lately conuerted to Christ, seruing the earle Robert the French kings brother, who told him of the absence of the Soldan from his tents, and of a shallow foord in the riuer where they might easily passe ouer. Whereupon the sayd earle Robert & the Master of the Temple with a great power, esteemed to the third part of the army issued ouer the riuer, after whom followed W. Longespee with his band of English souldiers. These being ioyned together on the other side of the water, encountered the same day with the Saracens remaining in the tents & put them to the worst. Which victorie being gotten, the French earle surprised with pride and triumph, as though hee had conquered the whole earth, would would needs forwarde, diuining himselfe from the maine hoste, thinking to winne the spurs alone. To whom certaine sage men of the Temple, giuing him contrary counsell, aduised him not to do so, but rather to returne and take their whole company with them, and so should they be moze sure against all deceits and dangers, which might be layd priuily for them. The manner of that people (they sayd) they better knew, and had moze experience thereof then he: alledging mozeouer their wearied bodies, their tired horses, their furnished souldiers, and the insufficiency also of their number, which was not able to withstand the multitude of the enemies, especially at this present hunt, in which the aduersaries did well see the whole state of their dominion now to consist either in winning all or losing all.

Which when the proud earle did heare, being inflated with no lesse arrogancy then ignorance, with opprobrious taunts reuiled them, calling them cowardly bastards, & betrayers of the whole countrey, obiecting vnto them the common report of many, which sayd, that the land of the holy crosse might soone be wooon to Christendome, were it not for rebellious Templaries, with the Hospitallaries, and their followers.

To these conumelious rebukes, when the master of the Temple answered againe for him and his fellowes, bidding him display his ensigne when he would, and where he durst, they were as ready to follow him, as he to goe before them. Then began William de Longespe the worthy knight to speake, desiring the earle to giue eare to those men of experience, who had better knowledge of those countreyes and people then had he, commending also their counsell to be discreet and wholesome; and so turning to the master of the Temple, began with gentle wordes to mitigate him likewise. The knight had not halfe ended his talke, when the Earle taking his wordes out of his mouth, began to fume and sweare, crying out of those cowardly Englishmen with tailes: What a pure armie (sayde he) should we haue here, if these tailes and tailed people were purged from it, with other like wordes of villany, and much dishaue: wherunto the English knight answering againe, well, Earle Robert (said he) wheresoeuer you dare set your foote, my step shall go as farre as yours, and (as I beleue) we goe this day where you shall not dare to come neere the taile of my horse, as in deede in the euent it prooued true: for Earle Robert would needes set forward, weening to get all the glory to himselfe before the coming of the hoste, and first inuaded a litle village or castle, which was not farre off, called Mansor. The countrey Boozes and Pagans in the villages, seeing the Christians comming, ranne out with such a maine cry and shout, that it came to the Soldans hearing, who was neerer then our men did thinke. In the meane time, the Christians inuading and entering into the munition incircumspectly, were pelted and passed with stones by them which stood aboue, wherby a great number of our men were lost, and the armie soze maymed, and almost in despaire.

William Long-spe to Earle
Robert.

Then immediately vpon the same, commeth the Soldan with all his maine powder, which seeing the Christian armie to be deuided, and the brother separated from the brother, had that which he long wished for, and so inclosing them round about, that none should escape, had with them a cruell fight.

Then the earle began to repent him of his heady rashnes, but it was too late, who then seeing William the English knight doughtily fighting in the chiefe hunt of the enemies, cried vnto him most cowardly to flie, seeing God (saith he) doth fight against vs: To whom the Knight answering againe, God forbid (sayth he) that my fathers sonne should runne away from the face of a Saracene. The Earle then turning his horse, fled away, thinking to auoid by the swiftnes of his horse, and so taking the riuier Thafis, oppressed with harnesse, was there sunken and drowned.

The cowardly flight of Earle
Robert.

Thus the Earle being gone, the Frenchmen began to dispaire and scatter. Then William de Longespe hearing all the force of the enemies, stoode against them as long as he could, wounding and slaying many a Saracen, till at length his horse being killed, and his legges maymed, he could no longer stande, who yet notwithstanding as he was downe, mangled their feete and legges, and did the Saracens much sorrow, till at last after many blowes and wounds, being stoned of the Saracens, he peeld his life. And after the death of him, the Saracens setting vpon the residue of the armie, whom they had compassed on enery side, deuoured and destroyed them all, insomuch that scarce one man remained aliue, sauing two Templaries, one Hospitaller, and one poore rascaill souldier, which brought tidings, hereof to the King.

The valiant ende of William Longespe.

And thus by the imprudent and foolish hardines of that French Earle, the Frenchmen were discomfited, and that valiant English Knight ouermatched, to the griefe of all Christian people, the glory of the Saracens, and the bitter destruction and ruine of the whole French armie, as afterwards it appeared.

¶ The Voyage of Prince Edward the sonne of king Henry the third into Asia, in the yeere 1270.

About the yeere of our Lord 1267, Octobonus the Popes Legate being in England, prince Edward the sonne of king Henry, and diuers other noble men of England tooke vpon them the crosse vpon S. Iohn Baptists day, by the sayd Legates hands at Northampton, to the reliefe of the Holy land, and the subuersion of the enemies of the crosse of Christ. For which purpose, and for the better furnishing of the prince towards the iourney, there was granted him a subside throughout all the realme, and in the moneth of May, in the yeere of our Lord 1270. he began to set forward.

At Michaelmas following he with his company came to Eguemortes, which is from Marsilia eight leagues Westward, and there taking ship againe (hauing a mery and prosperous wind) within ten dayes arriued at Tunez, where he was with great ioy welcommed, and entertained of the Christian princes that there were to this purpose assembled, as of Philip the French King, whose father Lodouicus died a litle before, of Carolus the king of Sicilia, and the two kings of Nauarre and Arragon, and as this lord Edward came thither for his father the king of England, thither came also Henry the sonne of the king of Almaine for his father, who at his retorne from the voyage was slaine in a chappell at Viterbium.

When prince Edward demanded of these kings and princes what was to be done, they answered him againe, and sayd, the prince of this citie and the prouince adoyning to the same hath bene accustomed to pay tribute vnto the king of Sicily euery yeere: and now for that the same hath bene for the space of seuen yeeres vnpaid and moze, therefore we thought good to make inuasion vpon him. But the king knowing the same tribute to be but iustly demaunded, hath now according to our owne desire satisfied for the time past, and also paid his tribute before hand.

Then sayd he, My Lordes, what is this to the purpose? are we not here all assembled, & haue taken vpon vs the Lordes Character to fight against the infidels & enemies of Christ? What meane you then to conclude a peace with them? God forbid we should do so, for now the land is plaine and hard, so that we may approach to y^e holy city Ierusalem. Then said they, now haue we made a league with them, neither is it lawful for vs to breake the same. But let vs retorne againe to Sicilia, and when the winter is past we may well take shipping to Acta. But this counsell nothing at all liked him, neither did he see wth himselfe wel pleased there with: but after hee had made them a princely banquet, he went into his closet or priuy chamber from amongst them, neither would be partaker of any of that wicked money which they had taken. They notwithstanding continuing their purpose, at the next mery wind tooke shipping, and for want of ships left 200. of their men a shore, crying out, and pitiously lamenting for the peril and hazard of death that they were in: wherewith prince Edward being somewhat moued to compassion, came backe againe to the land, and receiued and stowed them in his owne ships, being the last that went aboard.

Within seuen dayes after, they arriued in the kingdom of Sicilia, ouer agaynst the Citie Trapes, calling their ankers a league from thence within the sea, for that their shippes were of great burden, and thoroughly fraught: and from the hauens of the citie they sent out barges and boates to receiue and bring such of the Nobilitie to land as would, but their horses for the most part, and all their armour they kept still within boord.

At length towards the euening the sea began to be rough, & increased to a great tempest and a nightie: insomuch that their ships were beaten one against anothers sides, and drowned there was of them at that tempest lying at anker moze then 120. with all their armour and munition, with innumerable Coules besides, and that wicked money also which they had taken before, likewise perished, and was lost.

But the tempest hurt not so much as one ship of prince Edwards, who had in number 13. nor yet had one man lost thereby, for that (as it may be presupposed) he consented not to the wicked counsell of the rest.

When in the morning the princes and kings came to the sea side, and saw all their ships drowned, and saw their men and horses in great number cast vpon the land drowned, they had full heauie hearts, as well they might, for of all their ships and mariners, which were in number 1500. besides the common souldiers, there was no moze saued then the mariners of one onely ship, and they in this wise.

There was in that ship a good & wise Patrone, a Countesse or an Eccles wife, who perceiuing the tempest to grow, & fearing her selfe, called to her the M^o. of the ship, & asked him whether in attempting to the shoate it were not possible to saue the selues: he answered, that to saue the ship it was was impossible: howbeit the men that were therein by Gods helpe he doubted not. Then layd the countesse, for the ship force no whit, saue the scales therein, and haue to thee double the value of the shippe: who immediately hoisting the sailes with all force, ran the shippe aground so nere the shore as was possible, so that with the vehemency of the weather & force he came withall, he brast the ship and saued all that was within the same, as he had shewed, and sayd before.

Then the kings and princes (altering their purpose after this so great a shipwracke) returned home againe euery one vnto their owne lands: onely Edward the sonne of the king of England, remained behinde with his men and ships, which the Lord had saued and preserued.

Then prince Edward renouating his purpose, tooke shipping againe, and within fiftene daies after Easter arriued he at Acra, and went aland, taking with him a thousand of the best souldiers and most expert, and taried there a whole moneth, refreshing both his men and horses, and that in this space he might learne and know the secrets of the land. After this he tooke with him five or seuen thousand souldiers, and marched forward twenty miles from Acra, and tooke Nazareth, and those that he found there he slew, and afterward returned againe to Acra. But their enemies following after them, thinking to haue set vpon them at some streit or other aduantage, were espied by the prince, and returning againe vpon them gaue a charge, and slew many of them, and the rest they put to flight.

After this, about Midsummer, when the prince had vnderstanding that the Saracens began to gather at Cakow which was forty miles from Acra, he marching thither, set vpon them very early in the morning, and slew of them more then a thousand, the rest he put to flight, and tooke rich spoiles, marching forward till they came to a castle named Castrum peregrinorum, situate vpon the sea coast, and taried there that night, and the next day they returned againe toward Acra.

In the meane season the king of Ierusalem sent vnto the noble men of Cyprus, desiring them to come with speed to ayd the Christians, but they would not come, saying they would keepe their owne land, and go no further. Then prince Edward sent vnto them, desiring that at his request they would come and toyne in ayd with him: who immediately thereupon came vnto him with great preparation & furniture for the warres, saying, that at his commandement they were bound to do no lesse, for that his predecessors were sometimes the gouernors of that their land, and that they ought alwayes to shew their fidelity to the kings of England.

Then the Christians being herewith animated, made a third voyage or road, and came as farre as the fort called Vincula sancti Petri, and to S. Georgius, and when they had slain certaine there, not finding any to make resistance against them, they retired againe from whence they came: when thus the fame of prince Edward grew amongst his enemies, and that they began to stand in doubt of him, they deuised among themselves how by some policy they might circumuent him, and betray him. Whereupon the prince and admirall of Ioppa sent vnto him, staining himselfe vnder great deceit willing to become a Christian, and that he would draw with him a great number besides, so that they might be honozably entertained and vsed of the Christians. This talke pleased the prince well, and perswaded him to finish the thing he had so well begun by writing againe, who also by the same messenger sent and wrote backe vnto him diuers times about the same matter, whereby no mistrust should spring.

This messenger (sayeth mine author) was one ex caute nutritis, one of the stony hearted, that neither feared God nor dreaded death.

The first time when this messenger came, and was of the princes seruants searched according to the maner and custome what weapon and armour he had about him, as also his purse, that not so much as a knife could be seene about him, he was had vp into the princes chamber, and after his reuerence done, he pulled out certaine letters, which he deliuered the prince from his lord, as he had done others before. This was about eight dayes after Whitsonide, vpon a Tuesday, somewhat before night, at which time the prince was layed vpon his bed bare headed, in his ierkin, for the great heat and intemperature of the weather.

When the prince had read the letters, it appeared by them, that vpon the Saturday next following, his lord would be there ready to accomplish all that he had written and promised. The report of these newes by the prince to the standers by, liked them well, who drew somewhat backe to consult thereof amongst themselves. In the meane time, the messenger kneeling, and making his obeisance to the prince (questioning further with him) put his hand to his belt, as though he would haue pulled out some secret letters, and suddenly he pulled out an innommed knife, thinking to haue stroken the prince into the belly therewith as he lay: but the prince lifting vp his hand to defend the blow, was stricken a great wound into the arme, and being about to fetch another stroke at him, the prince againe with his foot tooke him such a blow, that he feld him to the ground: with that the prince gate him by the hand, and with such violence wraisted the knife from him, that he hurt himselfe therewith on the forehead, and immediately thrust the same into the belly of the messenger and striker, and slew him.

The princes seruants being in the next chamber not farre off, hearing the bussing, came with great haste running in, and finding the messenger lying dead in the flooze, one of them tooke vp a stoole, and beat out his bzaines: wherat the pzince was wroth for that he stroke a dead man, and one that was killed before.

But the rumour of this accident, as it was strange, so it went soone throzout all the Court, and from thence among the common people, for which they were very heauy, and greatly discouraged. To him came also the Captaine of the Temple, and brought him a costly and pzecious drinke against poison, least the venime of the knife should penetrate the liuely blood, and in blaming wise sayd vnto him: did I not tell your Grace before of the deceit and subtilty of this people? For withstanding, sayd he, let your Grace take a good heart, you shall not die of this wound, my life for yours. But straight way the Surgions and Physicians were sent for, and the pzince was dyessed, and within few dayes after, the wound began to putrifie, and the flesh to looke dead and blacke: wherupon they that were about the pzince began to mutter among themselves, and were very sad and heauy.

Which thing he himselfe perceiuing, said vnto them: why mutter you thus among your selues: what see you in me, can I not be healed: tell me the truerth, be ye not afrayd. Whereupon one sayd vnto him, and it like your Grace you may be healed, we mistrust not, but yet it will be very painful for you to suffer. May suffering (sayd he againe) restore health: yea sayth the other, on paine of losing my head. Then sayd the pzince, I commit my selfe vnto you, doe with me what you thinke good.

Then sayd one of the Physicians, is there any of your Nobles in whom your Grace reposest special trust: to whom the pzince answered Yea, naming certeine of the Noble men that stood about him. Then sayd the Physician to the two, whom the pzince first named, the Lord Edmund, and the lord Iohn Voise, And doe you also faithfully loue your Lord and Pzince: Who answered both, Yea vndoubtedly. Then sayth he, take you away this gentlewoman and lady (meaning his wife) and let her not see her lord and husband, till suchtime as I will you thereunto. Whereupon they tooke her from the pzinces pzesence, crying out, and wylnging her hands. Then sayd they vnto her, Be you contented good Lady & Madame, it is better that one woman should weepe a little while, then that all the realme of England should weepe a great season.

Then on the morrow they cut out all the dead and inuenimed flesh out of the pzinces arme, and threw it from them, and sayd vnto him: how cheereth your Grace, we promise you within these fiftene dayes you shall shew your selfe abroad (if God permit) vpon your horsebacke, whole and well as euer you were. And according to the promise he made the pzince, it came to passe, to the no little comfort and admiration of all his subiects.

When the great Souldan heard hereof, and that the pzince was yet aliue, he could scarcely beleue the same, and sending vnto him three of his Nobles and Pzinces, excused himselfe by them, calling his god to witness that the same was done neither by him nor his consent. Which pzinces and messengers standing aloofe off from the kings sonne, worshipping him, fell flat vpon the ground: you (sayd the pzince) do reuerence me, but yet you loue me not. But they vnderstood him not, because he spake in English vnto them, speaking by an Interpreter: neuertheless he honourably entertained them, and sent them away in peace.

Thus when pzince Edward had bene eightene moneths in Acra, he tooke shipping about the Assumption of our Lady, as we call it, returning homeward, and after seuen weekes he arrived in Sicilia at Trapes, and from thence traualled thozow the middes of Apulia, till he came to Rome, where he was of the Pope honorably entertained.

From thence he came into France, whose fame and noble pzwesse was there much bzuted among the common people, and enuid of the Nobility, especially of the earle of Chalons, who thought to haue intrapped him and his company, as may appeare in the story: but Pzince Edward continued forth his iourney to Paris, and was there of the French king honourably entertained: and after certaine dayes he went thence into Gascoine, where he tarried till that he heard of the death of the king his father, at which time he came home, and was crowned king of England, in the yere of our Lord 1274.

Robert Turneham Franciscan, a notable professor of Diuinity, was with great dignity Prior of the Colledge of his Order in the famous Port towne of Linne, situate vpon the riter of Isis in Norfolke. Prince Edward surnamed the Long, the sonne of Henry the third, prepared his warlike voyage against the Saracens dwelling in Syria, in the yeere of our Lord, 1268. For the which expedition some earnest preacher was sought to stir vp the peoples minds in the cause of religion. And this Turneham seemed to the Prince most worthy to performe that office: so that he being appointed as it were a standerd bearer, went into Syria with the English army, and performed his duety with good commendation. He flourished in the yeere of Christ 1280, setting forth diuers works under the same king Edward the first of that name after the Conquest.

Anthony Beck bishop of Durisme was elected Patriarch of Hierusalem, and confirmed by Clement the fift bishop of Rome: in the 34 yeere of Edward the first, Lelandus.

Anthony Beck was bishop of Durisme in the time of the reigne of Edward the first of that name after the inuasion of William the great into England. This Anthony was elected patriarch of Ierusalem in the yeere of our Lord God 1305, and was confirmed by Clement the fift, pope of Rome. He was of greater magnificence then for the calling of a bishop. He founded also the castle of Acheland foure miles from Durisme, on the shore of a pretty riuer called Vnduglesme. He much beautified with new buildings Elcham mannoz being nere vnto Greenwich, and the castle Somaridune in the county of Lindley. And lastly, he built new out of the ground the palace of London, which now is in the possession of prince Edward. Insomuch, that at length, though his ouer great magnificence and power he procured to himselfe great enuy among the nobility, which he could not assuage during the rest of his life. But of this Anthony & of his writings we will speake moze at large in our booke intituled of the Britain bishops. This Anthony finished his life in the yeere of our Lord God 1310, and in the reigne of king Edward the second.

Hæc est tertia ciuitas melior quam Rex Persarum habet in toto regno suo: De illa dicunt Saraceni, quod in ea nullus Christianus ultra annum viuere vnquam potest, Ultra per multas dietas iui ad quandam ciuitatem dictam Comum quæ maxima ciuitas antiquitatis erat, cuius ambitus erat ferè L. miliaria, quæ magna damna intulit Romanis antiquis temporibus. In ea sunt palatia integra non habitata, tamen multis victualibus abundat. Ultra per multas terras transiens, perueni ad terram Iob nomine Hus quæ omnium victualium plenissima est, & pulcherrimè situata; iuxta eam sunt montes in quibus sunt pascua multa pro animalibus: Ibi manna in magna copia reperitur. Ibi habentur quatuor perdicces pro minori, quàm pro vno grosso: In ea sunt pulcherrimi senes, vbi homines nent & filant, & saminæ non: hæc terra correspondet Chaldaæ versus transmontana.

Indè iui in Chaldaam quæ est regnum magnum, & transiui iuxta turrim Babel: Hæc regio suam linguam propriam habet, & ibi sunt homines formosi, & scæminæ turpes: & homines illius regionis vadunt compti crinibus, & ornati, vt hîc mulieres, & portant super capita suâ fasciola aurea cum geminis, & margaritis; mulieres verò solum vnā vilem camisiā attingentem vsque ad genus, habentem manicas longas & largas, quæ vsque ad terram protenduntur: Et vadunt discalciatæ porrantes Serablans vsque ad terram, Triceas non portant, sed capilli earum circumquaque disperguntur: & alia multa & mirabilia sunt ibidem. Indè veni in Indiam quæ infra terram est, quam Tartari multum destruxerunt; & in ea vt plurimum homines tantum daëtilos comedunt, quarum xlij. libræ habentur pro minori quam pro vno grosso. Ultra transiui per multas dietas ad mare oceanum, & prima terra, ad quam applicui, vocatur Ormes, quæ est optimè murata, & Ormus.

 multa mercimonia & diuitiæ in ea sunt; in ea tantus calor est, quod virilia hominum exeunt corpus, & descendunt vsque ad mediam tibiæ: idè homines illius terræ volentes viuere, faciunt vñctionem, & vngunt illa, & sic vñcta in quibusdam sacculis ponunt circa se cingentes, & aliter morerentur: In hac terra homines vtuntur nauigio quæ vocatur lase, lutum sparto. Ego autem ascendi in vnum illorum in quo nullum ferrum potui reperire, & in viginti octo dietis perueni ad ciuitatem Thana, in qua pro fide Christi quatuor de fratribus nostris martyrizati sunt. Thana. Hæc terra est optimè situata, & in ea abundantia panis & vini, & aliorum victualium. Hæc terra antiquitus fuit valde magna, & fuit regis Pori, qui cum rege Alexandro prælium magnum commisit. Huius terræ populus Idolatrat, adorans ignem, serpentes, & arbores: Et istam terram regunt Saraceni, qui violenter eam acceperunt, & subiacerent imperio regis Daldili. Ibi sunt diuersa genera bestiarum, leones nigri in maxima quantitate: Sunt & ibi simiæ, gatimaymones, & nocturæ magnæ sicut hic habentur columbæ; ibi mures magni sunt, sicut sunt hic scepi, & idè canes capiunt ibi mures, quia murelegi non valent. Ad hæc, In illa terra quilibet homo habet ante domum suam vnum pedem fasciculorum, ita magnum sicut esset vna columna, & pes ille non deficcatur, dummodò adhibeatur sibi aqua. Multæ nonitæes sunt ibi, quas pulcherrimum esset audire.

Martyrium autem quatuor fratrum nostrorum in illa ciuitate Thana fuit per istum modum; dum prædicti fratres fuerant in Ormes, fecerunt pactum cum vna nauī, vt nauigarent vsque Poluinbrum, & violentè deportati sunt vsque Thanam vbi sunt 15. domus Christianorum, qui Nestoriani sunt & Schismatici, & cum illic essent, hospitati sunt in domo cuiusdam illorum; contigit dum ibi manerent litem oriri inter virum domus, & vxorem eius, quam serò vir fortiter verberauit, quæ suo Kadi, 1. Episcopo conquesta est; à qua interrogauit Kadi, vtrum hoc probari posset? quæ dixit, quòd sic; quia 4. Franchi, 1. viri religiosi erant in domo hoc videntes, ipsos interrogate, qui dicent vobis veritatem: Muliere autem sic dicente, Ecce vnus de Alexandria præfens rogauit Kadi vt mitteret pro eis, dicens eos esse homines maximæ scientiæ & scripturas benè scire, & idè dixit bonum esse cum illis de fide disputare: Qui misit pro illis, & adducti sunt isti quatuor, quorum nomina sunt frater de Tolentino de Marchia, frater Iacobus de Padua, frater Demetrius Laicus, Petrus de Senis. Dimisso autem fratre Petro, vt res suas custodiret, ad Kadi perrexerunt, qui cœpit cum illis de fide nostra disputare: dicens Christum tantum hominem esse & non Deum. E contra frater Thomas rationibus & exemplis Christum verum Deum & hominem esse euidenter ostendit, & in tantum confudit Kadi, & infideles qui cum eo tenuerunt, quòd non habuerunt quid rationabiliter contradicere: Tunc videns Kadi se sic confusum, incepit clamare sic; Et quid dicis de Machometo? Respondit frater Thomas: Si tibi probauimus Christum verum Deum & hominem esse, qui legem posuit inter homines, et Machometus è contrario venit, & legem contrariam docuit, si sapiens sis optimè scire poteris, quid de eo dicendum sit. Iterum Kadi & alij Saraceni clamabant, Et tu quid iterum de Machometo dicis? Tunc frater T. respondit: vos omnes videre potestis, quid dico de eo. Tum ex quo vultis quòd planè loquar de eo, dico, quòd Machometus vester filius perditionis est, & in inferno cum Diabolo patre suo. Et non solum ipse, sed omnes ibi erunt qui tenent legem hanc, quia ipsa tota pestifera est, & falsa, & contra Deum, & contra salutem animæ. Hoc audientes Saraceni, cœperunt clamare, moriatur, moriatur ille, qui sic contra Prophetam locutus est. Tunc acceperunt fratres & in sole vrente stare permisissent, vt ex calore solis adusti, dira morte interirent. Tantis enim est calor solis ibi, quòd si homo in eo per spaciū vnus missa persisteret, moreretur: fratres tamen illi sani & hilares à tertia vsque ad nonam laudantes & glorificantes dominum in ardore solis permanserunt, quod videntes Saraceni stupefacti ad fratres venerunt, & dixerunt, volumus ignem accendere copiosum, & in illum vos projicere, & si fides vestra sit vt dicitis, ignis non poterit vos comburere: si autem vos combusserit, patebit quòd fides vestra nulla sit. Responderunt fratres; parati sumus pro fide nostra ignem, carcerem, & vincula, & omnium tormentorum genera tolerare: verum tamen scire debetis, quòd si ignis potestatem habeat comburendi nos hoc non erit propter fidem nostram, sed propter peccata nostra: fides enim nostra perfectissima & verissima est, & non est alia in mundo in qua animæ hominum possunt saluæ fieri. Dum autem ordinaretur quòd fratres cōburerentur, rumor insonuit per totā ciuitatem, de qua omnes senes, & iuuenes, viri & mulieres, qui ire poterant, accurrerunt ad illud spectaculum intuendum, Fratres autem ducti fuerunt ad plateam ciuitatis, vbi accensus est ignis copiosus, in quem frater Thomas voluit se projicere, sed quidam Saracenus cepit eum per caputium, & retraxit, dicens;

Non vadas tu cum sis senex, quia carmen aliquod vel experimentum habere posses super te, quare te ignis non posset lædere, sed alium ire in ignem permittas. Tunc 4 Saraceni sumentes fratrem Iacobum, eum in ignem proijcere volebant; quibus ille, permittatis me, quia libenter pro fide mea ignem intrabo: Cui Saraceni non adquiescentes eum violentè in ignem proiecerunt: ignis autem ita accensus erat, quòd nullus eum videre poterat, vocem tamen eius audierunt, inuocantem semper nomen virginis gloriosæ; Igne autem totalitèr consumpto stetit frater Iacobus super prunas illæsus, & lætus, manibus in modum crucis eleuatis, in cælum respiciens, & Deum laudans & glorificans, qui sic declararet fidem suam: nihil autem in eo nec pannus, nec capillus læsus per ignem inuentus est; Quod videns populus vnanimiter conclamare cœpit, sancti sunt, sancti sunt, nefas est offendere eos, modò videmus quia fides eorum bona & sancta est. Tunc clamare cœpit Kadi: sanctus non est ille, quia combustus non est, quia tunica quam portat est de lana teræ Habraæ, & idcò nudus expolietur, & in ignem proijciatur, & videbitur si comburetur vel non. Tunc Saraceni pessimi ad præceptum Kadi ignem in duplo magis quàm prius accenderunt, & fratrem Iacobum nudantes, corpus suum abluerunt, & oleo abundantissimè vnxerunt, insuper & oleum maximum in struem lignorum ex quibus ignis fieret, fuderunt, & igne accenso fratrem in ipsum proiecerunt. Frater autem Thomas, & frater Demetrius extra populum in loco separato flexis genibus orantes cum lachrymis deuotioni se dederunt, Frater autem Iacobus iterum ignem exiuit illæsus sicut prius fecerat: quod videns omnis populus clamare cœpit, peccatum est, peccatum est, offendere eos, quia sancti sunt. Hoc autem tantum miraculum videns Melich, i. potestas ciuitatis, vocauit ad se fratrem Iacobum, & fecit eum ponere indumenta sua, & dixit, videte fratres, ire cum gratia Dei, quia nullum malum patiemini a nobis, modò benè videmus vos sanctos esse, & fidem vestram bonam ac veram esse; & ideo consulimus vobis, vt de ista terra exeatis, quàm citius poteritis, quia Kadi pro posse suo vobis nocere curabit, quia sic confuditis eum: Hora autem tunc erat quasi completorij, & dixerunt illi de populo, attoniti, admirati, & stupefacti, tot & tanta mirabilia vidimus ab istis hominibus, quòd nescimus quid tenere & obseruare debeamus. Melich verò fecit duci illos tres fratres vltra vnum paruum brachium maris in quendam Burgum modicum ab illa ciuitate distantem: ad quem etiam ille in cuius iam domo fuerant hospitati associauit eos, vbi in domo cuiusdam idolatri recepti sunt. Dùm hæc agerentur, Kadi iuit ad Melich, dicens quid facimus? Lex Machometi destructa est, veruntamen hoc scire debes, quod Machomet præcepit in suo Alcorano, quod si quis vnum Christianum interficeret, tantum mereretur, ac si in Mecha ad ipsum peregrinaretur. Est enim Alcoranus lex Saracenorum sicut Euangelium, Mecha verò est locus vbi iacet Machomet. Quem locum ita visitant Saraceni, sicut Christiani sepulchrum Christi. Tunc Melich respondet, vade & fac sicut vis: quo dicto statim Kadi accepit quatuor homines armatos vt irent, & illos fratres interficerent, quicum aquam transissent, facta est nox, & illo sero eos non inuenerunt, statim Melich omnes Christianos in ciuitate capi fecit, & incarcerationi, media autem nocte fratres surrexerunt dicere matutinum, quos illi Saraceni qui missi fuerant, inuenerunt, & extra burgum, sub quadam arbore adduxerunt, dixerunt eis. Sciatis fratres nos mandatum habere a Kadi & Melich interficere vos, quod tamen faciemus inuiti, quia vos estis boni homines & sancti, sed non audemus aliter facere; quia si iussa sua non perficeremus, & nos cum liberis nostris & vxoribus moreremur. Tunc fratres responderunt, vos qui huc venistis, & tale mandatum recepistis, vt per mortem temporalem vitam æternam adipiscamur, quod vobis iniunctum est perficite; quia pro amore domini nostri Iesu Christi, qui pro nobis crucifigi & mori dignatus est, & pro fide nostra, parati sumus omnia tormenta, & etiam mortem libenter sustinere. Christianus autem qui fratres conitabatur, multum cum illis quatuor armatis altercatus est dicens, quod si gladium haberet, vel eos à nece tam sanctorum hominum impediret, vel ipse cum eis interfectus esset. Tunc armati fecerunt fratres se exspoliare, & frater Thomas primus iunctis manibus in modum crucis genu flectens capitis abscissionem suscepit: Fratrem verò Iacobum vnus percussit in capite, & eum vsque ad oculos scidit, & alio ictu totum caput abscidit. Frater autem Demetrius primò percussus est cum gladio in pectore, & secundò caput suum abscissum est: Statim vt fratres suum martyrium compleuerunt, aer ita lucidus effectus est, quod omnes admirati sunt, & luna maximam claritatem ostendit. Statim quasi subito tanta tonitrua, & fulgura, & coruscationes, & obscuritas fiebat, quòd omnes mori crediderunt: Navis etiam illa quæ illos debuerat deportasse submersa est cum omnibus quæ in se habuit, ita quod nunquam de illa postea aliquid scitum est. Facto mane misit Kadi pro rebus fratrum prædictorum nostrorum, & tunc inuentus est frater Petrus de Senis quartus socius fratrum prædictorum, quem ad Kadi duxerunt: Cui Kadi, & alij Saraceni maxima promittentes persuaferunt quòd fidem suam renueret, & legem machometi confiteretur, & teneret. Frater autem Petrus de illis truffabat, eos multum deridendo, quem de mane vsque ad meridiem diuersis diuerſis pœnarum ac tormentorum generibus affligerunt ipſo ſemper conſtantiſſimè in fide, & in Dei laudibus perſiſtente, & fidem illorum Machometi deridente & deſtruente. Videntes autem Saraceni eum nō poſſe a ſuo propoſito euelli, eum ſuper quandam arborē ſuſpenderunt, in qua de nona vſq; ad noctem viuus & illæſus pependit: nocte verò ipſum de arbore ſumpſerunt, & videntes illum lætū, viuū, & illæſum per medium ſuum corpus diuiferunt, mane autē factō nihil de corpore eius inuentum eſt, vni tamen perſonæ fide dignæ reuelatum eſt, quod Deus corpus eius occultauerat reuelandū in certo tempore, quandò Deo placuerit Sanctorum corpora manifeſtare. Vt autem Deus oſtenderet animas ſuorum martyrum iam in cœlis conſiſtere, & congaudere cum Deo & Angelis & alijs Sanctis eius, die ſequenti poſt martyriū fratrum prædictorū Melich dormitioni ſe dedit, & ecce aparuerunt ſibi iſti fratres glorioſi, & ſicut Sol, lucidi, ſingulos enſes tenentes in manibus, & ſupra eum eos ſic vibrantes; quod vt ſi eum perſodere ac diuidere vellent: qui excitatus horribiliter exclamauit, ſic, quod totā familiā terruit: quæ ſibi accurrens quaſiuit, quid ſibi eſſet? quibus ille, Illi Raban Franchi quos interfici iuſſi, venerunt huc ad me cum enſibus, volentes me interficere. Et ſtatim Melich miſit pro Kadi, referens ſibi viſionē, & petens conſiliū, & conſolationem, quia timuit per eos finaliter interire. Tunc Kadi ſibi conſuluit, vt illis maximas eleemoſynas faceret, ſi de manibus interfectorū euadere veller. Tunc miſit pro Chriſtianis quos in carcere intrudi præceperat: A quibus cum ad eum veniſſent indulgentiam petijt pro ſacto ſuo, dicens ſe eſſe amodò ſociū eorū, & confratrem: Præcepit autem & legem ſtatuit, quod pro tempore ſuo, ſi quis aliquē Chriſtianū offenderet, ſtatim moreretur, & ſic omnes illæſos, & indemnes abire permiſit. Pro illis autē quatuor fratribus interfectis quatuor moſquas (.i.) Eccleſias ædificari fecit, quas per Sacerdotes Saracenorum inhabitari fecit. Audiens autem imperator Dodſi iſtos tres fratres talem ſententiam ſubiſſe, miſit pro Melich, vt vincſus ad eum duceretur, A quo cum adductus eſſet, quaſiuit imperator, quare ita crudeliter illos fratres iuſſerat interfici, reſpondit, quia ſubuertere volebant legem noſtram, & malum & blaſphemiam de propheta noſtro dicebant: & imperator ad eum; O crudeliſſime canis, cum videres quod Deus omnipotens bis ab igne eos liberauerit, quo modo auſus fuiſti illis mortem inferre tam crudelem. Et edicta ſententia, ipſum Melich cum tota ſua familia per medium ſcindi fecit, ſicut ipſe talem mortem fratri inſlixerat. Kadi verò audiens, de terra illa, & etiam de imperatoris illius dominio clām fugit, & ſic euasit.

Eſt autem conſuetudo in terra illa, quod corpora mortua non traduntur ſepulturæ, ſed in campis dimittuntur, & ex calore Solis citò reſoluuntur, & ſic conſumuntur: Corpora autem triū fratrum prædictorum per 14. dies illic in ſeruore Solis iacuerunt, & ita recentia & redolentia inuenta fuerunt ſicut illa die quandò martirizati erant: quod videntes Chriſtiani qui in illa terra habitabant, prædicta corpora ceperunt, & honorificè ſepelierunt. Ego autem Odoricus audiens factum & martyriū illorū fratrum, iui illuc, & corpora eorū effodi, & oſſa omnia mecum accepi, & in pulchris towallijs colligauī, & in Indiam ſuperiorem ad vnū locū fratrum noſtrorū ea deportaui, habens mecum ſociū, & vnū famulū. Cum autē eſſemus in via, hoſpitabamus in domo cuiuſdā hoſpitarij, & ipſa oſſa capiti meo ſuppoſui, & dormiui: Et diū dormireni domus illa à Saracenis ſubitò accendebatur, vt me cum domo comburerent. Domo autē ſic accenſa, ſocius meus & famulus de domo exierunt, & me ſolum cum oſſibus dimiſerunt, qui videns ſignem ſupra me, oſſa accepi & cum illis in angulos domus recollegi. Tres autem anguli domus ſtatim cōbuſti fuerunt, angulo in quo ſteti cū oſſibus ſaluo remanente: Supra me autē ignis ſe renuit in modū aëris lucidi, nec deſcendit quamdiu ibi perſiſtebam; quā citò autē cum oſſibus exiui, ſtatim tota pars illa ſicut aliæ priores igne conſumpſa eſt, & multa alia loca circumadiacentia cōbuſta ſunt. Aliud miraculū contigit, me cum oſſibus per mare proficiente ad ciuitatē Polumbrū vbi piper naſcitur abūdantèr, quia nobis ventus totaliter deſecit: quapropter venerunt Idolatræ adorantes Deos ſuos pro vento proſpero, quē tamen nō obtinuerunt: Tunc Saraceni ſuas inuocationes, & adorationes laborioſe fecerūt, ſed nihil profecerūt: Et præceptū eſt mihi & ſocio meo vt orationes ſunderemus Deo noſtro: Et dixit rector nauis in Armenico mihi, quod alij nō intelligerent: quod niſi poſſemus ventū proſperū à Deo noſtro impetrare, nos cum oſſibus in mare projicerēt: Tunc ego & ſocius fecimus orationes, vouentes multas miſſas de beara virgine celebrare, ſic quod ventū placeret ſibi nobis impetrare. Cum autē tēpus tranſiret, & ventus non veniret, accepi vnū de oſſibus, & dedi famulo, vt ad caput nauis iret, & clām in mare projiceret: quo proiecſto ſtatim affuit ventus proſper qui nunquā nobis deſecit, vſquequod peruenimus ad portū, meritis iſtorū martyrum cum ſalute. Deinde aſcendimus aliā nauē vt in Indiam ſuperiorem iremus: Et venimus ad quandā ciuitatem vocatā Carchan in qua ſunt duo loca fratrum noſtrorum, & ibi reponere iſtas reliquias volebamus. In nauī autem illa erant plūs 700. mercatores & alij & alij: Nunc illi Idolatræ istam consuetudinem habebant, quòd semper antequàm ad portum applicuerint, totam nauem perquirent, si isti aliqua ossa mortuorum animalium inuenirent, qui reperta statim in mare proijcerent, & per hoc bonum portum attingere, & mortis periculù euadere crederent. Cùm autem frequenter perquirent, & illa ossa frequenter tangerent, semper oculi delusi fuerunt, sic quòd illa non perpenderunt; & sic ad locum fratrum deportauimus cum omni reuerentia, vbi in pace requiescunt; vbi etià inter idolatras Deus continuè miracula operatur. Cum enim aliquo morbo grauantur, in terra illa vbi fratres passi sunt ipsi vadunt, & de terra vbi corpora sanguinolenta iacuerunt sumunt quam ablunt, & ablutionem bibunt, & sic ab infirmitatibus suis liberantur.

Malabar.

VT autem videatur quo modo habetur piper, sciendum quòd in quodam imperio ad quod applicui, nomine Minibar, nascitur, & in nulla parte mundi tantum, quantum ibi; Nemus enim in quo nascitur, continet octodecim dietas, & in ipso nemore sunt duæ ciuitates vna nomine Flandrina, alia nomine Cyncilim: In Flandrina habitant Iudei aliqui & aliqui Christiani, inter quos est bellum frequenter, sed Christiani vincunt Iudæos semper: In isto nemore habetur piper per istum modum. Nam primò nascitur in folijs olerum, quæ iuxta magnas arbores plantantur, sicut nos ponimus vites; & producunt fructum, sicut racemi nostri producunt vvas; sed quandò maturescunt sunt viridis coloris, & sic vindemiantur vt inter nos vindemiantur vva, & ponuntur grana ad solem vt desiccantur: quæ desiccata reponuntur in vasis terreis, & sic fit piper, & custoditur. In isto autè nemore sunt flumina multa in quibus sunt Crocodili multi, & multi alij serpentes sunt in illo nemore, quos homines per stupam & paleas comburunt, & sic ad colligendum piper securè accedunt. A capite illius nemoris versus meridiem est ciuitas Polumbrum in qua maxima mercimonia cuiuscunque generis reperiuntur. Omnes autem de terra illa bouem viuum sicut Deum suum adorant, quem 6. annis faciunt laborare, & in septimo faciunt ipsum quiescere ab omni opere; ponentes ipsum in loco solemni, & communi, & dicentes ipsum esse animal sanctum. Hunc autem ritum obseruant: quolibet mane accipiunt duas pelues de auro, vel de argento, & vnam submittunt vrinæ bouis, & aliam stercorei, de vrina lauant sibi faciem & oculos, & omnes 5. sensus: de stercore verò ponunt in vtròque oculo, postea liniunt summitates genarum, & tertio pectus, & ex tunc dicunt se sanctificatos pro toto die illo: & sicut facit populus, ita etiam facit rex & regina. Isti etiam aliud idolum mortuum adorant, quod in medietate vna superior est homo, & in alia est bos, & illud idolum dat eis responsa, & aliquotiens pro stipendio petit sanguinè, 40. virginum: & idèd homines illius regionis ita vouent filias suas & filios, sicut Christiani aliqui alicui religioni, vel sancto in cælis. Et per istum modum immolant filios & filias, & multi homines per istum ritum moriuntur ante idolum illud, & multa alia abominabilia facit populus iste bestialis, & multa mirabilia vidi inter eos quæ nolui hic inferere. Aliam consuetudinem vilissimam habet gens illa: Nam quādo homo moritur, comburunt ipsum mortuum, & si vxorè habet, ipsam comburunt viuam, quia dicunt quòd ipsa ibi in aratura, & cultura cum viro suo in alio mundo: Si autem vxor illa habeat liberos ex viro suo, potest manere cum eis si velit sine verecundia & improprio, communiter tamen omnes præeligunt comburi cum marito; si autem vxor præmoriatur viro, lex illa non obligat virum, sed potest aliā vxorem ducere. Aliam consuetudinem habet gens illa, quòd scæminæ ibibunt vinum, & homines non: scæminæ etià faciunt sibi radi cilia, & supercilia, & barbam, & homines non: & sic de multis alijs viliibus contra naturam sexus eorum. Ab isto regno iui decem dietas ad aliud regnum dictum Mobar, quod habet in se multas ciuitates, & in illo requiescit in vna ecclesia corpus beati Thomæ Apostoli, & est ecclesia illa plena idolis, & in circuitu ecclesiæ simul Canonici viuunt in 15. domibus Nestoriani, id est, mali Christi ani, & schismatici.

In hoc regno est vnum Idolum mirabile, quod omnes Indi reuerentur: & est statura hominis ita magni, sicut noster Christophorus depictus, & est totum de auro purissimo & splendidissimo, & circa collum habet vnam chordulam sericam cum lapidibus pretiosis, quorū aliquis valet plus quàm vnum regnum: Domus idoli est tota de auro, scilicet in tecto, & pauimento, & superficie parietum interius & exterius. Ad illud idolum peregrinantur Indi, sicut nos ad S. Petrum: Alij veniunt cum chorda ad collum, alij cum manibus retrò ligatis, alij cum cultello in brachio vel tibia defixo, & si post peregrinationē fiat brachium marcidum, illum reputant sanctum, & benè cum Deo suo. Iuxta ecclesiam illius idoli est lacus vnus manufactus, & manifestus, in quem peregrini proijciunt aurum & argentum, & lapides preciosos in honorem Idoli, & ad ædificationem ecclesiæ suæ, & idèd quādo aliquid debet ornari, vel reparari, vadunt homines nes ad hunc lacum, & projecta extrahunt: die autem annua contructionis illius idoli, rex & regina cum toto populo & omnibus peregrinis accedunt, & ponunt illud idolum in vno curru pretiosissimo ipsum de ecclesia educentes cum Canticis, & omni genere musicorum, & mulæ virgines antecedunt ipsum binæ & binæ; processionaliter combinatæ modulantes: Peregrini etiam multi ponunt se sub curru, vt transeat Deus supra eos; & omnes super quos curru transierit, comminuit, & per medium scindit, & interficit, & per hoc reputant se mori pro deo suo sanctè & securè: & in omni anno hoc modo moriuntur in via sub idolo plusquam 500 homines, quorum corpora comburuntur, & cineres sicut reliquæ custodiuntur, quia sic pro Deo suo moriuntur. Alium ritum habent, quando aliquis homo offert se mori pro deo suo, conueniunt omnes amici eius & parentes cum histrionibus multis, facientes sibi festum magnum, & post festum appendunt collo eius 5 cultellos acutissimos ducentes eum ante idolum, quod cum peruenierit, sumit vnum ex cultellis, & clamat alta voce, pro deo meo incido mihi de carne mea, & frustum incisum projicit in faciem idoli: vltima verò incisione per quam seipsum interficit, dicit, me mori pro deo meo permitto, quo mortuo corpus eius comburitur, & sanctum fore ab omnibus creditur. Rex illius regionis est ditissimus in auro & argento, & gemmis pretiosis; ibi etiam sunt margaritæ pulchriores de mundo. Indè transiens iui per mare oceanum versus meridiem per 50 dietas ad unam terram vocatam Laminori, in qua ex immensitate caloris, tam viri quam fœminæ omnes incedunt nudi in toto corpore: Qui videntes me vestitum, deridebant me, dicentes Deum, Adam & Euam fecisse nudos. In illa regione omnes mulieres sunt communes, ita quod nullus potest dicere, hæc est vxor mea, & cum mulier aliqua parit filium vel filiam dat cui vult de hijs qui concubuerunt: Tota etiam terra illius regionis habetur in comuni, ita quod non meum & tuum in diuisione terrarum, domos tamen habent speciales: Carnes humane quando homo est pinguis ita benè comeduntur, sicut inter nos bouinæ: & licet gens sit pestifera, tamen terra optima est, & abundat in omnibus bonis, carnibus, bladis, riso, auro, argento, & lignis Aloe, canfari, & multis alijs. Mercatores autem cum accedunt ad hanc regionem ducunt secum homines pingues vendentes illos genti illius regionis, sicut nos vendimus porcos, qui statim occidunt eos & comedunt. In hac insula versus meridiem est aliud regnum vocatum Symolcra, in quo tam viri quam mulieres signant se ferro calido in facie, in 2. partibus, Et hijs semper bellant cum hominibus nudis in alia regione. Vltra transiui ad aliam insulam quæ vocatur Iaua cuius ambitus per mare est trium milliū milliariū, & rex illius insulæ habet sub se 7. reges coronatos, & hæc insula optimè inhabitatur, & melior secunda de mundo reputatur. In ea nascuntur in copia garyophylli, cubibez, & nuces muscatæ: & breuiter omnes species ibi sunt, & maxima abundantia omnium victualium præterquam vini. Rex illius terræ habet palatium nobilissimum inter omnia quæ vidi altissimè stat, & gradus & scalas habet altissimos, quorum semper vnus gradus est aureus, alius argenteus; Pavimentum verò vnum laterem habet de auro, aliū de argèto. Parietes verò omnes interiori sunt laminati laminis aureis, in quibus sculpti sunt Equites de auro habentes circa caput circulum aureum plenum lapidibus pretiosis: Tectum est de auro puro. Cum isto rege ille magnus Canis de Katay frequenter fuit in bello: Quem tamen semper ille Rex vicit & superauit.

IN istam Insulam est alia contrata vocata Panten, vel alio nomine Tathalamasim, & Rex illius contratæ multas insulas habet sub se. In illa terra sunt arbores dantes farinam, & mel, & vinum, & etiam venenum periculosius quod sit in mundo, quia contra illud non est remedium, nisi vnum solum, & est illud. Si aliquis illud venenum sumpsisset, si velit liberari,umat stercus hominis & cum aqua temperet, & in bona quantitate bibat, & statim fugat venenū faciens exire per inferiores partes. Farinam autem faciunt arbores hoc modo, sunt magnæ & bassæ, & quando inciduntur cum securi propè terram, exit de stipite liquor quidam sicut gumme, quem accipiunt homines & ponunt in sacculis de folijs factis, & per quindecim dies in sole dimittunt, & in fine decimi quinti diei ex isto liquore desiccato fit farina, quā primò ponunt in aqua maris, postea lauant eam cum aqua dulci, & fit pasta valdè bona & odorifera, de qua faciunt cibos vel panes sicut placet eis. De quibus panibus ego comedi, & est panis exterius pulcher, sed interius aliquantulum niger. In hac contrata est mare mortuum quod semper currit versus meridiem, in quod si homo ceciderit, nunquam postea comparet. In contrata illa inueniuntur Cannæ longissimæ plures passus habentes quàm 60 & sunt magnæ vt arbores. Aliæ etiā Cannæ sunt ibi quæ vocantur Cassan quæ per terrā diriguntur vt gramen, & in quolibet nodo earum ramuli producuntur qui etiam prolongantur super terram per vnum miliare ferè in hijs Cannis reperiuntur lapides, quorum si quis vnum super se portauerit, non poterit incidi aliquo ferro, & ideo communiter homines illius contratæ portant illos lapides super : Multi etiam faciunt pueros suos dum sunt parui incidi in vno brachio, & in vulnere ponunt vnum de illis lapidibus, & faciunt vulnus recludere se per vnum puluerem de quodam pisce, cuius nomen ignoro, qui puluis statim vulnus consolidat & sanat : & virtute illorum lapidum communiter isti homines triumphant in bellis, & in mari, nec possent isti homines ledi per aliqua arma ferrea : Vnum tamen remedium est, quod aduersarij illius gentis scientes virtutem lapidum, provident sibi propugnacula ferrea contra spicula illorum, & arma venenata de veneno arborum, & in manu portant palos ligneos acutissimos & ita duros in extremitate sicut esset ferrum : Similiter sagittant cum sagittis sine ferro, & sic confundunt aliquos & perforant inermes ex lapidum securitate. De istis etiam Cannis Caslan faciunt sibi vela pro suis nauibus & domunculas paruas, & multa sibi necessaria. Inde recessi per multas dietas ad aliud regnum vocatum Campa, pulcherrimum, & opulentissimum in omnibus victualibus. Cuius rex quâdo fui ibi tor habuit vxores, & alias mulieres, quod de illis 300. filios & filias habuit. Iste rex habet decies millesies & quatuor elephatum domesticorum, quos ita facit custodiri sicut inter nos custodiunt boues, vel greges in pascuis.

De multitudine Piscium, qui se proijciunt in aridam.

IN hac contrata vnū mirabile valde reperitur, quod vnaquæq; generatio piscium in mari ad istâ contratam venit in tanta quantitate, quod per magnū spatium maris nil videtur nisi dorsa piscium, & super aridam se proijciunt quando propè ripam sunt, & permittunt homines per tres dies venire, & de illis sumere quantum placuerint, & tunc redeunt ad mare: Post illâ speciem per illum modum venit alia species, & offert se, & sic de omnibus speciebus, semel tamen tantum hoc faciunt in anno. Et quæsiui à gente illa quomodo & qualiter hoc possit fieri? responderunt quod hoc modo pisces per naturâ docentur venire, & imperatorem suum reuereri. Ibi etiâ sunt testudines ita magne sicut est vnus furnus, & multa alia vidi quæ incredibilia forent, nisi homo illa vidisset. In illa etiâ contrata homo mortuus cõburitur, & vxor viua cum eo, sicut superius de alia cõtrata dictū est, quia dicunt homines illi quod illa vadit ad alium mundum ad morandum cum eo, ne ibi aliam vxorē accipiat. Ultra transiui per mare Oceanum versus meridiem, & transiui per multas contratas & insulas, quarum vna vocatur Moumoran, & habet in circuitu 2000. milliaria, in qua homines portant facies caninas & mulieres similiter, & vnū bouem adorant pro Deo suo, & ideo quilibet vnū bonæ aureum vel argenteū in fronte portat: Homines illius contratæ & mulieres vadunt totaliter nudi, nisi quod vnum pannum lineum portant ante verenda sua. Homines illius regionis sunt maximi & fortissimi, & quia vadunt nudi, quando debent bellare, portant vnum scutum de ferro, quod cooperit eos à capite vsq; ad pedes, & si contingeret eos aliquem de aduersarijs capere in bello qui pecunia non possit redimi, statim comedunt eum; si autem possit se redimere pecunia, illum abire permittunt: Rex eorum portat 300. margaritas ad collum suum maximas & pulcherrimas, & 300. orationes omni die dicit Deo suo: Hic etiam portat in digito suo vnum lapidem longitudinis vnus spanx, & dum habet illū videtur ab alijs quasi vna flamma ignis, & ideo nullus audet sibi appropinquare, & dicitur quod non est lapis in mundo pretiosior illo. Magnus autem imperator Tartarorum de Katay, nunquam vi, uce pecunia, nec ingenio illum obtinere potuit, cum tamen circa hoc laborauerit.

TRANSIUI per aliam insulam vocatam Ceilan, quæ habet in ambitu plusquā duo millia milliaria, in qua sunt serpentes quasi infiniti, & maxima multitudo leonum, vrsarum, & omnium animalium rapacium, & siluestrium, & potissime elephantū. In illa contrata est mons maximus, in quo dicunt gentes illius regionis quod Adam planxit Abel filium suum 500 annis. In medio illius montis est planicies pulcherrima, in qua est lacus parvus mulum habens de aqua, & homines illi dicunt aquam illam fuisse de lachrymis Adæ & Eux, sed probaui hoc falsum esse, quia vidi aquam in lacu scaturire: hæc aqua plena est hirudinibus & sanguisugis, & lapidibus pretiosis; istos lapides rex non accipit sibi, sed semel vel bis in anno permittit pauperes sub aqua ire pro lapidibus, & omnes quot possunt colligere illis concedit, vt orent pro anima sua. Vt autē possint sub aqua ire accipiunt lymones, & cum illis vngunt se valde benè, & sic nudos se in aquam submergunt, & sanguisugæ illis nocere non possunt. Ab isto lacu aqua exit & currit vsq; ad mare, & in transitu quandò retrahit se, fodiuntur Rubix, & adamantes, & margaritæ, & aliæ gemmæ pretiosæ: vnde opinio est quod rex ille magis abundat lapidibus pretiosis, quā aliquis in mundo. In contrata illa sunt quasi omnia genera animalium & auium; & dixerunt mihi gentes illæ, quod animalia illa nullū forensem inuadunt, nec offendunt, sed tantū homines illius regionis. Vidi in illa insula aues ita magnas sicut sunt hic anseres, habentes duo capita, & alia mirabilia quæ non scribo. Ultra versus meridiem transiui, & applicui ad insulam quandam quæ vocatur Bodin, quod idem est quod immundum in lingua nostra. In ea morantur pessimi peſſimi homines, qui comedunt carnes crudas, & omnem immunditiã faciunt quæ quaſi excohoc per hunc modum: ſi pater alicuius infirmetur, filius vadit ad Aſtrogolum ſacerdotem, ſcz.

autem coram Deo nihil hic reſero, niſi illud de quo certus ſum ſicut homo certificari poterit. De iſta inſula inquiſui à multis expertis, qui omnes vno ore reſponderunt mihi, dicentes, quod iſta India 4400. inſulas continet ſub ſe, ſive in ſe, in qua etiam ſunt 64. reges coronati, & etiam dicunt quod maior pars illius inſulæ benẽ inhabitatur. Et hĩc iſtius Indiæ facio finem.

De India ſuperiori, & de Prouincia Mancı.

Inprimis reſero, quòd cum tranſirem per mare Oceanum per multas dietas verſus Orientem, perueni ad illam magnã prouinciã Mancı, quę India vocatur à Latinis. De iſta India ſupe-riori inquiſui à Chriſtianis, Saracenis, idolatris, & omnibus, qui officiales ſunt domini Canis magni, qui omnes vno ore reſponderunt, quòd hæc prouincia Mancı habet pluſquam 2000.
magnarũ ciuitatum, & in ipſa eſt maxima copia omniũ victualium, puta, panis, vini, riſi, carniũ, nuria, dummodo proprijs manibus iuuare ſe poſſent per labores, nunquã ab aliquo eleemolynã peterent. Viri iſtius prouinciæ ſunt ſatis formoſi, ſed pallidi, & rãſas & paruas barbas habentes; fœminę verò ſunt pulcherrimę inter omnes de mundo. Prima ciuitas ad quam veni de iſta India vocatur Ceuſkalon, & diſtat à mari per vnã dietam, poſitãq; eſt ſuper flumen, cuius aqua propẽ

Iſta autem ciuitas tantum nauigiũ habet, quod incredibile foret niſi videnti. In hac ciuitate vidi quod 300. libræ de bono & recenti zinzibero habentur pro minori quã pro vno groſſo: Ibi daret ſerpẽtes, nihil reputaret ſe facere: breuitẽ in hac ciuitate ſunt omnia victualia in maxima abundantia. Indẽ tranſui per ciuitates multas, & veni ad ciuitatẽ nomine Kaitan, in qua fratres Minores habent duo loca, ad quæ portauĩ de offibus fratrum noſtrorum pro fide Chriſti inreſemulieres diuerſum modum viuendi habent: ab alio autem latere omnia animalia erant alba ſicut nix, & homines totaliter diuerſi ab alijs vixerunt. Ibi omnes fœminæ quæ ſunt deſponſatæ portant in ſignum quòd habent maritos vnum magnum barile de cornu in capire. Inde tranleus mihi complacere, dixit mihi: si velis videre piscari, veni mecum; & duxit me super pontem, & vidi in brachijs suis mergos ligatos super perticas, ad quorum gulâ vbi ille ligauit vnū filum, ne illi capientes pisces, comederent eos: Postea in brachio vno posuit 3, cistas magnas, & tunc dissoluit mergos de perticis, qui statim in aquâ intrauerunt, & pisces ceperunt, & cistas illas repleuerunt in parua hora, quibus repletis vir ille dissoluit fila à collis eorū, & ipsi reintrantes flumen se de piscibus recreauerūt, & recreati ad perticas redierunt, & se ligari sicut prius permiserunt: Ego autē de illis piscibus comedi, & optimi mihi videbātur. Inde transiens per multas dietas veni ad vnā ciuitatem quæ vocatur *Kanasia, quæ sonat in lingua nostra ciuitas cœli: Nunquam ita magnā ciuitatem vidi, Circuitus enim eius cōtinet 100. milliaria, nec in ea vidi spatium quin benè inhabitaretur; Imò vidi multas domus habentes 10. vel 12. solgria vnū supra aliud: hæc habet suburbia maxima continentia maiore populum quàm ipsa ciuitas contineat. 12. portas habet principales, & in via de qualibet illarū portarum ad 8. milliaria sunt ciuitates fortè maiores vt æstimo, quàm est ciuitas Venetiariū, & Padua, Hæc ciuitas sita est in aquis quæ semper stant, & nec fluunt, nec resluunt, vallum tamē habet propter ventum sicut ciuitas Veneriarum, In ea sunt plus decem mille & 2. pontium, quorum multos numeravi & transui, & in quolibet ponte stant custodes ciuitatis continuè custodientes ciuitatem pro magno Cane imperatore Catai. Vnum mandatum dicunt gentes illius ciuitatis a domino se recepisse. Nam quilibet ignis soluit vnū balis, i. 5. cartas bombicis, qui vnum florenū cum dimidio valent, & 10. vel 12. supelleciles facient vnum ignem, & sic pro vno igne soluent, Isti ignes sunt benè 85, Thuman, cum alijs 4. Saracenorum quæ faciunt 89. Thuma verò vnum decem milia ignium facit, reliqui autem de populo ciuitatis sunt alij Christiani, alij mercatores, & alij transeuntes per terram, vnde maxime fui miratus quo modo tot corpora hominū poterant simul habitare: In ea est maxima copia victualium, scz. panis & vini, & carniū de porco præcipuè cum alijs necessarijs.

In illa ciuitate 4. fratres nostri conuerterant vnum potentem ad fidē Christi, in cuius hospitio continuè habitabā, dum fui ibi, qui semel dixit mihi, Ara. i. pater, vis tu venire & videre ciuitatem istā; & dixi quoddā sic, & ascendimus vnā barcham, & iuimus ad vnū monasterium maximū, de quo vocauit vnū religiosum sibi notū, & dixit sibi de me, Iste Raban Frācus, i. religiosus venit de inde vbi sol occidit, & nunc vadit Cambaleth, vt deprecetur vitā pro magno Cane, & idcō ostendas sibi aliquid, quoddā si reuertatur ad contratas suas possit referre quoddā tale quid nouū vidi in Kanasia ciuitate: tunc sumpsit ille religiosus duas mastellos magnos repletos reliquijs quæ supererant de mensa, & duxit me ad vnā perclusam paruam, quam aperuit cum clauē, & aperuit viridarium gratiosum & magnū in quod intrauimus, & in illo viridario stat vnus monticulus sicut vnū campanile, repletus amœnis herbis & arboribus, & dum staremus ibi, ipse sumpsit cymbalū, & incepit percutere ipsum sicut percutitur quandō monachi intrant refectoriū, ad cuius sonitū multa animalia diuersa descenderunt de monte illo, aliqua vt simiæ, aliqua vt Cati, Maymones, & aliqua faciem hominis habentia, & dum sic starem congregauerunt se circa ipsum, 4000. de illis animalibus, & se in ordinibus collocauerunt, coram quibus posuit paropsidem & dabat eis comedere, & cum comedissent iterum cymbalum percussit, & omnia ad loca propria redierunt. Tunc admiratus inquisiui quæ essent animalia ista? Et respondit mihi quod sunt animæ nobilium virorū, quas nos hic pascimus amore Dei, qui regit orbē, & sicut vnus homo fuit nobilis, ita anima eius post mortem in corpus nobilis animalis intrat, Animæ verò simpliciū & rusticorū, corpora vilium animalium intrant. Incepi istā abusione improbare, sed nihil valuit sibi, nō enim poterat credere, quoddā aliqua anima posset sine corpore manere. Inde transiui ad quādam ciuitatem nōmīne Chilensō, cuius muri per 40. milliaria circueunt. In ista ciuitate sunt 360. pontes lapidei pulchriores quàm vnquam viderim, & benè inhabitatur, & nauigiū maximum habet, & copiā omnium victualium, & aliorum bonorū. Inde iui ad quoddā flumen dictū Thalay, quod vbi est strictius habet in latitudine 7. milliaria, & illud flumen per medium terræ Pygmeorum transit, quorum ciuitas vocatur Kakam, quæ de pulchrioribus ciuitatibus mūdi est. Isti Pigmei habent longitudinē trium spanfarum mearū, & faciunt maiora & meliora goton, & bombicinā quàm aliqui homines in mundo. Inde per illud flumen transiens, veni ad vnā ciuitatē Ianzu, in qua est vnus locus fratrum nostrorū, & sunt in ea tres ecclesiæ Nestorianorū: hæc ciuitas nobilissē, & magna, habens in se 48. Thuman ignium, & in ea omnia victualia, & animalia in magna copia, de quo Christiani viuunt: Dominus istius ciuitatis solum de sale habet in redditibus 50. Thuman Balisi, & valet balisus vnum florenū cum dimidio: Ita quoddā vnum Thuman facit 15. millia florenorum, vnā tamen gratiam facit dominus populo, quia dimittit ei, ne sit carissima in eo, 200. Thuman. Habet hæc ciuitas consuetudinē, quoddā quando vnus vult facere conuiuium amicis suis, ad hoc sunt hospitia deputata, & vbi ille circuit per hospites, spices, dicens sibi tales amicos meos habebis, quos festabis nomine meo, & tātum in festo volo expendere, & per illum modum melius conuiuant amici in pluribus hospitij quam facerent in vno. Per 10. millia ab ista ciuitate in capite fluminis Thalay est vna ciuitas vocata Montu, Montu. quæ maius nauigium habet, quam viderim in toto mundo; Et omnes naues ibi sunt albæ sicut nix, & in ipsis sunt hospitia, & multa alia quæ nullus homo crederet nisi viderentur.

Indè transiui per 8. dietas per multas terras & ciuitates, & veni tandè per aquam dulcem ad Iquādā ciuitatem nomine Leneyn, quæ est posita super flumen vocatum Caramoran, quod Caramoran. per medium Catai transit, & magnum damnum sibi infert, quando erumpit. Indè transiens per flumen versus Orientem per multas dietas & ciuitates, veni ad vnam ciuitatem nomine Sumacoto, quæ maiorem copiam habet de serico, quam aliqua ciuitas in mundo; Quando enim est maior caristia Serici, ibi 40. libræ habentur pro minori quam pro 8. grossis. In ea est copia omnium mercimoniōrum, & omnium victualium, panis, vini, carniū, piscium, & omnium specierum electarum. Inde transiui versus Orientem per multas ciuitates, & veni ad illam nobilem, & nominatam Cambaleth quæ est ciuitas multum antiqua, & est in provincia Catai, & eam ceperunt Tartari: Et iuxta eam ad dimidium miliare aliam ciuitatem fecerunt, quæ vocatur Caido & hæc 12. portas habet, & semper inter vnam & aliam sunt duo miliaria, & medium inter illas ciuitates benè inhabitatur, ita quod faciunt quasi vnam ciuitatem; Et ambitus istarum duarum ciuitatum est plusquam 40. miliaria. In hac ciuitate magnus imperator Canis habet sedem suam principalem, & suum magnum palatium, cuius muri benè 4. miliaria continent, & infra illud palatium sunt multa alia palatia dominorum de familia sua. In palatio etiam ibi est vnus mons pulcherrimus cōsitus arboribus, propter quod mons viridis nominatur, & in monte palatium antenissimum in quo communiter Canis residet: A latere autem montis est vnus lacus magnus, supra quem pons pulcherrimus est factus, & in illo lacu est magna copia anserum & anatum, & omnium auium aquaticarum; & in silua montis copia omnium auium & ferarum siluestrium, & idè quādo dominus Canis vult venari non oportet eum exire palatium suum. Palatium verò principale, in quo sedes sua est, est magnum valdè, & habet interius 14. columnas aureas, & omnes muri eius cooperiti sunt pellibus rubeis quæ dicuntur nobiliores pelles de mundo: Et in medio palatij est vna pigna altitudinis duorum passuum, quæ tota est de vno lapide pretioso nomine merdochas; & est tota circumligata auro, & in quolibet angulo eius est vnus seipens de auro qui verberat os fortissimè: Habet etiam hæc pigna retia de margaritis, & per istam pignam defertur potus per meatus & conductus qui in curia regis habetur; & iuxta eam pendent multa vasa aurea cum quibus volentes bibere possunt. In hoc autem palatio sunt multi paiones de auro; & cum aliquis Tartarus facit festum domino suo, tunc quando conuiuant tollidunt manus suas præ gaudio & læticia, paiones emittunt alas suas, & expandunt caudas, & videntur tripudiare; Et hoc credo factū arte Magica, vel aliqua cautela subterranea.

De gloria magni Canis.

Quando autem magnus ille Imperator Canis in sede sua imperiali residet, tunc a sinistro latere sedet Regina, & per vnum gradum inferius duo mulieres quas ipse tenet pro se, quando non potest ad Reginam accedere: In infimo autem gradu resident omnes domine de sua parentela. Omnes autem mulieres nuptæ portant supra caput suum vnum pedem hominis, longitudinis vnus brachij cum dimidio, & subter illum pedem sunt penne gruis, & totus ille pes ornatur maximis margaritis. A latere verò dextro ipsius Canis residet filius eius primogenitus, regnaturus post ipsum, & inferius ipso omnes qui sunt de sanguine regio: Ibi etiam sunt 4. scriptores scribentes omnia verba quæ dicit rex; Ante cuius conspectum sunt Barones sui, & multi alij nobiles cum sua gente maxima, quorum nullus audeat loqui nisi à domino licentia petatur exceptis fatuis & histrionibus, qui suum dominum consolari habent; Illi etiam nihil audent facere, nisi secundum quod Dominus voluerit eis legem imponere. Ante portam palatij sunt Barones custodientes, nè aliquis limen portæ tangat. Cum autem ille Canis voluerit facere conuiuium, habet secum 14000. Barones portantes circulos, & coronulas in capite, & domino suo seruientes; Et quilibet portat vnam vestem de auro & margaritis tot quot valent plus quam decies millies florenorum, Curia eius optimè ordinatur per denarios, centenarios, & millenarios, & taliter quod quilibet in suo ordine peragit officium sibi deputatum, nec aliquis defectus reperitur. Ego frater Odoricus fui ibi per tres annos, & multoties in istis festis suis fui, quia nos fratres minores in sua curia habemus locum nobis deputatum, & oportet nos semper ire, & dare sibi nostram benedictionem: Et inquisiui ab illis de curia, de numero illorum qui sunt in curia domini, & responderunt mihi quod de histrionibus sunt bene 18. Thuman; Custodes autem canum & bestiarum, & auium sunt 15. Thuman; Medici verò pro corpore Regis sunt 400. Christiani autem 8. & vnus Saracenus. Et ego quando fui ibi, hij omnes omnia necessaria tam ad victum, quam ad vestitum habebant de curia domini Canis. Quando autē vult equitare de vna terra ad aliam, habet 4. exercitus equitum, & vnus per vnam dietam ipsum antecedit, secundus aliam, & tertius similiter, & quartus; ita quod semper ipse se tenet in medio in modum crucis; & ita omnes exercitus habent omnes dietas suas ordinatas, quod inueniunt omnia victualia parata sine defectu. Illémet autem dominus Canis per illum modum vadit; Sedet in curru cum duabus rotis in quo facta est pulcherrima sella tota de lignis Aloe, & auro ornata, & margaritis maximis, & lapidibus pretiosis; & 4. Elephantes benè ordinati ducunt istum curru, quos præcedunt 4. equi altissimi optimè cooperti, iuxta curru à lateribus sunt 4. Barones tenentes curru, nè aliquis appropinquet domino suo. Supra curru sedent duo Gersfalcons albissimi, & dū videt aues quos vult capere, dimittit Falcones volare, & capiunt eas; Et sic habet solatium suum equitando, & per iactum vnus lapidis nullus audet appropinquare curru nisi populus assignatus: vnde incredibile esset homini qui non vidisset de numero gentis suæ, & reginæ, & primogeniti sui. Iste dominus Canis imperium suum diuisit in 12. partes, & vna habet sub se 200. magnarum ciuitatum: vnde ita latum & longum est suum imperium, quod ad quamcunq; partem iret, satis haberes facere in sex mensibus, exceptis infulis, quæ sunt bene 5000.

De hospitij paratis per totum imperium pro transeuntibus.

Iste dominus, vt transeuntes habeant omnia necessaria sua per totum suum imperium, facit hospitia præparari vbique per vias; in quibus sunt omnia parata quæ ad victualia pertinent: Cum autem aliqua nouitas oritur in imperio suo, tunc si distat, ambassiatores super equos vel dromedarios festinant, & cum lassantur in cursu, pulsant cornu, & proximum hospitium parat vnum similiter equum, qui quando alius venit festus accipit literam, & currit ad hospitium, & sic per hospitia, & per diuersos cursores rumor per 30. dietas, vno die naturali venit ad imperatorem; & ideò nihil ponderis potest fieri in imperio suo, quin statim scitur ab eo. Cum autem ipse Canis vult ire venatum; istum modum habet. Extra Cambaleth ad 20. dietas, est vna foresta quæ 6. dietas continet in ambitu; in qua sunt tot genera animalium & auium quod mirabile est dicere: Ad illud nemo vadit in fine trium annorum vel quatuor cum tota gente, cum qua ipsum circuit, & canes intrare permittit, qui animalia, scilicet leones, ceruos, & alia animalia reducant ad vnam planitiem pulcherrimam in medio nemoris, quia ex clamoribus canum maximè trement omnes bestię syluæ. Tunc accedit magnus Canis super tres elephantes & 5. sagittas mittit in totam multitudinem animalium, & post ipsum omnes Barones, & post ipsos alij de familia sua eniunt sagittas suas; & omnes sagittæ sunt signatæ certis signis & diuersis: Tunc vadit ad animalia interfecta, dimittens viam nemus reintrare vt aliàs habeat ex eis variationem suam, & quilibet illud animal habebit in cuius corpore inuenit sagittam suam quam iaciebat.

Quatuor magna festa in anno facit Dominus Canis, scilicet festum natiuitatis, festum circumcisionis; coronationis, & desponsationis suæ; & ad ista festa conuocat omnes Barones, & histiones, & omnes de parentela sua. Tunc domino Cani in suo throno sedente, accedunt Barones cum circulis & coronis in capite, vestiti vario modo, quia aliqui de viridi, scilicet primi, secundi de sanguineo, & tertij de croceo, & tenent in manibus vnam tabulam eburneam de dentibus Elephantum, & cinguntur cingulis aureis vno semisse latis, & stant pedibus silentium tenentes. Circa illos stant histiones cum suis instrumentis: In vno autem angulo cuiusdā magni palatii resident Philosophi omnes ad certas horas, & puncta attendentes; & cum deueniunt ad punctū & horam peritam à philosopho, vnus præco clamat valenter. Inclinetis vos omnes imperatori vestro: tunc omnes Barones cadunt ad terram; & iterum clamat, Surgite omnes, & illi statim surgunt. Iterum Philosophi ad aliud punctum attendunt, & cum peruentum fuerit, iterum præco clamat; ponite digitum in aurem, & statim dicit, extrahite ipsum; iterum ad aliud punctum clamat, Buratate farinam: & multa alia faciunt, quæ omnia dicunt certam significationē habere, quæ scribere nolui, nec curauī, quia vana sunt & risu digna. Cum autem peruentū fuerit ad horam histionum, tunc Philosophi dicunt, facite festum domino, & omnes pulsant instrumenta sua, & faciunt maximum sonitum; & statim alius clamat; Taceant omnes, & omnes tacent: Tunc accedunt histionatrices ante dominum dulciter inmodulantes, quod mihi plus placuit. Tunc veniunt leones, & faciunt reuerentiam domino Cani; Et tunc histiones faciunt ciphos aureos plenos vino volare per aërem, & ad ora hominum se applicare plicare vt bibant. Hæc & multa alia mirabilia in curia illius Canis vidi, quæ nullus crederet nisi videret; & ideo dimitto ea. De alio mirabili audiui à fide dignis, quod in vno regno istius Canis in quo sunt montes Kapsei (& dicitur illud regnum Kalor) nascuntur pepones maximi, qui quando sunt maturi aperiuntur, & intus inuenitur vna bestiola similis vni agnello: sicut audiui quod in mari Hybernico stant arbores supra ripam maris & portant fructum sicut essent cucurbitæ, quæ certo tempore cadunt in aquam & fiunt aues vocatæ Bernakles, & illud est verum.

DE isto imperio Katay recessi post tres annos, & transui 50. dietas versus Occidentem; & tandem veni ad terram Pretegoani, cuius ciuitas principalis Kofan vocatur, quæ multas habet sub se ciuitates. Ultra per multas dietas iui, & petueni ad vnam prouinciam vocatam Kasan, & hæc est secunda melior prouincia mundi, vt dicitur, & est optimè habitata: Sic quod quando exitur à porta vnius ciuitatis, videntur portæ alterius ciuitatis, sicut egomet vidi de multis. Latitudo Prouinciæ est 50. dietarum, & longitudo plusquam 60. In ea est maxima copia omnium victualium, & maximè castaneorum; & hæc est vna de 12. prouincijs magni Canis. Ultra veni ad vnum regnum vocatum Tibek quod est subiectum Cui, in quo est maior copia panis & vini, quam sit in toto mundo vt credo. Gens illius terræ moratur communiter in tentorijs factis ex feltris nigris: Principalis ciuitas sua murata est pulcherrimè ex lapidibus albißimis, & nigerrimis interescaliter dispositis & curiosè compositis, & omnes viæ eius optimè pauatæ. In ista contrata nullus audet effundere sanguinem hominis, nec alicuius animalis, ob reuerentiam vnius Idoli. In ista ciuitate moratur Abassi 1. Papa eorum, qui est caput & princeps omnium Idolatrarum; quibus dat & distribuit beneficia secundum morem eorum; sicut noster Papa Romanus est caput omnium Christianorum. Fœminæ in hoc regno portant plusquam centumtricas, & habent duos dentes in ore ita longos sicut apri. Quando etiam pater alicuius moritur, tunc filius conuocat omnes sacerdotes & histrones, & dicit se velle patrem suum honorare, & facit eum ad campum duci sequentibus parentibus omnibus, amicis, & vicinis, vbi sacerdotes cum magna solemnitate amputant caput suum, dantes illud filio suo; & tunc totum corpus in frustra concidunt, & ibi dimittunt, cum orationibus cum eoredeunt; Tunc veniunt vultures, de monte assuesacti ad huiusmodi, & carnes omnes asportant: Et ex tunc currit fama de eo quod sanctus est, quia angeli domini ipsum portant in paradysum: Et iste est maximus honor, quem reputat filius posse fieri patri suo mortuo: Tunc filius sumit caput patris, & coquit ipsum, & comedit, de testa eius faciens caphur in quo ipse cum omnibus de domo & cognatione eius bibunt cum solemnitate & lætitia in memoriam patris comesti. Et multa vilia & abominabilia facit gens illa quæ non scribo, quia non valent, nec homines crederent nisi viderent.

De diuite qui pascitur à 50. Virginibus.

VM fui in prouincia Manzi transui iuxta palatium vnius hominis popularis, qui habuit 50. domicellas virgines sibi continuè ministrantes, in omnibus pascentes eum sicut auis auculas, & habet semper 5. fercula triplicata; & quando pascunt eum, continuè cantant dulcissimè: Iste habet in redditibus Tagaris risi 30. Thuman, quorû quodlibet decies millies facit: vnû autem Tagar pondus est asini. Palatium suum duo milliaria tenet in ambitu; cuius pauimentum semper vnum laterem habet aureum, alium atgenteum: Iuxta ambitum istius palatii est vnus monticulus artificialis de auro & argento, super quo stant Monasteria, & campanilia, & alia delectabilia pro solatio illius popularis; Et dictum fuit mihi, quod quatuor tales homines sunt in regno illo. Nobilitas virorum est longos habere ungues in digitis, præcipuè pollicis quibus circueunt sibi manus: Nobilitas autem & pulchritudo mulierum est paruos habere pedes: Et ideo matres quando filiarum sunt tenellæ ligant pedes earum, & non dimittunt crescere. Ultra transiens versus meridiem applicui ad quandam contratam, quæ vocatur Milesthorite, quæ pulchra est valdè & fertilis; Et in ista contrata erat vnus vocatus Senex de monte, qui inter duos montes fecerat sibi vnum murum circumeuntem istos montes, Infra istum murum erant fontes pulcherrimi de mundo; Et iuxta fontes erant pulcherrimæ virgines in maximo numero, & equi pulcherrimi, & omne illud quod ad suauitatem, & delectationem corporis fieri poterit, & ideo illum locum vocant homines illius contratæ Paradysum. Iste Senex cum viderit aliquem iuuenem formosum & robustum, posuitem in illo paradiso; Per quosdam autem conductus descendere facit vinum & lac abundantè. Iste Senex cum voluerit se vindicare, vel interficere regem aliquem vel Baronem, dicit illi qui prærat illi paradiso vt aliquem de notis illius regis, vel Baronis introduceret in paradysum illum, & illum delicijs frui permetteret, & tunc daret sibi potionem vnâ, quæ ipsum sopiebat in tantum, quod insensibilem redderet, & ipsum sic dormientem faceret extra paradysum deportari: qui excitatus & se extra paradysum conspiciens, in tanta tristitia positus foret, quod nesciret quid faceret: Tunc ad illum senem iret, rogans eum, ut iterum in paradysum introduceretur; qui sibi dicit, tu illic introduci non poteris, nisi talem vel talem interficias; & siue interfeceris, siue non, reponam te in paradiso, & ibidem poteris semper manere; Tunc ille sic faceret, & omnes seni odiosos interficeret; Et ideo omnes reges orientales illum senem timuerunt, & sibi tributum magnum dederunt.

CVin autem Tartari magnam partem mundi cepissent, venerunt ad istum Senem, & dominium illius Paradisi ab eo abstulerunt, qui multos sicarios de Paradiso illo emisit, & nobiliores Tartarorum interfici fecit. Tartari autem hoc videntes civitatem, in qua erat senex obsederunt, cum ceperunt, & pessima morte interfecerunt. Hanc gratiam habent fratres ibidem, quod, cicissimè per virtutem nominis Christi Iesu, & in virtute illius sanguinis pretiosi, quem effudit in cruce, pro salute generis humani, dæmonia ab obsessis corporibus expellunt; Et quia multi ibidem sunt obsessi, ducuntur per decem dietas ad fratres ligati, qui liberati statim credunt in Christum, qui liberauit eos habentes ipsum pro Deo suo, & baptizati sunt, & idola sua, & pecorum suorum statim dant fratribus, quæ sunt communiter de fetro, & de criminibus mulierum: & fratres ignem in comuni loco faciunt ad quem populus confluit, ut videat Deos vicinorum suorum comburi, & fratres coram populo Idola in ignem projiciunt; Et prima vice de igne exierunt; Tunc fratres ignem cum aqua benedicta consperferunt, & iterum Idola in ignem proiecerunt, & dæmones in effigie fumi nigerrimi fugerunt, & Idola remanserunt, & combusta sunt. Postea auditur clamor per aërem talis, vide, vide, quo modo de habitatione mea expulsus sum, Et per istum modum fratres maximam multitudinem baptizant, qui citò recidunt ad idola pecorum: qui fratres continuo quasi stent cum illis, & illos informant. Aliud terribile fuit quod ego vidi ibi. Nam cum irem per vnam vallem, quæ sita est iuxta fluvium deliciarum, multa corpora mortua vidi, & in illa valle audivi sonos musicos dulces & diuersos, & maxime de cytharis, vnde multum timui. Hæc vallis habet longitudinem septem, vel octo miliarium ad plus, in quam si quis intrat, moritur, & nunquam vivus potest transire per medium illius vallis, & ideo omnes de contrata declinant à latere: Et tentatus eram intrare, & videre, quid hoc esset. Tandem orans & Deo me recommendans, & cruce signans, in nomine Iesu intraui, & vidi tot corpora mortua ibi, quod nullus crederet nisi videret. In hac valle ab vno eius latere, in vno saxo vnam faciem hominis vidi, quæ ita terribiliter me respexit, quod omnino credidi ibi fuisse mortuus: Sed semper hoc verbum (verbum caro factum est & habitavit in nobis) protuli, & cruce me signavi, nec propius quam per 7. passus, vel 8. accedere capiti ausus fui: Iui autem fugiens ad aliud caput vallis, & super vnum monticulum arenosum ascendi, in quo vndique circumspiciens nihil vidi nisi cytharas illas, quas per se (ut mihi videbatur) pulsari & resonare mirabiliter audivi. Cum verò fui in cacumine montis, iuveni ibi argentum in maxima quantitate, quasi fuissent squamæ piscium. Congregans autem inde in gremio meo pro mirabili ostendendo, sed ductus conscientia, in terram proieci, nihil mecum referuans, & sic per gratiam dei liber exiui. Cum autem homines illius contratæ sciuerunt me vivum exisse, reuerabantur me multum, dicentes me baptizatum & sanctum; & corpora illa fuisse dæmonum infernalium qui pulsant cytharas ut homines alliciant intrare; & interficiant. Hæc de visis certitudinaliter ego frater Odoricus hic inscripsi; & multa mirabilia omisi ponere, quia homines non credidissent nisi vidissent.

VNum tantum referam de magno Cane quod vidi, Consuetudo est in partibus illis quod quando prædictus dominus per aliquam contratam transit, homines ante ostia sua accendunt ignem & apponunt aromata, ac faciunt fumum, ut dominus transiens suavem sentiat odorem, & multi obuiam sibi vadunt. Dum autem semel veniret in Cambelech, & fama vndique divulgaretur de suo aduentu, vnus noster Episcopus, & aliqui nostri minores fratres & ego iuimus obuiam sibi benè per duas dietas: Et dum appropinquaremus ad eum, posuimus crucem super lignum, & ego habebam mecum in manu thuribulum, & incepimus cantare alta voce dicentes: Veni creator spiritus: Et dum sic cantaremus audivi voces nostras, fecitque nos vocari, ac iussit nos ad eum accedere; cum vero supra dictum est, nullus audeat appropinquare currui suo ad iactum lapidis, nisi vocatus, exceptis illis qui currum custodiunt. Et dum iuissimus ad eum, ipse deposuit galerum suum, siue capellum inestimabilis quasi valoris, & fecit fecit reuerentiam Cruci; & statim incensum posui in thuribulo; Episcopus notter accepit thuribulum, & thurificauit eum; ac sibi prædictus Episcopus dedit benedictionem suam. Accedentes verò ad prædictum dominum, semper sibi aliquid offerendum deferunt; secum illam antiquam legem obseruantes; Non apparebis in conspectu meo vacuus; Idcirco portauimus nobiscum poma, & ea sibi super vnum incisorium reuerenter obtulimus; & ipse duo accepit, & de vno aliquantulum comedit: Et tunc fecit nobis signum quòd recederemus, ne equi venientes in aliquo nos offenderent; statimque ab eo discessimus, arque diuerimus, & iunus ad aliquos Barones per fratres nostri ordinis ad fidem conuersos, qui in exercitu eius erant, & eis obtulimus de pomis prædictis, qui cum maximo gaudio ipsa accipientes ita videbantur lætari, ac si præbuissemus eis familiariter magnum munus. Hæc prædicta frater Guilelmus de Solangna in scriptis redegit, sicut prædictus frater Odoricus ore tenus exprimebat. Anno Domini 1330. mense Maij in loco Sancti Antonij de Padua; Nec curauit de latino difficili, & stilo ornato; Sed sicut ipse narrabat ad hoc vt homines facilius intelligerent quæ dicuntur. Ego frater Odoricus de Foro Iulij de quadam terra quæ dicitur Portus Vahonis de ordine minorum testificor, & testimonium perhibeo reuerendo patri Guidoto ministro prouinciæ Sancti Antonij in Marchia Triuifana, cum ab eo fuero per obedientiam requisitus, quòd hæc omnia quæ superius scripta sunt, aut proprijs oculis ego vidi, aut a fide dignis audiui: Communis etiam loquutio illarum terrarum illa quæ nec vidi testatur esse; Multa etiam alia ego dimissem, nisi illa proprijs oculis conspexissem. Ego autem de die in diem me propono contratas seu terras accedere, in quibus mori, & viuere me dispono, si placuerit Deo meo.

ANno igitur Domini 1331. disponente se prædicto fratre Odorico ad perficiendum iter suæ peregrinationis, prout mente conceperat, & etiam vt via & labor esset sibi magis ad meritum, decreuit primò præsentiam adire Domini & patris omnium summi Pontificis Domini Ioannis Papæ 22. cuius benedictione obedientiaque recepta cum societate fratrum secum ire volentium ad partes infidelium se transferret: Cumque sic eundo versus summum Pontificem, non multum distaret à ciuitate Pisana, in quadam via occurrit sibi quidam senex in habitu peregrini eum salutans ex nomine, Aue (inquiens) frater Odorice: Et cum frater quæreret quo modo ipsius haberet noticiam? Respondit, Dum eras in India noui te, tuumque noui sanctum propositum; Sed & tu modò ad conuentum vnde venisti reuertere, quia die sequenti decimo ex hoc mundo migrabis. Verbis igitur senis attonitus & stupefactus, præsertim cum Senex ille statim post dictum ab eius aspectu disparuit; reuertì decreuit; Et reuersus est in bona prosperitate nullam sentiens grauedinem corporis, seu aliquam infirmitatem; Cumque esset in conuentu suo Vrinenfi. N. in prouincia Paduana decimo die, prout facta sibi fuit reuelatio, accepta communione, ipsoque ad Deum disponente, etiam corpore existens in columinis in Domino feliciter requieuit: Cuius sacer obitus Domino summo Pontifici præfato sub manu Notarij publici transmittitur; qui sic scribit.

Anno Domini 1331. decima quarta die mensis Ianuarij obiit in Christo Beatus Odoricus ordinis fratrum Minorum, cuius precibus omnipotens Deus multa, & varia miracula demonstrauit; quæ ego Guetelus notarius communis Vtini, filius domini Damiani de portu Gruario, de mandato & voluntate nobilis viri Domini Conradi de Buardigio Castaldionis, & consilij Vtini, scripsi, sicut potui, bona fide, & fratribus Minoribus exemplum dedi; sed non de omnibus, quia sunt innumerabilia, & mihi difficilia ad scribendum.

¶ Here beginneth the iournall of Frier Odoricus, one of the order of the Minorites, concerning strange things which hee sawe among the Tartars of the East.

Abeit many and sundry things are reported by diuers authoꝝ concerning the fashions and conditions of this worlde: notwithstanding I frier Odoricus of Friuli, de portu Vahonis being desirous to traueil vnto the foꝛein and remote nations of infidels, sawe and heard great and miraculous things, which I am able truly to auouch. First of al therefore sayling from Pera by Constantinople, I arriued at Trapefunda. This place is right commodiously situate, as being an haueu foꝛ the Persians and Medes, and other countreys be-poude the sea. In this lande I behelde with great delight a very strange spectacle, namely a certaine man leading about with him moꝛe then foure thousande partriges. The man himselfe walked vpon the ground, and the partridges flew in the aire, which he ledde vnto a certaine castle called Zauena, being thre dayes iourney distant from Trapefunda. The saide partridges were so tame, that when the man was desirous to lie downe and rest, they would all come flocking about him like chickens. And so hee led them vnto Trapefunda, and vnto the palace of the Emperour, who tooke as many of them as he pleased, and the rest the saide man carried vnto the place from whence he came. In this citie lyeth the body of Achanasius, vpon the gate of the citie. And then I passed on further vnto Armenia maior, to a certaine citie called Azaron, which had bene very rich in olde time, but now the Tartars haue almost layed it waste. In the saide citie there was abundance of bread and flesh, and of all other victuals except wine and frutes. This citie also is very colde, and is reported to be higher situated, then any other city in the world. It hath most wholesome and sweete waters about it: for the veines of the said waters sceme to spring and flow from the mighty riuer of Euphrates, which is but a dayes iourney from the saide city. Also, the said citie stands directly in the way to Tauris. And I passed on vnto a certaine mountaine called Sobissacalo. In the foresaide countrey there is the very same mountaine whereupon the Arke of Noah rested: vnto the which I would willingly haue ascended, if my company would haue stayed for me. Howbeit the people of that countrey report, that no man could euer ascend the said mountaine, because (say they) it pleaseth not the highest God. And I trauielled on further vnto Tauris that great and royal city, which was in old time called Susis. This city is accompted for traffique of marchandize the chiefe city of the world: for there is no kinde of victuals, nor any thing else belonging vnto marchandize, which is not to be had there in great abundance. This city stands very commodiously: for vnto it all the nations of the whole world in a maner may resort for traffique. Concerning the said citie, the Christians in those parts are of opinion, that the Persian Emperour receiues moze tribute out of it, then the King of France out of all his dominions. Neare vnto the said city there is a salt-hill yelding salt vnto the city: and of that salt ech man may take what pleaseth him, not paying ought to any man therfore. In this city many Christians of all nations do inhabite, ouer whom the Saracens beare rule in all things. Then I trauielled on further vnto a city called *Soldania, wherein the Persian Emperour lieth all Sommer time: but in winter hee takes his progresse vnto another city standing vpon the Sea called *Baku. Also the foresaid city is very great and colde, hauing good and wholesome waters therein, vnto the which also store of marchandize is brought. Moreover I trauelled with a certaine company of Carauans toward vpper India: and in the way, after many dayes iourney, I came vnto the citie of the three wise men called *Cassan, which is a noble and renowned city, sauing that the Tartars haue destroyed a great part thereof: and it aboundeth with bread, wine, and many other commodities. From this city vnto Ierusalem (whither the three foresaid wise men were miraculously led) it is fiftie dayes iourney. There be many wonders in this citie also, which, for breuities sake, I omit. From thence I departed vnto a certaine city called *Gesse, whence the Sea of Sand is distant, one dayes iourney, which is a most wonderfull and dangerous thing. In this city there is abundance of all kinds of victuals, and especially of figs, reissins, and grapes; moze (as I suppose) then in any part of the whole world besides. This is one of the three principall cities in all the Persian Empire. Of this city the Saracens report, that no Christian can by any meanes line therein aboue a yeere. Then passing many dayes iourney on forward, I came vnto a certaine citie called *Comum, which was an huge and mightie city in olde time, contempning well nigh fiftie miles in circuite, and hath done in times past great damage vnto the Romanes. In it there are stately palaces altogether destitute of inhabitants, notwithstanding it aboundeth with great store of victuals. From hence trauielling through many countreys, at length I came vnto the land of Iob named Hus, which is full of all kinde of victuals, and very pleasantly situated. Thereabouts are certaine mountaines hauing good pastures for cattell vpon them. Here also Manna is found in great abundance. Foure partridges are here solde for lesse then a groat. In this countrey there are most comely olde men. Here also the men spin and card, and not the women. This land bordereth vpon the North part of Chaldea.

Of the maners of the Chaldeans, and of India.

The tower of Babel.

From thence I traueled into Chaldea, which is a great kingdome, and I passed by the tower of Babel. This region hath a language peculiar vnto it selfe, and there are beautifull men, and despoined women. The men of the same countrey vse to haue their haire kempt, and crinimed like vnto our women: and they weare golden turbants vpon their heades richly set with pearle, and pretious stones. The women are clad in a course smock onely reaching to their knees, and hauing long sleeues hanging downe to the ground. And they goe bare-footed, wearing breeches which reach to the ground also. They weare no attire vpon their heads, but their haire hangs disheveled ieled about their eates : and there be many other strange things alio. From thence I came into the lower India, which the Tartars ouerran and walked. And in this countrey the people eat dates for the most part, whereof 42.li. are there sold for lesse then a groat. I passed further also many dayes iourney vnto the Ocean sea, and the first land where I arriued, is called * Ormes, being well fortified, and hauing great store of marchandize and treasure therein. Such and so extreme is the heat in that countrey, that the priuities of men come out of their bodies and hang downe euen vnto their mid-legs. And therefore the inhabitants of the same place, to preserve their owne liues, do make a certaine ointment, and anointing their priue members therewith, do lay them vp in certaine bags fastened vnto their bodies, for otherwise they must needs die. Here also they vse a kinde of Back or shippe called Iase being compact together onely with hempe. And I went on board into one of them, wherein I could not finde any pyon at all, and in the space of 28. dayes I arriued at the city of Thana, wherein foure of our Friars were martyzed for the faith of Christ. This countrey is well situate, hauing abundance of bread and wine, and of other victuals therein. This kingdome in olde time was very large and vnder the dominion of king Porus, who fought a great battel with Alexander the great. The people of this countrey are idolaters worshipping fire, serpents and trees. And ouer all this land the Saracens do beare rule, who tooke it by maine force, and they themselves are in subiection vnto king Daldilus. There be diuers kinds of beasts, as namely blacke Lyons in great abundance, and apes also, and monkeis, and battes as bigge as our dours. Also there are wise as bigge as our countrey dogs, and therefore they are hunted with dogs, because cats are not able to incounter them. Moreouer, in the same countrey euery man hath a bundle of great boughs standing in a water-pot before his doore, which bundle is as great as a pillar, and it will not wither, so long as water is applied therunto : with many other nouelties and strange things, the relation whereof would breed great delighe.

Ormus.

Thana, whereof Frederick Cesar maketh mention.

How peper is had : and where it groweth.

Moreouer, that it may be manifest how peper is had, it is to be vnderstood that it groweth in a certaine kingdome whereat I my selfe arriued, being called * Minibar, and it is not so plentiful in any other part of the world as it is there. For the wood wherein it growes containeth in circuit 18. dayes iourney. And in the said wood or forrest there are two cities, one called * Flandrina, and the other Cyncilim. In Flandrina both Iewes and Christians doe inhabite, betwene whom there is often contention and warre : howbeit the Christians overcome the Iewes at all times. In the foresaid wood pepper is had after this maner : first it groweth in leaues like vnto pot-hearbs, which they plant neere vnto great trees as we do our vines, and they bring forth pepper in clusters, as our vines doe pearle grapes, but being ripe, they are of a greene colour, and are gathered as we gather grapes, and then the graines are layed in the Sunne to be dried, and being dried are put into earthen vessels : and thus is pepper made and kept. Now, in the same wood there be many riuers, wherein are great store of Crocodiles, and of other Serpents, which the inhabitants therabout do burne by with straw and with other dry feluel, and so they go to gather their pepper without danger. At the South end of the said forrest stands the city of Polumbrum, which aboundeth with marchandise of all kinds. All the inhabitants of that countrey do worship a liuing ore, as their god, whom they put to labour for fire yeres, and in the seuenth yere they cause him to rest from all his worke, placing him in a solemne and publique place, and calling him an holy beast. Moreouer they vse this foolish ceremonie ; Euery morning they take two balons, either of silver, or of gold, and with one they receiue the vrine of the ore, and with the other his dung. With the vrine they wash their face, their eyes, and all their five senses. Of the dung they put into both their eyes, then they annoint the bals of their cheeks therewith, and thirdly their breast : and then they say that they are sanctified for all that day ; And as the people doe, euen so doe their King and Queene. This people worshippeth also a dead idole, which, from the navel upward, resembleth a man, and from the navel downward an ore. The very same Idol deliuers oracles vnto them, and sometimes requirerh the blood of fourtie virgins for his hire. And therefore the men of that region do consecrate their daughters and their sonnes vnto their idols, euen as Christians do their children vnto some Religion or Saint in heauen. Like wise they sacrifice their sonnes and their daughters, and so, much people is put to death before the said Idol by reason of that accursed ceremony. Also, many other hainous and abominable villanies doeth that brutish beastly people commit : and I sawe many moe strange things among them which I meane not here to insert. Another most vile custome the foresaide nation doeth retaine : for when any man dieth they burne his dead corpe to ashes : and if his wife suruiue him, her they burne quicke, because (say they) she shall accompany her husband in his tilth and husbandry, when he is come into a new world. Howbeit the said wife hauing children by her husband, may if she will, remaine still alieue with them, without without shame or reproch: notwithstanding, for the most part, they all of them make choice to be burnt wth their husbands. Now, albeit the wife dieth before her husband, that law bindeth not the husband to any such incōuenience, but he may marry another wife also. Likewise, y^e said nation hath another strange custome, in that their women drinke wine, but their men do not. Also the women haue the lids & byrds of their eyes & beards shauen, but the men haue not: with many other base & filthy fashions which the said women do vse contrary to the nature of their sere. Frō that kingdom I traueiled 10. daies iourney vnto another kingdom called Mobar, which containeth many cities. Within a certaine church of the same countrey, the body of S. Thomas the Apostle is interred, the very same church being full of idols: and in 15. houses round about the said Church, there dwell certaine priests who are Nestorians, that is to say, false, and bad Christians, and schismaticques.

Of a strange and vncouth idole: and of certaine customes and ceremonies.

In the said kingdome of Mobar there is a wonderfull strang idole, being made after the shape and resemblance of a man, as big as the image of our Christoper, & consisting all of most pure and glittering gold. And about the neck thereof hangeth a silke riband, ful of most rich & p̄cieous stones, some one of which is of moze value then a whole kingdome. The house of this idol is all of beaten gold, namely the rooffe, the paucement, and the sicing of the wall within and without. Vnto this idol the Indians go on pilgrimage, as we do vnto S. Peter. Some go with halters about their necks, some with their hands bound behind them, some other with knives sticking on their armes or legs: and if after their peregrination, the flesh of their wounded arme festereth or corrupteth, they esteeme that limme to be holy, & thinke that their God is wel pleased with them. Neare vnto the temple of that idol is a lake made by the hands of men in an open & common place, whereinto the pilgrims cast gold, silver, & p̄cieous stones, for the honour of the idol and the repairing of his temple. And therfore when any thing is to be adozned or mended, they go vnto this lake taking vp the treasure which was cast in. Whereouer at euery yerely feast of the making or repairing of the said idol, the king and queene, with the whole multitude of the people, & all the pilgrims assemble themselves, & placing the said idol in a most stately & rich chariot, they carry him out of their temple with songs, & with all kind of musical harmonic, & a great company of virgins go procession-wise two and two in a rank singing before him. Many pilgrims also put themselves vnder the chariot wheeles, to the end that their false god may go ouer them: and al the p̄ouer whom the chariot runneth, are crushed in pieces, & diuided asunder in the midst, and flaine right out. Yea, & in doing this, they thinke themselves to die most holily & securely, in the seruice of their god. And by this meanes euery yere, there die vnder the said filthy idol, mo then 500. persons, whose carcases are burned, and their ashes are kept for reliques, because they died in that sort for their god. Whereouer they haue another detestable ceremony. For when any man offers to die in the seruice of his false god, his parentes, & all his friends assemble themselves together with a consort of musicians, making him a great & solemne feast: which feast being ended, they hang 5. sharpe knives about his neck carrying him before the idol, & so soone as he is come thither, he taketh one of his knives crying with a loud voice, For the worship of my god do I cut this my flesh, and then he casteth the moyst which is cut, at y^e face of his idol: but at the very last wound wherewith he murthereth himselfe, he uttereth these words: Now do I yeeld my self to death in the behalfe of my god, and being dead, his body is burned, & is esteemed by al men to be holy. The king of the said region is most rich in gold, silver, and p̄cieous stones, & there be the fairest vnions in al the world. Traueling from thence by the Ocean sea 50. daies iourney southward, I came vnto a certain land named Lammori, where, in regard of extreme heat, the people both men and women go stark-naked from top to toe: who seeing me apparelled scoffed at me, saying, that God made Adam & Eue naked. In this countrey al women are common, so that no man can say, this is my wife. Also when any of the said women beareth a son or a daughter, she bestowes it vpon any one that hath lien with her, who she pleaseeth. Likewise al the land of that region is possessed in cōmon, so that there is not mine & thine, or any propriety of possession in the diuision of lands: howbeit euery man hath is of one house peculiar vnto himselfe. Dans flesh, if it be fat, is eaten as ordinarily there, as beefe in our countrey. And albeit the people are most lewd, yet the cōuntry is exceeding good, abounding with al cōmodities, as flesh, coyne, rife, silver, gold, wood of aloes, Campheir, and many other things. Marchants coming vnto this region for traffique do vsually bring wth them fat men, selling them vnto the inhabitants as we sel hogs, who immediately kil & eat them. In this island towards the south, there is another kingdome called Simoltra, where both men and women marke themselves with red-hot yron in 12. sundry spots of their faces: and this nation is at cōtinual warre with certaine naked people in another region. Then I traueiled further vnto another island called Laua, the compasse whercof by sea is 3000. miles. The king of this Iland hath 7. other crowned kings vnder his iurisdiction. The said Iland is thoroughly inhabited; & is thought to be one of the principall Ilands of y^e whole world. In the same Iland there groweth great plenty of cloues, cubibes, and nutmegs, and in a word all kinds of spices are there to be had, and great abundance of all victuals except wine. The king of the said land of Iaua hath a most braue and sumptuous pallace; the most loftily built, that euer I saw any, & it hath most high greeces & staires to ascend vnto the roomes therein contained, one staire being of silver, & another of gold, throughout the whole building. Also the lower roomes were paved all ouer with one square plate of silver, & another of gold. All the wals vpon the inner side were seeled ouer with plates of beaten gold, wherupon were ingrauen y^e pictures of knights; hauing about their temples, ech of them a wreath of golde, adozned with precious stones. The rooffe of the palace was of pure gold. With this king of Iaua the great Can of Catay hath had many conflicts in war: whom notwithstanding the said king hath alwayes ouercome & vanquished.

NEere vnto the said Iland is another countrey called Panten, or Tathalamasin. And the king of the same countrey hath many Ilands vnder his dominion. In this land there are trees yeelding meale, hony, & wine, & the most deadly poison in all y^e whole world: for against it there is but one only remedy: & that is this: if any man hath taken of y^e poyson, & would be deliuered from the danger thereof, let him temper the dung of a man in water, & so drinke a good quantity thereof, & it expels the poyson immediatly, making it to auoid at the fundement. Meale is produced out of the said trees after this maner. They be mighty huge trees, and when they are cut with an axe by the ground, there issueth out of the stocke a certain licour like vnto gumme, which they take and put into bags made of leaues, laying them for 15 daies together abroad in the sun, & at the end of those 15 daies, when the said licour is thoroughly parched, it becometh meale. Then they steepe it first in sea water, washing it afterward with fresh water, and so it is made very good & sauorie paste, wherof they make either meat or bread, as they thinke good. Of which bread I my selfe did eate, & it is fayer without & somewhat browne within. By this countrey is the sea called Mare mortuū, which runneth continually Southward, into y^e which whosoever falleth is neuer scene after. In this countrey also are found canes of an incredible length, namely of 60 paces high or more, & they are as bigge as trees. Other canes there be also called Cassan, which ouerspread the earth like grasse, & out of euery knot of them spring forth certaine branches, which are continued vpon the ground almost for the space of a mile. In the sayd canes there are found certaine stones, one of which stones, whosoever carryeth about with him, cannot be wounded with any yron: & therefore the men of that countrey for the most part, carry such stones with them, whither soeuer they goe. Many also cause one of the armes of their children, while they are pong, to be launced, putting one of the said stones into the wound, healing also, and closing vp the said wound with the powder of a certaine fish (the name whereof I do not know) which powder doth immediatly consolidate and cure the said wound. And by the vertue of these stones, the people aforesaid doe for the most part triumph both on sea and land. Howbeit there is one kind of stratageme, which the enemies of this nation, knowing the vertue of the sayd stones, doe practise against them: namely, they provide themselves armour of yron or Steele against their arrowes, & weapons also poisoned with the poyson of trees, & they carry in their hands wooden stakes most sharpe & hard-pointed, as if they were yron: likewise they shoot arrowes without yron heads, and so they confound & slay some of their vnarmed foes trusting too securely vnto the vertue of their stones. Also of the foresayd canes called Cassan they make sayles for their ships, and litle houses, and many other necessities. From thence after many daies trauell, I arrived at another kingdome called Campa, a most beautiful and rich countrey, & abounding with all kind of victuals: the king wherof, at my being there, had so many wiues & concubines, that he had 300 sonnes & daughters by the. This king hath 10004 tame Elephants, which are kept euen as we keepe broues of oren, or flocks of sheepe in pasture.

Of the abundance of fishes, which cast theselues vpon the shore.

IN this countrey there is one strange thing to be obserued, y^e euery seueral kind of fishes in those seas come swimming towards the said countrey in such abundance, that, for a great distance into the sea, nothing can be scene but y^e backs of fishes: which, casting theselues vpon the shore when they come neere vnto it, do suffer men, for the space of 3. daies, to come & to take as many of the as they please, & then they returne againe vnto the sea. After that kind of fishes comes another kind, offering it selfe after the same maner, and so in like sort all other kinds whatsoeuer: notwithstanding they do this but once in a yere. And I demaunded of the inhabitants there, how, or by what means this strange accident could come to passe: They answered, that fishes were taught, euen by nature, to come & to do homage vnto their Emperour. There be Tortoises also as bigge as an ouen, ouen. Many other things I saw which are incredible, vnlesse a man should see them with his own eyes. In this country also dead men are burned, & their wiues are burned aliue with them, as in the city of Polumbrum aboue mentioned: for the men of that country say that the goeth to accompany him in another worlde, that he should take none other wife in marriage. Moreouer I traueled on further by the ocean-sea towards the south, & passed through many countries and islands, whereof one is called Moumoran, & it containeth in compasse ii. M . miles, wherein men & women haue dogs faces, and worship an ore for their god: and therefore euery one of them carry the image of an ore of gold or siluer vpon their foreheads. The men and the women of this country go all naked, sauing that they hang a linen cloth before their priuities. The men of the said country are very tall and mighty, and by reason that they goe naked, when they are to make battell, they carry vpon or Steele-targets before them, which do couer and defend their bodies from top to toe: and whomsoever of their foes they take in battell not being able to ransom himselfe for money, they presently deuoure him: but if he be able to redeeme himselfe for money, they let him go free. Their king weareth about his necke 300. great and most beautifull vnions, and saith euery day 300. prayers vnto his god. He weareth vpon his finger also a stone of a span long, which seemeth to be a flame of fire, and therefore when he weareth it, no man dare once approach vnto him: and they say that there is not any stone in the whole worlde of more value then it. Neither could at any time the great Tartarian Emperour of Karay either by force, money, or policie, obtaine it at his hands: notwithstanding that he hath done the vtmost of his aduour for this purpose.

Of the island of Sylan: and of the mountaine where Adam mourned for his sonne Abel.

I passed also by another island called Sylan, which containeth in compasse aboue ii. M . miles: wherein are an infinit number of serpents, & great store of lions, beares, & all kinds of rauening & wild beasts, and especially of elephants. In the said country there is an huge mountaine, whereupon the inhabitants of that regio do report that Adam mourned for his son Abel p space of 500. yeres. In the midst of this mountaine there is a most beautiful plain, wherein is a litle lake containing great plenty of water, which water the inhabitants report to haue proceeded fro the teares of Adam & Eue: howbeit I proued that to be false, because I saw the water flow in the lake. This water is full of harts-leeches, & blood-suckers, & of precious stones also: which precious stones the king taketh not vnto his owne vse, but once or twice euery yere he permittech certaine poore people to diue vnder the water for the said stones, & all that they can get he bestoweth vpon them, to the end they may pray for his soule. But by the way may with lesse danger diue vnder the water, they take limons which they pill, anointing themselves thoroughly with the iuice thereof, & so they may diue naked vnder the water, the harts-leeches not being able to hurt them. From this lake the water runneth cuen vnto the sea, and at a low ebbe the inhabitants dig rubies, diamonds, pearls, & other precious stones out of the shore: whereupon it is thought, that the king of this island hath greater abidance of precious stones, then any other monarch in the whole earth belids. In the said country there be all kinds of beasts and fowles: & the people told me, that those beasts would not inuade nor hurt any stranger, but only the natural inhabitants. I saw in this island foules as big as our country geese, hauing two heads, and other miraculous things, which I will not here write off. Trauelling on further toward the south, I arrived at a certain island called Bodin, which signifieth in our language vniclean. In this island there do inhabit most wicked persons, who deuour & eat raw flesh committing all kinds of vncleannes & abominations in such sort, as it is incredible. For the father eateth his son, & the son his father, the husband his owne wife, & the wife her husband: and that after this manner. If any mans father be sick, the son straight goes vnto the sooth-saying or prognosticating priest, requesting him to demand of his god, whether his father shall recouer of that infirmity or no: Then both of them go vnto an idol of gold or of siluer, making their prayers vnto it in manner folowing: Lord, thou art our god, & thee we do adoe, beseeching thee to resolue vs, whether such a man must die, or recouer of such an infirmity or no: Then the diuel answereth out of the said idol: if he saith (he shal liue) then retuerneth his son and ministrerth things necessary vnto him, till he hath attained vnto his former health: but if he saith (he shal die) then goes the priest vnto him, & putting a cloth into his mouth doth strangle him therewith: which being done, he cuts his dead body into morsels, & all his friends and kinsfolks are invited vnto the eating thereof, with musique and all kinde of mirth: howbeit his bones are solemnely buried. And when I found fault with that custome demanding a reason thereof, one of them gaue me this answer: this we doe, least the wormes should eat his flesh, for then his soule should suffer great torments, neither could I by any meanes remouue them from that errour. Many other nouelties and strange things there bee in this countrey, which no man would credite, vnles he saw them with his owne eyes. Howbeit, I (before almighty God) do here make make relation of nothing but of that only, whereof I am as sure, as a man may be sure; Concerning the foresaid islands I inquired of divers well-experienced persons, who al of them, as it were with one consent, answered me saying, That this India contained 4400. islands vnder it, or within it: in which islands there are sixtie and foure crowned kings: and they say moreover, that the greater part of those islands are wel inhabited. And here I conclude concerning that part of India.

Of the vpper India: and of the prouince of Mancy.

27, China.

First of al therefore, hauing traueled many dayes Iourney vpo the Ocean-sea toward the East, at length I arrived at a certaine great prouince called Mancy, being in Latine named India: Concerning this India I inquired of Christians, of Saracens, & of Idolaters, and of al such as bare any office vnder the great Can. Who all of them with one consent answered, that this prouince of Mancy hath mo then 2000. great cities within the precincts thereof, & that is aboundeth with all plenty of victuals, as namely with bread, wine, rice, flesh, and fish. All the men of this prouince be artificers & marchants, who, though they be in neuer so extreme penurie, so long as they can helpe themselves by the laboꝝ of their hands, wil neuer beg almes of any man. The men of this prouince are of a faire and comely personage, but somewhat pale, hauing their heads shauen but a litle: but the women are the most beautiful vnder the sunne. The first city of y^e said India which I came vnto, is called Ceuskalon, which being a daies Iourney distant fro the sea, stands vpon a riuer, the water whereof, nere vnto the mouth, where it conuerateth it selfe into the sea, both ouerflow the land for the space of 12. daies Iourney. All the inhabitants of this India are worshippers of idols. The foresaid city of Ceuskalon hath such an huge nauy belonging thereunto, that no man would beleue it vaille he should see it. In this city I saw 300. ll. of good & new ginger sold for lesse then a groat. There are the greatest, and the fairest geese, & most plenty of them to be sold in al the whole world, as I suppose: they are as white as milke, and haue a bone vpon the crowne of their heads as bigge as an egge, being of the colour of blood: vnder their throat they haue a skin of bag hanging downe helpe a foot. They are exceeding fat & wel sold. Also they haue ducks and hens in that countrey, one as big as two of ours. There be monstrous great serpents likewise, which are taken by the inhabitants & eaten: wherupon a solemne feast among them without serpents is nought set by: and to be briefe, in this city there are al kinds of victuals in great abundance. From thence I passed by many cities, & at length I came vnto a city named Cairan, wherein y^e friers & Moniours haue two places of aboad, vnto the which I transported the bones of the dead sisters, which suffered martyrdom for the faith of Christ, as it is aboue mentioned. In this city there is abundance of al kind of victuals very cheap. The said city is as big as two of Bononia, & in it are many monasteries of religious persons, al which do worship idols. In my selfe was in one of those Monasteries, & it was told me, that there were in it iii. M. religious men, hauing xi. M. idols: and one of y^e said idols which seemed vnto me but litle in regard of the rest, was as big as our Christopher. These religious men euery day do feed their idol-gods: wherupon at a certaine time I went to behold the banquet: and indeed those things which they brought vnto them were good to eat, & suming bore, in so much that the steame of the smoke thereof ascended by vnto their idols, & they said that their gods were refreshed with the smoke: howbeit, all the meat they conueyed away, eating it vp their owne selues, and so they fed their dumb gods with the smoke onely.

Of the citie Fuco.

Traueling moze eastward, I came vnto a city named Fuco, which conteineth 30. miles in circuit, wherein be exceeding great & faire rocks, and al their hens are as white as the very snow, hauing wol in stead of feathers, like vnto sheep. It is a most stately & beautiful city & standeth vpon the sea. Then I went 18. daies Iourney on further, & passed by many prouinces & cities, and in the way I went ouer a certain great mountaine, vpon y^e one side whereof I beheld al liuing creatures to be as black as a cole, & the men and women on that side differed somewhat in manner of liuing fro others: howbeit, on the other side of the said hil euery liuing thing was snow-white, & the inhabitants in their manner of liuing, were altogether vnlke vnto others. There, all married women carry in token that they haue husbands, a great trunke of horne vpon their heads. From thence I traueiled 18. dayes Iourney further, and came vnto a certaine great riuer, and entered also into a city, which being full, nine hoſte vntped the cheeres from about their neckes, and entering the ſecond time into the riuer they fed themſelves with fiſh, and being ſatiſfied they returned and ſuffered themſelves to be bound vnto the ſaide poles as they were befoze. And when I did eate of thoſe fiſhes, me thought they were exceeding good. Trauailing thence many dayes iourneys, at length I arrived at another city called Canafia, which ſignifieth in our language, the city of heauen. Reuer in all my life did I ſee ſo great a citie: for it containeth in circuit an hundred miles: neither ſawe I any plot thereof, which was not thoroughly inhabited: yea, I ſawe many houſes of tenne or twelue ſtoies high, one aboue another. It hath mightie large ſuburbs containing more people then the citie it ſelfe. Alſo it hath twelue principall gates: and about the diſtance of eight miles, in the high way vnto euery one of the ſaide gates ſtandeth a city as big by eſtimation as Venice, and Padua. The ſoꛛelaid city of Canafia is ſituated in waters or marſhes, which alwayes ſtand ſtill neither ebbing nor flowing: howbeit it hath a defence for the winde like vnto Venice. In this citie there ate mo then 10002. bridges, many whereof I numbꛛed and paſſed ouer them: and vpon euery of thoſe bridges ſtand certaine watchmen of the citie, keeping continuall watch and ward about the ſaid city, for the great Can the Emperour of Caray. The people of this countrey ſay, that they haue one due tie inioyned vnto them by their lord: for euery fire papeth one Balis in regard of tribute: and a Balis is five papers or pieces of ſilke, which are worth one ſtozen and an halfe of our coine. Tenne or twelue houſholds are accompted for one fire, and ſo pay tribute but for one fire onely. Al thoſe tributary fires amount vnto the number of 85. Thuman, with other foure Thuman of the Saracens, which make 89. in al; And one Thuman conſiſteth of 10000. fires. The reſidue of the people of the city are ſome of them Chriſtians, ſome marchants, and ſome traueilers thꛛough the countrey: whereupon I maruelled much, howe ſuch an infinite number of perſons could inhabit and liue together. There is great aboundance of victuals in this citie, as namely of bread and wine, and eſpecially of hogſ- fleſh, with other neceſſaries.

Of a Monastery where many ſtrange beaſtes of diuers kinde doe liue vpon an hill.

In the ſoꛛelaid citie foure of our friers had conuerted a mighty and riche man vnto the faith of Chriſt, at whoſe houſe I continually abode, for ſo long time as I remained in the citie. Who vpon a certaine time ſaide vnto me: Ara, that is to ſay, Father, will you goe and beholde the citie: And I ſaid, yea. Then embarqued we our ſelues, and directed our courſe vnto a certaine great Monastery: where being arrived, he called a religious perſon with whom he was acquainted, ſaying vnto him concerning me: this Raban Francus, that is to ſay, this religious Frenchman cometh from the Weſterne parts of the world, and is now going to the city of Cambaleih to pray for the life of the great Can, and therefore you muſt ſhew him ſome rare thing, that when hee returnes into his owne countrey, he may ſay, this ſtrange ſight or nouelty haue I ſcene in the city of Canafia. Then the ſaid religious man tooke two great baſkets full of broken reliques which remained of the table, and led me vnto a little walled parke, the dooze whereof he vnlocked with his key, and there appeared vnto vs a pleaſant faire Greene plot, into the which we entred. In the ſaid Greene ſtands a ſule mount in ſoꛛme of a ſteeple, replenished with fragrant herbes, and fine ſhady trees. And while we ſtood there, he tooke a cymball or bell, and rang therewith, as they uſe to ring to dinner or beuoir in cloiſters, at the ſound whereof many creatures of diuers kinds came downe from the mount, ſome like apes, ſome like cats, ſome like monkys; and ſome hauing faces like men. And while I ſtood beholding of them, they gathered themſelves together about him, to the number of 4200. of thoſe creatures, putting themſelves in good order, befoze whom he ſet a platter, and gaue them the ſaid fragments to eate. And when they had eaten he rang vpon his cymbal the ſecond time, and they al returned vnto their former places. Then, wondꛛing greatly at the matter, I demanded what kind of creatures thoſe might be: They are (quoth he) the ſoules of noble men which we do here feed, for the loue of God who gouerneth the world: and as a man was honozable or noble in this life, ſo his ſoule after death, entceth into the body of ſome excellent beaſt or other, but the ſoules of ſimple and ruſticall people do poſſeſſe the bodies of more vile and brutiſh creatures. Then I began to reſute that ſome error: howbeit my ſpeech did nothing at all preuaile with him: for hee could not be perſwaded that any ſoule might remaine without a body. From thence I departed vnto a certaine citie named Chilenſo, the walls whereof contained 40. miles in circuit. In this city there are 360. bridges of ſtone, the faireſt that euer I ſaw: and it is wel inhabited, hauing a great naule belonging thereunto, & abounding with all kinds of victuals and other commodities. And thence I went vnto a certaine riuer called Thalay, which, where it is moſt narrow, is 7. miles broad: and it runneth thꛛough the miſt of the land of Pygmæi, whoſe chiefe city is called Cakam, and is one of the goodlieſt cities in the world. Theſe Pygmæans are thrice of my spans high, and they make larger and better cloth of cotten and silke, then any other nation vnder the sunne. And coasting along by the saide riuer, I came vnto a certaine citie named Ianzu, in which citie there is one receptacle for the friers of our order, and there be also three Churches of the Nestorians. This Ianzu is a noble and great citie, containing 48 I human of tributarie fiers, and in it are all kindes of victuals, and great plenty of such beastes, oulges and fishes, as Christians doe vsually liue vpon. The lord of the same citie hath in peerele reuenues for salt onely, fiftie Thuman of Balis, and one balis is worth a floren and a halfe of our coyne: insomuch that one Thuman of balis amounteth vnto the value of fiftene thousand florens. Howbeit the sayd lord fauoureth his people in one respect, for sometimes he forgiveth them freely two hundred Thuman, least there should be any scarcitie or dearth among them. There is a custome in this citie, that when any man is determined to banquet his friends, going about vnto certaine tauerne or cookes houses appointed for the same purpose, he sayeth vnto euery particular hoste, you shall haue such, and such of my friends, whom you must intertaine in my name, and so much I will bestowe vpon the banquet. And by that meanes his friends are better feasted at diuerse places, then they should haue bene at one. Tenne miles from the sayd citie, about the head of the foresayd riuer of Thalay, there is a certaine other citie called Montu, which hath the greatest napp that I saw in the whole world. All their ships are as white as snow, and they haue banqueting houses in them, and many other rare things also, which no man would beleue, vnlesse he had seene them with his owne eyes.

Trauelling eight dayes iourney further by diuers territories and cities, at length I came by fresh water vnto a certaine citie named Lencyn, standing vpon the riuer of * Karauoran, which runneth through the midst of Cataie, and doeth great harme in the countrey when it ouerfloweth the bankes, or breaketh forth of the channell. From thence passing along the riuer Eastward, after many dayes trauell, and the sight of diuers cities, I arrived at a citie called * Sumakoto, which aboundeth more with silke then any other citie in the world: for when there is great scarcitie of silke, fortye pound is sold for lesse then eight groates. In this citie there is abundance of all merchandize, and of all kindes of victuals also, as of bread, wine, flesh, fish, with all choise and delicate spices. Then traueilling on still towards the East by many cities, I came vnto the noble and renowned citie of Cambaleth, which is of great antiquitie, being situate in the prouince of Cataie. This citie the Tartars tooke, and neere vnto it within the space of halfe a mile, they built another citie called Caido. The citie of Caido hath twelue gates, being each of them two miles distant from another. Also the space lying in the midst betweene the two foresayd cities is very well and thoroughly inhabited, so that they make as it were but one citie betweene them both. The whole compasse or circuit of both cities together, is 40. miles. In this citie the great emperour Can hath his principall seat, and his Imperiall palace, the wals of which palace containe foure miles in circuit: and neere vnto this his palace are many other palaces and houses of his nobles which belong vnto his court. Within the precincts of the sayd palace Imperiall, there is a most beautifull mount, set and replenished with trees, for which cause it is called the Greene mount, hauing a most royall and sumptuous palace standing thereupon, in which, for the most part, the great Can is resident. Vpon the one side of the sayd mount there is a great lake, whereupon a most stately brydge is built, in which lake is great abundance of geese, ducks, and all kindes of water foules: and in the wood growing vpon the mount there is great store of all birds, and wilde beasts. And therefore when the great Can will solace himselfe with hunting or hauking, he needs not so much as once to step forth of his palace. Moreover, the principall palace, wherein he maketh his abode, is very large, hauing within it 14 pillars of golde, and all the walles thereof are hanged with red skinner, which are sayd to be the most costly skinner in all the world. In the midst of the palace standes a cistern of two yards high, which consisteth of a pretious stone called Merdochas, and is wreathed about with golde, & at ech corner thereof is the golden image of a serpent, as it were, furiously shaking and casting forth his head. This cistern also hath a kind of networke of pearle wrought about it. Likewise by the sayd cistern there is drinke conueyed thorow certaine pipes and conductes, such as vseth to be drinke in the emperours court, vpon the which also there hang many vessels of golde, wherein, whosoeuer will may drinke of the sayd liquor. In the foresayd palace there are many peacocks of golde: & when any Tartar maketh a banquet vnto his lord, if the guests chance to clasp their hands for ioy and mirth, the sayd golden peacocks also will spread abroad their wings, and lift vp their traines, seeming as if they danced: and this I suppose to be done by arte magike, or by some secret engine vnder the ground.

Of the glory and magnificence of the great Can.

Moreouer, when the great emperour Can sitteth in his imperiall throne of estate, on his left hand sitteth his queene or emperesse, and vpon another inferiour seate there sit two other women, which are to accompany the emperour, when his sponse is absent, but in the lowest place of all, there sit all the ladies of his kinred. All the married women weare vpon their heads a kind of ornament in shape like vnto a mans foote, of a cubite and a halfe in length, and the lower part of the sayd foote is adozned with cranes feathers, and is all ouer thicke set with great and ozient pearles. Vpon the right hand of the great Can sitteth his first begotten sonne and heire apparant vnto his empire, and vnder him sit all the nobles of the blood royall. There bee also foure Secretaries, which put all things in writing that the emperour speaketh. In whose presence likewise stand his Barons and diuers others of his nobilitie, with great traines of folowers after them, of whom none dare speake so much as one word, vnlesse they haue obtained licence of the emperour so to doe, except his letters and stage-players, who are appointed of purpose to solace their lord. Neither yet dare they attempt to doe ought, but onely according to the pleasure of their emperour, and as hee enioineth them by lawe. About the palace gate stand certaine Barons to keepe all men from treading vpon the threshold of the sayd gate. When it pleaseth the great Can to solemnize a feast, he hath about him 14000. Barons, carrying wheat bes & little crownes vpon their heads, and giuing attendance vpon their lord, and euery one of them weareth a garment of gold and precious stones, which is woorth ten thousand flozens. His court is kept in very good order, by gouernours of tens, gouernours of hundredes, and gouernours of thousandes, insomuch that euery one in his place performeth his duttie committed vnto him, neither is there any defect to bee found. I Frier Odoricus was there present in person for the space of thre yeeres, and was often at the sayd banquets; for we friers Minorites haue a place of aboad appointed out for vs in the emperours court, and are enioined to goe and to bestow our blessing vpon him. And I enquired of certaine Courtiers concerning the number of persons pertaining to the emperours court: And they answered mee, that of stage-players, musicians, and such like, there were eightene Thuman at the least, and that the keepers of dogs, beasts, and foules were fiftene Thuman, and the physicians for the emperours body, were foure hundred; the Christians also were eight in number, together with one Saracen. At my being there, all the foresayd number of persons had all kind of necessities both for apparell and victuals out of the emperours court. Moreouer, when he will make his progresse from one countrey to another, hee hath foure troupes of horsemen, one being appointed to goe a dayes iourney before, and another to come a dayes iourney after him, the third to march on his right hand, and the fourth on his left, in the maner of a crosse, he himselfe being in the midst, and so euery particular troupe haue their daily iourneys limited vnto them, to the ende they may prouide sufficient victuals without defect. Nowe the great Can himselfe is caried in maner following; hee rideth in a chariot with two wheeles, vpon which a maiesticall throne is built of the wood of Aloe, being adozned with gold and great pearles, and precious stones, and foure elephants brauely furnished doe drawe the sayd chariot, before which elephants foure great horses richly trapped and couered doe lead the way. Hard by the chariot on both sides thereof, are foure Barons laying hold and attending thereupon, to keepe all persons from appoehing neere vnto their emperour. Vpon the chariot also two milke-white Jet-falcons doe sit, and seeing any game which hee would take, hee letteth them flie, and so they take it, and after this maner doeth hee solace himselfe as hee rideth. Moreouer, no man dare come within a stones cast of the chariot, but such as are appointed. The number of his owne folowers, of his wiues attendants, and of the traine of his first begotten sonne and heire apparant, would seeme incredible vnto any man, vnlesse hee had seene it with his owne eyes. The foresayd great Can hath deuided his Empire into twelue partes or Prouinces, and one of the sayd prouinces hath two thousand great cities within the precincts thereof. Whereupon his empire is of that length and breadth, that vnto whatsoeuer part thereof he intendeth his iourney, he hath space enough for six moneths continuall progresse, except his Islands which are at the least 5000.

Of certaine Innes or hospitals appointed for trauailers throughout the whole empire.

The foresayd Emperour (to the end that trauailers may haue all things necessary throughtout his whole empire) hath caused certaine Innes to be prouided in sundry places vpon the high wayes, where all things pertaining vnto victuals are in a continuall readinesse. And when any alteration or newes happen in any part of his Empire, if he chance to be farre absent from that part, his ambassadoys vpon horses or dyomedaries ride post vnto him, and when themselves and their beasts are weary, they blow their horn, at the noise whereof, the next Jinne likewise prouideth a horse and a man, who takes the letter of him that is weary, and runneth vnto another Jinne: and so by diuers Jinnes, and diuers postes, the report, which ordinarily could scarce come in 30. dayes, is in one naturall day brought vnto the emperor: and therefore no matter of any moment can be done in his empire, but straight way he hath intelligence thereof. Moreover, when y^e great Can himselfe will go on hunting, he useth this custome. Some twenty dayes iourney from the citie of Kambaleh there is a forest containing fife dayes iourney in circuit, in which forest there are so many kinds of beasts and birds, as it is incredible to report. Vnto this forest, at the ende of euery third or fourth yeere, himselfe with his whole traine resorteth, and they all of them together enuiron the sayd forest, sending dogs into the same, which by hunting do bring forth the beasts: namely, lions and stags, and other creatures, vnto a most beautifull plaine in the midst of the forest, because all the beasts of the forest doe tremble, especially at the cry of hounds. Then cometh the great Can himselfe, being caried vpon three elephants, and shooteth fife arrows into the whole herd of beasts, and after him all his Barons, and after them the rest of his courtiers and family doe all in like maner discharge their arrows also, and euery mans arrow hath a sundry marke. Then they all goe vnto the beasts which are slaine (suffering the liuing beasts to returne into the wood that they may haue more sport with them another time) and euery man enioyeth that beast as his owne, wherein he findeth his arrow sticking.

Of the foure feasts which the great Can solemnizeth euery yeere in his Court.

Foure great feasts in a yeere doeth the emperor Can celebrate: namely, the feast of his birth, the feast of his circumcision, the feast of his coronation, and the feast of his marriage. And vnto these feasts he inviteth all his Barons, his stage-players, and all such as are of his kinred. Then the great Can sitting in his throne, all his Barons present themselves before him, with wreathes and crownes vpon their heads, being diuersly attired, for some of them are in greene, namely, the principall: the second are in red, and the third in yellow, and they hold each man in his hand a little Tuoie table of elephants tooth, and they are girt with golden girdles of halfe a foote broad, and they stand vpon their feete keeping silence. About them stand the stage-players or musicians with their instruments. And in one of the corners of a certaine great pallace, all the Philosophers or Magicians remaine for certaine howers, and doe attend vpon points or characters: and when the point and hower which the sayd Philosophers expected for, is come, a certaine crier crieth out with a loud voyce, saying, Incline or bowe your selues before your Emperour: with that all the Barons fall flat vpon the earth. Then hee crieth out againe; Arise all, and immediately they all arise. Likewise the Philosophers attend vpon a point or character the second time, and when it is fulfilled, the crier crieth out againe; Put your fingers in your eares: and forthwith againe he saith; Plucke them out. Againe, at the third point he crieth, Boult this meale. Many other circumstances also doe they performe, all which they say haue some certaine signification: howbeit, neither would I write them, nor giue any heed vnto them, because they are vaine and ridiculous. And when the musicians hower is come, then the Philosophers say, Solemnize a feast vnto your Lord: with that all of them sound their instruments, making a great and a melodious noise. And immediately another crieth, Peace, peace, and they are all whist. Then come the women-musicians and sing sweetly before the Emperour, which musike was more delightfull vnto me. After them come in the lions and doe their obeisance vnto the great Can. Then the iuglers cause golden cups full of wine to flie vp and downe in the ayre, and to apply themselves vnto mens mouthes that they may drinke of them. These and many other strange things I sawe in the court of the great Can, which no man would belceue vntesse he had seen them with his owne eyes, and therefore I omit to speake of them. I was informed also by certaine credible persons, of another miraculous thing, namely, that in a certaine kingdome of the sayd Can, wherein stand the mountains called Kapsei (the kingdomes name is Kalor) there growe great Gourds or Pompions, which being ripe, doe open at the tops, and within them is found a little beast like vnto a yong lambe, even as I my selfe haue heard reported, that there stand certaine trees vpon the shore of the Irish sea, bearing fruit like vnto a gourd, which, at a certaine time of the yeere doe fall into the water, and become birds called Bernacles, and this is most true.

Of diuers prouinces and cities.

After three yeres I departed out of the empire of Cataie, traauailing fiftie dayes iourney towards the West. And at length I came vnto the empire of Pretegoani, whose principall city is Kofan, which hath many other cities vnder it. From thence passing many dayes trauell, I came vnto a prouince called Casan, which is for good commodities, one of the onely prouinces vnder the Sunne, and is very well inhabited, insomuch that when we depart out of the gates of one city we may beholde the gates of another city, as I my selfe saw in diuers of them. The bread of the sayd prouince is fifty dayes iourny, & the length aboue sixty. In it there is great plenty of all victuals, and especially of chefnuts, and it is one of the twelue prouinces of the great Can. Going on further, I came vnto a certaine kingdome called ¶ Tebek, which is in subiection vnto the great Can also, wherein I thinke there is more plenty of bread & wine then in any other part of the world besides. The people of the sayd countrey do, for the most part, inhabit in tents made of blacke felt. Their principall city is inuironed with faire and beautifull walles, being built of most white and blacke stones, which are disposed checkerwise one by another, and curiously compiled together: like wise all the high wayes in this countrey are exceedingly well paved. In the sayd countrey none dar: shed the blood of a man, or of any beast, for the reuerence of a certaine idole. In the fore sayd city their Abassi, that is to say, their Pope is resident, being the head and prince of all idolaters (vpon whom he bestoweth and distributeth gifts after his manner) euen as our pope of Rome accounts himselfe to be the head of all Christians. The women of this countrey weare aboue an hundred cricks and trifles about them, and they haue two teeth in their mouthes as long as the tuskes of a boare. When any mans father deceaseth among them, his sonne assemblith together all the priests and musicians that he can get, saying that he is determined to honour his father: then causeth he him to be caried into the field (all his kinsfolks, friends, and neighbours accompanying him in the sayd action) where the priests with great solemnity cut off the fathers head, giuing it vnto his sonne, which being done, they diuide the whole body into morsels, and so leaue it behinde them, returning home with prayers in the company of the sayd sonne. So soone as they are departed, certaine vultures, which are accustomed to such bankets, come flying from the mountaines, and carry away all the sayd morsels of flesh: and from thenceforth a fame is spread abroad, that the sayd party deceased was holy, because the angels of God carried him into paradise. And this is the greatest and highest honour, that the sonne can desire to performe vnto his deceased father. Then the sayd sonne taketh his fathers head, seething it and eating the flesh hereof, but of the skull he makes a drinking cup, wherein himselfe with all his family and kindred do drinke with great solemnity and mirth, in the remembrance of his dead and deuoured father. Many other vile and abominable things doeth the sayd nation commit, which I meane not to write, because men neither can nor will beleue, except they should haue the sight of them.

The same story concerning the very same people is in William de Rubricis.

Of a certaine rich man, who is fed and nourished by fiftie virgins.

WHile I was in the prouince of Mancy, I passed by the palace of a certaine famous man, which hath fifty virgin damoels continually attending vpon him, feeding him euery meale, as a bird feeds her yong ones. Also he hath sundry kindes of meat serued in at his table, and thre dishes of ech kinde: and when the sayd virgins feed him, they sing most sweetly. This man hath in yeerely reuenues thirty chumans of ragars of rise, euery of which chuman yeeldeth tenne thousand ragars, and one ragar is the burthen of an asse. His palace istwo miles in circuit, the pavement whercof is one place of golde, and another of siluer. Neere vnto the wall of the sayd palace there is a mount artificially wrought with golde and siluer, whereupon stand turrets and steeples and other delectable things for the solace and recreation of the foresayd great man. And it was tolde me that there were foure such men in the sayd kingdome. It is accounted a great grace for the men of that countrey to haue long nailles vpon their fingers, and especially vpon their thumbes, which nailles they may solde about their hands: but the grace and beauty of their women is to haue small and slender feet; and therefore the mothers when their daughters are yong, do binde vp their feet, that they may not grow great. Trauelling on further towards the South, I arrived at a certaine countrey called Melistorte, which is a very pleasant and fertile place. And in this countrey there was a certaine aged man called Senex de monte, who round about two mountaines had built a wall to inclose the sayd mountaines. Within this wall there were the fairest and most chynfull fountaines in the whole world: and about the sayd fountaines there were most beautifull virgins in great number, and goodly horses also, and in a word, euery thing that could be deuised for bodily solace and delight, and therefore the inhabitants of the countrey call the same place by the name of Paradise.

The sayd olde Senex, when he saw any proper and valliant yong man, he would admit him into his paradise. Howeouer by certaine conducts he makes wine and milke to flow abundantly.

This

Long nailles.

Melistorte.

This Senex, when he hath a minde to reuenge himselfe or to slay any king or baron, commaundeth him that is gouernor of the sayd paradise, to bring thercunto some of the acquaintance of the sayd king or baron, permitting him a while to take his pleasure therein, and then to giue him a certaine portion being of force to cast him into such a slumber as should make him quite void of all sense, and so being in a profound sleepe to conuey him out of his paradise: who being awaked, & seeing himselfe thrust out of the paradise would become so sorrowfull, that he could not in the world desire what to do, or whither to turne him. Then would he go vnto the foresaid old man, beseeching him that he might be admitted againe into his paradise: who saith vnto him, You cannot be admitted thither, vntlesse you will slay such or such a man for my sake, and if you will giue the attempt onely, whether you kill him or no, I wil place you againe in paradise, that there you may remaine alwayes: then would the party without faile put the same in execution, endeavouring to murder all those against whom the sayd olde man had conceiued any hatred. And therefore all the kings of the east stood in awe of the sayd olde man, and gaue vnto him great tribute.

Of the death of Senex de monte.

And when the Tartars had subdued a great part of the world, they came vnto the sayd olde man, and tooke from him the custody of his paradise: who being incensed thereat, sent abroad diuers desperate and resolute persons out of his forenamed paradise, and caused many of the Tartarian nobles to be slaine. The Tartars seeing this, went and besieged the city wherein the said olde man was, tooke him, and put him to a most cruell and ignominious death. The friers in that place haue this speciall gift and prerogative: namely, that by the vertue of the name of Christ Iesu, and in the vertue of his precious blood, which he shedde vpon the crosse for the saluation of mankind, they doe cast forth devils out of them that are possessed. And because there are many possessed men in those parts, they are bound and brought ten dayes iourney vnto the sayd friers, who being dispossessed of the vncleane spirits, do presently beleue in Christ who deliuered them, accounting him for their God, and being baptised in his name, and also deliuering immediatly vnto the friers all their idols, and the idols of their cattell, which are commonly made of felt or of womens haire: then the sayd friers kinde a fire in a publike place (whereunto the people resort, that they may see the false gods of their neighbors burnt) and cast the sayd idols thereinto: howbeit at the first those idols came out of the fire againe. Then the friers sprinkled the sayd fire with holy water, casting the idols into it the second time, and with that the devils fled in the likeness of blacke smoake, and the idols still remained till they were consumed vnto ashes. Afterward, this noise & outcry was heard in the ayre: Beholde and see how I am expelled out of my habitation. And by these meanes the friers doe baptise great multitudes, who presently reuolt againe vnto their idols: insomuch that the sayd friers must oftsoones, as it were, vnderprop them, and informe them anew. There was another terrible thing which I saw there: for passing by a certaine valley, which is situate beside a pleasant riuer, I saw many dead bodies, and in the sayd valley also I heard diuers sweet sounds and harmonies of musike, especially the noise of citherns, whereat I was greatly amazed. This valley containeth in length seuen or eight miles at the least; into the which whosoever entred, dieth presently, and can by no meanes passe aliue thorow the middest thereof: for which cause all the inhabitants thereabout decline vnto the one side. Forerouer, I was tempted to go in, and to see what it was. At length, making my prayers, and recommending my selfe to God in the name of Iesu, I entred, and saw such swarms of dead bodies there, as no man would beleue vntlesse he were an eye witness thereof. At the one side of the foresaid valley vpon a certaine stone, I saw the visage of a man, which beheld me with such a terrible aspect, that I thought verily I should haue died in the same place. But alwayes this sentence, the word became flesh, and dwelt amongst vs, I ceased not to pronounce, signing my selfe with the signe of the crosse, and neerer then seuen or eight paces I durst not approach vnto the said head: but I departed & fled vnto another place in the sayd valley, ascending by into a little sandy mountaine, where looking round about, I saw nothing but the sayd citherns, which me thought I heard miraculously sounding and playing by themselves without the helpe of musicians. And being vpon the toppe of the mountaine, I found silver there like the scales of fishes in great abundance: and I gathered some part thereof into my bosome to shew for a wonder, but my conscience rebuking me, I cast it vpon the earth, reseruing no whit at all vnto my selfe, and so, by Gods grace I departed without danger. And when the men of the countrey knew that I was returned out of the valley aliue, they reuerenced me much, saying that I was baptised and holy, and that the foresaid bodies were men subiect vnto the devils infernall, who used to play vpon citherns, to the end they might allure people to enter, and so murder them. Thus much concerning those things which I beheld most certainly with mine eyes, I frier Odoricus haue heere written : many strange things also I haue of purpoe omitted , because men will not beleue them vntlesse they should see them.

Of the honour and reuerence done vnto the great Can.

I will report one thing moze, which I saw, concerning the great Can. It is an vsuall custome in those parts, that when the foresayd Can trauelleth thowow any countrey, his subiects kinde fires before their doozes, casting spices thereinto to make a perfume, that their lord passing by may smell the sweet and delectable odours thereof, and much people come soozih to meet him. And vpon a certaine time when he was comming towarde Cambaleth, the same of his approch being published, a bishop of ours with certaine of our minoxite friers and my selfe, went two dayes iourney to meet him : and being come nigh vnto him, we put a crosse vpon wood, I my selfe hauing a censel in my hand, and began to sing with a loud voice : Veni creator spiritus. And as we were singing on this wise, he caused vs to be called, commanding vs to come vnto him : notwithstanding (as it is aboue mentioned) that no man dare approch within a stones cast of his chariot, vnlesse he be called, but such onely as keepe his chariot. And when we came netre vnto him, he bailed his hat or bonet being of an inestimable price, doing reuerence vnto the crosse. And immediately I put incense into the censel, and our bishop taking the censel perfumed him, and gaue him his benediction. Moreover, they that come before the sayd Can do alwayes bying some oblation to present vnto him, obseruing the ancient law: Thou shalt not appeare in my presence with an empty hand. And for that cause we carried apples with vs, and offered them in a platter with reuerence vnto him : and taking out two of them he did eat some part of one. And then he signified vnto vs, that we should go apart, least the horses comming on might in ought offend vs. With that we departed from him, and turned aside, going vnto certaine of his barons, which had bene conuerted to the faith by certaine friers of our order, being at the same time in his army : and we offered vnto them of the foresayd apples, who receiued them at our hands with great ioy, seeming vnto vs to be as glab, as if we had giuen them some great gift.

All the premises aboue written frier William de Solanga hath put do bene in writing euen as the foresayd frier Odoricus vttered them by word of mouth, in the yeere of our Lord 1330, in the moneth of May, and in the place of S. Anthony of Padua. Neither did he regard to write them in difficult Latine or in an eloquent stile, but euen as Odoricus himselfe rehearsed them, to the end that men might the moze easily vnderstand the things reported. I frier Odoricus of Friuli, of a certaine territoyp called Portus Vahonis, and of the order of the minoxites, do testifie and beare witness vnto the reuerend father Guidotus minister of the prouince of S. Anthony, in the markestate of Treviso (being by him required vpon mine obedience so to doe) that all the premises aboue written, either I saw with mine owne eyes, or heard the same reported by credible and substantiall persons. The common report also of the countreyes where I was, testifieth those things, which I saw, to be true. Many other things I haue omitted, because I beheld them not with mine owne eyes. Howbeit from day to day I purpoe with my selfe to trauell countreyes or lands, in which action I dispose my selfe to die or to liue, as it shall please my God.

Of the death of frier Odoricus.

In the yeere therefore of our Lord 1331 the foresayd frier Odoricus preparing himselfe for the performance of his intended iourney, that his trauell and labour might be to greater purpoe, he determined to present himselfe vnto pope Iohn the two and twentieth, whose benediction and obedience being receiued, he, with a certaine number of friers willing to beare him company, might conuey himselfe vnto all the countreyes of infidels. And as he was traouelling towards the pope, and not farre distant from the city of Pisa, there meets him by the way a certaine olde man, in the habit and attire of a pilgrime, saluting him by name, and saying : All haile frier Odoricus. And when the frier demaunded how he had knowledge of him : he answered : Whilseth you were in India I knew you full well, yea, and I knew your holy purpoe also : but see that you returne immediately vnto the couen from whence you came, for tenne dayes hence you shall depart out of this present world. Wherefore being astonished and amazed at these wordes (especially the olde man banishing out of his sight, presently after he had spoken them) he determined to returne. And so he returned in perfect healt, feeling no crazednesse nor infirmity of body. And being in his couen at Vdene in the prouince of Padua, the tenth day after the foresayd vision, hauing receiued the Communion, and preparing himselfe vnto God, yea, being strong and sound of body, hee happily rested in the Lord : whose sacred departure was signified unto the Pope aforesaid, under the hand of the publique notary in these words following.

In the yeere of our Lord 1331, the 14. day of Januarie, Beatus Odoricus a Frier minozite deceased in Thrist, at whose prayers God shewed many and sundry miracles, which I Guetelus publique notarie of Vrina, sonne of M. Damianus de Porto Gruaro, at the commandement and direction of the honorable Conradus of the Borough of Gastaldion, and one of the Councell of Vrina, haue written as faithfully as I could, and haue deliuered a copie thereof unto the Friers minozites: howbeit not of all, because they are innumerable, and too difficult for me to write.

It is by no meanes to be passed ouer in silence, that Matthew Gourney, being a most valiant warrior in the reigne of Edward the third, lyeth buried at a certaine towne, in the countie of Somerset, commonly called Stoke vnder Hamden: who deceased in the 96. yeare of his age; and that (as it is manifest by the inscription of his monument) after he had valiantly behaued himselfe at the siege of Algizer against the Sarazens, and at the battailes of Benamazin, of Sluce, of Cressie, of Ingenos, of Poictou, and of Nazaran in Spaine.

The comming of Lyon King of Armenia into England; in the yeere 1386, and in the ninth yeere of Richard the second, in trust to finde some meanes of peace or good agreement betweene the King of England and the French king. Iohn Froyssart lib. 3. cap. 56.

Thus in abiding for the Duke of Berrie, and for the Constable, who were behind, then king Lyon of Armenia, who was in France, and had assigned him by the king, sixe thousand frankes by the yeare to maintaine his estate, tooke vpon him for a good intent to goe into England to speake with the king there and his Councell, to see if he might finde any matter of peace to be had, betweene the two Realmes, England and France: And so he departed from his lodging of Saint Albeyne beside Saint Denice, alonely with his owne company, and with no great apparell. So he rode to Boloine, and there he tooke a hippe, and so sayled forth till he came to Douer; and there he found the Earle of Cambridge, and the Earle of Buckingham, and moe then a hundred men of armes, and a two thousand Archers, who lay there to keepe that passage, for the hute ran, that the Frenchmen should lande there or at Sandwich, and the king lay at London, and part of his Councell with him, and daily heard tydings from all the portes of England. When the king of Armenia was arrived at Douer, he had there good cheere, because he was a stranger, and so he came to the kings Uncles there, who sweetly receiued him, and at a time conuenient, they demaunded of him from whence he came and whither he would. The king answered and sayd, that in trust of goodnesse he was come thither to see the king of England, and his Councell, to treat of peace betweene England and France, for he saide that he thought the warre was not meete: for he sayd, by reason of warre betweene these two Realmes, which hath indured so long, the Saracens, lewes & Turkes are wared proude, for there is none that make them any wayre, and by occasion thereof I haue lost my land and Realme, and am not like to recouer them againe without there were firme peace in all Chriftendome: & I would gladly shew the matter that toucheth all Chriftendome to the king of England, and to his Councell, as I haue done to the French king. Then the kings Uncles demaunded of him if the French king sent him thither or no; he answered and sayd, no: there is no man that sent mee, but I am come hither by mine owne motion to see if the king of England & his Councell would any thing leane to any treaty of peace, then was he demaunded where the French king was, he answered I beleue he be at Sluce, I sawe not not him sithence I tooke my leaue of him at Senlize. Then he was demaunded, howe he could make any treatie of peace, and had no charge so to doe, and Sir, if yee be conueyed to the King our Nephew and to his Counsell, and the French king in the meane season enter with his puillsance into England; yee may happe thereby to receiue great blame, and your person to be in great ieopardy with them of the Countrey. Then the King answered and said, I am in suretie of the French king, for I haue sent to him, desiring him till I returne againe, not to remoue from Sluce, and I repute him so noble and so well aduised, that he will graunt my desire, and that hee will not enter into the sea, till I come againe to him. Wherefore, sirs, I pray you in the instance of loue and peace, to conuey me to speake with the King; for I desire greatly to see him: or else yee that be his Uncles, if ye haue authoritie, to giue me answer to all my demaunds. Then the Earle of Buckingham sayd, Syr king of Armenia, we be ordayned here to keepe and defend this passage, and the frontiers of England, by the King and his Counsell, and wee haue no charge to meddle any further with the businesse of the Realme, without we be otherwise commanded by the King. But sith ye be come for a good intent into this Countrey, ye be right welcome; but sir, as for any firme answer ye can haue none of vs, for as now we be not of the Councell, but we shall conuey you to the king without perill or danger. The king thanked them, and said: I desire nothing else but to see the king and to speake with him.

How the King of Armenia returned out of England, and of the answeere that was made to him.

hen the king of Armenia was refreshed at Douer a day, and had spoken with the kings Uncles at good leasure, then he departed towards London, with a good conduct that the Lords appointed to him, for feare of any recounters: so long he rode that he came to London, and in his ryding throug London he was well regarded, because he was a stranger, and he had good cheare made him, and so was brought to the king, who lay at the Ropall at the Queenes wardrobe, and his Councell were in London at their lodgings: The Londoners were soze fortelyping of their cite. When the coming of the king of Armenia was knowne, the kings Coun-cell drew to the King to heare what rydings the King brought in that troublous season: When the king of Armenia was come into the kings presence, he made his salutation and then beganne his procelle to the states, how he was come out of France principally to see the king of England who he had neuer scene before, & said, how he was right ioyous to be in his presence, trusting that some goodnesse might come thereby. And there he shewed by his words, that to withstande the great pestilence that was likely to be in England; therefore he was come of his owne goodwill to doe good therein if he might, not sent from the French king, willing to set some accorde and peace betweene the two Realmes England and France. Many faire pleasant words the king of Armenia spake to the king of England, and to his Councell, then he was shortly answered thus: Syr king, ye be welcome into this Realme, for the king our Soueraigne lord, and all we are glad to see you here, but sir, we say that the king hath not here all his Councell, but shortly they shall be here, and then ye shall be answered. The king of Armenia was content therewith, and so returned to his lodging. Within foure dayes after the king was counselled (and I thinke he had sent to his Uncles to know their intents, but they were not present at the answer giuing) to goe to the pallace at Westminster and his Councell with him, such as were about him, and to send for the king of Armenia to come thither. And when he was come into the presence of the king of England and his Councell, the king sate downe, and the king of Armenia by him, and then the Prelates and other of his Councell. There the king of Armenia rehearsed againe his requestes that he made, and also shewed wisely how all Christendome was soze decayed and fe-blished by occasion of the warres betwene England and France. And how that all the knights and Squires of both Realmes intended nothing else, but alwayes to be on the one part or of the other: whereby the Empire of Constantinople leeseeth, and is like to leese; for before this warre the Knights and Squires were wont to aduenture themselves. And also the king of Armenia shewed that by occasion of this warre he had lost his Realme of Armenia, therefore he desired for Gods sake that there might be some treaty of peace had betweene the two Realmes England and France. To these wordes answered the Archbishop of Canterburie, for he had charge so to doe; And he sayd, Sir king of Armenia, it is not the manner nor neuer was scene betweene two such enemies as the king of England and the French king, that the king my Soueraigne lord should be required of peace, and he to enter his land with a puissant army, wherefore sir, we say to you, that if it please you, ye may returne to the French king, and cause him and all his puill-

to returne backe into their owne countreys. And when euery man be at home, then if it please you ye may returne againe hither, and then we shall gladly intende to your treatie.

This was all the answer the king of Armenia could get there, and so he dined with the king of England, and had as great honour as could bee deuised, and the king offered him many great gifts of golde and siluer, but he would take none though he had neede thereof, but alone-ly a ring to the value of a hundred Franks. After dinner he tooke his leaue and returned vnto his lodging, and the next day departed, and was two dayes at Dover, and there he tooke his leaue of such lordes as were there, and so tooke the sea in a passager, and arriued at Calais and from thence went to Sluce, and there he spake with the French king and with his Uncles, and shewed them how he had bene in England, and what answer he had: the French king and his Uncles tooke no regard of his saying, but sent him backe againe into France, for their full intention was to enter into England as soone as they might haue winde and weather, and the Duke of Berrie and the Constable came to them: The winde was soe contrary to them, for therewith they could neuer enter into England but the winde was good to goe into Scotland.

Richardus quoque rex Angliae rogatus auxilium, mittit Henricum comitem Derbensem cum electa Anglica pubis manu ad id bellum faciendum. Igitur Franci Anglique viribus & animis consociatis in Africam traiciunt, qui ubi litus attigere, eatenus à Barbaris defectione prohibiti sunt, quoad Anglorum sagittariorum virtute factum est, ut aditus pateret: in terram egressi recta Tunetam urbem regiam petunt, ac obsident. Barbari timore affecti de pace ad eos legatos mittunt, quam nostris dare placuit, ut soluta certa pecuniae summa ab omni deinceps Italiae, Galliaeque ora manus abstinerent. Ita peractis rebus post paucos menses, quam eo itum erat, donum repeditum est.

The French in the meane season hauing gotten some leasure by meanes of their truce, and being solicited and urged by the intreaties of the Genuois, undertooke to wage warre against the Moores, who robbed and spoiled all the coasts of Italy, and of the Ilandes adiacent. Likewise Richard the second, king of England, being sued vnto for ayde, sent Henry the Earle of Derby with a choise armie of English souldiers vnto the same warfare. Wherefore the English and French, with forces and mindes united, sayled ouer into Africa, who when they approached vnto the shoze were repelled by the Barbarians from landing, untill such time as they had passage made them by the valour of the English archers. Thus hauing landed their forces, they forthwith marched vnto the royall citie of Tunis, and besieged it. Whereat the Barbarians being dismayed, sent Ambassadors vnto our Christian Chieftaines to treat of peace, which our men graunted vnto them, vpon condition that they should pay a certaine summe of money, and that they should from thenceforth abstaine from piracies vpon all the coasts of Italy and France. And so hauing dispatched their businesse, within a fewe moneths after their departure they returned home.

and Holenshed in manner following, pag. 473.

In the thirteenth yeere of the reigne of king Richard the second, the Christians tooke in hand a iourney against the Saracens of Barbarie through sute of the Genouois, so that there went a great number of Lordes, Knights, and Gentlemen of France and England, the Duke of Burbon being their Generall. Out of England there went Iohn de Beaufort ballarde sonne to the Duke of Lancaster (as Froysard hath noted) also Sir Iohn Russell, Sir Iohn Butler, Sir Iohn Harecourt and others. They set forwarde in the latter ende of the thirteenth yeere of the Kings reigne, and came to Genoa, where they remayned not verie long, but that the gallees and other vessels of the Genouois were ready to passe them ouer into Barbarie. And so about midsummer in the beginning of the fourteenth yere of this kings reigne the whole army being embarked, sailed forth to the coast of Barbary, where nere to the city of Africa they landed: at which instant the English archers (as the Chronicles of Genoa write) stood all the company in good stead with their long bowes, beating backe the enemies from the shore, which came downe to resist their landing. After they had got to land, they inuironed the city of Africa (called by the Spooyes Mahdia) with a strong siege: but at length, constrained with the intemperancy of the scolding ayre in that hot countrey, breeding in the army sundry diseases, they fell to a composition vpon certaine articles to be performed in the behalfe of the Saracens: and so 61 dayes after their arriuall there they tooke the seas againe, and returned home, as in the histories of France and Genoa is likewise expessed. Where, by Polydore Virgil it may seeme, that the lord Henry of Lancaster earle of Derby should be generall of the Englishmen, that (as before you heard) went into Barbary with the French men and Genouois.

De Lord Iohn of Holland, Earle of Huntington, was as then on his way to Ie-Hungarie, for as he passed through France (where he had great cheere of the king, and of his brother and vnckles) hee heard how the king of Hungary and the great Turke should haue battell together: therefore he thought surely to be at that iourney.

The last day of October the bishop of Winchester came to the Councell of Constance, which after the chusing of the Pope determined to take his iourney to Ierusalem: where his eloquent perswasion so much preuailed, that he both perswaded my lords the Cardinals to vniety and concord, and also moued them to proceed moze speedily to the election of the Pope.

A preparation of a voyage of King Henrie the fourth to the Holy land against the infidels in the yere 1413, being the last yere of his reigne: wherein he was preuented by death: written by Walsingham, Fabian, Polydore Virgile, and Holenshed.

In this foureteenth and last yere of king Henries reigne a councell was holden in the White friers in London, at the which among other things, order was taken for ships and galleies to be builded and made ready, and all other things necessary to be provided for a voyage, which he meant to make into the Holy land, there to recover the city of Ierusalem from the infidels: for it grieved him to consider the great malice of Christian princes, that were bent vpon a mischieuous purpose to destroy one another, to the perill of their owne soules, rather then to make warre against the enemies of the Christian faith, as in conscience, it seemed to him, they were bound. The sinder, sayeth Fabian in his Chronicle, that he was taken with his last sickenesse, while he was making his prayers at Saint Edwards shrine, there as it were, to take his leaue, and so to proceede footth on his iourney. He was so suddenly and grieuoussly taken, that such as were about him feared least he would haue died presently: wherefoze to relieue him, if it were possible, they bare him into a chamber that was next at hand, belonging to the Abbot of Westminster, where they layd him on a pallet before the fire, and vled all remedies to reuiue him. At length he recovered his speech, and perceiuing himselfe in a strange place which he knew not, he willed to knowe if the chamber had any particular name, whereunto answer was made, that it was called Ierusalem. Then sayde the king, Laudes be giuen to the father of heauen: for now I knowe that I shall die here in this chamber, according to the prophesie of mee declared, that I should depart this life in Ierusalem.

Afterward, King Henry calling to minde, that nothing ought to be moze highly esteemed by any man, then to doe the utmost of his induour for the performance of iustice, which tendeth to the good and benefite of mankind; altogether abandoning ciuill warre (wherein he was ashamed to see, how Christians at all times were dishonourably busied) entered into a moze deepe consideration of well gouerning his Realme of England, of waging warre against the common enemy, and of recouering, in proesse of time, the citie of Ierusalem, yea, and was prouiding a naue for the same purpose, whenas in the very midst of this his hereticall action and enterprise, he was surprised with death: for falling into a sudden disease, he could not be cured by any kinde of physicke. He deccased at Westminster in the 46 yeare of his age, which was in the yeere of our Lord, 1413.

A brieue relation of the siege and taking of the Citie of Rhodes, by Sultan Soliman the great Turke, translated out of French into English at the motion of the Reuerend Lord

Thomas Dockwray, great Prior of the order of Ierusalem in England, in the yeere, 1524.

Willing faithfully to write and reduce in veritie Historiall, the great siege, cruel oppugnation, and piteous taking of the noble and renowned citie of Rhodes, the key of Christendome, the hope of many poore Christian men, withhelden in Turkie to saue and keepe them in their faith: the rest and pccrely solace of noble pilgrimes of the holy sepulchre of Iesu Christ and other holy places: the refuge and refreshing of all Christian people: hauing course of marchandise in the parties of Leuant, I promise to all estates that shall see this present booke, that I haue left nothing for feare of any person, nor preferred it for fauour. And first I shall shew the occasions that moued this cruell bloodshedder, enemy of our holy Christian faith, Sultan Soliman, now being great Turke, to come with a great hoste by sea and by lande, to besiege and assaile the space of five moneths, night and day, the noble and mightie citie of Rhodes, The pere of the incarnation of our Lord Iesu Christ, 1522.

The occasions why the great Turke came to besiege the Citie of Rhodes.

The first and principall cause was that he did consider and saue by experience, that there was none other towne nor place in Leuant that warred against him nor kept him in doubt, but this poore rocke of Rhodes. And hearing the continuall complaintes of his subiectes aswell of Syria, as of Turkie, for the domages and prizes dayly done of their bodiees and goods by Christian men of warre receiued into Rhodes: And also of the shippes and galleies of the religion, he tooke conclusion in himselfe, that if he might put the sayde towne in his power and subiection, that then he should be peaceable lord of all the parties of Leuant, and that his subiectes should complaine no moze to him.

The second, that he might followe the doings of his noble predecessours, and shew himselfe very heire of the mightie and victorious lord Sultan Selim his father, willing to put in execution the enterprise by him left the yeere one thousand five hundred twentie and one. The which Selim the great Turke put in all readinesse his armie to the number of three hundred thousand, proposing for to send them against Rhodes, if mortalitie had not happened in his host, and he afterward by the will of our lord was surprised and taken with death: wherefore he being in the latter ende of his daies, (as some Turkes and false christian men that were at this siege shew me) did charge by his testament, or caused to charge his sonne now being great Turke, that after his death hee should make his two first enterprises, the one against Bellegrado in Hungarie, and the other against Rhodes, for to get him honour, and to set his Countries and subiectes in rest and suretie. The which fatherly motion easilie entered into him and was imprinted in the heart and young will of the sayde Solymán his sonne, the which soone after the death of his father put in effect the first enterpryse, and raised an huge hoste both by water and by land, and went himselfe in person against Bellegrado, a right strong place in Hungarie. And after that hee had besieged it the space of two moneths or thereabout, for fault of ordnance and vitayles, it was yielded to him by composition the eight day of September, in the yeere of our lord, one thousand five hundred twentie and one. The sayd Solymán hauing this victorie, being swollen and raised in pride and vaine glory, turned his heart agaynst Rhodes. Where the least, he not ignorant of the strength of it, and considering the qualities of the people that were within it, of whom he should be well receiued as his predecessours had bene at other times, doubted much, and knew not how to furnish his enterpryse. For his capitaines and Bashas turned him from it as much as they might by many reasons, they knowing the force of it, saie onely Mustafa Bashá his brother in lawe, the which counsellor and put him in number to goe thither. Finally, hee purposed entirely to haue it by treason or by force. And also for the same cause and purpose, his father in his dayes had sent a Jewe physician into Rhodes as a spie, to haue the better knowledge of it: the sayd Solymán was informed that he was there yet, wherefore he sent him word that he should abide there still for the same cause. And gaue in charge to one of the chiefe men in Sio, to send vnto the sayd Jewe all things needefull to maintaine him. And the same Jewe wrote to him of Sio, vnder priuie wordes, all that was done in Rhodes to giue knowledge thereof to the great Turke: and the better to hide his treason, the sayde Jewe made himselfe to be baptised. And to bee the more named to be expert in Physike, he did some faire cures to such as were diseased, whereby he began to bee well trusted, and came in fauour with many substantiall folkes of the towne. Among all other things whereof hee aduertised the great Turke, one was of a wall that was taken downe for to be new builded at the bulwarke of Auernigne, certifying him that if hee came hastily with his hoste, hee might easilie and at vnawares surpriue the towne in such estate as it was at that time. Many other aduertisements and warnings hee shewed the Turke, which shall bee declared hereafter. But beside his aduertisement, the sayd great Turke stirred and prouoked by a false traitour, a Portugale knight of ours, that time Chancellor of the sayd holy Religion, a man of great authoritie, dignitie, and vnderstanding, and one of the principall lordes of the counsell of the same, named Sir Andrew de Merall, by little and little was moued and kindled to the sayd enterpryse of treason, whereof was no maruell, for it was a great hope and comfort to haue such a person for him, that knew all the estate and rule of the religion and of the towne. And for to declare the occasions of the cursed and unhappie will of the said traitor that had bene occasion of so great losse and damage, and shall be more at the length, if the diuine power set not to his hand.

A Portugale knight traitor.

And here it is manifestly to bee vnderstood of all men, that after the death of the noble and right prudent lord, Fabrice of Cacerro, great master of Rhodes, the sayd Sir Andrew enflamed with ambition and couetousnesse to bee great master, and seeing himselfe deceiued of his hope, by the election made the elue and twentieth day of January, of the right reuerend and illustre lord, Philip de Villiers Lisleadam, before him: from that time hee tooke so great enuie and desperation, enmitie and euill will, not onely against the sayde lord, but against all the holy religion, that hee set all his studie and purpose, to betray and sell his religion and the citie of Rhodes to the cursed misbeleeuers, forgetting the great honours and goodnesse that hee hath had of the religion, and hoped to receiue, with many other particuler pleasures that the sayd lord master had done to him. But the deuill, vnkindnesse, and wickednesse had so blinded the eyes of his thought, that hee in no wise could restraîne him, but at euery purpose that was spoken afoze him, hee was hoze and might not dissemble. And one day among other hee sayde before many knights, that hee would that his soule were at the deuill, and that Rhodes and the religion were lost. And many other foolish and dishonest purposes and wordes hee uttered, whereat none tooke heed, nor thought that hee had the courage to doe that thing that hee hath done. Howbeit, obstinate as Iudas, hee put in execution his cursed will: for soone after that the tidings of the election was sent Westward to the sayde noble lord, the sayd de Merall did send a Turke prisoner of his to Constantinople, vnder shadowe to fetch his ransome. By whom hee aduertised the great Turke and his counsell, of the maner and degree of Rhodes, and in what state and condicion the towne was in of all maner of things at that time, and what might happen of it, prouoking and stirring him to come with a great hoste to besiege the towne. And after the coming of the sayd reuerend lord great master, he gaue other aduise to the great Turke, shewing him that hee could neuer haue better time to come, seeing that the great master was new come, and part of the wall taken downe, and that all Rhodes was in trouble by occasion of some Italian knights, rebels agaynst the lord great master: of the which rebellion he was causer, the better to bring his cursed mind to passe: and also gaue the sayde great Turke knowledge that all Chyistian princes were busie, warring each vpon other, and that he should not doubt but if the rebellion lasted among them, the towne should be his without faile, as it is scene by experience. And for lacke of succours of euery part, and especially of such as might easily haue holpen vs beyng our neighbours, with their gallies, and men of warre, wherefore it is now in the handes of the enemies of the chyistian faith. The which monitions and reasons of the false traitor being vnderstood and pondered by the great Turke and his counsell, it was considered of them not to loose so good occasion and time. Wherefore hee made most extreme diligence to rigge and apparell many ships & vessels of diuers sorts, as galliasses, gallies, pallasozes, fustes, and brigantine, to the number of 350. sailes and moe.

When the prisoner that the sayd de Merall did send into Turkie had done his commission, hee returned into Rhodes, whereof euery man had maruell, And many folkes deemed euil of his coming againe, as of a thing vnaccustomed, but none durst say any thing, seeing the sayd de Merall of so great authoritie and dignitie, and he cherished the sayd prisoner more then he was wont to doe. Therefore belike hee had well done his message, and had brought good tidings to the damnable and shamefull mind of the sayd traitor de Merall.

How the great Turke caused the passages to be kept, that none should beare tidings of his hoste to Rhodes.

The great Turke intending with great diligence to make readie his hoste both by sea and by land, the better to come to his purpose, and to take the towne vniuersally as he was advertised, thought to keepe his doings as secret as hee might, and commaunded that none of his subiects should goe to Rhodes for any manner of thing. And likewise he tooke all the barks and brigantines out of the hauens and portes in those coastes, because they should giue no knowledge of his armie. And also hee made the passages by land to bee kept, that none should passe. Howbeit, so great apparell of an armie could not bee long kept close: for the spies which the lord great master had sent into Turkie, brought tidings to the castle of saint Peter, and to Rhodes, of all that was sayd and done in Turkie. Neuerthelesse, the sayd lord gaue no great credence to all that was brought and told, because that many yeeres before, the predecessours of the great Turke had made great armies: and alway it was sayd that they went to Rhodes, the which came to none effect. And it was holden for a mocke and a by-word in many places, that the Turke would goe to besiege Rhodes. And for this reason doubt was had of this last armie, and some thought that it should haue gone into Cyprus or to Cataro, a land of the lordship of Venice. Howbeit the great master not willing to bee taken vniuersally, but the meane while as careful and diligent for the wealth of his towne, & his people, vnderstanding these tidings of the Turkes armie, did all his diligence to repaire and strengthen the towne. Amongst all other things to build vp, and raise the bulwarke of Auvergne, and to cleanse and make deeper the ditches. And the more to cause the workemen to haue thym in their businesse, the sayd lord ouertawe them twise or thysie euery day.

How the lord great master counselled with the lordes for provision for the towne.

Then the sayd reuerend lord thought to furnish and store the towne with more vitailles for the sustenance thereof, and for the same many times hee spake with the lordes that had the handling and rule of the treasure, and of the expenses thereof in his absence, and since his coming: That is to wit, with the great Commander Gabriel de pommerolles, lieutenant of the sayd lord: The Turcoplier Sir Iohn Bourgh of the English nation: and the Chancellor Sir Andrew de Meral, of whom is spoken afoze, and of his vntruth agaynst his religion. The which thre lordes sayd, that hee should take no thought for it, for the towne was well stored with vitailles for a great while, and that there was wheate ynough till new come in: Notwithstanding it were good to haue more, or the siege were laied afoze the towne, and therefore it were behoouefull to send for wheate and other necessaries into the West for succours of the towne, and at that time to purcyp for euery thing.

Sir Ioh. Bourgh
the English
Turcoplier.

Of the prouision for vitailles and ordinance of warre.

AS touching the store and ordinance of warre, the sayd lordes affirmed that there was p^r enough for a yeere and more, whereof the contrary was found, for it failed a moneth of the citie was beleied. It is of trueth that there was great store, and to haue lasted longer then it did, But it was needfull to spend largely at the first conning of the enemies to keepe them from conning neere, and from bringing earth to the ditch sides as they did. And moreover you are to consider the great number of them, and their power that was s^yred round about the towne, giuing vs so many assaults and skirmishes in so many places as they did, and by the space of fire whole moneths day and night assailing vs, that much ordinance and store was wasted to withstand them in all points. And if it failed, it was no maruell. Howbeit the noble lord great master prouided speedily for it, and sent Brigantines to Lango, to the castle of saint Peter, and to the castles of his isle Feraculous and Lyndo, for to bring powder and saltpeter to strength the towne, but it sufficed not.

And for to speake of the puruiance of vitailles, it was aduised by the lord great master and his three lords, that it was time to send some ships for wheat to places thereabout, before the Turkes hoste were come thither. And for this purpose was appointed a ship named the Galliege, whose captaine hight Brambois, otherwise called Wolfe, of the Almane nation, an expert man of the sea, the which made so good diligence, that within a moneth he perfozmed his voiage, and brought good store of wheat from Naples and Romania, which did vs great comfort.

How a Brigantine was sent to Candie for wine, and of diuers ships that came to helpe the towne.

After this, a motion was made to make prouision of wine for the towne, for the men of Candie durst not saile for to bring wine to Rhodes as they were woont to doe for feare of the Turkes hoste: and also they of the towne would send no ship into Candie, fearing to be taken and enclosed with the sayd hoste by the way. Howbeit some merchants of the towne were willing to haue aduicured themselves in a good ship of the religion, named the Mary, for to haue laden her with wine in Candie. But they could not agree with the three lordes of the treasure, and their let was but for a litle thing: and all the cause came of the sayd traitour de Merall, faining the wealth of the treasure; for he intended another thing, and brake this good and profitable enterprise and will of the sayd merchants, seeing that it was hurtfull to the Turke, whose part the said traitour held in his diuelish heart: that notwithstanding, the reuerend lord great master, that in all things from the beginning to the ende, hath alway shewed his good will, and with all diligence and right that might bee requisite to a soueraigne captaine and head of warre, found other expedience, and sent a Brigantine into Candie, in the which he sent a brother sergeant named Anthonie of Bosus, a well spighted man and wise, that by his wisdom brought so well, that within a small time he brought fifteene vessels called Gripes, laden with wine, and with them men of warre the which came vnder shadow of those wines, because the gouernours of Candie durst let none of their men goe to the succour of Rhodes for feare of the Turke. And beside those fifteene Gripes came a good ship whose capitaine and owner was a rich pong gentleman Venetian, Messire Iohn Antonio de Bonaldi, which of his good will came with his ship laden with 700. butts of wine to succour the towne with his person and folkes, whose good and lovable will I leave to the consideration of the readers of this present booke. For hee being purposed to haue had his wines to Constantinople, or he was enforzmed of the busines of Rhodes, and was in the porté du Castell in Candie, would not beare his vitailles to the enemies of the faith, but came out and returned his way toward Rhodes, forgetting all particular profite and aduantage. He being arriued at Rhodes, dispatched and sold his wine, which was a great encrease and comfort for the towne. And when he had so done, he presented his person, his ship, and his folke, to the reuerend great master, the which retained him, and set him in wages of the Religion. And during the siege, the sayd capitaine behaued him woorthily in his person, and put himselfe in such places as woorthy men ought to be. Spending his goods largely without demanding any payment or recompense for his doing, of the Religion.

How the corne was shorne downe halfe ripe and brought into the towne for feare of the Turkes hoste.

During these things, the reuerend lord great master carefull and busie to haue euery thing necessary, as men and other strengths, sent vessels called brigantines, for to cause the waf-ters

tters of the sea to come into Rhodes for the keeping and fortifying of the towne, the which at the first sending came and presented their persons and ships to the seruice of the religion.

Harnest in May vill and May.

After that the sayd lord caused to shere downe the Rie of his isle, and caused it to bee brought into the towne, which was done in Aprill: and then in May in some places, he made to there the wheate halfe ripe, howbeit the most part was left in the fields, because the Turkes holste was come out of the freights of Constantinople. And doubting that any number of ships should come befoze to take the people of the sayd Isle vnawares, the sayd lord made them to leaue shering of wheate, and caused the people of the furthest part of the Isle to come into the towne.

While that the great master prouided for all things after the course of time and tidings that hee had, there arrived a Carak of Genoa laden with spicerie from Alexandria, the which passed befoze the port of Rhodes the eight day of Aprill, and rid at anker at the fosse, 7, or 8. miles from the towne, for to know and heare tidings of the Turkish holste. Then the lord willing to furnish him with people as most behoouefull for the towne, sent a knight of Prouence named sir Anastase de sancta Camilla, commander de la Tronquiere to the captaine of the Carak, praying him to come into the haven with his ship for the defence of the towne, profering him what he would, assuring him his ship. The captaine excused him, saying, that the merchandise was not his owne, but belonged to diuers merchants to whom he must preb account. Howbeit at the last after many wordes and promises to him made, hee came into the haven, the which captaine was named messire Domingo de Fournati, and hee in his person behaued him valiauntly in the time of the sayd siege.

How the great master caused generall musters to be made, and sent a vessell to the Turkes nauie, of whom he receiued a letter.

After the moneth of Aprill the lord master seeing that the Turkes holste drew neere, and that he had the most part of the watters within the towne, he caused generall musters of men of armes to be made. And began at the knights, the which vpon holy Rood day in May made their musters befoze the Commissioners ordained by the sayd lord in places deputed to each of them called Aulberge. The which Commissioners made repoze to the lordes that they had found the knights in good order of harnesse & other things necessary for warre, & their arate faire & proper, with crosses on them. When the muster of the knights was done, the lord master thought to make the musters of them of the towne, and strangers together: but his wisdom perceiued that harme should come thereby, rather then good, doubting that the number of people should not bee so great as he would, or needed to haue, whereof the great Turke might haue knowledge by goers and comers into Rhodes, and therefore he caused them of the towne to make their musters seuerall by bandes and companies, and the strangers also by themselves, to the end that the number should not bee knownen, notwithstanding that there was good quantitie of good men and well willing to defend themselves. And the more to hearten and giue them courage and good will, some knights of the Crosse, decked their men with colours and deuises, and tooke with them men of the towne and strangers, and with great noyse of trumpets and timbrels, they made many musters, as enuying each other which should keepe best aray and order, and haue the fairest company. It was a great pleasure to see them all so well agree, and so well willing.

The number of the men of the towne amounted and were esteemed, ther 02 foure thousand, beside men of the villages, that might be 1500. or 2000.

The eight day of the same moneth, the Turkes hearing of those tidings, made a fire for a token in a place called le Fisco, in the maine land right against Rhodes. And certaine dayes afore they had made another, that is to weer, when the ship of a knight named Menerow went thither, and had with him the clarke of the gallies named Iaques truchman, the which vnder shadow to speake with him, was withholden of the Turkes. For the great Turke had commanded to take him or some other man of the Rhodes to haue perfect knowledge in what estate the towne was then in every thing. And they of the towne weening that the second fire was for to deliuer Iaques, the reuerend lord great master sent one of his gallialles, whose patron was called messire Boniface of Prouence, to know the cause thereof. And when hee arrived at the sayd place of le Fisco, he demaunded of the Turkes wherefore they had made the token of fire. And they said that it was because their lord had sent a letter to the great master, but as yet it was not come, and desired him to tary till it were brought. The patron as warie & wise in the businesse of the sea, thought in himselfe that the Turkes made such prolonging to some euill intent, or to surprize his vessell being alone, wherefore hee bade them giue him the letter speedily, or els he would goe his way, and neither tary for letter nor other thing: and told them of the euill and dishonest deed that they had done the dayes afoze, to withhold the clarke vnder their wordes and safeconduct : and therewith he turned his galliasse to haue gone away. The Turkes seeing that, gaue him the letter, the which he tooke, and when he was arrived at Rhodes, he presented it to the lord great master, which assembled the lordes of his counsell, and made it to be red : The tenor wherof was such as foloweth.

The copie of the letter that the great Turke sent to the lord great master, and to the people of the Rhodes.

Sultan Solymán Basha by the grace of God, right mightie emperoz of Constantinople, and of himselfe holding both the lands of Persia, Arabia, Syria, Mecha, and Ierusalem ; of Asia, Europe, Egypt, and of all the Sea, lord and possessor : To the reuerend father lord Philip, great master of Rhodes, to his counsaillors, and to all the other citizens great and small, greeting. Sending conuenient and woorthy salutations to your reuerences, wee giue you to weet, that we haue receiued your letter sent vnto our imperiall maiestie by George your seruant, the tenor wherof we doe well vnderstand ; and for this occasion we send vnto you this our present commaundement, to the end that we will that ye know surely how by our sentence we will haue that Isle of Rhodes for many damages and euill deeds which we haue, and heare from day to day of the sayd place done to vs and our subiects, and ye with your good will shall hold it of vs & doe vs obisance, and giue the citie to mine imperiall maiestie. And we sweare by God that made heauen and earth, and by 26000. of our prophets, and by the 4. Disc that fell from the skies, and by our first prophet Mahomet, that if ye doe vs homage, and yeeld you with good will vpon these othes, all you that will abide in the sayd place, great and small, shall not need to feare perill nor damage of mine imperiall maiestie, neither you, your goods, nor your men : and who so will goe to any other place with his goods and household, may so doe, and who so will dwell and inhabite in any other places vnder mine Imperiall maiestie, may remaine where they like best, without feare of any person. And if there bee any of the principals and woorthy men among you that is so disposed, wee shall giue him wages and pzonission greater then hee hath had. And if any of you will abide in the sayd isle, yee may so doe after your auncient vsages and customes, and much better. And therefore if that yee will accept these our othes and intreatings, send vnto vs a man with your letters to mine Imperiall maiestie, or els know yee that wee will come vpon you with all pzonissions of warre, and thereof shall come as it pleaseth God. And this wee doe, to the end that ye may know, and that ye may not say but we haue giuen you warning. And if ye doe not thus with your good will, wee shall hault and vndermine your foundations in such manner, that they shall be torne vpside downe, and shall make you slaues, and cause you to die, by the grace of God, as we haue done many, and hereof haue ye no doubt. Written in our court at Constantinople the first day of the moneth of Iune.

How the Turkes came to land in the Isle of Lango, and were driuen to their ships againe by the Prior of S. Giles.

When the lord great master and his counsell had heard the tenor of the letter, they would giue none answer to the great Turke, but that he should be receiued with good strokes of artillerie. So that to a foolish demand behoued none answer. And it was very like that he would haue nothing. For five dayes after, that was the 14. day of the said moneth of Iune, the Bizantines that went toward Sio to know of the said armie, came againe and sayd, that of a tructh the said armie was comming, and that nigh to Lango an Isle of the religion, an 100. mile from Rhodes, they had scene and told 30. sailes that were most part gallies and fustes : the which vessels set men on land in y^e isle of Lango. The prior of S. Giles, Messire pre Iohn de Bidoux commander of the sayd place, taried not long from horebacke with his knights and people of the isle, and he met so well with the Turkes, that he droue them to their ships, and slew a certaine number of them : and of the side of Pre Iohn some were hurt, and his horse was slaine. When the enemies were entered into their gallies, they went to a place called castile Iudeo on the maine land, betweene the sayd isle of Lango and the castile of S. Peter.

How part of the nauie and armie of the great Turke came before the citie of Rhodes.

The 18. day of the said moneth of Iune, these 30. gallies went from the sayd place, and passed by the Cape of Crion, entering the gulfes of Epimes beside Rhodes, and were discouered from the shade of the hill of Salaco, a castile in the isle of Rhodes. On the morow they came out of the gulfes by plaine day, and sailing along by the coasts, they entered into a haven on maine land called Maifata, where they abode three dayes. When they went from thence, and returned to the gulfe of Epimes, where they abode two dayes and two nights.

The 24 day of the same moneth they issued out of Epimes, and trauesing the chanell, they came to the yle of Rhodes in a place before a castle called Faues, and they went to land, and burnt a great field of coyne the same day, which was the feast of S. Iohn Baptist our patron. The guard of a castle named Absito in the yle of Rhodes discovered and spied the great hoste, and in great haste brought word to the lord maister, and sayd that the sayd hoste, that was in so great number of sailes that they might not be numbred, was entered into the gulfe of Epimes. The 30 sailes that lay in the yle arose in the night, and went to the sayd hoste in the gulfe.

The 26 day of June the sayd great hoste arose and went out of Epimes an houre after the sun rising, & trauesing the chanell, they came to a place called the Fosse, eight miles from the towne. And the 30 first sailes turned backe toward the cape of S. Martin and other places to watch for ships of Chriftian men, if any passed by to Rhodes. The great hoste abode still till noone or one of the clocke, and then arose, not all, but about 800 or 1000 ships, as gallies, galliasses, and fusts: and passed one after another before the towne and haven of Rhodes three miles off, and came to shore in a place nigh to land, called Perambolin, six miles from the towne, in the which place the sayd hoste abode from that time to the end of that unhappy siege.

The number and names of the vessels that came to besiege Rhodes.

The number of the ships were these: 30 galliasses, 103 gallies, as well bastards as subtile ma-boiners, 15 cassoues, 20 fusts, 64 great ships, sixe or seuen gallions, & 30 gallies, beside the nauy that waited for Chriftian men, if any came to succour vs. These were the vessels that came at the first to lay the siege. And such that the sayd hoste came out of Perambolin, there came from Syria 20 other sailes, as well gallies as fusts. And many other ships came such and ioyned with the sayd army in the time of the sayd siege. And it was sayd that there were 400 sailes and more.

The same day that part of the hoste came to the sayd place, the reuerend lord great maister ordeined a great byzantine to send into the West, to certifie our holy father the pope, and the Chriftian princes how the Turks army was afore Rhodes. And in the sayd vessell he sent two knights, one a French man named Sir Claude danfoyuille called Villiers, and Sir Loys de Sidonia a Spaniard: and they went to the pope and to the emperor.

After the coming of the Turks nauy into the sayd place, it was 14 or 15 dayes or they set any ordinance on land, great or small, or any quantity of men came on shore, whereof we marueiled. And it was tolde vs by some that came out of the campe, and also by the spies that the lord great maister had sent abroad arayed as Turks, that they abode the commandement of their great lord, untill the hoste by land were come into the campe. Howbeit there came some number for to view the towne, but they went priuily, for the ordinance of the towne shot without cease.

All this while the gallies and galliasses went and came to land, byzinging bitale and people. At the which ships passing nigh the town, were shot many strokes with bombardes, which made some slaughter of our enemies: and when the most part of them was past, they began to set ordinance on the land with great diligence. Then the lord great maister departed from his palace, and lodged him nigh a church called The victory, because that place was most to be doubted: and also that at the other siege the great businesse and assault was there.

How the lord great maister made his petition before the image of S. Iohn, and offered him the keyes of the towne.

The day before were made many predications and sermons, and the last was in the church of S. Iohn Baptist. When the sermon was done, a pontificall Masse was celebrate with all solemnities, and all the reliques taken downe, and the lord great maister and all his knights with great deuotions and reuerence heard it. And when the Masse was ended, the lord great maister made a pious oration or prayer before Saint Iohn Baptist his protectour: and aboue all other wordes, which were too long to tell, he besought him meckly that it would please him to take the keyes of that miserable city. The which keyes he presented and layed vpon the altar before the image, beseeching S. Iohn to take the keeping and protection thereof, and of all the religion, as by his grace he had giuen to him vnworthy, the gouerning vnto that day: and by his holy grace to defend them from the great power of the enemies that had besieged them,

How the women slaues would haue set fire in the towne.

The eight day of July it was knowne that the Turkish women being slaues and seruants in many houses of the towne, had appointed to set fire in their masters houses at the first assault that should be made, so the end that the men should leaue their posters & defenses to go and saue their houses and goods. And it was found that a woman of Marchopora being a slaue, was first moouer thereof, the which was taken and put to execution.

The same day some of our men went out for to skirmish with the Turkes, and many of them were slaine with shot of our artillerie, and of our men but one.

How the Turkes layd their artillerie about the towne, and of the maner and quantitie of their pieces and gunshot.

The 18. day of July, for the beginning and first day they set vp a mantellet, vnder the which they put three or foure meane pieces, as sacres; wherewith they shot against the posters of England and Prouence. But the mantellet was soone broken and cast downe, and their pieces destroyed with the shot of the wall, and they that shot them were most part slaine. As this first mantellet was broken, by the great and innumerable people that they had, they set all their ordinance on land, and caried it to the places where it should be bent, or nigh thereby.

And the 29. day of the same moneth, they set vp two other mantellets. One beside a church of saint Cosme and Damian, and another toward the West. And from these mantellets they shot great pieces, as Culuerings, double gunnes, and great bombards against the walls of England and Spaine, to the which mantellets the ordinance of the towne gaue many great strokes, and often brake them. And the more to grieue the towne and to feare vs, they set vp many other mantellets in diuers places, almost round about the towne, and they were reckoned foure score: the which number was well lessened by the great quantitie of strokes of artillerie shot out of the towne from many places.

The artillerie of the Turkes was such as followeth.

First there were sixe great gunnes, cannons perriers of brasse, that shot a stone of three foote and a halfe: also there were 15. pieces of iron that shot stones of five or sixe spannes about. Also there were 14. great bombards that shot stones of eleuen spans about. Also there were twelue basiliskes, whereof they shot but with 8. that is to weete, foure shot against the posters of England and Spaine, and two against the gate of Italy: the other two shot sometime against Saint Nicholas tower. Also there were 15. double gunnes casting bullets as basiliskes. The meane shot, as sacres and pasculans, were in great number. The handgunshot was innumerable and incredible. Also there were twelue potgunnes of brasse that shot by ward, whereof eight were set behind the church of S. Cosme and Damian, and two at saint John de la Fontaine toward the port of Italy, and the other two afore the gate of Auvergne, the which were shot night and day: and there were three sorts of them, whereof the greatest were of sixe or seuen spannes about. And the sayd stones were cast into the towne to make murder of people, which is a thing very inhumane and fearefull, which maner of shooting is little vsed amongst christian men. Howbeit by euident miracle, thanked be God, the sayd pieces did no great harme, and slew not past 24. or 25. persons, and the most part women and children, and they began to shoot with the said pieces from the 19. day of the same moneth, vnto the end of August, & it was accounted that they shot 2000. times, more or lesse.

Then the enemies were warned by the Jewe that wrote letters to them of all that was done and sayd in the towne, that the sayd potgunnes did no harme: wherefore they were angry, for they thought that they had slaine the third part of our people: and they were counselled by him to leaue that shooting, for it was but time lost, and powder wasted, and then they shot no more with them. It is of a crueltie that they shot with the sayd potgunnes 12. or 15. times with bullets of brasse or copper, full of wild fire, and when they were in the ayre, they flamed forth, and in falling on the ground, they brake, and the fire came out and did some harme. But at the last wee knew the malice thereof, and the people was warie from comming neere to them, and therefore they did hurt no more folke.

How the captaine Gabriel Martinigo came to the succor of Rhodes; and all the slaues were in danger to be slaine.

The 24. day of the same moneth a brigantine arrived that was sent afore into Candie, where came a worthy captaine named Gabriel Martinigo with two other captains. And there went went to receiue him messieur prou lohn prioz of S. Giles, and the prioz of Nauarre. Then after his honourable receiuing as to him well appertained, they brought him befoze the lord great master, that louingly receiued him, and he was gladly seene and welcommed of the people, as a man that was named very wise and ingenious in feats of warre. Then came a Spaniard rencgado from the host, that gaue vs warning of all that was done in the field, and of the appochoing by the trenches that our enemies made.

And in likewise there arose a great noise in the towne, that the slaues Turkes that brought for vs in the ditches had slaine their keepers, and would haue fled, which was not so. Neuertheless, the rumour was great, and they rang alarme: wherefoze the sayd slaues coming to prison, as it was ordeined in al the alarmes, were met of the people, which in great anger put them to death: so that there were slaine an hundred & moe the same day. And if the lord great master had not commanded that none should hurt them, they had bene all slaine, and there were fiftene hundredeth of them: which slaues did great seruice in time of the siege: for they laboured dayly to make our defences, and to cast earth out of the ditches, and in all works they were necessary at our needs.

The 25 day of the sayd moneth many of our men went out for to skirmish in the field and made great murder of Turkes, and in likewise did our arillery. And it is to be noted that the 28 day of the same moneth the great Turke in person passed le Fisco a haven in the maine land with a galley and a full, and arriued about noone, where his army lay, the which day may be called vnhappie for Rhodes. For his coming, his presence and continuall abiding in the fielde is and hath bene cause of the victorie that he hath had. When the gallie that he came in was arriued, all the other shippes of the hoste hanged banners aloft in their toppes and on their sayle perdes.

Soone after that the Turke was arriued, he went to land, and mounted on his horse, and rode to his pavilion which was in a high place called Megalandra, foure or five miles fro the towne out of the danger of the gunne shot. And on the morow, as it was reported to vs, hee came to a Church nigh the towne called Saint Steven, for to viewe the Towne and fortresses, whereas they had set vp mantellets for to lay their ordinance.

The last day of Iuly, one of our brigandines went out with a good company of men arrayed as Turkes, and some of them could speake Turkish, and went by night to lande through the Turkes hoste, and demaunded if there were any that would passe ouer into Turkie, that they should haste them to come. The Turkes weening that they had bene of Turkie, there entered a 12. persons, the which were carried to Rhodes, by whom we knew what they did in the campe.

The first day of August the Capitaine Gabriel Martinigo was made knight of the order of the religion by the lord great Master, and was made the first auncient of the Italian nation, of the first balliage or priozie that should be vacant. And in the meane season the religion should giue him twelue hundred ducates for pension euery yere, and the same day he was receiued to the Councill in the roome of a baylife.

The fift day of the sayd moneth our master gunner was slaine with a gunne, which was great losse for vs at that time.

The 15. day of the sayd moneth was knowen and taken for a traitor, Messire Iohn Baptista, the physician aforesayd, which confessed his euill and diuelish doings, and had his head stricken of.

Of the marueilous mounts that the Turks made afore the towne, and how the capitaines were ordered in the trenches.

After the coming of the great Turke, the enemies began to shoote with ordinance of another sort then they did befoze, and specially with harquebushes and handguns, and also to make their trenches and appzoches. And also they did moze diligence then afoze, to bring y^e earth nigh the towne with spades and pickaxes. And it is to weet, that they mooued the earth from halfe a mile off, and there were shot out of the towne innumerable strokes with ordinance against the sayd earth, and innumerable quantitie of people hid behind the sayd earth, were slaine. Neuertheless they neuer left working till they had brought it to the byminnes of the ditches: and when it was there, they raised it higher and higher in strengthening it behind. And in conclusion the sayd earth was higher then the wals of the towne by 10. or 12. foote, and it seemed a hill. And it was agaynst the gate of Auvergne and Spaine, and beat our men that were at the gates & bulwarks, in such wise, that none durst be seene till certaine defences and repaires were made of planks and boards to couer our people and keepe them from the shot. And at the gate of Italy was made such another heape, and in none other part.

When the trenches were thus made to the ditches, the enemies made holes in the wals of the ditch ditch outward : wherewith they shot infinitely with handgunnes at our men as well on the walles as on the bulwarke, and slew many of them. Then the basshas and capitaines entred into the trenches, ech to his place after their order and dignity : that is to wit, Mustafa Bassha as chiefe capitaine entred the trench direct to the bulwarke of England with his people & capitaines vnder him. Pery Bassha went to the trenches against the gate of Italy with his folkes and capitaines vnder him. Acmek Bassha was in the trenches of Auvergne and Spaine with the Aga of the Janizaires and the Beglarby of Romany with him. The Beglarby of Nacolia was in the trenches of Prouence. Allibey was with his company against the gardins of saint Anthony on the North side, and diuers other capitaines with him, and set his ordinance against the wall of the gate of Almaine, which was but weake, and set vp seuen mantellets by the milles toward the West : and by the space of eight or nine dayes they beat vpon the same wall ; which put vs in great feare, if they had continued. Howbeit the noble lord great master forthwith caused repaires to be made within, and planks & tables to be set to fortifie the sayd weake wall : and aboue there from the morning til night, to cause it to be the more hasted. The artillery of the gate of Almaine, and the Gallif of the gate of the campe and of the palais beat so foze and so often vpon the sayd mantellets that it wearied the enemies to make and repaire them so often : and they tooke vp the pieces, and bare them away. And also they could not well beat the sayd wall because the byminnes of the ditch without were almost as hie as the wall that they beat. But of they bare the artillery away, they beat the steeple of S. Johns church so, that the most part was broken and cast downe. The fore sayd mantellets were appointed to beat S. Nicholas tower, and by the space of ten or twelue dayes they shot soze against it : but they had so sharpe and vigozous answere, that there was not one mantellet that abode whole an houre. The capitaine of the sayd tower and his folke did such diligence and businesse in shooting off their pieces, that the enemies turst set by no more mantellets by day, nor shoot no more but onely by night, while the Moone did shine, which is a thing worthy of memory, of maruaile, and of praise. At the last when they had beaten against the sayd tower a certaine time, seeing that it furthered nothing, they tooke their ordinance fro thence, and bare it where they thought best.

During the shot in the sayd place, the other capitaines were not idle nor in a sleepe, but without cease night and day they beat the wall of England and Spaine, and set foure or five mantellets against it, shooting great bombards, whereof some of the stones were five or six spannes about, and some other of nine or ten : and within a moneth and lesse they cast downe the wall almost euen smooth with the Barbican. And when the sayd wall was so beaten, they set to beat the bulwarke of Spaine for to raise the defences : and in their trenches they set three great bombards, which shot stones of eleuen spannes in compasse, and with the sayd pieces they beat the sayd bulwarke and wall in such wise, that they made great bracks, and the stones and earth that fell, serued the enemies for ladders, so that they might come vpon the plaine ground. In like sort they raised the defences from the height of the bulwarke at the posterne of Prouence, and set three great pieces on the byminne of the ditch, which shot stones of eleuen spannes against the wall, and within a while they made a breach as at the posterne of Spaine. The artillery of the towne did shoot without cease against the mantellets, and brake many of them, but they made other as it is sayd in the nightes. For they had all things that belonged to them, & needed. And out of the posterne of England was shot a gunne that brake downe one of the sayd mantellets, and hit vpon one of the pieces, and slew foure or five men, and bare away both the legs of the master of the ordinance, which died soone after : whereof the great Turke was very ill content, and sayd that he had rather haue lost one of his basshas or capitaines then the sayd master. Also it is to knowen that there were three or foure mantellets addressed against the plaine ground of Italy, and by continuall beating of shot that they made, there was also a breach, and by the earth and stones that were fallen, they might come by to it.

Of the politike repaires and defences that the ingenious capitaine Gabriel Martinigo made within the towne against the breaches in the walles.

The capitaine Gabriel Martinigo, prompt, diligent, and expert to giue remedies to the needfull places, forthwith caused to make the trauerles vpon the wall whereas the breach was, with good repaires, and gunnes small and great which were set in the sayd trauerles, the which shot not onely at the breaches but to the trenches, and made great murder of enemies as well at the assaults that they made as other whiles. And beside the trauerles, the sayd capitaine planted small artillery, as harquebushes, and handgunnes vpon certaine houses within the towne, that Good open against the breach, with good repaires: and from that place great slaughter of Turks was made at the assaults. Also it is of trueth that beside the sayd mantellets that shot against the wall of England and Spaine with great bombards, were two mantellets in an hie place toward the way to the garden of Maupas, in the which were certaine double gunnes, as basilisks with hollow stones and wilde fire in them, which shot against the wall into the towne at all auentures for to make murder of people: howbeit, thanked be God, they did no great harme but to the houses.

After these great & terrible beatings, and that the enemies had way to mount vpon the towne walles, and come to hand with vs by crauersing of their trenches to the fallen earth within the breach moze surely, and without hurt of our gunshot, shooting thow holes that they made in the walles of the ditch without, they cast by much stone and earth, because it should couer them from the shot of the bulwarke of Auvergne. And also they shot feruently against the bulwarke of Spaine, for to raise the defences, of the which at the last they raised the most part, reseruing only a few gunners below in the mine of the sayd bulwarke, which little or nothing damaged them. And this is touching the gunshot, whereof I say not the third part, because it is a thing incredible to them that haue not seene it. For some dayes they shot with those great bombards that were on the hyminne of the ditch, and from the mantellets bent against the wall of England and Spaine 20 or 30 times and moze. And I beleue verily that since the creation of the world such artillery, and so great quantity was neuer bent and layed before any towne as hath bene against Rhodes at this siege. Wherefore it is no maruell if the walles be and haue bene beaten downe, and if there be breaches and clefts in many places.

Of the mines that the Turks made: and how they overthrew part of the bulwarke of England.

AND because, as it is sayd before, that the greatest hope that the enemies had to get the towne of Rhodes, was by mining, therefore now after that I haue spoken of the gunshot and beatings, I shall shew of the mines that the Turks made, the which were in so great quantity, and in so many places, that I beleue the third part of the towne was mined: and it is found by account made, that there were about 60 mines, howbeit, thanked be God, many of them came not to effect, by occasion of the countermines that they within made, and also trenches that the right prudent lord the great master caused to be made deepe within the ditches, vnto two or three foot of water. The which trenches and certaine pits that he had caused in the sayd ditches to be wrought, or the host arrived, serued right well since: for night and day there were men in them to watch and hearken when the enemies mined, for to meet them, and cut their way, as was done many times.

And for to speake of the mines that had effect, and damaged vs, it is to wit, that the fourth day of September, about foure houres after noone, the enemies put fire in two mines, one was betwene the posterne of Spaine and Auvergne, which did no hurt but to the Barbican. The other was at the bulwarke of England, which was so fell and strong, that it caused most part of the towne to shake, and cast down a great part of the sayd bulwarke at the spring of the day: and by the earth and stones that fell into the ditches, the enemies came vpon the bulwarke with their banners, and fought soze and mightily with our men, not with hands, but with shot of handgunnes. The lord great master that was come 15 dayes or moze with his succours to the sayd bulwarke, went with his company to helpe them that fought. After that they had fought the space of two or three houres, the enemies repelled and driuen backe by our men from the sayd bulwarke, and beaten with ordynance on euery side, withdrew them with their losse, shame, and damage. And this was the first victorie that our lord gaue vs, and there abode of our enemies a thousand and moze.

When this assault was done, they made another at the breach in the wall of Spaine, and mounted vpon it, but the ordynance of the traierces of the walles and of the houses made so faire a resistance, that they were very willing to withdraue themselves: for at the retreat, and also at their comming the sayd ordynance of the bulwarke did them great damage, albeit that they had made some repaire of earth. Of our men died that day 25 or thereabout, as well knights as other. And the same day in the morning departed out of this world Gabriel de Pomerolles lieutenant to the lord master, which on a certaine day before fell from the wall as he went to see the trenches in the ditches, and hurt his breast, and for fault of good attendance he fell into a fever, whereof he died.

How the Turks assailed the bulwarke of England, and how they were driuen away.

THE ninth day of the sayd moneth, at leuen in the morning the enemies put fire in two mines; one at the posterne of Prouence, which had none effect: the other was at the bulwarke of England,

30 thousand & more bulwarke.

England, which felled another piece nigh to that that was cast downe afore. And the sayd mine was as fierce as the other, or moze, for it seemed that all the bulwarke went downe, and almost all they that were in it ranne away. And when the stander of the religion came into the sayd bulwarke, the enemies were at the breach ready to haue entred: but when they saw the sayd stander, as people lost and ouercome, they went downe againe. Then the artillery of the bulwarke of Quosquino, and of other places, found them well enough, and slew many of them. Howbeit, their captaines made them to returne with great strokes of swordes and other weapons, and to remount vpon the earth fallen from the sayd bulwarke, and pighte seuen banners nigh to our repaire. Then our men fought with moris pikes and fired speares against them the space of thre whole houres, till at the last they being well beaten with great ordinance and small on euery side, withdrew themselves. And of their banners our men gate one, for it was not possible to get any moze: for all one as any of our men went by on our repaires, he was slaine with small gunnes of the trenches, and holes made in the wailes of our ditches. And there was slaine of our enemies that day at the assault 2000 of meane men, and thre persons of estate, which lay dead along in the ditch, with faire and rich harnesse. And it was reported to vs from the campe, they were thre saniaebis, that is to say, great seneschalles or stewards. And of Christian men of our part abode about thirty persons. And this was the second victorie giuen to vs by the grace diuine.

Two thousand Turks slaine at the English
bulwarke.

How Sir Iohn Bourgh Turcoplier of England was slaine at an assault of the English bulwarke.

The 17 day of the same moneth, about midday, the enemy came againe to giue another assault to the sayd bulwarke, at the same place afore sayd, without setting of fire in mines, and brought fise banners with them, nigh to the repaires. Then was there strong fighting on both parts, and there were gotten two of their banners, of the which sir Christopher Valdenare, that time Castellaine of Rhodes, gate one: the other was in the hands of sir Iohn Bourgh Turcoplier of England, chiefe captaine of the succours of the sayd posterne of England, a vallant man & hardy: and in holding of it he was slaine with the stroke of a handgunne, which was great damage. The sayd banner was recouered by one of our men. And after long fighting on both sides, the enemies seeing that they got nothing but stripes, returned into their trenches. At the sayd fray the lord pziot of S. Giles pre Iohn was hurt thorow the necke with a handgun, and was in great danger of death, but he escaped and was made whole. The same day, and the same houre of the sayd assault, the enemies mounted to the breach in the wall of Spaine, and came to the repaires to the handes of our men, and fought a great while: but the great quantitie of artillery that was shot so busily and so sharply from our trauerles on ech side, and out of the bulwarks of Auvergne and Spaine, skirmished them so well, that there abode as many at that assault as at the other of England, well neere to the number of 5000. And they withdrew themselves with their great losse and confusion, which was the thirde time that they were chased and ouercome: thanked be our Lord, which gaue vs the force and power so to doe, for they were by estimation a hundred against one.

Also the 22 day of the same moneth of September they fired a mine betweene Italy and Pro- uence, which did no harme.

Of the terrible mine at the posterne of Auvergne.

And the 23 day of the same moneth they fired two mines, one at the posterne of Spaine, and the other by the bulwarke of Auvergne, the which mine by Auvergne was so terrible, that it made all the towne to shake, and made the wall to open from aboue to beneath vnto the plaine ground: howbeit, it fell not, for the mine had bent or breache in two places, by one of the counter-mines, and by a rocke vnder the Barbican, the which did cleaue, and by that cleft the fury and might of the mine had issue. And if the sayd two vents had not bene, the wall had bene turned by side downe. And for truch, as it was reported to vs out of the campe, the enemies had great hope in the sayd mine, thinking that the wall should haue bene ouerthrowen, and then they might haue entred into the towne at their pleasures: but when they saw the contrary, they were very ill pleased. And the captaines determined to giue assault at foure places at once, to make vs the moze adoo, and to haue an entrance into the towne by one of the foure. And the sayd day and night they ceased not to shoot artillery: and there came in hope of the mine thre score thousand men and moe into the trenches.

How the bulwarke of Spaine was lost, and woonne againe.

The 24 day of the same moneth, a little befoze day, they gaue assault at the breach of Spaine, to the bulwarke of England, to the posterne of Prouence, and at the plaine ground of Italy, all at one houre & one time. The first that mounted to the breach of Spaine, was the Aga of the Janissaries, a valiant man, and of great courage with his company, and bare three scoze or three scoze and tenne banners and signes, and pight them in the earth of the breach, and then fought with our men, and mounted on our repaires, making other maner of fray and more rigorous then the other that were passed, and the sayd skirmish lasted about sixe houres. And forthwith, as the assault was giuen, a great sort of Turkes entred into the bulwarke of Spaine, and set vp eithe or nine signes or banners vpon it, and drove our men out, I can not tell how, untwaies or otherwise. And they were lords of it thze houres and moze. Howbeit there were of our men be- neath in the mine of the sayd bulwarke, the which bulwarke so lost, gaue vs euill hope. But in- continently the lord great master being at the defence of the posterne of England, hauing know- ledge of the sayd losse, and that there was great fighting and resistance on both sides at the breach of Spaine, marched thither with the banner of the crucifur, leaving the charge of the sayd bul- warke in the hands of the baille de la Moree messieur Mery Combant. And the lord mounted on the wall of Spaine, whereas then began a great skirmish, and euery man layed his handes to worke, as well to put the enemies out of the breach, as to recouer the bulwarke that was lost. And the sayde lord sent a company of men into the bulwarke by the gate of the mine, or by the Barbican, the which entred at the sayd gate, and went up, where they found but few Turkes. For the artillery of the posterne of England, right against the bulwarke of Spaine, had so well met and scattered them, that within a while our men had slaine all them that were left. And thus the sayde bulwarke was gotten and recouered againe, and with all diligence were made new repaires and strengths to the sayd place. And in like sort, the enemies were put from the breach, and few of them escaped, and all their banners and signes were left with vs. Surely it may be sayd, that after the grace of God (the trauerses of Spaine and Auvergne, and the small artillery set on the houses right against the sayd breaches, as it is sayd, with the coming and presence of the lord great master) hath giuen vs this dayes victoy.

As touching the murder of the people, done by the artillery of the bulwarke of England and Spaine, the quantity was such that a man could not perceiue nor see any ground of the vit- ches. And the stench of the massifs cartons was so grievous, that we might not suffer it leuen or eight dayes after. And at the last, they that might saue themselves did so, and withdrew them- selues to the trenches: and the reuerend lord great master abode victorious of the sayd place, and in like sort of the other thze assaults, the which were but little lesse then that of Spaine, for they fought long. But in conclusion, the enemies beaten on all sides, and in so many sorts, with artille- ry were put backe, and banquished, that there died that day at all the foure places fiftene or six- teene thousand. And the slaughter was so great at the plaine Italy, of the cursed enemies, that the sea was made redde with their blood. And on our side also died to the number of an hundred men or moze. And of men of dignity in the towne, hauing charge, died Sir Francis de Frenolz commander of Romania, which Sir Francis was chiefe captaine of the great ship of Rhodes, and he was slaine at the plaine of Italy, wounded with two strokes of harquebushes: it was great damage of his death, for he was a worthy man, perfect, and full of vertues. There died also messieur Nastaty de sancta Camilla afozenamed, hauing two hundred men vnder him of the lord great masters succours. There died also diuers other worthy men that day, and many were mained. Among all other that lost any member, messieur Iohn de le Touz called Pradines, be- ing at the sayd bulwarke, with a stroke of artillery had his arme smitten away, in great danger to haue lost his life; howbeit by the helpe of God he died not. In like sort the same day was hurt Sir William Weston aforesayd, captaine of the posterne of England, and had one of his fingers stricken away with an harquebush: which knight behaued himselfe right woorthily at all the as- saults. Of the Turkes part, of great men, were two pyncipall captaines slaine vnder the Aga of the Janissaries, and another captaine that was come out of Surey to the campe certaine dayes befoze, with sixe hundred Hamelukes, and two or thze thousand Poozes. And of them that were hurt of great men the Beglarby of Nacolia had a stroke with an arrow as he was in the trench of Prouence. And many other were wounded, whose names be not rehearsed here, be- cause of shortnesse.

Sir Will^m Veston captaine of the English
posterne hurt.

How the great Turke for anger that he could not get the towne, would haue put his chiefe captaine to death, and how they made 11 mines vnder the bulwarke of England.

During this assault, the great Turke was by his patullion in a place that he had caused to be made, and saw all the businesse, and how his people were so sharply put backe, and the victory lost on his side, & was very soze displeased, and halfe in despaire: and he sent for Mustafa Bassa with whom he was angry, and chid him bitterly, saying that he had caused him to come thither, and had made him to beleue that he should take the towne in fifteene dayes, or a moneth at the furthest; and he had bene there already three moneths with his army, and yet they had done nothing. And after these wordes he was purposed to put him to death in the campe: but the other Bassas shewed him that he ought not to do iustice in the land of his enemies, for it would cost them and giue them courage. Whereby he did moderate his anger, and left him for that time, and thought to send him to Cairo, least the people there would rebell, by occasion of the captaine of Cairo which died a few dayes before. Howbeit he departed not so suddenly, and as he went he thought to assay if he might do some thing for to please the Turke, as well for his honour as for to saue his person, and was maruellous diligent to make mines at the bulwarke of England for to ouerthrow it. And by account were made 11 mines as well to the sayd bulwarke as elsewhere, beside them spoken of before, and that they had fired. But the most part of the sayd mines came to no purpose though they put fire in them, and many were met with countermines, and broken by our men by the good diligence and sollicitude of sir Gabriel Du-ches Steward of the house of the lord great master, which had the charge of the sayd countermines at the same bulwarke. In the which businesse he behaued himselfe well and worthily, and spared not his goods to cause the people to worke and trauell, but spent thereof largely.

How the Turks were minded to haue gone their way, and of the traitours within the towne, and of many great assaults.

The Turks seeing that by mining they were nothing furthered, nor might not come to their intentions, and hauing but small store of gunpowder, were in deliberation and minde to haue raised the siege, and gone their way. And indeed some of them bare their cariages toward the shippes: and also certaine number of people went out of the trenches with their standards straight to the ships. And it was written vnto vs from the campe how the Janissaries and other of the host would fight no more: and that they were almost all of one opinion for to go away, saue some of the captaines of the foresayd Mustafa Bassa or Acmek Bassa. And in the meane season the false traitours that were in the towne wrote letters to the campe, giuing them knowledge of all that was sayd and done among vs. And also an Albanese fled to the enemies campe, and warned them not to go, for the gunshot was nigh wasted, and that the most part of the knights and people should be theirs shortly.

In like sort then wrote the abouesayd Chancellor Sir Andrew de Merall, whose treason as then was not knownen: but when it cometh to the effect of his treason, I shall shew the knowledge that he gaue to the enemies at diuers times.

When the bassas and captaines of the hoste vnderstood the sayd warnings, they all purposed for to tary, and caused those tidings of the towne to be knowne ouer all the army. And beganne againe to shoot artillery faster then euer they did, for new shot was come into the campe. Then Mustafa Bassa being in despaire that he could do nothing by mines, by gunshot, nor by assaults, he being ready to depart for to goe into Surey by the great Turkes commandement, before his departing hee thought once againe to assay his aduenture, and made three assaults three dayes together. The first was on a Saturday the fourth day of October an houre before night. The other on Sunday in the morning. And the third on Monday after dinner. And the sayd three assaults were made to the bulwarke of England. And it was assailed but with stones and bagges full of artificiall fire. And at these three assaults many of our men were hurt with the sayd fire, and with the stones that came as thicke as raine or haile. But in the end the enemies got nothing but strokes, and returned into their trenches euill contented, and murmuring, and swore by their Mahomet that Mustafa Bassa should not make them to mount any more to the sayd bulwarke. And that it was great folly for them to cause them to be slaine at the will and fantasie of one man. These wordes sayd in Greeke by some of the enemies were heard of our men as they went downe from the bulwarke. And because (as it is sayd) that the enemies at the assaults that were made, came vnder the earth and stones that fell from the breaches, some of our men aduised to cleanse the barbicane, and take the earth out of the ditch, to the end that the enemies should not easily come vpon the wall. And in effect weening that it were well and behoouefull to be done, by great diligence night and day by mines they voided the barbicane, and the most part of the earth that lay in the ditch was brought into the towne, the which was hurtfull afterward, and was cause that the enemies got the foot of the wall. Notwithstanding, they had it but scarcely. But this cleansing furthered the time, and caused them to get it sooner then they should haue done if the earth had lien still: but their small intent was to raise the defence of the bulwarks, and then passe at their pleasure, and enter into the barbicane, as they haue done: for the enemies seeing that the barbicane was cleansed, thought to get into it by trenches, and so they did, howbeit they were certaine dayes letted by our handgun shot. The enemies seeing that they might not come neere it, couered their trenches with tables to saue themselves: and then they made a mine whereby they might goe to the barbicane. So by these two meanes, afterward they were repaired with earth and with a certaine wall that they made for to eschew the shot of the bulwarks of Auvergne and Spaine: and in the mine they found but two gunners, which they slew by force of men. By this manner they being couered on all parts and without any danger, passed thorow and lept into the barbicane, and got the foot of the wall; which was the 17 day of October, an unhappy day for the pooze towne, and occasion of the ruine thereof, and winning of the same.

At this point they slept not, but lightly and with great delight they began to picke and hew the wall. And weening to make remedy thereto, and to finde meanes to driue them from the sayde barbicane with engins of fire and barrells of gunpowder, wee slew many of them, but it auailed nothing: for the quantity and multitude of people that trauelled there was so great, that they cared not for losse of them. And if we had had men enow within the towne, there might haue bene remedy to haue raised them from thence: but considering that our force and all hope was in people, wee left to doe many things that might haue bene done, and that should haue bene good then and other times also, for fault of men of warre. At the last it was pondered by Sir Gabriel Martinigo, that there was no remedy but to hew the wall for to meet them, and beat them with ordinance and with engins of fire to burne and vndoe them. Then our men began to hew the wall, and made some holes to shoot at the enemies that slept not, but did as wee did, and shot at vs, and indeed they slew & hurt many of our men. Then Sir Gabriel Martinigo ordeined to make repaires within the towne at the front where they did cut the wall, to the end that after the walles were cut, the enemies should know with whom to meet. The trauerles were made on each side with good artillery great and small: and the sayd trauerles and repaires were of the length that the enemies had cut the wall, and beganne at the massise of Spaine made by the reuerend lord great master Mery d'Amboise, & ended at the church of S. Saluador. The which trauerles and repaires the vulgar people call the Mandra, that is to say, the field.

The meane time that the repaires and trauerles were made with all diligence, Sir Gabriel Martinigo neuer ceased going to euery place to puruey for all things: and he being on the bulwark of Spaine to ordeine all things that were needfull, there came a stroke of a handgun from the trenches that smote out his eye, and put him in danger of his life, but thanked be God, he recovered his health within a moneth and a halfe. His hurt came ill to passe, for the need that we had of him that time in all things, and specially to the repaires of the breaches. Neuertheless the lord priour of S. Giles (not ignorant in all such things) with other men expert in warre, attended to the sayd repaires and trauerles, there and elswhere. The enemies on the other side night and day without rest (for the great number of labourers that they had hourly and newly ready) hewed and vndermined the sayd wall.

And the 20 day of October they put fire in the vndermines, weening to haue cast downe the wall, but they could not: then they would haue pulled it downe with great ropes and ancles, but the artillery of the bulwark of Auvergne brake their ropes, and sent them away lightly.

At the last they made a mine vnder the sayd wall and breach: and the 26 day of the same moneth they did put fire to the same mine, weening to haue ouerthrowen the wall, which it did not, but raised it, and made it to fall almost straight vpright, which was more disadvantage to the enemies then profit. Then they shot artillery at it, which in fewe dayes beat it downe, and they had opening and way to come into the Towne. Neuertheless it was not necessary for them as then to enter: for the artillery of our repaires beat them in the forepart, and the artillery lying at the two milles at the posterne of Quosquino, and in that of England, whereas was a basiliske that beat right vpon the breach with other pieces: and therefore the enemies sought other meanes, and beganne to raise the earth betweene our two walles, drawing toward the bulwark of England on the one side, and toward Auvergne on the other side, and would haue cut the wall wall further then our traueses were for to come in unbeaten of our artillery. Then were the repaires enlarged and made greater with the wall that was cut, of the height of twelue, & 16 foot in bredth: and so the enemies might goe no further forward, but shot great artillery against our repaires, for to breake and cast them downe, and also they made trenches for to come right to the breach, and vnto the repaires: and certainly we looked day by day, and houre by houre for to haue some assault. The reuerend lord great master, the which, as it is sayd, had left the bulwarke of England the day that the great assault was made, and since that time he moued not from thence while they hewed the wall, & where as the breach was, because that they were most dangerous & most vnquiet places: And continually the sayd lord kept him behinde the sayd repaires with his knights and men of succours, intentiuely ready and prepared to liue and die, and to receiue his enemies as they ought to bee receiued. And he abode three or foure dayes at the sayd breach, continuing since it was made, vnto the end, fighting with his enemies euery day in great perill of his body: for oftentimes hee put himselfe further in the pcease then needed for the danger of his person, but he did it for to hearten and strengthen the courage of his people, being so well willing to defend and die for the faith.

How the enemies assailed the posternes of Prouence and Italy, and how they were driuen away.

By the will of our Lord, the enemies alway in feare and dread, would giue none assault, but continually shot against our repaires, and made trenches for to passe forward into the towne: by the which trenches they shot infinitely with harquebushes and handgunnes, and slew many of our folke, and specially of them that wrought and made the repaires that were broken and crased. And they put vs in such extremity, that we had almost no more slaues nor other labouring people for to repaire that which they brake night and day, which was a great hinderance for vs, and the beginning of our perdition. And if we had much to doe in that place, there was not lesse at the gate of Prouence, and at the plaine of Italy: for daily they were doing either with assaulc or skirmish, and most at the plaine of Italy. Howbeit by the helpe of our Lord with the good conducting of the captaine of succours of the same place, the priour of Navarre, that was prompt and intentiue, and could well incourage his men, the enemies had alway the woorst, and were driuen from the sayd plaine, and from the breach of Prouence.

How the treason of Sir Andrew de Merall was knowen, and of the maruellous assaults that the Turks made.

Vpon these termes and assaults, the treason of the chancellour Sir Andrew de Merall, of whom I spake before, was perceiued: for a seruauit of his, named Blasie, was found shooting a quarrell of a crossebow with a letter, whereof he was accused to the lord great master, which commanded to take him and examine him by iustice, and he confessed the shot of that letter & of other before, at the commandement of his master: and sayd that he had great acquaintance with the Turks bashas, and that it was not long since he had written a letter to them, warning them that they should not go, for gumshot began to faile, and the men were wasted by slaying and hurting at the assaults in great quantity: and if they abode still and gaue no more assaults, at the last the towne should be theirs. And diuers other things the seruant sayd of his master, of the which I haue spoken part before at the beginning, and of the warning that he gaue to the great Turke for to come.

But to returne to the plaine of Italy. After many battels and assaults done in the sayd place, by continuall shot of seuentene great gunnes that beat the sayd plaine, the repaires and traueses were almost broken and lost. And by trenches the enemies were come iopning to the breach, and neuer ceased to grate the earth and scrape the earth to cause the repaires & traueses to fall: and at the last the most part fell downe, & our men were constrained to leane the sayd plaine, saue a cancell that was toward the sea, as it were the third part thereof. Certaine dayes afore the enemies came to the foot of the plaine, and did cut it, and cased the earth, & at the last they passed thorow vnto the towne wall: and anon began to hew and cut as they did at that of Spaine. The lord great master seeing that, anon cast down a part of the church of our Lady de la Victoria, and of another church of S. Panthalion. And within they began to make the repaires and traueses as at the place of Spaine, whereto was made extreme diligence, but not such as the lord would, and as was needfull, because there were no labourers for to helpe. After that the enemies had woon the most part of the bulwarke of England & the plaine of Italy, they purposed to make assaulc to the sayd plaine, and to the breach of Spaine, and to enter into our repaires to winne them for to make an end of vs. And for euer to affeeble the repaires and for to abash vs, the 28 day of Nouember all along the day and night they ceased not to shoot great artillery, both from the bymmies of the ditches with those great pieces, casting stones of nine & eleuen foot about; and from the mantellets without. And as it was reckoned; they shot the same day and night 150 times or more against our repaires and trauerles of the wall.

And in the morning the 29 day of the same moneth, the bigill of S. Andrew at the spring of the day, the enemies went thorow the breach with their banniers, and entered into the repaires with greater number of people then they did at the great battell in September, hardily and furiously for to fight with vs. But at their coming in, the artillery of the trauerles, and the hand-gunnies, and the gunshot of the milles sound them so well and so sharply, that he that came in, was anon dispatched and ouerthrowen, and there abode about 2000 of the Turks slaine. The other that came after seeing their fellowes so euill welcommed; as people that were astonied and lost, they turned againe to their trenches: at whome the artillery of the milles shot victoriously, and halted them to go apace: and by report from the campe there died sixe thousand or mo that day: the which day might be called very happy, and well fortunat for vs, thanked be God, for there was none that thought to escape that day, but to haue died all, and lost the towne: howbeit, the pleasure of our Lord was by euident miracle to haue it otherwise, and the enemies were chafed and overcome. And it is to be noted, that the same day the raine was so great and so strong, that it made the earth to sincke a great deale that they had cast into the ditches, for to couer them from the shot of Auvergne. And the sayd earth being so suncken, the artillery of the sayd bulwarke (vnwares to them) smote them going and coming, and made great murder of the sayd dogges. The sayd day also the enemies came to the plaine of Italy for to assault it; but when they understood that their fellowes had bene put backe so rudely, and with so great slaughter, they were afraid, and so they returned againe to their trenches.

How the Turks got the plaine ground of Spaine.

And that done, Acmeke Basha seeing their businesse euery day goe from woorse to woorse, and that at the assaults were but losse of people, without doing of any good, and that there was no man that willingly would go to it any more, he intended to giue no more assaults, but to follow his trenches, and by them enter couertly without losse of a man from the breach to the other end of the towne. Semblably he intended for to winne the plaine earth beside Spaine: the which to get, he came at pleasure to the foot of the wall, & began to beat downe the plaine ground, and to giue many skirmishes and conflicts to our folke that kept it. And there were slaine many good men. And at the last, for default of more helpe and of gunshot, it was left and giuen vp of our men, and so lost. That done, the enemies came thither as in other places. And this is the third place where they came nere to the foot of the wall. And whoso wrl considered in what estate the poore towne was at that time, seeing their enemies haue so great aduantage, might well say, and iudge, that at length it should be taken, and a lost towne.

How a Genouois came to the gate of the towne for to speake for a treaty, and deliuerance of the same.

A few dayes after the saide iourney a Chriitian man that was in the campe, the which by his speech was a Genouois or Siotis, came to the gate of Auvergne, and demanded to parle, and after that he was demanded what he would haue, he sayd that he had maruell of vs why we would not yeeld our selues, seeing the pitious estate the towne was in: and he as a Chriitian man counselled vs to yeeld our selues with some agreement: and that if we would looke thereto, that some should be found expedient to do somewhat for our safegard. And it is very like that he sayd not such words, nor spake so farforth in the matter, without commission fro some of the chiefe of the campe, or of the great Turke himselfe. To the which Siotis was answered, that he should go away with an enill hap, and that it needed not to speake of appointment: and that though the enemies had great aduantage, there was yet enough wherewith to receiue and feast them, if they made any assault. These words heard, he went away: and two dayes after he came againe, and demanded to speake with a marchant Genouois of the towne, named Matthew de Vra, and he was answered that he which he demanded, was sicke, and might not come, but that he should deliuer the letter, and it should be giuen to him. The sayd Siotis sayd nay, and that he would giue it himselfe, and speake with him: and sayd that he had also a letter of the Grand signior, for the lord master. Upon this he was bidden to go his way: and to set him packing, they shot after him a picke piece of artillery. The next day after Ballantis Albanese that was fled thozow the bzeach of Spaine to the campe, came from the sayd Genouois proposing such wordz, oz like as the other had sayd, saying likewise that the Grand signior had sent a letter to the lord master. To whom no wordz were spoken, noz ans were made, for the lord great master as wise and prudent considering that a towne that will heare intercatings is halfe lost, defended vpon the paine of death sith that Siotis had spoken these two times, that none should be so hardy to speake noz answeere them of the campe, without his knowledge & commandement: but seeing they were such ambassadoz, they repoized the wordz of the sayd Albanese, oz euer the sayd lord had knowledge of the wordz of the Siotis. The which wordz spread thozow the towne put many folke in thought, and would haue vndone that that the Siotis said: the which is no maruell whereas is much people, for with good will and most often they regard sooner to saue the liues of them and their children, then they doe to the honour of the residue. Howbeit not one durst speake a word openly of that businesse, but all secretly: and some came and spake to certaine lordz of the great crosse for to speake to y lord great master. And in effect some lordz spake therof to him perswading him that it should be good to thinke thereon, seeing that the towne went to losse. To whom the sayd lord shewed many things for his honoz and the Religion: and that no such things ought to be done oz thought for any thing in the world, but rather he and they to die. The lordz hearing this answer, went their wayes, and then returned againe to the sayd lord, aduising him moze to thinke well on all things, and to the saluation of his towne and of his religion. And they sayd mozeouer, that they doubted that the people would rather haue a peace then to die themselves, their wiues and children. The lord seeing that such wordz were as things inforced, as who should say, if thou do it not, we shall do it as wise men and prudent, willing to make remedies of needfull things by counsell, called the lordz of his Councell for to haue aduise in these doings, and other. And when they were assembled, the lord proposed the wordz that were to him denounced, and sayd: With these termes and wordes came two oz three marchants and citizens of the towne that knocked at the doore of the Councell, and presented a supplication to the great master, and lordz of the Councell, whereby they required and besought meekeely the sayd reuerend lord to haue respect to them and their pooze houtholds, and to make some appointment with the great Turke, seeing that the sayd matter was already forward in purpose, that he would do it; and that it would please him to consider the pitious & sorrowfull estate that the towne was in; & that there was no remedy to saue it: and at the lest way, if the lord would not make appointment, to giue them leaue (of his goodnesse) to haue their wiues and their children out of the Rhodes to saue them, for they would not haue them slaine noz made slaues to the enemies. And the conclusion was, that if the sayd lord would not puruey therfore, they would puruey for it themselves. And there was written in the said request the names of eight oz ten of the richest of the towne. Which wordz of the sayd supplication being heard, the sayd lord and his councell were abashed and ill content as reason would, seeing that it was but a course game, and thought on many things to make answer to the sayd citizens, for to content and appeale them: and also to see if they should intend to the appointment, as they required, and after as the Genouois had repoized: and the better to make the sayd answer, and to know moze plainly in what estate the towne was in all things: that is to wit, first of gunpowder, and then of men of warre, and of the katteries. Also were demanded and asked the lord of S. Giles pre Iohn, which had the charge of the gunpowder, and then the captaine Sir Gabriel Martinigo, for being ouer their men of warre (as it is said) as to him that knew the truth; if the towne might holbe oz not, oz there were any meanes to saue it. The sayd lord of S. Giles arose, saying and affirming vpon his honour and his conscience that almost all the slaues and labourers were dead and hurt, and that scantly there were folke enow to remaue a piece of artillery from one place to another, and that it was vnpossible without folke any moze to make oz seruy the repairs the which every day were broken and crushed by the great, furious, and continuall shot of the enemies artillery. As for gunpowder the sayd lord sayd, that all that was for stoz in the towne, was spent long agoe, and that which was newly bzought, was not to serue & furnish two assaults. And he seeing the great advantage of the enemies being so farre within the towne, without power to put oz chase them away, for default of men, was of the opinion that the towne would be lost, and that there was no meanes to saue it. The wordz of the sayd lord finished, the captaine Gabriel Martinigo for his discharge sayd and declared to the reuerend lord and them of the Councell, that seeing and considering the great beatings of the shot that the towne had suffered, and after seeing the entring which the enemies had so large, and that they were within the towne by their trenches both enblong and ouerthwart; seeing also that in two other places they were at the foot of the wall, and that the most part of our knights and men of warre and other were slaine and hurt, and the gunpowder wasted, and that it was vnpossible for them to resist their enemies any more, that without doubt the towne was lost if there came no succours for to helpe and resist the siege. The which opinions and reasons of these two woollie men and expert in such seats, vnderstood and pondered by the lord great master and the lords of the Council, they were most part aduised for to accept and take treaty if it were offered, for the sauergard of the common people, and of the holy reliques of the church, as part of the holy crosse, the holy throne, the hand of S. Iohn, and part of his head, and diuers other reliques. Howbeit the lord great master to whom the businesse belonged very nerre, and that tooke it most heauily, and was more sorrowfull then any of the other, as reason required, was alway steadfast in his first purpose, rather willing to die then to consent to such a thing, and sayd againe to the lordes of the Council: Aduise you, and thinke well on euery thing, and of the end that may happen, and he proposed to them two points: that is to wit, Whether it is better for vs to die all, or to saue the people and the holy reliques. The which two points and doubts were long time disputed, and there were diuers opinions: neuertheless, at the last they sayd all, that howbeit that it were well and safely done to die for the faith, and most honoꝝ for vs, notwithstanding seeing and considering that there is no remedy to resist against our enemies, and meanes to saue the towne; and on the other part, that the great Turke would not oppresse vs to forsake our faith, but only would haue the towne, it were much better then, and tending to greater wealth to saue all the iewels about sayne, that should be defiled and lost if they came in the handes of the enemies of the faith. And also to keepe so much small people, as women and children, that they would torment and cut some in pieces, other take, and perforce cause them to forsake their faith, with innumerable violences, and shamefull sinnes that should be committed and done, if the towne were put to the sword, as was done at Modon, and lately at Bellegrado. Whereby they did conclude, that it were better, and more agreeable to God, for to take the treaty, if it were proffered, then for to die as people desperate, and without hope.

How the great Turke sent two of his men to the towne, to haue it by intreating. And how the lord great master sent two knights to him, to know his assurance.

VPon these consultations and wordes almighty God that sauerh them which trust in him, and that would not that so many euils and cruelties should come to the poore city & inhabitants of it, and also that the great Turke might not arise in ouer great pride and vainglorry, put him in minde to seeke to haue the sayd towne by treaty, which he ought not to haue done for his honour, nor by reason, for the towne was in a manner his. And in like sort he ought not to haue let vs goe as he did, seeing that we were his moztall enemies euer, and shall be still in the time coming, considering the great slaughter of his people that we haue made in this siege. Howbeit, the eternall goodnesse hath blinded him, and hath pleased that these things should be thus, for some cause unknowen of vs. And for conclusion, the great Turke sent to haue a communication and parle in following the wordes of the Genouese aforesayd. Then was a signe set vpon the churche of the abbey without the towne, to the which was made anwere with another at the milles of Quosquino. And forthwith came two Turkes to speake with them of the towne. Then the lord great master sent the Priour of S. Giles pre Iohn, and the capitaine Gabriel Martinigo to know the cause of their coming. And when they came to them, without holding of long speech, the two Turkes deliuered them a letter for to beare to the lord great master from the great Turke, and then returned safely into their tents. When the two lordes had receiued it, they bare & presented it to the reuerend lord great master, which caused it to be read. By the which the great Turke demanded of the lord great master to yeeld the towne to him, and in so doing he was content to let him go & all his knights, and all the other people of what condition soeuer they were, with all their goods & iewels safe without feare of any harme or displeasure of his folks. And also he sware and promised on his faith so to do. The sayd letter was sealed with his signet that he vseth, that is as it were gilded. And he sayde afterward, that if the lord great master would not accept the sayde treaty, that none of the city, of what estate soeuer he were, should thinke to escape, but that they all vnto the cats should passe by the edge of the sword, and that they should send him an answer forthwith, either yea or nay. After the sight of the contents of the sayd letter of so great weight, and the time so short for to giue so great an answer, and with demand, the sayd lord great master, and all the lords of the Council were in great thought, howbeit they determined to giue an answer, seeing the estate of the towne so ill that it could be no woollse. Wearing the report and opinions a day or two before of the two lordes ordeined to view the defects of the towne, saying that the towne was lost without remedy: considering also that the principall of the towne would haue appointment. And in likewise, at the other counsell all the tozdes had already willed and declared, that it were better to saue the towne for respect of the pooze people, then to put it all whole to the furie of the enemies, whereupon they agreed and concluded to take the foresayd treatie. After the conclusion taken, answere was made readily for a good respect; that is to weert, to take the Turke at his worde, to the ende that he should not repent him of it, nor change his opinion. For enery houre his people wanne and entered further and further into the towne. And for to goe vnto the great Turke were obtained these two knights, sir Passin afore named, and he bare the token of the White crosse: and another of the towne named Robert de Perruse iudge Dinarie.

When these two ambassadours had made them readie, they went out at the gate of Quosquino, and went to the tent of Acmek basha, capitaine generall. And because it was late, and that they might not goe that day to the great Turke, on the next day in the morning the foresaid capitaine Acmek led and conuicted our sayd ambassadours to the great Turkes hauillion, that they might haue the more knowledge plainely, and for to heare his will as touching the wordes which were reported to the reuerend lord great master, and after, the contents of his letter and writings.

When the sayd two ambassadours were departed out of the towne, there did enter two men of authoritie of the campe; one was nephew or kinsman of the sayd Acmek, the other was the great Turkes truchman, which the lord master caused to be well receiued, and they were lodged nigh the sayd gate of Quosquino. And then truce was taken for 3. dayes, and the enemies came to our repaires, and spake with our folke and dranke one with another.

How the ambassadours of Rhodes spake with the great Turke, and what answere they had.

When our ambassadours had made reuerence to the great Turke, they sayd that the lord great master of Rhodes had sent them to his Imperiall maiestie to know what he requested, and desired that they might talke together, and how the great master had receiued his letter. The great Turke answered them by his truchman, that of demanding to speake together, nor writing of letter to the great master he knew nothing. Howbeit, such the great master had sent to him for to know his will, he bade say to them that the great master should yeeld him the towne. And in so doing he promised by his faith for to let him goe with all his knights, and all other that would goe with their goods, without receiuing any displeasure of his people of the campe. And if he accepted not the sayd treatie, to certifie him that he would neuer depart from Rhodes till he had taken it, and that all his might of Turkie should die there, rather then hee would faile of it, and that there should neither great nor litle escape, but vnto the cats they should be all cut in pices, and sayd that within 3. dayes they should giue him an answere, for hee would not that his people should loose time, and that during the sayd truce they should make no repaires nor defences within the towne.

When the great Turke had ended his wordes, our ambassadours tooke their leaue of him, and returned to the towne, and there was giuen to each of them a rich garment of branched velvet, with cloth of gold of the Turkish fashion. Then Acmek basha tooke sir Passin, and led him to his pauillion, and increating him right well, caused him to abide all that day and night: and in eacing and drinking they had many discourtes of things done at the siege, questioning each with other. And among all other things our ambassadour demaunded of Acmek, and prayed him to tell for trueth how many men died of the campe while the siege was laied. The said Basha sware vpon his faith and certified, that there were dead of the campe of violent death, that is to say, of gunshot and other wayes, 64000. men or more, beside them that died of sicknesse, which were about 40. or 50. thousand.

Siege of Rhodes.

How one of the ambassadours made answere of his message, and how the Commons would not agree to yeeld the towne.

Returne we now to our purpose and to the answere that our ambassadours brought to the lord great master. The sayd Robert Perruse made the answere, and told what the great Turke had sayd, certifying that he would haue an answere quickly either yea or nay. The which answere after the demaund of the great Turke hath bene purposed and concluded by the whole counsel, and his offer & treatie accepted, howbeit the sayd ambassadours had it not to do so soone nor the first time that they went for good reasons, but yet they would not deferre it, for feare least he he should repent him. And vpon these determinations that they would haue sent the sayd Peruse to heare the answer, came some of the common people of the towne to the lord great master, that was with the lordes of the counsell, and sayd that they were aduertised of the appointment that he had made with the great Turke, and that he would yeeld the towne with couenaunts by him taken, which they supposed ought not to be done without calling of them. And because they were not called to it, they sayd that they would not agree thereto, and that it were better for them to die, for the great Turke by some way would put them all to death, as was done in Bellegrado in Hungarie.

How the lord great master sent two ambassadors for the Commons to the great Turke.

When the reuerend lord great master had heard their wordes, he sayd graciously to them, that as touching the acceptation of the great Turkes offer, it was needful so to do in the degree that the towne was, and the causes wherefore he had done it the counsell had scene and discusse, and that it was a thing that might not, nor ought not to be sayd nor published in common, for reporting of it to the enemies by traitours, but be kept still and secret. And moreover, that it was concluded to make an answer shortly, for to take the great Turke at his word, least he repented him. For if they had bene called, or the answer had bene giuen, it had bene overlong businessse, and in the meane time the Turke might haue changed his mind, and that that he had done and concluded with the great Turke, the lordes of the counsell had well regarded and considered in all things, and for their profite and aduantage, as much or more as for that of the Religion. And that they would send to the great Turke againe other ambassadours, the better to know his will, and to be surer of his promise. Then the lord great master ordained two other ambassadours for to goe to the great Turke, which were two Spaniards, the one named sir Raimon Marker, and the other messire Lopez, at whose issuing entered sir Passin the first ambassadour, and the other two went to the tent of Acmek basha, for to leade them to the great Turke. And when they were within the Turkes pauillion, and had done him reuerence as appertained, our ambassadours sayd that the great master had heard and seen his demaund to yeeld the towne. And for it is a thing of great weight, and that he had to doe and say with many men of diuers nations, and because the time of answer was so short, hee might not doe that that hee demaunded so soone. Howbeit hee would speake with his people, and then hee would giue him an answer.

How the Turke began the assault, and how the Commons agreed to yeeld the towne.

When the great Turke heard the answer of our ambassadours, he sayd nothing, but commaunded his Bashas that they should begin the battell againe to the towne, the which was done, and then the truce was broken, and the shot of the enemies was sharper then it was afore. And on the other side nothing, or very litle for fault of powder: for that that there was left, was kept for some great assault or neede. Howbeit the sayd Amek Basha kept one of the ambassadours, and messire Lopez onely entered. The great master seeing the warre begun, and the shot thicker then it was afore, and the enemies entred hourly by their trenches further into the towne, called them that before had sayde to him, that they would not the towne should be yeelded, but had rather for to die. And therefore the sayd lord sayd that he was content for to die with them, and that they should dispose them to defend themselves well, or to doe their endeuour better then they had done in times past. And to the ende that each one of them should haue knowledge of his will (for as then he spake but to foure or fife of them that gaue sayd him) he made a cry through all the towne, that all they that were holden to be at the posternes or gates should giue attendance, and not to come away day nor night on payne of death: for afore, the Rhodians came but litle there. And that the other that were not of the posternes, or that were of his succours, should goe to the beach of Spaine where the sayd lord was continually, and not to goe away day nor night on the abovesayd payne. The sayd cry made, each one were obedient for a day or twaine, howbeit a young Rhodian left his posterne and went to his house, which on the next day was hanged for breaking of the lordes commaundement. Notwithstanding that, by litle and litle the people annoyed them, and their heartes failed, and left the posternes and breaches: in such wise, that the enemies might come in without finding great resistance, but of a fewe that the lord master caused to abide there (that is to weet) knightes of his succours, And in the night he sought out more people for to keepe y watch at the said breach, and and paid to them as much as they would. The sayd lord seeing himself thus abandoned and left of his people, he sent to aske them againe wherefore they did not their endeavour, and why they came not to day, as they sayd before. Which made answer that they sawe and knew well that the towne was lost for certaine reasons that were told them: by occasion whereof they had gaue said the ordinaunce of the sayd lord, and sayd that they had bene wrong enformed of diuers things: and on the other side, that they feared that the Turke would not hold his word. But sithens they sawe that there was none other remedie but to abide the aduventure and fortune, they sayd that they put all to the sayd lord to doe what he thought good, and that hee would see what were best for them. And required the lord to doe them so much fauour as to let them choose one or two among them for to goe to the great Turke with his ambassadours for to haue suretie of him. The which was granted, and two ordinarie ambassadours were chosen for them; one Nicholas Vergorie, and the other Piero of saint Cretice, and the fore sayd Passin should returne with them for to make the sayd answer. Then the great master or they departed (prolonging the time as much as he might) aduised to send a letter to the great Turke, the which his grandfather had written or caused to be written. In the which letter he gaue his malediction or curse to his childe and successours, if they enterprised to besiege Rhodes. The sayd Robert Perruse bare the sayd letter, and as he was accustomed, he went to Acmeke Basha for to cause him to haue audience, and to present the sayd letter. And the Basha sayd hee would see the letter: for it is the guise in the great Turkes court, that none may speake to him nor giue him a letter, but he be aduertised first what shall be said, or what shall be written. When the Basha had seene the wordes written in the said letter, he brake it and cast it on the ground, and did tread vpon it, saying many iniurious and villanous wordes to the sayd iudge. And bade him returne apace to his great master, and bid him to thinke on his businesse, and to make answer to the great lord (as he had sent and commaunded) or els it shoulde not be long or he sawe his dolorous and woofull ende. And that same day were taken two men of ours that bare earth toward the bulwarke of England. Of whom the sayd Acmeke caused an officer to cut off their noses, fingers and eares, and gaue them a letter to beare to the lord great master, wherein were great wordes and threatnings. After the sayd Perruse was returned, messire Passin was sent againe to the sayde Basha, for to know of him if the great Turke would be content with any summe of money for his costes and expences, that he had made for his armie. The which answered that such wordes or offers of siluer were not to bee sayd nor presented to the great lord on paine of life, and that hee set more by honour then by siluer. And therefore hee bade him returne and say to the great master that hee should make answer to the great lord after his demaund, to yeeld or not yeeld the towne. The sayd Passin made relation of the wordes of the Basha to the great master: the which for the great sorrow that hee had deferred alwayes, saw himselfe in such pious estate. Notwithstanding, the sayd lord putting all to the wil of our lord, & considering that there was no remedie to do otherwise, nor to resist any more his enemies: and being constrained on all sides to make the appointment, with great heavinesse, inestimable dolours and bewailings, at the last gaue his voyce to yeeld the towne (with the treatise or offers to him presented) which was the 20. day of December, the yeere of our lord a thousand five hundredeth and two and twentie.

An answer to such as will make question for the deliuerance of the citie of Rhodes.

AND if by any it were demaunded wherefore the sayde lord great master hath yeelded the towne to the great Turke, requesting it with treatie and couenants, which was a signe that he feared and would no more fight, but goe his way. To this I answer: Notwithstanding that the great Turke was aduertised by some traitours, and by other that fled into the campe, that the power almost failed, and that there were but fewe men of warre within the towne, yet he beleued not, nor gaue credence of all that was reported to him, but thought verily that we had ynough for a great while, and considered that hee must tary till they were wasted and spent, whereto behoued time. And seeing all his estate entered into strange places, and into the lands of his enemies, and had bene there already sixe moneths, (and not without great danger of his owne person) thinking on the other side, that taking the towne by assault, he should tole many of his folke; and yet when hee had overcome and wonne the towne, they should fall each vpon other in departing of the bootie or pillage, doubting finally the hazard of warre. For these reasons and other that may be alleaged, the great Turke had much rather to haue the towne by composition and treatie, then other wise. And it sufficed him to driue his olde enemies out of the countreys of Leuant, and set the subjects of his countreys in rest and suretie. And we of the towne that that knew our weaknesse, & that we might do no more, it seemed better to saue so much small people, then we and they to fall into the furie of our enemies, for other wise could we not haue done, but trust God, and died as in dispaire.

How the citie of Rhodes was yeelded to the great Turke, and of the euil behaiour of certaine Turkes.

BUt to returne to our principall: After that the reuerend great master had giuen his voyce to the yeelding of the towne, he sent the sayd Passin againe for to beare it to the great Turke. And with him went the two men that were chosen of the Commons, and they went all three together to the tent of Acmek Basha. To whom the sayd Passin first made this pious answer and conclusion to yeeld the towne. Notwithstanding, he sayd the people had ordained two men among them for to goe to the great Turke, to speake of their particular doings, and to haue some suretie of their persons, wiues, and children, to the ende that it were not done to them, as to those of Bellegrado. The sayd Acmek led the three ambassadours toward the great Turke. And when they were entered into the pauillion, the sayd messire Passin made the report of his ambassade to the sayd lord, and sayd that the great master yeelded him the towne vnder the promise made by his Imperiall maiestie, with the treatie promised. Of the which promise hee held him sure and certaine, and that hee would doe no lesse: howbeit, the people had required him to giue them licence to goe to his maiestie for to aske some request of him. Then the two citizens besought the great Turke that he would for suretie remooue his campe from the towne, to the ende that they should haue no manner of harme to their bodies nor goods, and that they that would goe, should goe, and that they that would abide still, might be well entreated. The great Turke answered by his interpreter to messire Passin, that hee accepted the towne, and promised a gayne vpon his faith, and on his honour to the lord great master, that he would perforce that he had promised, and sent to him by the same Passin that he should not doubt of the contrary: and if he had not thys prouough for to carie his people and their goods, that hee would let them haue of his, and that he would deliuer the artillerie that was wont to be in the ships of Religion. And as touching the request of the people, he sayd that he would remooue the campe, and that they that would abide, might abide, and they should bee well entreated, and should pay no tribute in five yeeres, and their children should not be touched; and who so would goe within the sayd space of five yeeres, they should goe in good time. These wordes ended, our ambassadours tooke leaue of him, & when they were departed, they spake againe with the sayd Acmek Basha for to haue a letter of the contents of the promise of the sayd lord. And by his commandement the sayd letter was made, whereby he promised to let go the great master with all his knights, strangers and men of the towne that would go with their goods, without hauing displeasure of any of his people of the campe, or by the wayes. When the letter was made, it was deliuered to messire Passin. And as touching withdrawing of the campe, the sayd Basha promised againe that he would do it, since the great lord would so: howbeit he remooued but from the trenches, and some of his people wente a litle way off. And the sayd Basha demanded in the Turkes behalfe, that they should send to him in hostage foure and twentie knights, whereof two should bee of the great Crosse, and two and twentie citizens. And the sayd lord should send onely a captaine with three or foure hundred Familiars, for to keepe the towne when the campe were withdrawn. And so it was done; and before this hee gaue twelue dayes respite to the lord great master, to prepare him and depart out of Rhodes. And in conclusion all this done, our ambassadours returned and made the report to the reuerend great master of all that they had done and practised with the great Turke, and the sayd Basha, and gaue him the letter for to goe surely. Then the great master with his counsell ordained the foure and twentie persons, and other of the towne. When they were ready, they went to the campe, where they were well intreated foure dayes. During this time, Ferza Basha passed fro the maine land to the campe, with foure and twentie or five and twentie thousand Janissaries, which by the commandment of the great Turke was gone vpon the borders of the countreys of the Sophie. For the Turke seeing the people of the campe discouraged and willing no more to goe to the assaults, sent to the sayd Basha to come to Rhodes with his people, which would haue withstood vs soze, as freshmen. And it was the worke of God and a wonderfull miracle, that they came after that the appointment was made: for if they had come afore, it is to be supposed that the deed had gone other wise; and there had bene many strokes giuen: but I beleeue that the ende should haue bene pious for vs, but God would not that the Turke should haue victorie vpon vs as hee might haue had, seeing the great aduantage that he had in all things, but he blinded him and would not that he should know his might. And on the other part it may be said and marueiled how it was possible alway to haue ouercome our enemies in all assaults & skirmishes, and at the end to loose the towne, it was the will of God that so hath pleased for some cause to vs unknowen. It is to bee thought, that lacke of men and gunshot, and the enemies so faste within the towne, and ready to enter at other places, with the treasons, haue caused the towne to be lost. Two or three dayes after the coming of the sayd Basha, his Janissaries and other of the campe entered into the Towne, which was on Christmas day, within the time giuen to vs, and then the Turkes word was broken, if it were his will or not, I cannot tell. Neuer thelesse there was no sword drawen, and in that respect promise was kept. But they made pillage, and entered by force into the houses of the castle, and tooke all that they might and would. After that they had ransacked the houses, they entered into the churches, and pilled all that they found, and brake the images. And there was no crucifix, nor figure of our lady, nor of other saints, that were left whole. Then with great inhumanitie they went into the hospitall of poore and sicke folke, called the Fermoie, and tooke all the siluer vessel that the sicke folke were serued with, and raised them out of their beds, and dyed them away, some with great strokes and stauces, and some were cast downe from the galleries. When these hounds had done that acte, they went to the church of saint Iohn and tooke downe the tombes of the great masters, and sought if there were any treasure hid in them, and they forced certaine women and maidens. And all they that were christened and had bene Turkes afore, were they men, women or children, and children that the sayd men had made christians, they led into Turkie, which thing is of greater importance then any of the other. The morrow after Christmas day, the reuerend lord great master went to the great Turkes paullion for to visite him, and to be better assured of his promise, the which lord he made to be wel & graciously receiued. And he signified unto him by his interpreter, that the case so happened to him was a thing vsuall and common; as to loose townes and lordships, and that hee should not take ouer much thought for it: and as for his promise, he bade that he should not doubt in any thing, and that he should not feare any displeasure to his person, and that he should goe with his people without feare. With these wordes the sayd lord thanked him, and tooke his leaue and departed.

GOe little booke, and woefull Tragedie,
Of the Rhodian fearefull oppugnation,
To all estates complaining ruthfully
Of thine estate, and sudden transmutation:

I me submit with their supplication,
To be correct, that am so small a clerke.

An ambassage from Don Ferdinando, brother to the emperor Charles the 5. vnto king Henry the 8. in the yere 1527. desiring his aide against Solyman the great Turke. Holinshed. pag. 894.

On the 14. day of March, 1527. were conueied from London to Greenwich by the earle of Rutland and others, the lord Gabriel de Salamanca, earle of Ottonburge, Iohn Burgrau of Syluerberge, and Iohn Faber a famous clerke, after bishop of Vien, as ambassadours from Don Ferdinando, brother to Charles the emperor, newly elect king of Hungarie and Beame, after the death of his brother in law king Lewes, which was slaine by Solyman the Turke the last Sommer. This company was welcommed of the high officers, and after brought into the kings presence, all the nobilitie bring present; and there after great reuerence made, M. Faber made a notable oration, taking his ground out of the Gospel, Exijt seminator seminare semen suum: and of that hee declared how Christ and his disciples went forth to sow, and how their seed was good that fel into the good ground, and brought forth good fruite, which was the Christian faith. And then he declared how contrary to that sowing, Mahomer had sown seed, which brought forth euill fruit. He also shewed from the beginning, how the Turkes haue increased in power, what realmes they had conquered, what people they had subdued euen to that day. He declared further what actes the great Turke then liuing had done; and in especiall, he noted the getting of Belgrade and of the Rhodes, and the slaying of the the king of Hungarie, to the great rebuke (as he sayd) of all the kings christened. Hee set forth also what power the Turke had, what diuersities of companies, what capitaines he had, so that he thought, that without a maruelous great number of people, hee could not be ouerthrowen. Wherefore he most humbly besought the king as S. Georges knight, and defender of the faith, to assist the king his master in that godly warre and vertuous purpose.

To this oration the king by the mouth of Sir Thomas Moore answered; that much hee lamented the losse that happened in Hungarie, and if it were not for the warres which were betwene the two great princes, he thought that the Turke would not haue enterprised that acte: wherefore he with all his studie would take paine, first, to set an vniue and peace throughout all Christendome, and after that, both with money and men he would be readie to helpe toward that glorious warre, as much as any other prince in Christendome. After this done, the ambassadours were well cherished, and diuers times resorted to the court, and had great cheere and good rewards, and so the third day of May next following, they tooke their leaue & departed homeward.

The antiquitie of the trade with English ships into the Leuant.

In the peeres of our Lord, 1511, 1512, &c. till the yeere 1534. diuers tall ships of London, namely, The Christopher Campion, wherein was Factor one Roger Whitcome; the Mary George, wherein was Factor William Gresham; the great Mary Grace, the Owner whereof, was William Gunfon, and the master one John Hely; the Trinitie Fitz-williams, whereof was master Laurence Arkey; the Mathew of London, whereof was master William Capling, with certaine other ships of Southampton and Bristow, had an ordinarie and vsuall trade to Sicilia, Candie, Chio, and somewhiles to Cyprus, as also to Tripolis and Barutim Syria. The commodities which they carried thither were fine Kerlies of diuers colours, coarse Kerlies, white Westerne dozens, Cottons, certaine clothes called Statutes, and others called Cardinal-whites, and Caluckins which were well sold in Sicilie, &c. The commodities which they returned backe were Silks, Chamlets, Rubarbe, Palmeskes, Muscadels and other wines, sweete oyles, cotten wooll, Turkie carpets, Galles, Pepper, Cinamon, and some other spices, &c. Besides the naturall inhabitants of the foresayd places, they had, euén in those dayes, traffique with Iewes, Turkes, and other foreigners. Neither did our merchants onely employ their owne English shipping before mentioned, but sundry Strangers also: as namely, Candiors, Raguscans, Sicilians, Genouezes, Venetian galliasses, Spanish and Portugale ships. All which particulars doe more evidently appeare out of certaine auncient Ligier bookes of the R. W. Sir William Locke Gerrer of London, of Sir William Bowyer Alderman of London, of master John Gresham, and of others; which I Richard Hakluyt haue diligently perused and copied out. And here for authoritie sake I doe annere, as a thing not impertinent to this purpose, a letter of king Henry the eight, vnto Don Iohn the third, king of Portugale,

A letter of the king of England Henry the eight, to Iohn king of Portugale, for a Portingale ship with the goods of Iohn Gresham and Wil. Locke with others, vnladen in Portugale from Chio.

TO the high and mighty prince, Iohn by the grace of God, king of Portugale, and of Algarue on this side and beyond the sea in Africa, lord of Ghinea, and of the conquest, nauigation, and traffique of Æthiopia, Arabia, Persia, India, &c. our most deere and welbeloued brother.

Henry by the grace of God, king of England and of France, defender of the faith, and lord of Ireland: to Iohn by the same grace, king of Portugale and Algarue, on this side and beyond the sea in Africa, and lord of Ghinea, and of the conquest, nauigation, and traffique of Æthiopia, Arabia, Persia, India, &c. our most deare and welbeloued brother, sendeth greeting. So much þ more willingly and readily we undertake the recommending of all iust causes vnto your highnesse, because by the daily testimony of our subiects which traffike in your kingdoms and dominions, we are informed, that according to the dutie of a most worthy prince, so carefully and exactly you minister iustice vnto every man, that all men most willingly repaire vnto your highnesse, with full trust to obtaine the same. Whereas therefore our welbeloued and trustie subiect Iohn Gresham merchant of London, of late in humble maner hath signified vnto vs, that one William Heich his Factor and Agent, certaine moneths agoe had hired in Candie a certaine Portugale ship called Sancto Antonio, (the patrone whereof is Diego Perez) and couenaunted with the partone of the said ship, that he should first saile to the Isle of Sio, to take in merchandize of sundry sortes, & then esloones returne to Candie, to be freighted with other goods, all which he was to bring into our kingdome of England, to the value of 12000 ducats, as by their billes of couenant & agreement more plainly appeareth: it so fel out, that þ aforesaid Diego your highnes subiect hauing receiued the said goods, very trecherously & much contrary to his couenant, to the exceeding great losse of our subiects, putting in by the way into an haueu of Portugale, & altering his purpose of coming into England, he remaineth still in that haueu, & like wise detaineth our subiects goods. Which iniury (seeing it is done in your Highnes kingdome) we hope your Highnes will see reformed according to equity & right, the rather at our request, which alwayes haue had a speciall care of the causes & goods of your Highnes, & of your subiects whensoever they come into our kingdome, whereof we made proofe the last peere. Therefore we instantly request your Highnes, þ you would so reccue Iohn Ratcliffe the bearer of these present letters, & the new appointed agent of Iohn Gresham, which cometh into your dominions about this busines, being thus comended vnto you in this busines, & recouering & freely bringing home of the said goods, & in remitting of the customes, vntlesse they were sold there (the like whereof we did towards your subiects) seeing by the fraud & deceit of the patron of the ship, the wares were brought thither, & finally in dispatching þ whole matter, according to iustice, & so further the same by directing your highnes letters to your officers who it may concerne, that we may perceiue, that our subiects right and liberty hath especially bene maintained vpon this our commendation. Which we will take in most thankfull part, and your highnes shal find vs in the like or a greater matter most ready to gratifie you, whom we with most heartily well to fare. From our Court at Waltham the 15. of October 1531.

A voyage made with the shippes called the Holy Crosse, and the Mathew Gonson, to the Iles of Candia and Chio, about the yeere 1534, according to a relation made to Master Richard Hackluit, by John Williamson, Cooper and citizen of London, who lived in the yeere 1592, and went as cooper in the Mathew Gonson the next voyage after.

The Holy Crosse and the Mathew Gonson depart for Turkie.

The shippes called the Holy Crosse, and the Mathew Gonson, made a voyage to the Ilandes of Candia and Chio in Turkie, about the yeere 1534. And in the Mathew went as Captaine M. Richard Gonson, sonne of old Master William Gonson, paymaster of the kings nauie. In this first voyage went William Holstocke (who after wards was Controuller of her Maiesties Nauie, lately deceased) as page to M. Richard Gonson aforesaid, which M. Gonson died in Chio in this his first voyage. The ship called the Holy Crosse was a short shippe, and of burden 160 tunnes. And hauing becne a full yeere at the sea in performance of this voyage, with great danger she returned home, where, vpon her arriuall at Blackwall, in the riuer of Thames; her wine and oyle caske was found so weake, that they were not able to hope them out of the ship, but were constrained to draw them as they lay, and put their wine and oyle into new vessels, and so to valade the shippe. Their chiefe fraight, was very excellent Muscadels and red Malmesie, the like whereof were seeldome scene before in England. They brought home also good quantitie of sweete oyles, cotton woollcs, Turkie Carpets, Galls, Cinnamon, and some other spices. The saide shippe called the Holy Crosse was so shaken in this voyage, and so weakened, that she was layd vp in the docke, and neuer made voyage after.

Another voyage to the Iles of Candia and Chio made by the shippe the Mathew Gonson, about the yeere 1535, according to the relation of John Williamson, then Cooper in the same ship, made to M. Richard Hackluit in the yeere 1592.

The Mathew Gonson goeth into Turkie.

The good shippe called the Mathew Gonson, of burden 300 tunnes, whereof was owner old M. William Gonson, pay-master of the kings Nauie, made her voyage in the yeere 1535. In this ship went as Captaine Richard Gray, who long after died in Russia. Master William Holstocke afterward Controuller of the Queenes Nauie went then as purser in the same voyage. The Master was one John Picher, seruant to old M. William Gonson, James Rumioie was Masters mate. The master cooper was John Williamson citizen of London, lining in the yeere 1592, and dwelling in Sant Dunstons parish in the East. The M. Gunner was John Godfrey of Bristol. In this ship were 6 gunners and 4 trumpeters, all which foure trumpeters at our returne homewards went on land at Messina in the Iland of Sicilia, as our ship roade there at anker, & gat them into the Gallies that lay neere vnto vs, & in them went to Rome. The whole number of our companie in this ship were about 100, men, we were also furnished with a great hote, which was able to cary 10 tunnies of water, which at our returne homewards we towed all the way from Chio vntill we came through the straight of Gibaltar into the maine Ocean. We had also a great long boat and a skiff. We were out vpon this voyage eleuen moneths, yet in all this time there died of sicknesse but one man, whose name was George Forrest, being seruant to our Carpenter called Thomas Plummer.

In a great ligger booke of one William Eymys, seruant vnto Sir William Bowyer Alderman of London, bearing date the 15 of November 1533, and continued vntill the 4 of July 1544. I find that he the said William Eymys was factor in Chio, not only for his Master, but also for the duke of Norfolkes grace, & for many other worshipful marchants of London, among whom I find the accounts of these especially, to wit, of his said Master, Sir William Bowyer, of William & Nicholas Wilford Merchant-taylors of London, of Thomas Curtis pewterer, of John Starky Peterer, of William Ostrige Merchant, & of Richard Field Draper. And further I find in the said ligger booke, a note of the said Eymys, of all such goods as he left in the hands of Robert Bye in Chio, who became his Masters factor in his roome, and another like note of parttulers of goods that he left in the hands of Oliver Lesson, seruant to William and Nicholas Wilford. And for prooffe of the continuance of this trade vntill the end of the yeere 1552. I found annexed vnto the former note of the goods left with Robert Bye in Chio, a letter being dated the 27 of November 1552 in London.

The Epitaph of the valiant Esquire M. Peter Read in the South Ile of Saint Peters Church in the citie of Norwich, which was knighted by Charles the fift at the winning of Tunis in the yeere of our Lord 1538.

Here under lyeth the corpes of Peter Reade Esquire, who hath worthily serued, not onely his Prince and Countrey, but also the Emperour Charles the fift, both at his conquest of Barbarie, and at his siege at Tunis, as also in other places. Who had giuen him by the sayd Emperour for his valiant deedes the order of Barbary. Who dyed the 29 day of December, in the yeere of our Lord God 1566.

The voyage of Sir Thomas Chaloner to Alger with Charles the fift

1541, drawn out of his booke De Republica

Thomas Chalonerus patria Londinensis, studio Cantabrigensis, educatione aulicus, religione pius, verèque Christianus fuit. Itaque cum inuenilem ætatem, mentemq; suam humanioribus studijs roborasset, Domino Henrico Kneuetto à potentissimo rege Henrico eius nominis octauo ad Carolum quintum imperatorem transmissio legato, vnà cum illo profectus est, tanquam familiaris amicus, vel eidem à consilijs. Quo quidem tempore Carolo quinto nauali certamine à Genua & Corsica in Algyram in Africa contra Turcas classem soluente ac hostiliter proficiscente, ornatissimo illo Kneuetto legato regis, Thoma Chaloner, Henrico Knolle, & Henrico Isamo, illustribus viris eundem in illa expeditione suapte sponte sequentibus, pariterque militantibus; mirifice vitam suam Chalonerus raturus est. Nam tireni illa, in qua fuerat, vel scopulis allisa, vel grauissimis procellis conuulsata, naufragus cum se diu natatu defendisset, deficientibus viribus, brachijs manibusque languidis ac quasi eneruatis, prehensa dentibus cum maxima difficultate rudenti, quæ ex altera tireni iam propinqua tum fuerat eiecta, non sine dentium aliquorum iactura ac fractura sese tandem recuperauit, ac domum integer relapsus est.

Thomas Chaloner was by birth a Londiner, by studie a Cantabrigian, by education a Courtier, by religion a deuout and true Christian. Therfore after he had confirmed his youth and minde in the studies of good learning, when Sir Henry Kneuet was sent ambassadour from the myghty Prince Henry the 8. to the Emperour Charles the fift, he went with him as his familiar friend, or as one of his Councell. At which time the said Charles the 5. passing ouer from Genoa and Corsica to Alger in Africa in warlike sort, with a mighty army by sea, that honorable Kneuet the kings ambassadour, Thomas Chaloner, Henry Knolles, and Henry Isam, right worthy persons, of their owne accord accompanied him in that expedition, & serued him in that warre, wherein Thomas Chaloner escaped most wonderfully with his life. For the gally wherein he was, being either dashed against the rockes, or shaken with mighty stormes, and so cast away, after he had saued himselfe a long while by swimming, when his strength failed him, his armes & hands being faint and weary, with great difficulty laying hold with his teeth on a cable, which was cast out of the next gally, not without breaking and losse of certaine of his teeth, at length recovered himselfe, and returned home into his countrey in safety.

The voyage of M. Roger Bodenham with the great Barke Aucher to Candia and Chio, in the yeere 1550.

In the yeere 1550. the 13 of Nouember I Roger Bodenham Captaine of the Barke Aucher entered the said ship at Grauesend, for my voiage to the Ilands of Candia and Chio in the Leuant. The master of my ship was one William Sherwood. From thence we departed to Tilbery hope, and there remained with contrarie windes vntill the 6. of Iannary 1551. The 6 of Iannary, the ship came to Tilbery, and I had prouided a skillfull pylot to cary me ouer the lands end, whose name was M. Wood, and with all speede I valed downe that night 10 miles to take the tide in the morning, which happily I did, and that night came to Douer, and there came to an anker, and there remained vntill tuesday, meeting with the worthy knight sir Anthony Aucher owner of the saide ship.

Aucher goeth for Leuant.

The 11 day we arrived in Plimoth, and the 13 in the morning we set forward on our voyage with a prosperous winde, and the 16 we had sight of Cape Finister on the coast of Spaine.

The 30 we arrived at Cades, and there discharged certaine marchandise, and tooke others aboard.

Mallorca.

The 20 of February we departed from Cades, & passed the Straights of Gibreale that night, and the 25 we came to the Ile of Mallorca, and staid there five daies with contrary winde.

Messina.

The first of March, we had sight of Sardenna, and the fift of the said month we arrived at Messina in Sicilia, and there discharged much goods, and remained there untill good Fryday in Lent.

army to bessege Malta.

The chiefe marchant that laded the sayd Barke Aucher was a marchant stranger called Anselm Saluago, and because the time was then very dangerous, and no going into Leuant, especially to Chio, without a safe conduct from the Turke, the said Anselm promised the owner Sir Anthony Aucher, that we should receiue the same at Messina. But I was posted from thence to Candia, and there I was answered that I should send to Chio, and there I should haue my safe conduct. I was forced to send one, and hee had his answer that the Turke would giue none, willing me to looke what was best for me to doe, which was no small trouble to me, considering I was bound to deliuer the goods that were in the ship at Chio, or send them at mine aduenture. The marchants without care of the losse of the ship would haue compelled me to goe, or send their goods at mine aduenture, the which I denied, and sayd plainly I would not goe, because the Turkes gallies were come forth to goe against Malta, but by the French kings means, he was perswaded to leaue Malta, and to goe to Tripoly in Barbary, which by the French he wan. In this time there were in Candia certaine Turkes vessels called Skyrafas, which had brought wheat thither to sell, and were ready to depart for Turkie. And they departed in the morning betimes, carrying newes that I would not goe forth: the same night I prepared beforehande what I thought good, without making any man priuie, untill I sawe time. Then I had no small businesse to cause my mariners to venture with the ship in such a manifest danger. Neuerthelesse I wan them to goe all with me, except three which I set on land, and with all diligence I was ready to set forth about eight of the clocke at night, being a faire moone shine night, & went out. Then my 3 mariners made such requests vnto the rest of my men to come aboard, as I was constrained to take them in. And so with good wind we put into the Archipelago, & being among the Ilands the winde scantred, & I was forced to anker at an Iland called Micone, where I tarried 10 or 12 daies, hauing a grecke Pilot to carrie the ship to Chio. In this meane season, there came many small botes with mysson sayles to goe for Chio, with diuerse goods to sell, & the Pilot requested me that I would let them goe in my company, to which I yeelded. After the sayde dayes expired, I wayed & set sail for the Iland of Chio, with which place I fel in the after noone, whereupon I call to seaward againe to come with the Iland in the morning betimes. The foresaid small vessels which came in my company, departed from me to win the shore, to get in y night, but vpon a sudden they espied 3 foystes of Turkes comming vpon them to spoyle them. My Pilot, hauing a sonne in one of those small vessels, entreated me to cast about towards them, which at his request I did, and being some thing farre from them, I caused my Gunner to shoot a dym-colouring at a foyst that was ready to enter one of the botes. This was so happy a shot, that it made the Turke to fall a sterne of the bote and to leaue him, by the which meanes hee escaped. When they all came to me, and requested that they might hang at my sterne untill day light, by which time I came before the Hole of Chio, and sent my bote on land to the marchants of that place to send for their goods out of hand, or else I would returne back with all to Candia, & they should fetch their goods there. But in fine, what by perswasion of my merchants English men, & those of Chio, I was entreated to come into the harbour, and had a safe assurance for 20 dayes against the Turkes army, with a bond of the citie in the summe of 12000 ducats. So I made hast & solde such goods as I had to Turkes that came thither, & put all in order, with as much speede as I could, fearing the comming of the Turkes nauie, of the which, the chiefe of the citie knew right wel. So vpon the sudden they called me of great friendship, & in secret told me, I had no way to saue my selfe but to be gone, for said they, we be not able to defend you, that are not able to help our selues, for the Turke where he commeth, taketh what he will, & leaueth what he list, but the chiefe of the Turkes set order y none shal do any harme to the people or to their goods. This was such newes to me, that indeed I was at my wits end, & was brought into many imaginations how to do, for that the winde was contrarie. In fine, I determined to goe forth. But the marchants English men and other regarding moze their gaires then the ship, hindered me very much in my purpose of going forth, and made the mariners to come to me to demand their wages to be payed them out of hande, and to haue a time to employ the same there. But God provided for me, me, that I paid them their money that night, and then charged them, that if they would not let the ship forth, I would make them to answer the same in England, with danger of their heads. Many were married in England and had somewhat to loose, those did sticke to me. I had twelve gunners: the Master gunner who was a madde brayned fellow, and the owners servant had a parliament betwene themselves, and he upon the same came vp to me with his sword drawn, swearing that hee had promised the owner Sir Anthony Aucher, to live and die in the sayde shippe against all that should offer any harme to the shippe, and that he would fight with the whole armie of the Turkes, and neuer yeelde: with this fellow I had much to doe, but at the last I made him confesse his fault and followe mine advise. Thus with much labour I gat out of the Hyle of Chio, into the sea by warping forth, with the helpe of Venoueses botes, and a French bote that was in the Hyle; and being out God sent mee a speciall gale of winde to goe my way. Then I caused a peece to be shotte off for some of my men that were yet in the towne, & with much a doe they came aboard, and then I set sayle a little before one of the clocke, and I made all the sayle I could, and about halfe an houre past two of the clocke there came seven gallies into Chio to stay the shippe: and the admirall of them was in a great rage because he was gone. Whereupon they put some of the best in prison, and tooke all the men of the three ships which I left in the port, and put them into the Gallies. They would haue followed after mee, but that the townes men found meanes they did not. The next day came thither a hundred more of Gallies, and there tarried for their whole companie, which being together were about two hundred & 50 sayle, taking their voyage for to surprize the Island of Malta. The next day after I departed, I had the sight of Candia, but I was two dayes after or euer I could get in, where I thought my selfe out of their daunger. There I continued untill the Turkes armie was past, who came within the sight of the towne. There was preparation made as though the Turkes had come thither. There be in that Island of Candia many banished men, that live continually in the mountaines, they came downe to serue, to the number of foure or five thousand, they are good archers, euery one with his bowe and arrowes, a sword and a dagger, with long haire, and bootes that reach vp to their grine, and a shirt of male, hanging the one halfe before, and the other halfe behinde, these were sent away againe as soon as the armie was past. They would drinke wine out of all measure. Then the armie being past, I laded my shippe with wines and other things: and so after I had that which I left in Chio, I departed for Messina. In the way I found about Zante, certaine Gallions of Turkes, laying aboard of certaine vessels of Venice laden with Sulcatels: I rescued them, and had but a barrell of wine for my powder and shot: and within a few dayes after I came to Messina. I had in my shippe a Spanissh pilot called Noblezia, which I tooke in at Cades at my coming forth: he went with me all this voyage into the Leuant without wages, of good will that he bare me and the shippe, he stood me in good steede untill I came backe againe to Cades, and then I needed no Pilot. And so from thence I came to London with the shippe and goods in safetie, God be prayesd. And all those Partnerers that were in my sayd shippe, which were, besides voyes, threescore and tennie, for the most part were within five or six yeeres after, able to take charge, and did, Richard Chancellor, who first discovered Russia, was with me in that voyage, and Mathew Baker, who afterward became the Queenes Maiesties chiefe ship-wright.

Master Mathew

The voyage of M. John Locke to Ierusalem.

In my voyage to Ierusalem, I imbarked my selfe the 26 of March 1553 in the good shippe called the Mathew Gonson, which was bound for Liorno, or Legorne and Candia. It fell out that we touched in the beginning of Aprill next ensuing at Cades in Andalozia, where the Spaniardes, according to their accustomed maner with all shippes of extraordinarie goodnes and burden, picked a quarrell against the company, meaning to haue forfeited, or at the least to haue arrested the said shippe. And they grew so malicious in their wrongfull purpose, that I being utterly out of hope of any speedie release, to the ende that my intention should not be overthrowen, was inforced to take this course following. Notwithstanding this hard beginning, it fell out so luckily, that I found in the roade a great shippe called the Caualla of Venice, where in after agreement made with the patron, I shipped my selfe the 24. of May in the said yere 1553, and the 25 by reason of the winde blowing hard and contrary, we were not able to enter the straits of Gibraltar, but were put to the coast of Barbarie, where we ankered in the maine sea 2 leagues from thore, and continued so untill two houres before sunne set, and then we weighed againe, and turned our course towards the Straits, where we entered the 26 day aforesayd, the winde being very calme, but the current of the Straites very favourable. The same day the winde beganne to rise somewhat, and blew a furthering gale, and so continued at North-west untill we arrived at Legorne the third of June. And from thence riding over land unto Venice, I prepared for my voyage to Jerusalem in the Pilgrimes shippe.

I John Locke, accompanied with Maister Anthony Rastwold, with diuers other, Hollanders, Zelanders, Almains and French pilgrimes entered the good shippe called Fila Cauena of Venice, the 16 of July 1553. and the 17 in the morning we weighed our anker and layed towards the coast of Istria, to the port of Rouigno, and the said day there came aboard of our ship the Percevena of the shippe named Familiar, for to receiue the rest of all the pilgrimes money, which was in all after the rate of 55. Crownes for euery man for that voyage, after the rate of five shillings sterling to the crowne: This done, he returned to Venice.

Santa Eufemia,

The 19 day we tooke fresh victuals aboard, and with the bote that brought the fresh provision we went on land to the Towne, and went to see the Church of Santa Eufemia, where we sawe the bodie of the sayd Saint.

Monte de Ancona.

The 20 day wee departed from Rouignio, and about noone we had sight of Monte de Ancona, and the hills of Dalmatia, or else of Sclauonia both at one time, and by report they are 100. miles distant from each other, and more.

Il pomo.

Sant Andrea.

Lissa an Island.

Lezina Island.

The 21 we layed still in sight of Dalmatia, and a litle before noone, we had sight of a rocke in the midst of the sea, called in Italian, il Pomo, it appeareth a farre off to be in shape like a siggar loose. Also we sawe another rocke about two miles compasse called Sant Andrea: on this rocke is onely one Monastierie of Friers: we layed betwene them both, and left S. Andrea on the left hand of vs, and we had also kenning of another Island called Lissa, all on the left hande, these three Islands lie East and West in the sea, and at sunne setting we had passed them. Il pomo is distant from Sant Andrea 18 miles, and S. Andrea from Lissa 10 miles, and Lissa from another Island called Lezina, which standeth betwene the maine of Dalmatia and Lissa, tenne miles. This Island is inhabited, and hath great plentie of wine and frutes, and hereagainst we were becalmed.

Carza.

Pelagosa.

Augusta.

Meleda.

Monte Sant Angelo.

The 22 we had sight of another small Island called Carza, which is desolate and on the left hand, and on the right hand, a very dangerous Island called Pelagosa, this is also desolate, and lyeth in the midst of the sea betwene both the maines: it is very dangerous and low land, and it hath a long ledge of rockes lying out six miles in to the sea, so that many ships by night are cast away vpon them. There is betwene Carza and Pelagosa 30 miles, and these two Islands are distant from Venice 400 miles. There is also about twelue miles eastward, a great Island called Augusta, about 14 miles in length, somewhat hillie, but well inhabited, and fruitful of vines, corne and other fruit, this also we left on the left hand: & we haue hitherto kept our course from Rouignio East southeast. This Island is under the Signiorie or gouernement of Ragusa, it is distant from Ragusa 50 miles, and there is by that Island a greater, named Meleda, which is also vnder the gouernement of Ragusa, it is about 30 miles in length, and inhabited, and hath good portes, it lyeth by East from Augusta, and ouer against this Island lyeth a hill called Monte S. Angelo, vpon the coast of Puglia in Italy, and we had sight of both landes at one time.

Ragusa payeth

Il Cromo.

The 23 we layed all the day long by the bowline alongst the coast of Ragusa, and towards night we were within 7 or 8 miles of Ragusa, that we might see the white walles, but because it was night, we cast about to the sea, minding at the second watch, to beare in againe to Ragusa, for to know the newes of the Turkes armie, but the winde blew so hard and contrary, that we could not. This citie of Ragusa payeth tribute to the Turke perely fourteene thousand Scethinos, and euery Scethino is of venetian money eight liuers and two soldes, besides other presents which they giue to the Turkes Bassas when they come thither. The Venetians haue a rocke or cragge within a mile of the said towne, for the which the Raguseos would giue them much money, but they doe keepe it more for the namesake, then for profite. This rocke lieth on the Southside of the towne, and is called Il Cromo, there is nothing on it but onely a Monastierie called Sant Ieronimo. The maine of the Turkes countrie is bordering on it within one mile, for the which cause they are in great subiection. This night wee were put backe by contrarie windes, and ankered at Meleda.

Zupanna.

Isola de Mezo.

Sant Andrea.

The 24 being at an anker vnder Meleda, we would haue gone on land, but the winde came so faire that we presently set saile and went our course, and left on the right hand of vs the forenamed Island, and on the left hand betwene vs and the maine the Island of Zupanna, and within a mile of that vnder the maine by East, another Island called Isola de Mezo. This Island hath two Monastieries in it, one called Santa Maria de Bizo, and the other Sant Nicholo. Also there is a third rocke with a Frierie called Sant Andrea: these Islands are from the maine but two miles, and the channell betweene Melleda and Zupanna is but foure or five miles ouer by gesse, but very deepe, for we had at an anker forty fathoms. The two Ilands of Zupanna and Mezo are well inhabited, and very faire buildings, but nothing plentie saue wine onely. This night toward sunne set it waied calme, and we sayled little or nothing.

The 24 we were past Ragusa 14 miles, and there we met with two Venetian ships, which came from Cyprus, we thought they would haue spoken with vs, for we were desirous to talke with them, to knowe the newes of the Turkes armie, and to haue sent some letters by them to Venice. About noone, we had scant sight of Castel nouo, which Castell a fewer yeeres past the Turke tooke from the Emperour, in which sight were slaine three hundred Spanish souldiers, besides the rest which were taken prisoners, and made gallie slaues. This Castell is hard at the mouth of a channell called Boca de Cataro. The Venetians haue a hold within the channell called Cataro, this channell goeth by to Budoa, and further by into the countrey. About sunne set we were ouer against the hilles of Antueri in Sclauonia, in the which hilles the Venetians haue a towne called Antueri, and the Turkes haue another against it called Marcheuetti, the which two townes continually skirinish together with much slaughter. At the end of these hills endeth the Countrey of Sclauonia, and Albania beginneth. These hilles are thirtie miles distant from Ragusa.

The 27 we kept our course towards Puglia, and left Albania on the left hand. The 28. we had sight of both the maines, but we were neerer the coast of Puglia, for feare of Foysses. It is betweene Cape Chimera in Albania and Cape Otranto in Puglia 60 miles. Puglia is a plaine low lande, and Chimera in Albania is very high land, so that it is seene the further. Thus sayling our course along the coast of Puglia, we saw diuerse white Towers, which serue for sea-markes. About three of the clocke in the after noone, we had sight of a rocke called Il fano, 48 miles from Corfu, and by sunne set we discovered Corfu. Thus we kept on our course with a prosperous winde, and made our way after twelue mile every houre. Most part of this way we were accompanied with certaine fishes called in the Italian tongue Palomide, it is a fish three quarters of a pard in length, in colour, eating, and making like a Hakarell, somewhat bigger and thicke in body, and the tayle forked like a halfe moone, for the which cause it is said that the Turke will not suffer them to be taken in all his dominions.

The 29 in the morning we were in sight of an Island, which we left on our left hande called Cephalonia, it is vnder the Venetians and well inhabited, with a faire towne strongly situated on a hill, of the which hill the Island beareth her name, it hath also a very strong fortresse of Castle, and plentie of corne and wine, their language is Greeke, it is distant from the maine of Morea, thirtie miles, it is in compasse 80 miles. One houre within night we sayled by the towne standing on the South cape of Cephalonia, whereby we might perceiue their lightes. There come oftentimes into the creekes and riuers, the Turkes foysses and gallies where at their arriuall, the Countrey people doe signifie vnto their neighbours by so many lightes, as there are foysses or gallies in the Island, and thus they doe from one to another the whole Island ouer. About three of the clocke in the afternoone the winde scanted, and wee minded to haue gone to Zante, but we could not for that night. This Island of Zante is distant from Cephalonia, 12 or 14 miles, but the towne of Cephalonia, from the towne of Zante, is distant forty miles. This night we went but little forward.

Cephalonia.

Zante.

The 30 day we remained still turning by and downe because the winde was contrary, and towards night the winde mended, so that we entered the channell betweene Cephalonia, & Zante, the which chanell is about eight or tenne miles ouer, and these two beate East and by South, and West and by North from the other. The towne of Zante lieth within a point of the land, where we came to an anker, at nine of the clocke at night.

The 31 about sixe of the clocke in the morning, I with five Hollanders went on land, and lodged at the house of Pedro de Veneria. After breakfast we went to see the towne, and passing along we went into some of the Greeke churches, wherein we sawe their Altars, Images, and other ornaments. This done, wee went to a Monasterie of Friers called Santa Maria de la Croce, these are westerne Christians, for the Greekes haue nothing to doe with them, nor they with the Greekes, for they differ very much in religion. There are but 2. Friers in this Friery. In this Monasterie we saw the tombe that M. T. Cicero, was buried in, with Terentia Antonia, his wife. This tombe was founde about sixe yeeres since, when the Monastery was built, there was in time past a street where the tombe stood. At the finding of the tombe there was also found a pard vnder ground, a square stone somewhat longer then broad, vpon which stone was found a writing of two severall handes writing, the one as it seemed, for himselfe, and the other for his wife, and vnder the same stone was found a glasse somewhat proportioned like an small, but that it was eight square and very thicke, wherein were the ashes of the head and right arme of Mar. T. Cicero, for as stories make mention he was beheaded as I remember at Capua, for insurrection. And his wife having got his head and right arme, (which was brought to Rome to the Emperour) went from Rome, and came to Zante, and there buried his head and arme, and wrote upon his tombe this stile M. T. Cicero. * Haue. Then followeth in other letters, Et in Terentia Antonia, which difference of letters declare that they were not written both at one time. The tombe is long and narrowe, and deepe, walled on every side like a graue, in the botome whereof was found the sayd stone with the writing on it, & the said glasse of ashes, and also another litle glasse of the same proportion, wherein, as they say, are the teares of his friends, that in those dayes they did vse to gather and bury with them, as they did vse in Italy and Spaine to teare their haire, to bury with their friends. In the sayd tombe were a fewe bones. After dinner we rested untill it drew towards evening by reason of the heat. And about foure of the clocke we walked to another frierie a mile out of the towne called Sant Elia, these are white Friers, there were two, but one is dead, not five dayes since. This frierie hath a garden very pleasant, and well furnished with Oranges, Lemons, pomegranates, and diuers other good fruites. The way to it is somewhat ragged, by hill and downe, and very stonie, and in winter very durty. It standeth very pleasantly in a chise betweene two hilles, with a good prospect. From thence we ascended the hill to the Castle, which is situated on the very toppe of a hill. This Castle is very strong, in compasse a large mile and a halfe, which being victualled, (as it is neuer unfurnished) and manned with men of trust, it may defend it selfe against any Princes power. This Castle taketh the inst compasse of the hill, and no other hill neere it, it is so steepe downe, and so high and ragged, that it will tye any man or euer he be halfe way by. Very nature hath fortified the walles and bulwarke: It is by nature foure square, and it commandeth the towne and porte. The Venetians haue alwayes their Podesta, or Gouvernour, with his two Counsellours resident therein. The towne is well inhabited, & hath great quantitie of householders. The Island by report is threescore and tenne miles about, it is able to make twentie thousand fighting men. They say they haue alwayes sixe or seuen hundred horsemen readie at an houres warning. They say the Turke hath assayed it with 100. Gallies, but he could neuer bring his purpose to passe. It is strange to mee how they should maintaine so many men in this Island, for their best sustenance is wine, and the rest but miserable.

The first of August we were warned aboard by the patron, and towards euening we set saile, and had sight of a Castle called Torneste, which is the Turkes, and is ten miles from Zante, it did belong to the Venetians, but they haue now lost it, it standeth also on a hill on the sea side in Morea. All that night we bare into the sea, because we had newes at Zante of twelue of the Turkes gallies, that came from Rhodes, which were about Modon, Coron, and Candia, for which cause we kept at the sea.

The second of August we had no sight of land, but kept our course, and about the third watch the winde scanted, so that we bare with the shore, and had sight of Modon and Coron.

The third we had sight of Cauo Mattapan, and all that day by reason of contrary windes, which blew somewhat hard, we lay a hull untill morning.

The fourth we were still under the sayd Cape, and so continued that day, and towards night there grewe a contention in the ship amongst the Hollanders, and it had like to haue bene a great inconuenience, for we had all our weapons, yea euen our knives taken from vs that night.

The fifth, we sayled by the Bowline, and out of the toppe we had sight of the Island of Candia, and towards noone we might see it plaine, and towards night the winde waned calme.

The sixt toward the break of day we saw two small Islands called Gozi, and towards noone we were betweene them: the one of these Islands is fiftene miles about, and the other 10 miles. In those Islands are nourished stoe of cattell for butter and cheese. There are to the number of fiftie or sixtie inhabitants, which are Greeks, and they liue chiefly on milke and cheese. The Island of Candia is 700 miles about, it is in length, from Cape Spada, to Cape Salomon, 300 miles, it is as they say, able to make one hundred thousand fighting men. We sayled betweene the Gozi, and Candia, and they are distant from Candia 5 or 6 miles. The Candians are strong men, and very good archers, and shoot neere the marke. This Islande is from Zante 300 miles.

The seuenth we sayled all along the sayd Island with little winde and vnsable, and the eight day towards night we drew to the East end of the Island.

The 9 and 10 we sayled along with a prosperous winde and saw no land.

The 11 in the morning, we had sight of the Island of Cyprus, and towards noone we were thwart the Cape called Ponta Malora, and about foure of the clocke we were as farre as Basso, and about sunne set we passed Cauo Bianco, and towards nine of the clocke at night we doubled

Cauo de la gaire.

The 12. of August in the morning wee went on land to Limisso: this towne is ruinated and nothing in it worth writing, saue onely in the mids of the towne there hath bene a fortesse, which is now decayed, and the wals part ouerthrowen, which a Turkish Rouer with certaine gallies did destroy about 10. or 12. yeeres past. This day walking to see the towne, we chanced to see in the market place, a great quantitie of a certaine vermine called in the Italian tongue Cavalette. It is as I can learne, both in shape and bignesse like a grasshopper, for I can iudge but little difference. Of these many peeres they haue had such quantitie y^e they destroy all their cozne. They are so plagued with them, y^e almost euery peere they doe well nie loose halfe their cozne, whether it be the nature of the countrey, or the plague of God, that let them iudge that best can define. But that there may no default be laied to their negligenc^e for the destruction of the, they haue throughout the whole land a constituted order, that euery Farmoz or husbandman (which are euen as slaues bought and sold to their lord) shall euery peere pay according to his territorie, a measure full of the seede or egges of these fornamed Cavalette, the which they are bound to bring to the market, and present to the officer appointed for the same, the which officer taketh of them very straight measure, and writeth the names of the presenters, and putteth the sayd egges or seed, into a house appointed for the same, and hauing the house full, they beate them to powder, and cast them into the sea, and by this policie they doe as much as in them lieth for the destruction of them. This vermine breedeth or ingendereth at the time of cozne being ripe, and the cozne being hat away, in the clods of the same ground do the husbandmen find y^e nestes, or, as I may rather terme them, cates of the egges of the same vermine. Their nestes are much like to the keies of a hase-lut tree, when they be dried, and of the same length, but somewhat bigger, which case being broken you shall see the egges lie much like vnto antes egges, but somewhat lesser. Thus much I haue written at this time, because I had no more time of knowledge, but I trust at my returne to note more of this island, with the commodities of the same at large.

Limisso.

Cavalette, is a certaine vermine in the Island of Cyprus.

The 13. day we went in the morning to the Greekes church, to see the order of their ceremonies, & of their communion, of the which to declare the whole order with the number of their ceremonious crossings, it were to long. Wherefoze least I should offend any man, I leaue it unwritten: but onely that I noted well, that in all their Communion or seruice, not one did euer kneele, nor yet in any of their Churches could I euer see any grauen images, but painted or portrayed. Also they haue store of lampes alight, almost for euery image one. Their women are alwayes seperated from the men, and generally they are in the lower ende of the Church. This night we went aboord the ship, although the wind were contrary, we did it because the patrone should not find any lacke of vs, as sometimes he did: when as tarrying vpon his owne businesse, he would colour it with the delay of the pilgrimes.

The pilgrimes going to the Greeke church.

The 14. day in the morning we set saile, and lost sight of the Island of Cyprus, and the 15. day we were likewise at Sea, and sawe no land: and the 16. day towards night, we looked for land, but we sawe none. But because we supposed our selues to be neere our port, we tooke in all our failles except onely the foresaile and the millen, and so we remained all that night.

The 17. day in the morning, we were by report of the Mariners, some fife miles from Iassa, but it proved contrary. But because we would be sure, wee came to an anker seuen miles front the shore, and sent the skiffe with the Pilot and the master gunner, to learne the coast. but they returned, not hauing seen tree nor house, nor spoken with any man. But when they came to the sea side againe, they went by a little hill standing hard by the brinke, whereon as they thought they sawe the hill of Ierusalem, by the which the Pilot knew (after his iudgement) that wee were past our port. And so this place where we rode was, as the mariners sayd, about 50. mile from Iassa. This coast all alongst is very lowe, plaine, white, sandie, and desert, for which cause it hath fewe markes or none, so that we rode here as it were in a gulfe betwene two Capes.

The 18. day we abode still at anker, looking for a gale to returne backe, but it was contrary: and the 19. we set saile, but the currant hauing more force then the winde, we were driuen backe, insomuch, that the ship being vnder saile, we call the sounding lead, & (notwithstanding the wind) it remained befoze the shippe, there wee had muddie ground at fiftene fadome. The same day about 4. of the clocke, we set saile againe, and sayled West alongst the coast with a fresh side-winde. It chanced by fortune that the shippes Cat leapt into the Sea, which being downe, kept her selfe very valiantly aboue water, notwithstanding the great waues, still swimming, the which the master knowing, he caused the skiffe with halfe a dosen men to goe towards her and fetch her againe, when she was almost halfe a mile from the shippe, and all this while the

A Cat fallen into the sea and recovered.

Ship

Shippe lay on stakes. I hardly beleue they would haue made such haste and meane if one of the company had bene in the like perill. They made the more haste because it was the patrons cat. This I haue written onely to note the estimation that cats are in, among the Italians, for generally they esteeme their cattes, as in England we esteeme a good Spaniell. The same night about tenne of the clocke the winde calmed, and because none of the Shippe knewe where we were, we let fall an anker about 6 mile from the place we were at before, and there we had muddie ground at twelue fathome.

The 20 it was still calme, and the current so strong still one way, that we were not able to stemme the streame: moreover we knew not where we were, whereupon doubting whether we were past, or short of our port, the Master, Pilot, and other Officers of the Shippe entered into counsell what was best to doe, whereupon they agreed to sende the bote on land againe, to seeke some man to speake with all, but they returned as wise as they went. Then we set sayle againe and sounde euery mile or halfe mile, and found still one depth, so we not knowing where we were, came againe to an anker, seuen or eight miles by West from the place we were at. Thus still doubting where we were, the bote went on land againe, and brought newes that we were short 80 miles of the place, whereas we thought we had bene overshoot by east fiftie miles. Thus in these doubts we lost foure dayes, and neuer a man in the Shippe able to tell where we were, notwithstanding there were sixte in the Shippe that had bene there before. Then sayd the Pilot, that at his coming to the shore, by chance he saw two wayfaring men, which were Moores, and he cryed to them in Turkish, insomuch that the Moores, partly for feare, and partly for lacke of vnderstanding, (seeing him to be Christians) beganne to flie, yet in the end with much a doe, they stayed to speake with them, which men when they came together, were not able to vnderstand each other, but our men made to them the signe of the Crosse on the lande, to giue them to vnderstand that they were of the Shippe that brought the pilgrims. Then the Moores knowing (as al the country else doth) that it was the vse of Christians to go to Ierusalem, they wiled them to be yet by west of Iassa. Thus we remained all that night at anker, and the farther west that we sayled, the lesse water we had.

The 21 we set sayle againe, and kept our course Northeast, but because we would not goe along the shore by night, we came to an anker in foure and twentie fathome water. Then the next morning being the 22 we set sayle againe, and kept our course as before, and about three of the clocke in the afternoone we had sight of the two towers of Iassa, and about five of the clocke, we were with a rocke, called in the Italian tongue, Scolio di Santo Petro, on the which rocke they say he fished, when Christ bid him cast his net on the right side, and caught so many fishes. This rocke is now almost worne away. It is from Iassa two or three mile: here before the two towers we came to an anker. Then the pilgrims after supper, in salutation of the holy lande, sang to the praise of God, Te Deum laudamus, with Magnificat, and Benedictus, but in the Shippe was a Friar of Santo Francisco, who for anger because he was not called and warned, would not sing with vs, so that he stood so much upon his dignitie, that he forgot his simplicitie, and neglected his deuotion to the holy land for that time, saying that first they ought to haue called him yet they did beginne, because he was a fryer, and had bene there, and knewe the orders.

The 23 we sent the bote on land with a messenger to the Padre Guardian of Ierusalem. This day it was notified vnto mee by one of the Shippe that had bene a slave in Turkie, that no man might weare greene in this land, because their prophet Mahomet went in greene. This came to my knowledge by reason of the Scriuanello, who had a greene cap, which was forbidden him to weare on the land.

The 24, 25. and 26 we taried in the Shippe still looking for the coming of the Padre guardian, and the 26 at night we had a storme which lasted all the next day.

The 27 in the morning came the Cadi, & Subassi, & the Benicwe, with the Padre guardian, but they could not come at vs by reason of the stormy weather: in the afternoone we assayed to send the bote on land, but the weather would not suffer vs. Then againe toward night the bote went a shoze, but it returned not that night. The same day in the afternoone we sawe in the element, a cloud with a long tayle, like vnto the tayle of a serpent, which cloud is called in Italian Cion, the tayle of this cloud did hang as it were into the sea: and we did see the water vnder the sayde cloude ascend, as it were like a smoke or myste, the which this Cion dyed by to it. The Mariners reported to vs that it had this propertie, that if it should happen to haue lighted on any part of the Shippe, that it would rent and wryeth sayles, mast, shroudes and Shippe and all in manner like a wyth: on the land, trees, houses, or whatsoever else it lighteth on, it would rent and wryeth.

A coniuration.

These mariners did vse a certaine coniuration to breake the sayd tayle, or cut it in two, which

as they say doth pertaine. They did take a blacke hasted knife, and with the edge of the same did crosse the said taile as if they would cut it in twain, saying these words, Hold thou Cion, eat this, and then they sturke the knife on the ship side with the edge towards the said cloude, and I saw it therewith vanish in lesse then one quarter of an houre. But whether it was then consumed, or whether by vertue of the Inchantment it did vanish I knowe it, but it was gone. Hereof let them iudge that knowe moze then I. This afternoone we had no winde, but the Sea very stormy, insomuch that neither chesse, pot, nor any thing else could stand in the shippe, and wee were driven to keepe our meate in one hand, and the pot in the other, and so sit downe vpon the hatches to eat, for stand we could not, for that the Seas in the very port at an anker went so high as if wee had bene in the bay of Portugall with stormy weather. The reason is, as the Mariners said to me, because that there meete all the waues from all places of the Straights of Gibraltar, and there breake, and that in most calmes there go greatest seas, whether the winde blow or not.

The 28. the weather growing somewhat calme, wee went on land and rested our selues for that day, and the next day we set forward toward the city of Ierusalem.

What I did, and what places of deuotion I visited in Ierusalem, and other parts of the Holy land, from this my departure from Iaffa, vntill my returne to the said port, may briefly be scene in my Testimoniall, vnder the hand & scale of the Vicar generall of Mount Sion, which for the contentment of the Reader I thought good here to interlace.

Frater Antonius qui supra.

The 15. of September being come from our pilgrimage, we went aborde our shippe, and set saile, and kept our course West toward the Island of Cyprus, but at that night it was calme, and the 16. the winde freshed, and we passed by Mount Carmel.

The 17. the winde was very scant, yet we kept the sea, and towards night wee had a gulle of raine whereby wee were constrained to strike our sailes, but it was not very stormie, nor lasted very long.

The 18. 19. 20. and 21. we kept still the sea and saw no land because we had very litle winde, and that not very fauourable.

The 22. at noone the Boatswaine sent some of the Mariners into the boat, (which we toed afterne from Iaffa) for certaine necessaries belonging to the ship, wherein the Mariners found a certaine fish in proportion like a Dace, about 6. inches long (yet the Mariners said they had scene the like a foote long and moze) the which fish had on euery side a wing, and toward the taile two other lesser as it were finnes, on either side one, but in proportion they were wings and of a good length. These wings grow out betweene the gills and the carkasse of the same fish. They are called in the Italian tongue Pesce columbini, for in deede, the wings being spread it is like to a flying doue, they say it will flie farre, and very high. So it seemeth that being weary of her flight, she fell into the boate, and not being able to rise againe died there.

The 23. 24. and 25. we sailed our direct course with a small gale of winde, and this day we had sight of the Island of Cyprus. The first land that we discouered was a headland called Cauo de la Griega, and about midnight we ankered by 20. of the Cape. This cape is a high hill, long and square, and on the East corner it hath a high cop, that appeareth vnto those at the sea, like a white cloud, for toward the sea it is white, and it lieth into the sea Southwest. This coast of Cyprus is high declining toward the sea, but it hath no cliffes.

Salini.
Arnacho di Salini.
Casalia.

The 26. we set saile againe, and toward noone we came into the port of Salini, where we went on land and lodged that night at a towne one mile from thence called Arnacho di Salini, this is but a village called in Italian, Casalia. This is distant from Iassa 250. Italian miles.

Sire horsemen to watch the salt pit.

The 27. we rested, and the 28. we hired horses to ride from Arnacho to Salina, which is a good mile. The salt pit is very neere two miles in compasse, very plaine and leuell, into the which they let runne at the time of raine a quantitie of water coming from the mountaines, which water is let in untill the pit be full to a certaine marke, which when it is full, the rest is conveyed by a trench into the sea. This water is let runne in about October, or sooner or later, as the time of the yeere doth afforde. There they let it remaine untill the ende of July or the middelt of August, out of which pits at that time, in stead of water that they let in they gather very faire white salt, without any further art or labour, for it is only done by the great heate of the sunne. This the Venetians haue, and doe maintaine to the vse of S. Marke, and the Venetian ships that come to this Island are bound to cast out their ballast, and to lade with salt for Venice. Also there may none in all the Island buy salt but of these men, who maintaine these pits for S. Marke. This place is watched by night with 6. horsemen to the end it be not stolne by night. Also under the Venetians deni- nions no towne may spende any salt, but they must buy it of Saint Marke, neither may any man buy any salt at one towne to carie to another, but every one must buy his salt in the towne where he dwelleth. Neither may any man in Venice buy moze salt then he spendeth in the city, for if he be knowne to carie but one ounce out of the citie and be accused, hee loseth an eare. The most part of all the salt they haue in Venice cometh from these Salines, and they haue it so plentifull, that they are not able, neuer a yeere to gather the one halfe, for they onely gather in July, August, and September, and not fully these three monthes. Yet notwithstanding the abundance that the shippes carie away yeerely, there remaine heapes like hills, some heapes able to lade nine or tenne shippes, and there are heapes of two yeeres gathering, some of three and some of nine or tenne yeeres making, to the value of a great summe of golde, and when the ships do lade, they neuer take it by measure, but when they come at Venice they measure it. This salt as it lyeth in the pit is like so much ice, and it is six inches thicke: they digge it with axes, and cause their slaues to cary it to the heapes. This night at midnight we rode to Famagusta, which is eight leagues from Salina, which is 24 English miles.

Famagusta.

The 29 about two houres before day, we alighted at Famagusta, and after we were refreshed we went to see the towne. This is a very faire strong holde, and the strongest and greatest in the Island. The walles are faire and new, and strongly rampired with foure principall bulwarkes, and betwene them turrions, responding one to another, these walles did the Venetians make. They haue also, on the hauen side of it a Castle, and the hauen is chained, the citie hath onely two gates, to say, one for the lande and another for the sea, they haue in the towne continually, be it peace or warres, 800 souldiers, and fortye and sixe gunners, besides Captaines, petie Captaines, Governour and Generall. The lande gate hath alwayes fiftie souldiers, pikes and gunners with their harnes, watching therat night and day. At the sea gate five and twentie, vpon the walles euery night doe watch fiftene men in watch houses, for euery watch house five men, and in the market place 30 souldiers continually. There may no soldier serue there aboue 5. yeeres, neither will they without friendship suffer them to depart afoze 5. yeeres be expired, and there may serue of all nations except Greekes. They haue euery yare, which is 45. dayes, 15 Mozenigos, which is 15 shillings sterling. Their horsemen haue onely sixe soldes Venetian a yare, and prouender for their horses, but they haue also certaine lande therewith to plow and sowe for the maintenance of their horses, but cruely I maruell how they liue being so hardly fed, for all the sommer they feede onely vpon chopt strawe and barley, for hey they haue none, and yet they be faire, fat and seruiciable. The Venetians send euery two yeeres new rulers, which they call Castellani. The towne hath allowed it also two gallies continually armed and furnished.

Saint Katherens
Chappel in old Famagusta.

Diners coines
under ground.

The 30 in the morning we ride to a chappell, where they say Saint Katherin was bozne. This Chappell is in olde Famagusta, the which was destroyed by Englishmen, and is cleane ouer-throwne to the ground, to this day desolate and not inhabited by any person, it was of a great circuit, and there be to this day mountaines of faire, great, and strong buildings, and not onely there, but also in many places of the Island. Moreover when they digge, plowe, or trench they finde sometimes olde ancient coines, some of golde, some of silver, and some of copper, yea and many tombes and hautes with sepulchers in them. This olde Famagusta is from the other, foure miles, and standeth on a hill, but the new towne on a plaine. Thence we returned to new Famagusta againe to dinner, and toward euening we went about the towne, and in the great Church we sawe the tombe of king Iaques, which was the last king of Cyprus, and was buried in the yere of Christ one thousand foure hundred seuentie & three, and had to wife one of the daughters of Venice, of the house of Cornari, the which family at this day hath great revenues in this Island, and by means of that marriage, the Venetians challenge the kingdom of Cyprus.

Venice

Cornari, a familie of Venice married to King Jaques.

The first of October in the morning, we went to see the reliefe of the watches. That done, we went to one of the Greekes Churches to see a pot of Jarre of Stone, which is sayd to bee one of the seven Jarres of water, the which the Lord God at the marriage conuerterd into wine. It is a pot of earth very faire, white enamelled, and fairely wrought vpon with drawen worke, and hath on either side of it, instead of handles, eares made in fountaine as the Painters make angels wings, it was about an elle high, and small at the bottome, with a long necke and correspondent in circuit to the bottome, the belly very great and round, it holdeth full twelue gallons, and hath a tap-hole to drawe wine out thereat, the Jarre is very auncient, but whether it be one of them or no, I know not. The aire of Famagusta is very wholesome, as they say, by reason of certaine marshy ground adioyning vnto it. They haue also a certaine peereley sicknesse raigning in the same towne, aboue all the rest of the Island: yet neuertheless, they haue it in other townes, but not so much. It is a certaine rednesse and paine of the eyes, the which if it bee not quickly holpen, it taketh away their sight, so that peereley almost in that towne, they haue about twentie that lose their sight, either of one eye or both, and it cometh for the most part in this moneth of October, and the last moneth: for I haue met diuers times thre and foure at once in companies, both men and women. Their liuing is better cheape in Famagusta then in any other place of the Island, because there may no kinde of prouision within their libertie bee sold out of the Citie.

No vitalles must be sold out of the city of Famagusta.

Great ruines in Cyprus.

The second of October we returned to Arnacho, where wee rested vntill the first day. This towne is a pretty Village, there are thereby toward the Sea side diuers monuments, that there hath bene great ouerthrow of buildings, for to this day there is no yere when they finde not, digging vnder ground, either coines, caues, and sepulchres of antiquities, as we walking, did see many, so that in effect, all alongst the Sea coast, throughout the whole Island, there is much ruine and ouerthrow of buildings: for as they say, it was disinhabited fixe and thirtie yeres before Saint Helens time for lacke of water. And since that time it hath bene ruined and ouerthrowen by Richard the first of that name, king of England, which he did in reuenge of his sisters rauishment comming to Ierusalem, the which inforcement was done to her by the king of Famagusta.

Cyprus 36. yeres disinhabited for lacke of water.

Cypr. inhabited by Richard 1.

The first day we rid to Nicosia, which is from Arnacho seven Cyprus miles, which are one and twentie Italian miles. This is the ancientest citie of the Island, and is walled about, but it is not strong neither of walles nor situation: It is by report thre Cyprus miles about, it is not thoroughly inhabited, but hath many great gardens in it, and also very many Date trees, and plenty of Pomegranates and other fruites. There dwell all the Gentilitie of the Island, and there hath euery Cauallier or Conte of the Island an habitation. There is in this citie one fountaine rented by Saint Marke, which is bound euery eight dayes once, to water all the gardens in the towne, and the keeper of this fountaine hath for euery tree a Bizantin, which is twelue soldes Venice, and sixpence sterling. He that hath that to farme, with a faire and profitable garden there, to belonging, payeth euery yeere to saint Marke, fifteene hundred crownes. The streets of the citie are not paved, which maketh it with the quantitie of the gardens, to seeme but a rurall habitation. But there be many faire buildings in the Citie, there be also Donasteries both of Franks & Greekes. The Cathedral church is called Santa Sophia, in the which there is an old tombe of Iaspis stone, all of one piece, made in forme of a cariage coffer, twelue spannes long, fixe spannes broad, and seven spannes high, which they say was found vnder ground. It is as faire a stone as euer I haue seene.

Nicosia.

A fountaine that watereth all the gardens in the citie. A Bizantin is 6. d. sterling.

S. Sophia is a Cathedral church of Nicosia.

The seventh day we rid to a Greeke frierie halfe a mile without the towne. It is a very pleasant place, and the friers feasted vs according to their abilitie. These friers are such as haue bene priests, and their wiues dying they must become friers of this place, and neuer after eate flesh, for if they do, they are deppriued from saying masse: neither, after they haue taken vpon them this order, may they marry againe, but they may keepe a single woman. These Greekish friers are very continent and chaste, and surely I haue seldome seen (which I haue well noted) any of them fat.

The 8. day we returned to Arnacho, and rested there. The 9. after midnight my company rid to the hill called Monte de la Croce (but I not disposed would not go) which hill is from Arnacho 15. Italian miles. Vpon the sayd hill is a certaine crosse, which is, they say, a holy Crosse. This Crosse in times past did by their report of the Island, hang in the ayre, but by a certaine earthquake, the crosse and the chappell it hung in, were ouerthrowen, so that neuer since it would hang againe in the aire. But it is now couered with silver, and hath 3. drops of our lordes blood on it (as they say) and there is in the midst of the great crosse, a little crosse made of the crosse of Christ, but it is closed in the silver, you must (if you will) beleeue it is so, for see it you cannot. This crosse hangeth now by both endes in the wall, that you may swing it vp and downe, in token that it did once hang in the aire. This was told mee by my fellow pilgrimes, for I sawe it not.

The 10. at night we went aboard by warning of the patron: and the 11. in the morning we set saile, and crept along the shore, but at night we ankered by reason of contrary windes.

Limisso.

The 12. we set saile toward Limisso, which is from Salines 50. miles, and there we went on land that night.

Carrobi, Vulture.

The 13. and 14. we remained still on land, and the 15. the pagrone sent for vs; but by reason that one of our company was not well, we went not presently, but we were forced afterward to hire a boate, and to ouertake the ship some miles into the sea. At this Limisso all the Venetian ships lade wine for their prouision, and some for to sell, and also vineger. They lade also great store of Carrobi: for all the country thereabout adioining, and all the mountaines are full of Carrobi trees, they lade also cotton wooll there. In the sayd towne we did see a certaine foule of the land (whereof there are many in this Island) named in the Italian tongue Vulture. It is a foule that is as big as a Swanne, and it liueth vpon carion. The skinne is full of soft downe, like to a fine furre, which they vse to occupie when they haue euill stomacks, and it maketh good digestion. This bird (as they say) will eate as much at one meale as shall serue him forrie dayes after, and within the compasse of that time careth for no more meate. The countrey people, when they haue any dead beast, they cary it into the mountaines, or where they suppose the sayd Vultures to haunt, they seeing the carion doe immediately greedily seaze vpon it, and doe so ingrafe their talents, that they cannot speedily rise agayne, by reason wherof the people come and kill them: sometimes they kill them with dogs, and sometimes with such weapons as they haue. This foule is very great and hardy, much like an Eagle in the feathers of her wings and backe, but broader her great feathers she is onely downe, her necke also long and full of downe. She hath on the necke bone, betweene the necke and the shoulders, a heape of feathers like a Cassell, her thighs vnto her knees are couered with downe, her legs strong and great, and darceth with her talents assault a man. They haue also in this Island a certaine small bird, much like vnto a Wagtaile in feathers and making, these are so extreme fat that you can perceiue nothing els in all their bodies: these birds are now in season. They take great quantitie of them, and they vse to pickle them with vineger and salt, and to put them in pots and send them to Venice and other places of Italy for presents of great estimation. They say they send almost 1200. Jarres or pots to Venice, besides those which are consumed in the Island, which are a great number. These are so plentifull that when there is no shipping, you may buy them for 10. Carphies, which coine are 4. to a Venetian Soldo, which is penny fatching the dozen, and when there is store of shipping, 2. pence the dozen, after that rate of their money. They of the limites of Famagusta do keep the statutes of the Frenchmen which sometimes did rule there. And the people of Nicosia obserue the order of the Genoueses, who sometimes also did rule them. All this day we lay in the sea with little wind.

Cauo Bianco.

The 16. we met a Venetian ship, and they willing to speake with vs, and we with them, made towards each other, but by reason of the euill strage of the other ship, we had almost boorded each other to our great danger. Toward night we ankered vnder Cauo Bianco, but because the winde grew faire, we set saile againe presently.

Another Cion.
The ship called el Bonna.

The 17. 18. 19. and 20. we were at sea with calme summer weather, and the 20. we had some raine, and saw another Cion in the element. This day also we sawe, and spake with a Venetian ship called el Bonna, bound for Cyprus.

A great tempest.

The 21. we sailed with a reasonable gale, and saw no land until the 4. of Nouember. This day we had raine, thunder, lightening, and much wind and stormie weather, but God be praised we escaped all dangers.

Candia, Gozi.
Anthonie Gelber departeth this life.

The 4. of Nouember, we had first sight of the Island of Candia, and we fell with the Islands called Gozi, by South of Candia. This day departed this present life, one of our company named Anthonie Gelber of Prussia, who onely tooke his surfet of Cyprus wine. This night we determined to ride a trie, because the wind was contrary, and the weather troublesome.

The 5. we had very rough stormie weather. This day was the sayd Anthonie Gelber sowd in a Chauina filled with stones and throwen into the sea. By reason of the freshnes of the wind we would haue made toward the shore, but the wind put vs to the sea, where we endured a great storme and a troublesome night.

The 6. 7. and 8. we were continually at the sea, & this day at noone the wind came faire, whereby we recovered the way which we had lost, and sailed out of sight of Candia.

The

The 9. we sailed all day with a prosperous wind: after 14. mile an houre: and the 10. in the morning, we had sight of Cauo Matapan, and by noone of Cauo Gallo, in Morea, with which land we made by reason of contrary wind, like wise we had sight of Modon, under the which place we ankered. This Modon is a strong towne, and buile in the sea, and ioieth on the North side to the land. It hath a litle castle built into the sea, with a pceere for litle ships and galleis to harbour in. It hath on the South side of the channell, the Island of Sapientia, with other litle Islands all disinhabited. The channell lieth Southwest and Northeast betweene the Islands and Morea, which is firme land. This Modon was built by the Venetians, but as some say it was taken from them by force of the Turke, and others say by composition: in like case Coron, and Napolis de Romania, which is also in Morea. This night the Flemmish pilgrimes being drunke would haue slaine the patrone because he ankered here.

The 11. day we set saile againe, and as we passed by Modon, we saluted them with ordinance, for they that passe by this place, must salute with ordinance, (if they haue) or els by striking their top sailes, for if they doe not, the towne will shoot at them. This day toward 2. of the clocke we passed by the Island of Prodeno, which is but litle, and desert, under the Turke. About 2. houres before night, we had sight of the Islands of Zante and Cephalonia, which are from Modon one hundred miles.

Zante and Ce-
phalonia,

The 12. day in the morning, with the wind at West, we doubled between Castle Torneste, and the Island of Zante. This castle is on the firme land vnder the Turke. This night we ankered afoze the towne of Zante, where we that night went on land, and rested there the 13. 14. and 15. at night we were warned aboard by the patrone. This night the ship tooke in vitailles and other necessaries.

The 16. in the morning we set saile with a prosperous wind, and the 17. we had sight of Cauo de Santa Maria in Albania, on our right hand, and Corfu on the left hand. This night we ankered before the castles of Corfu, and went on land and refreshed our selues.

Cauo S. Maria on the coast of Albania,
Corfu Island.

The 18. by meanes of a friend we were licenced to enter the castle or fortreffe of Corfu, which is not onely of situation the strongest I haue scene, but also of edification. It hath for the Inner warde two strong castles situated on the top of two high craggies of a rocke, a bowe shoot distant the one from the other: the rocke is vnassailable, for the second warde it hath strong walles, with rampiers and trenches, made as well as any arte can deuise. For the third warde and vttermoſt, it hath very strong walles with rampiers of the rocke it selfe cut out by force, and trenched about with the Sea. The bulwarkes of the vttermoſt warde are not yet finished, which are in number but two: there are continually in the castle seuen hundred souldiours. Also it hath continually foure wardes, to wit, for the land entrie one, for the sea entrie another, and two other wardes. Artillerie and other munition of defence alwayes readie placed it hath sufficient, besides the stoeze remaining in their stoezhouses. The Venetians hold this for the key of all their dominions, and for strength it may be no lesse. This Island is very fruitfull and plentifull of wine and cozne very good, and oliues great stoeze. This Island is parted from Albania with a channell, in some places eight and ten, and in other but three miles. Albania is vnder the Turke, but in it are many Christians. All the horsemen of Corfu are Albaneses; the Island is not about 80. or 90. miles in compasse.

The description on of the forre of Corfu,

The Island of Corfu is very plentifull.

The 19. 20. and 21. we remained in the towne of Corfu.

The 22. day we went aboard and set saile, the wind being very caline wee toed the ship all that day, and toward Sunne set, the castle sent a Fragatta vnto vs, to giue vs warning of thire Foistes comming after vs, for whose comming wee prepared and watched all night, but they came not.

The 23. day in the morning being caline, wee toed out of the Streight, vntill wee came to the olde towne, whereof there is nothing standing but the walles. There is also a new Church of the Greekes called Santa Maria di Cassopo, and the townes name is called Cassopo. It is a good porte. About noone wee passed the Streight, and drew toward the ende of the Island, hauing almost no wind. This night after supper, by reason of a certaine Hollander that was drunke, there arose in the ship such a trouble some disturbance, that all the ship was in an vproze with weapons, and had it not bene rather by Gods helpe, and the wiseome and patience of the patrone, more then by our procurement, there had bene that night a great slaughter. But as God would, there was no hurt, but onely the beginner was put vnder hatches, and with the fall hurt his face very sore. All this night the wind blew at Southeast, and sent vs forward.

The 24. in the morning wee found our selues before an Island called Safeno, which is in the entrie to Valona, and the wind prosperous.

Valona.

The 25. day we were before the hills of Antiueri, and about sunne set wee passed Ragusa, and three houres within night we ankered within Meleda, hauing Sclauonia or Dalmatia on the right hand of vs, and the winde South-west.

Meleda,

Curzola a fittitt full Island.

The 26 in the morning we set sayle, and passed the channell between Sclauonia and Meleda, which may be eight mile ouer at the most. This Island is vnder the Raguses. At after noone with a hard gale at west and by north we entered the channell betweene the Island Curzola and the hills of Dalmatia, in the which channell be many rockes, and the channell not past 3 miles ouer, and we ankered befoze the towne of Curzola. This is a pretie towne walled about and built vpon the sea side, hauing on the toppe of a round hill a faire Church. This Island is vnder the Venetians, there grow very good vines, also that part toward Dalmatia is well peopled and husbanded, especially for wines. In the said Island we met with the Venetian armie, to wit, tenne gallies, and three foppes. All that night we remained there.

In the Island of Lefina, are taken store of Sardinas.

The 27 we set sayle and passed along the Island, and towards afternoone we passed in befoze the Island of Augusta, and about sunne set befoze the towne of Lefina, whereas I am informed by the Italians, they take all the Sardinas that they spend in Italy. This day we had a prosperous winde at Southeast. The Island of Lefina is vnder the Venetians, a very fruitfull Island adioyning to the maine of Dalmatia, we left it on our right hand, and passed along.

The gulfe of Quernero. Rouignio.

The 28 in the morning we were in the Gulfe of Quernero, and about two houres after noone we were befoze the cape of Istria, and at sunne set we were at anker afoze Rouignio which is also in Istria and vnder the Venetians, where all ships Venetian and others are bound by order from Venice to take in their Pilots to goe for Venice. All the sommer the Pilots lie at Rouignio, and in winter at Parenzo, which is from Rouignio 18 miles by West.

Parenzo,

The 29 we set sayle and went as farre as Parenzo, and ankered there that day, and went no further.

S. Nicolo an Island.

The 30 in the morning we rowed to Sane Nicolo a litle Island hard by uninhabited, but only it hath a Monastery, it is full of Oliue trees, after masse wee returned and went aboard. This day the patron hired a Barke to imbarke the pilgrims for Venice, but they departed not. In the afternoone we went to see the towne of Parenzo, it is a pretie handsome towne, vnder the Venetians. After supper wee imbarked our selues againe, and that night wee sayled towardes Venice.

Caorle standing at the entrie of the marches of Venice.

The first of December we past a towne of the Venetians, standing on the entery to the Palude or marches of Venice: which towne is called Caorle, and by contrary windes we were diuened thither to take port. This is 60 miles from Parenzo, and forty from Venice; there we remayned that night.

Our arrivall at Venice.

The second two houres befoze day, with the winde at Southeast, we sayled towardes Venice, where we arrived (God be prayesd) at two of the clocke after dinner, and landed about foure, we were kept so long from landing, because we durst not land untill we had presented to the Prouidor de la Sanita, our letter of health.

The manner of the entring of Soliman the great Turke, with his armie into Aleppo in Syria, marching towards Persia against the Great Sophie, the fourth day of Nouember, 1553, noted by Master Anthony Ienkinson, present at that time.

Were marched befoze the Grand Signior, other wise called the Great Turke, 6000 Esperes, other wise called light hoysmen very braue, clothed all in scarlet.

After, marched 10000 men, called Nortans, which be tributaries to the Great Turke, clothed all in yellow veluet, and hats of the same, of the Tartary fashion, two foote long, with a great role of the same colour about their foreheads, richly decked, with their botwes in their hands, of the Turkish fashion.

After them marched foure Captaines, men of armes, called in Turkish Saniaques, clothed all foure in crimson veluet, euery one hauing vnder his banner twelue thousand men of armes well armed with their morrions vpon their heads, marching in good order, with a shott weapon by their sides, called in their language, Simiterro.

After came 16000 Ianizaries, called the slaues of the Grand Signior, all a foote, euery one hauing his harquebush, who be his garb, all clothed in violet silke, and apparelled vpon their heads with a strange forme, called Cuocullucia, fashioned in this sort: the entering in of the forehead is like a skull made of white veluet, & hath a traine hanging downe behind, in manner of a french hooide, of the same colour, and vpon the forepart of the said skull, iust in the middes of his forehead there is standing bolt vpright like a trunke of a foote long of silver, garnished most richly with Gold.

Goldsmiths worke, and precious stones, and in the top of the said trunke a great bulke of feathers, which waueth vp and downe most brauely when he marcheith.

After this, there cam 1000. pages of honour, all clothed in cloth of gold, the halfe of them carrying barquesbushes, and the other halfe Turkish bowes, with their trusses of arrowes, marching in good order.

Then came thre men of armes well armed, and vpon their harnesse coates of the Turkes fashion, of Libard skines, and murrions vpon their heads, their speares charged, and at the end of their staffe hard by y head of the speare, a horse taile died in a bloody colour, which is their ensigne: they be the chalengers for the Turkes owne person.

After them came seuen pages of honour in cloth of siluer, vpon seuen white horses, which horses were couered with cloth of siluer, all embzodered and garnished with precious stones, emeralds, diamonds, and rubies most richly.

After them also came fire moze pages of honour, clothed in cloth of gold, euery one hauing his bowe in his hand, and his sawehine of the Turkes fashion by his side.

Immediately after them came the great Turke himselfe with great pompe & magnificence, vsing in his countenance and gesture a wonderfull maiestie, hauing onely on each side of his person one page clothed with cloth of gold: he himselfe was mounted vpon a goodly white horse, adorned with a robe of cloth of gold, embzodered most richly with the most precious stones, and vpon his head a goodly white tucke, containing in length by estimation fiftene yards, which was of silke and linnen wouen together, resembling something Callicut cloth, but is much moze fine and rich, and in the top of his crowne, a litle pinnach of white Dstirich feathers, and his horse most richly apparelled in all points corresponding to the same.

After him folowed fire goodly pong ladies, mounted vpon fine white hackneis, clothed in cloth of siluer, which were of the fashion of mens garments, embzodered very richly with pearle and precious stones, and had vpon their heads caps of Goldsmiths worke, hauing great flackets of haire, hanging out on each side, died as red as blood, and the nailles of their fingers died of the same colour, euery of them hauing two eunuches on each side, and litle bowes in their hands, after an Antike fashion.

After marched y great Bascha chiefe conductoz of the whole army, clothed with a robe of Dolyman crimson, and vpon the same another shoyt garment very rich, and about him fiftie Janizaries afoote, of his owne gard, all clothed in crimson veluet, being armed as the great Turks owne Janizaries.

Then after ensued thre other Baschas, with slaues about them, being afoote, to the number of thre thousand men.

After came a companie of horsemen very braue, and in all points well armed, to the number of foure thousand.

All this aforesayd army, most pompous to behold, which was in number foure seore and eight thousand men, encamped about the cite of Aleppo, and the Grand Signior himselfe was lodged within the towne, in a goodly castle, situated vpon a high mountaine: at the foote whereof runneth a goodly riuer, which is a branch of that famous riuer Euphrates.

The rest of his armie passed ouer the mountaines of Armenia called now the mountaines of Camarie, which are foure dayesourney from Aleppo, appointed there to ary the coming of the Grand Signior, with the rest of his armie, intending to march into Persia, to giue battel to the great Sophie. So the whole armie of the Grand Signior, containing as well those that went by the mountaines, as also those that came to Aleppo in company with him, with horsemen & footemen, and the conductors of the camels and vittuals, were the number of 300000. men.

The camels which caried munitiion and vittalles for the said army, were in number 200000.

A note of the presents that were giuen at the same time in Aleppo, to the grand Signior, and the names of the presenters.

First the Bascha of Aleppo, which is as a Viceroy, presented 100. garments of cloth of gold, and 25. horses.

The Bascha of Damasco, presented 100. garments of cloth of gold, and twentie horses, with diuers sorts of comfits, in great quantitie.

The Bascha of Aman presented 100. garments of cloth of gold, 20. horses, and a cup of gold, with two thousand duckets.

The Saniaque of Tripolis presented six camels, charged all with silkes, 20. horses, and a litle clocke of gold, garnished with precious stones, esteemed worth two hundred duckets.

The Consul of the company of the Venetians in Tripolis, came to kille the grand Signiors hand, and presented him a great basin of gold, and therein 4000. duckets Venetians.

The safeconduct or priuiledge giuen by Sultan Solymán the great Turke, to master Anthony Ienkinson at Aleppo in Syria, in the yeere 1553.

*S*ultan Solymán, &c. to all Viceroys, Saniaques, Cadies, and other our Officers, Officers, and subiects of Tripolis in Syria, Constantinople, Alexandria in Egypt, and of all other townes and cities vnder our dominion and iurisdiction: We will and commaund you, that when you shall see Anthony Ienkinson, bearer of these present letters, merchant of London in England, or his factor, or any other bearing the sayd letter for him, arrive in our ports and hauens, with his ship or ships, or other vessels whatsoeuer, that you suffer him to lade or unlade his merchandise wheresoeuer it shall seeme good vnto him, traffiking for himselfe in all our countreys and dominions, without hindering or any way disturbing of him, his ship, his people or merchandise, and without enforcing him to pay any other custome or toll whatsoeuer, in any sort, or to any persons whatsoeuer they be, saue onely our ordinarie duties contained in our custome houses, which when he hath paid, we will that he be franke and free, as well for himselfe as for his people, merchandise, ship or ships, and all other vessels whatsoeuer: and in so doing that he may traffike, bargain, sell and buy, lade and unlade, in all our foresayd Countreys, lands and dominions, in like sort, and with the like liberties and priuiledges, as the Frenchmen and Venetians be, and enjoy, and moze if it bee possible, without the hindertance or impeachment of any man. And furthermore, wee charge and commaund all Viceroys, and Consuls of the French nation, and of the Venetians, and all other Consuls resident in our Countreys, in what port or prouince soeuer they be, not to constraine, or cause to constraine by them, or the sayd Ministers and Officers whatsoeuer they be, the sayd Anthony Ienkinson, or his factor, or his seruants, or deputies, or his merchandise, to pay any kind of consullage, or other right whatsoeuer, or to intermeddle or hinder his affaires, and not to molest nor trouble him any maner of way, because our will and pleasure is, that he shall not pay in all our Countreys, any other then our ordinarie custome. And in case any man hinder and impeach him, aboue, and besides these our present letters, wee charge you most expelly to defend and assist him agaynst the sayd Consuls, and if they will not obey our present commandement, that you aduertise vs thereof, that we may take such order for the same, that others may take example thereby. Moreover, we commaund all our Captaines of our Gallies, and their Lieutenants, be they Foildes or other Vessels, that when they shall finde the sayd Ienkinson, or his factor, his ship or ships, with his seruants and merchandise, that they hurt him not neither in body nor goods, but that rather they assist and defend him agaynst all such as seeke to doe him wrong, and that they ayde and helpe him with bitailes, according to his want, and that whosoever shall see these presents, obey the same, as they will auoid the penaltie in doing the contrary. Dade in Aleppo of Syria, the yeere 961. of our holy prophet Mahomer, and in the yeere of Iesus, 1553. signed with the scepter and signet of the grand Signior, with his owne proper hand.

A discourse of the trade to Chio, in the yeere 1569. made by Gaspar Campion, vnto master Michael Locke, and vnto master William Winter, as by his letters vnto them both shall appeare. Written the 14. of February.

*W*hipfull Sir, &c. As these dayes past I spake vnto you about the procurement of a safe conduct from the great Turke, for a trade to Chio: The way and maner how it may be obtained with great ease shall plainly appeare vnto you in the lines following. Sir, you shall vnderstand that the Island of Chio in time past hath bene a Signiorie or lordship of it selfe, and did belong vnto the Genowaies. There were 24. of the that gouerned the island which were called Maunces. But in continuance of time the Turke waxed so strong and mightie, that they, considering they were not able to keepe it, vntlesse they should become his tributaries, because the Island had no coyne, nor any kind of bitailes to sustaine themselves, but onely that which must of necessitie come out of the Turkes dominions, and the sayd island being inclosed with the Turkes round about, and but 12. miles from the Turkes Continent, therefore the said Genowaies did compound and agree to be the Turkes tributaries, and to pay him 14000. thousand ducates yecrelly. Alwayes prouided, that they should kepe their lawes both spirituall and temporall, as they did when the Island was in their owne hands. Thus he granted them their priuiledge, which they enjoyed for many yeeres, so that all strangers, and also many English men did trade thither of long continuance, and went and came in safety. In this meane time, the prince Pedro Doria (being a Genouois) became a capitaine to serue the Emperour with 30 or 40 gallies against the Turke. And since that time diuers other capitaines belonging to Genoa haue bene in the seruice of king Philip against the Turke. Moreover, whensoever the Turke made out any army, he perceived that no nation did him more hurt then those Genouois, who were his tributaries. Likewise at the Turkes siege of Malta, before which place he lay a great while, with losse of his men, and also of his gallies, he found none so troublesome vnto his force, as one Iuanette Doria a Genouois, and diuers others of the Island of Chio, who were his tributaries. At which sight, he tooke such displeasure against them of Chio, that he sent certaine of his gallies to the Island, for to seise vpon all the goods of the 24 Maunefes, and to turne them with their wiues and children out of the Island, but they would let none other depart, because the Island should not be vnpeopled. So that now the Turke hath sent one of his chiefe men to rule there: whereby now it will be more easie for vs to obtaine our safeconduct then euer it was before. For if the towncsmen of Chio did know that we would trade thither (as we did in times past) they themselves, and also the customer (for the Turke in all his dominions doth rent his customers) would be the chiefe procurer of this our safeconduct for his owne gaine: which is no small matter: for we can pay no lesse then ten in the hundred throughout the Turks whole dominion. Inasmuch, that if one of our shippes should go thither, it would be for the customers profit 4000 ducats at least, whereas if we should not trade thither, he should lose so much. Also the burgeses, and the common people would be very glad of our trade there, for the Community do get more by our countrey men then they do by any other nation whatsoeuer: for we do vse to buy many of their silke quilts, and of their Scamato and Dimite, that the poore people make in that towne, more then any other nation, so that we would not so gladly trade, but the people of the countrey would be twise so willing. Wherefore they themselves would be a meanes vnto their gouernour, by their petition to bring this trade to passe: giuing him to vnderstand that of all nations in the world we do him least hurt, and that we may do his countrey great good in consuming those commodities which his countrey people make. Furthermore, it were farre more requisite that we should cary our owne commodities, then to suffer a stranger to cary them thither, for that we can affoord them better cheape then a stranger can. I write not this by hearesay of other men, but of mine own experience, for I haue traded in the countrey about this 30 yeeres, and haue bene married in the towne of Chio full 24 yeeres, so that you may assure yourselfe that I will write nothing but truth. Now I will declare vnto you the wares and commodities that are in the countreyes neere about Chio. There are very good galles, the best sort whereof are sold in England five shillings deerer then any other countrey galles. There is also corten wooll, tanned hides, hides in the haire, ware, chamlets, mocapares, grogerams, silke of diuers countreyes, cordouan skinner tanned white, to be made blacke, of them great quantity, and also course wooll to make beds. The naturall commodities growing in the Island it selfe are silke rawe, and masticke. Of these commodities there are laden yeerely ten or twelue great ships of Genoa, besides five or sixe that do belong to the towne of Chio, which ships are fraughted for Genoa, Messina, and Ancona. And now that the Maunefes and the chiefe merchants of Genoa are banished, the trade is cleane lost, by reason whereof merchandise must now of necessity be better cheape then they haue bene in times past. But yet when all those ships did trade to the countrey, & also our ships, we neuer had lesse then thre kintals of galles for a carlie, and in England we sold them for 35 and 36 shillings the hundred. And whereas now they are brought by the Venetians, they sell them vnto vs for thre pound tenne shillings, and foure pound the hundred. Also we had thre kintals of corten wooll for a carlie, and sold the wooll in England for 50 shillings or 3 pound at the most, whereas now the Italians sell the same to vs for 4 pound 10 shillings and 5 pound the hundred. In like maner chamlets, whereas we had thre picces, and of the best sort two and a halfe for a carlie, and could not sell them about 20 shillings and 22 shillings the picce, they sell them for 30 and 35 shillings the picce. Also grogerams, where we had of the best two picces and a halfe for a carlie, they sell them for foure shillings and foure shillings and six pence the yard. Carpets the smaller sort which serue for cupboozes, we had thre for a carlie: whereas we at the most could not sell them but for 20 shillings the picce, they sell them for 35 shillings the picce. And so all other commodities that the Venetians do bring, they sell them to vs for the third part more gaine then we our selues in those dayes that we traded in those parts. Likewise the barrels of oile that they bring from Candia, we neuer could sell them about foure nobles the barrell, where they sell them alwayes for 50 shillings & 3 pound the barrell. What great pity is this, that we should lose so good a trade, and may haue it in our owne hands, and be better welcome to that countrey then the Venetians. Moreover, the Venetians come very little to Chio, for their most trade is into Alexandria. And for to assure you that we had these commodities in barter of our carlies, looke into your fathers books, and the books of Sir Iohn Gresham, and his brethren, and you shall finde what I haue sayd to be true.

Diuers places where we may haue sweete oiles for our clothing farre cheaper then out of Spaine.

Also you know, that we are forced to seeke oiles out of Spaine, and that for these many yeeres they haue bene sold for 25 pound and 30 pound the tunne: whereas, if we can obtaine the foresayd safeconduct from the Turke, there are diuers places in his dominions, where we may lade 500 tunnes, at 5 pound sterling the tunne. The places are Modon, and Coron, which are but twelue miles distant the one from the other, and do stand in our way to Chio, as you may plainly see by the Card. Also these are places where we may vtter our owne commodities, and not onely these two places, but many others, where we may haue oiles, and be better vsed then we are in Spaine, where we pay very deare, and also are very euill intreated many wayes, as to you is not vnknewen. So that by these meanes (if the marchants will) we may be eased, and haue such a trade as the like is not in Christendome. Now, as for getting the safeconduct, if I were but able to spend one hundred pounds by the yeere, I would be bound to lose it, if that I did not obtaine the foresayd safeconduct. For I know that if the inhabitants of Chio did but thinke that wee would trade thither againe, they at their owne cost would procure to vs a safeconduct, without any peny of charges to the marchants. So that if the marchants will but beare my charges to solicit the cause, I will undertake it my selfe. Wherefore I pray you speake to M^r. Winter and the other marchants, that this matter may take effect. And let me haue your answer here in as soone as conveniently you may, for that the time of the yeere draweth nigh that this businesse must be done. Thus I commit you to God, and rest alwayes yours to command.

Yours as your seruant Gaspar Campion.

To the worshipfull M. William Winter.

It may please your worship to vnderstand, that as concerning the voyage to Chio, what great profit would be gotten, both for marchants, and also for owners of shippes (as it was well knowen in those dayes when the Matthew Gonson, the Tribitie Fitzwilliams, and the Sauour of Bristow, with diuers other shippes which traded thither perely, and made their voyage in ten or twelue moneths, and the longest in a yeere) M^r. Francis Lambert, M^r. Iohn Brooke, and M^r. Drauer can truly informe you heereof at large. And by reason that wee haue not traded into those parts these many yeeres, and the Turke is growen mighty, whereby our shippes doe not trade as they were wont, I finde that the Venetians doe bring those commodities hither, and doe sell them for double the value that we our selues were accustomed to fetch them. Wherefore, as I am informed by the aboue named men, that there is none so fit to furnish this voyage as your selfe: my request is that there may be a shippe of convenient burthen prepared for this voyage, and then I will satisfie you at large what is to be done therein. And because the Turke, as I sayd before, is waken strong, and hath put out the Christian rulers, and placed his owne subiects, we may doubt whether we may so peaceably trade thither as we were wont: therefore I dare undertake to obtaine a safeconduct, if my charges may be borne to goe and come. Of the way how this may be done, M^r. Locke can satisfie you at large. Moreover, I can informe you more of the trade of that countrey, then any other, for that I haue bene in those parts these thirty yeeres, and haue bene married in the very towne of Chio full foure and twenty peres. Furthermore, when one of our shippes cometh thither, they bring at the least sixe or eight thousand carlies, so that the custome thereof is profitable for the prince, and the returne of them is profitable to the common people: for in barter of our wares, we tooke the commodities which the poore of that towne made in their houses: so that one of our shippes brought the prince and countrey more gaines then sixe shippes of other nations. The want of this our trade thither was the onely cause why the Christian rulers were displaced: for when they payd not their perely tribute, they were put out by force. Touching the ship that must go, she must obserue this order, she must be a ship of countenance, and she must not touch in any part of Spaine, for the times are dangerous, nor take in any lading there: but she must lade in England, either goods of our owne, or els of strangers, and go to Genoa or Legorno, where we may be wel intreated, and from thence she must make her money to buy wines, by exchange to Candia, for there both custome & exchange are reasonable: and not do as the Math. Gonson & other shippes did in time past, who made sale of their their wares at Messina for the laving of their wines, and payed for turning their white money into golde after foure and five in the hundred, and also did hazard the losse of shippe and goods by carrying away their money. Thus by the aforesayd course we shall trade quietly, and not be subject to these dangers. Also from Legorno to Castilla de la mar, which is but 16 miles from Naples, and the ready way to Candia, you may lade hoops, which will cost carolins of Naples 27 and a halfe the thousand, which is ducats two and a halfe of Spaine. And in Candia for euery thousand of hoops you shall haue a but of Palmesey cleare of all charges. Insomuch that a ship of the burden of the Mathew Gonson will carry foure hundred thousand hoops, so that one thousand ducats will lade her, and this is an vsual trade to Candia, as M. Michael Locke can testifie. Furthermore, it is not vnknownen to you, that the oiles which we do spend in England for our cloth, are brought out of Spaine, and that very deare, and in England we cannot sell them vnder 28 pound and 30 pound the tunne: I say we may haue good oile, and better cheape in diuers places within the streights. Wherefore if you thinke good to take this voyage in hand, I will informe you more particularly when you please. In the meane time I rest your worshipps to command.

The true report of the siege and taking of Famagusta, of the antique writers called Tamassus, a city in Cyprus 1571.

In the which the whole order of all the skirmishes, batteries, mines, and assaults giuen to the sayd fortresse, may plainly appeare. Englished out of Italian by William Malim.

To the right honourable and his singular good Lord, and onely Patron the Earle of Leicester, Baron of Denbigh, Knight of the honourable order of the Garter, one of the Queenes Maiesties most honourable priuy Councell &c. William Malim wisheth long health with increase of honour.

I hath bene a naturall instinct (right honourable and mine especiall good lord) ingrafted in noble personages hearts, much approued and confirmed also by custome, for them to seeke from time to time, by some meanes in their life, by the which they after their death might deliuer over their name to their posteritie: least otherwise with their body, their fame also altogether might perchance be buried. Vpon the which consideration we reade many notable and famous things to haue bene erected in time past of noble personages (hauing had wealth at will) in such sort, that not onely certaine ruines of the same sumptuous works builded so many hundred yeres past, do still remaine, but also the most part of those princes, the authours of them, do continually by them dwell in our memories. As the Pyramides made at Memphis, or neere the famous riuer of Nilus, by the great expenses of the kings of Egypt: the tower called Pharia, made in the Iland of Pharos by king Ptolomee: the walles of Babylon, made or at the least reedified by queene Semiramis: Dianas church at Ephesus builded by all the noble persons of Asia: Mausolus toome or sepulchre, made by his wife queene of Caria: Colossus Solis placed at Rhodes, I remember not by what Princes charge, but made by the hands of Cares Lindius scholar to Lysippus: and the image of Iupiter, made of Yuory by the hands of the skilfull workman Phydias. The which monuments made of barbarous and heathen Princes to redeeme themselves from obliuion deserved both for the magnificence, and perfect workmanship of the same, to be accounted in those dayes as the seuen woonders of the world. Since the which time, an easier, readier, and lighter way, being also of more continuance then the former, hath bene found out, namely, Letters, which were first inuented by the Caldies and Egyptians, as we reade, and augmented since by others, to our great benefit, and now last of all (no long time past) the same to haue bene commuted to Printers presses, to the greatest perfection of the same: men being first inforced to write their actes and monuments in beasts skinnes dried, in barks of trees, or otherwise perchance as vnreadily. By the which benefit of letters (now reduced into print) we see how easie a thing it is, and hath bene for noble persons, to liue for euer by the helpe of learned men. For the memory of those two woorthy and valiant captaines Scipio and Hannibal had bene long before before this present quite forgotten, except Titus Livius, or some such learned Historiographer had written of them in time. And Alexander Magnus himselfe that great conquerour had nothing beene spoken of, had not Q. Curtius, or some other like by his learned stile reuiued the remembrance of him, and called backe againe his doings to his posteritie. For the which cause we see commonly in all ages learned men to be much made of by noble personages, as that rare paterne of learning, Aristotle to haue bene greatly honoured of that former renowned Monarch Alexander: who affirmed openly, that he was more bound to his Master Aristotle, then to king Philip his father, because the one had well framed his minde, the other onely his body. Many other like examples I could alledge at this present, if I knew not vnto whom I now wrote, or in what: for your honour being skilfull in histories, and so familiarly acquainted with the matter it selfe, that is in still entertaining learned men with all curtesie, I should seeme to light a candle at noone tide, to put you in remembrance of the one, or to exhort you to doe the other, dayly being accustomed to performe the same. Craſſus sayth in Tullies first booke, De Oratore: that a Lawyers house is the oracle of the whole citie. But I can iustly witnesse, that for these fūe yeeres last past, since my returne from my trauell beyond the seas, that your lodging in the Court (where I through your vnderſerued goodnesse to my great comfort do dayly frequent) hath bene a continuall receptacle or harbour for all learned men comming from both the eyes of the realme, Cambridge, and Oxford (of the which Vniuersity your lordship is Chancellor) to their great satisfaction of minde, and ready dispatch of their iūes. Especially for Preachers and Ministers of true religion: of the which you haue bene from time to time not onely a great fauourer, but an earnest furtherer, and protectour: so that these two nurseries of learning (in one of the which I haue before this spent part of my time, that I may speake boldly what I thinke) should wrong your honour greatly, and much forget themselves, if by all meanes possible they should not hereafter (as at this present to their small powers many well learned gentlemen of them do) labour and trauell in shewing of themselves thankful, to reuerence and honour your lordship, and honest their owne names: whose studies certainly would suddenly decay and fall flat, if they were not held vp by such noble proppes, and had not some sure ankerholds in their distresse to leane vnto. How ready dayly your trauell is, and hath long bene besides to benefit all other persons, in whom any sparke of vertue or honesty remaineth, I need not labour to expresse, the world knowing already the same. But whosoeuer they be, that in all their life time haue an especiall care by all meanes to profit as many as they be able, and hurt none, do not onely a laudable act, but leade a perfect and very godly life. Whereupon Strabo affirmeth this most truely to be spoken of them: Mortales tum demum Deum imitari, cum benefici fuerint. That is, Mortall men then specially to follow the nature of God, when they are beneficiall and bountifull to others. Great commendation vndoubtedly it bringeth to any noble personage, that as the Moone, that light and brightnesse which she receiuerh of the Sun, is wont presently to spread abroad vpon the face of the earth, to the refreshing and comforting of all inferiour and naturall things bearing life: so for him, to bestow all that fauour and credit, which he hath gotten at the princes handes, to the helpe and reliefe of the woorthy and needy. Great is the force (my right honourable lord) of true vertue, which causeth men, as Tully writeth in his booke De Amicitia, to be loued & honored oft of those persons, which neuer saw them. Whereof I neuer had better prooffe (I take God & mine owne conscience to witnesse, the which I declared also to certaine of my friends as soone as I returned) then at my last being at Constantinople, in the yere of our Lord 1564, whereas I oft resorting (as occasion serued) to the right honorable Christian ambassadors, while I made my abode there (namely vnto Monsieur Antonio Perimol, lieger there for the French king, Sig. M. Vistor Bragadino, for the signiory of Venice, Sig. Lorenzo Giustiniano, for the state of Scio, or Chios, and Sig. Albertacio delli Alberti, for the duke of Florence) heard them often report and speake very honorably of your lordship, partly for your other good inclinations of nature, but especially for your liberality, & courteous intreating of diuers of their friends & countrymen, which vpon sundry occasions had bene here in this our realme. So that to conclude, all men iustly fauour your honourable dealings and deserts: and I for my part haue reuerenced and honoured the same euermore both here at home, and elsewhere abroad, wishing often to haue had some iust occasion to pay part of that in good will, which my slender abilitie will neuer suffer me fully to discharge. For vnto whom should I sooner present any thing any way, especially concerning matters done abroad, then vnto your lordship, by whom I was much cherished abroad in my trauell, and maintained since my returne here at home? For the which cause I haue enterprised (hoping greatly of your lordships fauour herein) to clothe and set forth a few Italian newes in our English attire, being first moued thereunto by the right worshipfull M.

D. Wilſon

D. Wilson Master of her Maiesties Requests, your honour assured trully friend, a great & painfull furtherer of learning, whom I, and many other for diuers respects ought to reuerence: who remembering that I had bene at Cyprus, was willing that my pen should trauell about the Christian and Turkish affaires, which there lately haue happened: perswading himselfe, that somewhat thereby I might benefit this our native countrey. Against whose reasonable motion I could not greatly wrestle, hazzarding rather my slender skill in attempting and performing this his requested taske, then he through my refusal should seeme to want any iot of my good will. In offering vp the which newes, although I shall present no new thing to your honour, because you are so well acquainted with the Italian copy, as I know: yet I trust your lordship will not mislike, that the same which is both pleasant to reade, and so necessary to be knowne for diuers of our captaines and other our countreymen, which are ignorant in the Italian tongue, may thus now shew it selfe abroad, couered vnder the wing of your lordships protection. Certainly it moueth me much to remember the losse of those three notable Ilands, to the great discomfort of all Christendome, to those hellish Turkes, horseleeches of Christian blood: namely Rhodes besieged on S. Iohn Baptists day, and taken on Iohns day the Euangelist, Rhodes lost, being the 27 of December 1522, Scio or Chios being lost since my being there, taken of Piali Basha with 80 gallies, the 17 of April 1566. And now last of all not only Famagusta the chiefe holde & forresse in Cyprus to haue bene lost of the Venetians the 15 of August last past 1571 Cyprus lost, (the chiefe gouernors & captaines of the being hewen in sunder by the comandement of that tyrant Mustafa Basha) but all the whole Iland also to be conquered by those cruell Turks, ancient professed enemies to all Christian religion. In the which euill successe (comming to vs as I take it for our offences) as I lament the generall losse: so I am surely pensue to vnderstand by this too true a report of the vile death of two particular noble gentlemen of Venice, Sig. M. Lorenzo Tiepolo, and Sig. M. Giovanni Antonio Querini: of both the which I in my trauaile was very courteously vsed, the former of them being then (as now also he was in this ouerthrow) gouernour of Baffo in Cyprus, the other captaine of one of the castels at Corcyra in Greece, now called Corfu. But things past are past amendment, and they could neuer die more honourably, then in the defence of their countrey. Besides that the late blowes, which the Turkes haue receiued since this their fury, in token of Gods wrath against them, do much comfort euery Christian heart. Moreouer this vniforme preparation which is certainly concluded, and forthwith looked for, by very many Christian Princes (would God by all generally) against these barbarous Mahometists: whose cruelty and beastly behauiour I partly know, and am able to iudge of, hauing bene in Turkey amongst them more then eight moneths together. Whose vnfairfulnesse also and breach of promise, as the Venetians manly courage in defence of themselves, and their forresse, your honour may easily reade in this short treatise and small handfull of leaues, I hauing set downe also a short description of the Iland of Cyprus, for the better vnderstanding of the whole matter. The which I not onely most humbly beseech your honour now fauourably to accept as an earnest peny of more to come, and of my present good will: but with your accustomed goodnesse towards me, to defend the same against such persons, whose tongues too readily roule sometime against other mens painfull trauels, perswading themselves to purchase the sooner some credit of learning with the ruder sort, by controlling and ouerdaintie sifting of other mens laboured tasks. For I know in all ages to be found as well Basilisks as Elephants. Thus nothing doubting of your ready ayd heerein, as I assuredly trust of your honours fauourable acceptation of this my poore present, wishing long life with the increase of Gods holy spirit to your lordship and to all your most honourable familie (vnto whom I haue wholly dedicated my selfe by mine owne choise and election for euer) I, craving pardon for my former boldnesse, most humbly thus take my leaue. From Lambeth the 23 of March. Ann. 1572.

Your honours most humble and faithfull seruant for euer, William Malim.

A brieue description of the Iland of Cyprus: by the which not onely the Venetians title why they haue so long enioyed it, but also the Turkes, whereby now he claimeth it, may plainly appeare.

The Iland of Cyprus is inuironed with diuers seas: for Westward it is washed with the sea called Pamphilius: Southward, with the sea Egyptium: on the East part, with the sea Syrium: and Northward, with the sea called Cilicium. The which Iland in time past had diuers names: called once Acamantis, as Sabellicus witnesseth.

ferth. Philonides maketh mention, that it was called sometime Cerasis. Xenogoras writeth, that it was named Aspelia, Amathusa, & Macaria. There were in times past fiftene cities or famous townes in it, but now very few, amongst the which Famagusta is the chiefeft & strongest, situated by the sea side. There is also Nicosia, which was woont, by the traffike of Marchants, to be very wealthy: besides the city of Baffo, Arnica, Saline, Limisso, Melipotamo, & Epi-scopia. Timofthenes affirmeth, that this Iland is in compasse 429 miles: and Artemidorus writeth the length of the same to be 162 miles, measuring of it from the East to the West, betwixt two promontories named Dinaretta and Acamanta. This Iland is thought to be very rich, abundant of Wine, Oile, Graine, Pitch, Rozin, Allum, Salt, and of diuers precious stones, pleasant, profitable, and necessary for mans vse, and much frequented of Marchants of Syria, vnto the which it lieth very nere. It hath bene, as Plinie writeth, joyned sometime with Syria; as Sicilia hath bene also with Italy. It was a long time subiect vnto the Romans, after to the Persians, and to the Soldan of Egypt. The selfesame Iland was sometime also English, being conquered by king Richard the first, in his voyage to Hierusalem in the yeere of our Lord 1192. Who (as Polydore writeth in his fourteenth booke of our English hitorie) being prohibited by the Cypriottes from arriuall there, inuaded and conquered the same soone after by force: and hauing left behinde him sufficient garrisons to keepe the same, departed from thence to Prolemyda: who afterward exchanged the same with Guy of Lusignan, that was the last christened king of Hierusalem, for the same kingdome. For the which cause the kings of England were long time after called kings of Hierusalem. And last of all, the Venetians haue enioyed it of late a long time, in this order following. In the yeere of our Lord 1470, Iohn king of the sayd Iland, sonne to Ianus of Lusignan, had by Helen his wife, which was of the Emperiall house of Paleologus, one daughter only called Charlotta, and a bastard called James: the which James was afterward consecrated Bishop of Nicosia. This Charlotta was married first to the king of Portingall, of whom he had no issue, so that he being dead, Lewes Duke of Saxoy (to whom shee was the second time married) sonne to Lewes the second of that name (vnto whom the said Iland by the right of this his wife Charlotta did appertaine) had the possession of the same. James the bastard as soone as his father was dead, of a Bishop became a souldiour, and with an army wanne the Iland, making it his owne by force. This Duke of Saxoy hearing these newes, with a number of well appointed souldiers, arriued shortly after in Cyprus, and recouering againe the Iland, compelled the bastard to flie soorthwith ouer to the Soldan of Egypt. Who making himselfe his subiect, in time so wrought and tempered the matter, that the Soldan in person at his request passed ouer into Cyprus, besieged Duke Lewes in the castle of Nicosia, and at length compelled him to depart, leauing his kingdome. So that this Bishop became againe King of this Iland: who shortly after cleauing to the Venetians hauing made a league of friendship with them, married by their consent one Catherina the daughter of Marco Cornaro, which Catherin the Senate of Venice adoped vnto them soone after as their daughter. This Bishop not long after sickened, and died, leauing this his wife with child, who liued not long after his fathers death. By the which meanes the Venetians making themselues the next heires to Catherina by the law of adoption, tooke vnto them the possession of this kingdome, and haue kept and enioyed the same almost this hundred yeeres. Now this great Turke called Sultan Selim in the right of the Soldan of Egypt, whom his grandfather (called also Sultan Selim) conquered, pretendeth a right title vnto it, and now, as you may vnderstand by reading of this short Treatise, hath by conquest obtained the same. Whom I pray the euerliuing God, if it be his holy will, shortly to roet out from thence,

To the Reader.

Am not ignorant (gentle Reader) how hard a matter it is for any one man to write that, which should please and satisfie all persons, we being commonly of so diuers opinions and contrary iudgements: againe Tully affirmeth it to be a very difficult thing, to finde out any matter which in his owne kinde may be in all respects perfect. Wherefore I trust by your owne iudgement I ought of reason to be the sooner pardoned (my translation being precisely ried to mine authours meaning) if any thing heerein besides be thought to be wanting: I haue learned by the way how comberous a thing it is to turne the selfesame matter out of the Italian language into our countrey speech. But who so deeth what he possibly can is bound to no more. And I now at the request of others (who put me in minde, that I was not onely borne vnto my selfe) haue accomplished that in the ende, which I promised and was required required. With what paine and diligence, I referte me to them which are skilfull in the Italian tongue, or may the better iudge, if it please them to trie the same, casting aside this exemplar, I speake it not arrogantly, I take God to witnesse: but mens painefull trauels ought not lightly to be condemned: nor surely at any time are woont to be of the learned, or discreet. By whose gentle acceptation if these my present doings be now supported, I will perswade my selfe that I haue reaped sufficient fruit of my trauell. Vnto whome with all my heart I wish prosperous successe in all their affaires, Ann. Dom. 1572. W. M.

The true report of all the ſucceſſe of Famaguſta, made by the Earle Neſtor Martiningo, vnto the renowned Prince the Duke of Venice.

The ſixteenth day of February, * 1571, the fleet which had brought the ayde vnto Famaguſta, departed from thence, whereas were found in all the army, but foure thouſand footmen, eight hundred of them choſen ſouldiers, and three thouſand (accounting the Citizens and other of the Villages) the reſt two hundred in number were ſouldiers of Albania. After the arrivall of the which ſuccour, the fortification of the City went more diligently forward of all hands, then it did beſore, the whole garriſon, the Grecian Citizens inhabiting the Towne, the Gouvernours and Captaines not withholding themſelues from any kinde of labour, for the better encouragement and good example of others, both night and day ſearching the watch, to the intent with more carefull heed taking they might beware of their enemies, againſt whom they made no ſally out of the City to ſkirmiſh but very ſeldome, eſpecially to vnderſtand when they might learne the intent of the enemies. Whilſt we made this diligent prouiſion within the Citie, the Turks without made no leſſe preparation of all things neceſſary, ſit to batter the fortrefſe withall, as in bringing out of Caramania and Syria with all ſpeed by the Sea, many woollpacks, a great quantitie of wood and timber, diuers pieces of artillery, engines, and other things expedient for their purpoſe.

At the beginning of April Halli Baſha landed there with foureſcore gallies or thereabout in his company, who brought thither that, which of our enemies was desired, who soone after departing from thence, and leauing behinde him thirty gallies, which continually transported souldiours, munition, fresh victuals, and other necessaries, besides a great number of * Caramulalins, or Bizgandines, great Pulkes called * Maones, and large broad vessels termed of them * Palandrie, which continually passed to and fro betwene Cyprus and Syria, and other places thereabout, which they did with great speed, standing in feare of the Christian army. And about the middlest of the same moneth the Turkes caused to be brought out of the Citie of Nicosia, which they had woone a little before, fiftene pieces of artillery, and raising their army from whence they were before, making ditches and trenches necessary, incamped themselves in gardens, and toward the West part of Famagusta neere a place called Precipola.

* In Italy and other places the date of the pere of y Lord is alwayes changed the ſiſt of January, or on ſeuerall peres day, and from that day reckoned vpon: although here here in England, eſpecially the temporall lawyers for certaine caſes are not woont to alter the ſawe until the ſummeſſation of our laſt die.

The five and twentieth day of the same moneth they raised by mounts to plant their artillery upon, and caused trenches to be made for harquebuzers, one very nigh another, appoaching still very neere the Citie, in such order, as was almost impossible to stay the same, forie thousand of their Pioners continually labouring there the most part of all the night. The intent of the ennemie being then knownen, and in what part of the Citie he minded most to plant his battery, we tooke diligent heed on the other part, to repaire and fortifie all places necessary within. For the which cause wee placed a great watch in that way, which was couered with a counterscharfe, and in the sallies of their priuy Posternes, for the defence of the said counterscharfe, there were new flankers made, also Trauerles called Butterisses made vpon the Coztaine, with one trench of Turues two foot high and broad, the which was made on that side of the wall of the Cistle, which was already battered with the shot of the Turkes, with certaine loope holes for our Harquebuzers, by the which they defended the counterscharfe. Two noble personages Bragadino and Baglione personally tooke this charge on them, by the which meanes the Christian affaires passed in very good order. All the head for our Souldiers was made in one scope house, of the which the noble gentleman Lorenzo Tiepolo capitaine of * Basso had charge, who refused no paine, where he thought his trauell might preuaile. In the castle was placed that famous gentleman Andrea Bragadino, who with a diligent gard had charge on that part of the castle principally, next vnto the sea side, trimming and digging out new flankers for the better defence of the * Arsenall.

A valiant knight named Foito was appointed Master of the Ordinance, who was slain within few dayes after in a skirmish, whose garrison the noble Bragadino Proueditore before named presently deliuered ouer to me. Three other captaines were appointed ouer the wild-fire with twentie footmen for euery one of them, chosen out of the armie, to vse and execute the same as occasion should serue. The best pieces of Ordinance were brought forth vnto that side of the Towne, where the battery was looked for to be made: and they made priuy fences to couer the better their cannon shot withall. There was no want in the Christians to annoy their enemies in issuing often out of euery side against them, as well to hinder their determinations, as to hurt them otherwise at diuers times. They also rendered to vs the like. For three hundred of the inhabitants of Famagusta one time issuing out of the citie, armed onely with their swords and targets, with so many Italian Harquebuzers also in their company, receiued great damage, because the trenches of the enemies were made about so thicke, although at the same present wee compelled them to flie, and slew also many of them: yet they increased to such number, that they killed presently thirty, and hurt there the scope of our company. For the which cause order was taken, that our men should no more come forth of their holde, committing themselves to manifest perill to bid their enemies the bafe.

The Turkes in proceffe of time by little and little with their trenches, came at length to the toppe of the counterscharfe, and hauing furnished their forts the nineteenth day of May, began their battery with ten forts, hauing threescore and foureteene pieces of great artillery within their custody, amongst the which there were foure Bassilikes (for so they terme them) of an immeasurable greatnesse, and began to batter from the gate Limisso vnto the Arsenall, and layed five batteries against the towne, the one against the great high Turret of the Arsenall, which was battered with five pieces of Ordinance mounted vpon that fort of the rocke, the other against the Coztaine it selfe of the Arsenall, battered by one fort with eleuen pieces: another against the Kecke of Andruzzi with two commanders, or caualiers, which were aboue with one fort of eleuen other pieces: another battery against the Turret of S. Nappa, the which was battered with foure Bassilikes. The gate of Limisso, which had one high commander or caualier alone, and a Bzepe and Coztaine without was battered by the forts with thye and thirty pieces of artillery, whereas Mustafa himselfe Generall of the Turkes army tooke the charge in person. At the first they seemed not to care much to spoile the walles, but shot still into the city, and against gainst our Ordnance, which greatly galled them. Whereupon they, who were within the city, aswell our souldiours, as the Grecians, asloone as the battery began, withstanding themselves, came and dwelt by the walles of the citie, whereas they continued from that time to the end of the siege. The noble Bragadino lodged in the Keepe of Andruzzi, Baglioni in that ward of S. Nappa. The honourable Tiepolo in that which was called Campo Santo. Wherefore they being present at all that was done, both encouraged, and punished the souldiers according to their deserts. The right worshipfull Luigi Martinigo was appointed chiefe ouer the Ordnance, who answering all mens expectation of him, with great courage diuided the charge thereof vnto six other inferiour capitaines, who tooke order and care for that company, and for the prouision of things necessary for the gunners: one company of the Grecians being appointed to euery gate of the Citie for to attend vpon the seruice of the artillery. The valiant captaine Francesco Bagone warded at the Keepe, and at the great Commander of the Arsenall, Captaine Pietro Conte attended vpon the Coztaine, at the Commander of the Volti, and at the Keepe of Campo Santo. For my part attended vpon the Commander of Campo Santo, and vpon the Commander of Andruzzi, and of the Coztaine, vnto the Turret of Santa Nappa. The Earle Hercole Martinigo attended vpon the Commander of Santa Nappa, and to the whole Coztaine, vnto the gate of Limisso. Horatio Captaine of Veletri attended vpon the Brey and Coztaine, toward the Bulwarke. Vpon the high Commander of Limisso, which was more troubled then all the rest, attended the Captaine Roberto Maluezzi. At the same time, when the battery began (by the commission of the honourable Bragadino) victuals were appointed, and giuen to all the souldiers, aswell Grecians, as Italians, and Gunners: namely Wine, Portage, Cheese, and Bacon: all the which things were brought to the walles as need did require in very good order, so that no souldier there spent any more in bread then two soules a day. They were payed at the end of euery thirty dayes with the great trauell of that right worshipfull Venetian gentleman M. Giouanni Antonio Querini, who besides this his ordinary charge was found present in all weighy and dangerous affaires to the great incouragement of our souldiours. And wee made a counterbattery against our enemies for ten dayes space, with so great rage, that we choked and destroyed fifteene of their best pieces, also we killed and dispatched of them about thirtie thousand at that season, so that they were disappointed at that time of their battery in that place, and were greatly dismayed. But we foreseeing that we had no great store of powder left, there was made a restraint, and such order taken, that thirtie pieces should not shoot off but thirtie shot a piece euery day, and that in the presence of the Capitaines, who were still present, because the Souldiers and Gunners should not shoot off in vaine.

The nine and twentieth day of May there came towards vs from Candia a Frigate or Pinace, the which giuing vs great hope and lightening of ayde, encreased maruellously euery mans courage. The Turks with great trauell and slaughter of both sides, had woone at the last the counterscharfe from vs, with great resistance and mortallitie on both parts. Whereupon they began on the other side of the fist battery to fill by the ditch, with the earth that they threw downe, which was taken weere the wall of the counterscharfe. But all that earth and falling downe of the wall made by the shot of their artillery, was caried away of vs within the city, all our company labouring continually aswell by night as day, vntill our enemies had made certaine loope-holes in the wall, thozow the which they flanking and scouring all the ditch with their harque-bullie, stopped our former course of carying, or going that way any more, without certaine and expresse danger. But M. Giouanni Marmorì, a fortifier, had deuised a certaine kinde of iopned boords, the which being caried of the souldiers, defended them from the shot of the Harque buzers, so that some other quantity of earth, but no great store, was caried also away: in the which place this foresayd fortifier was slaine, who had done especiall good seruice in all our necessary affaires. And our enemies hauing cast so much earth into the ditch, as filled it vp againe, and made it a firme way to the wall of the counterscharfe, and casting befoze them the earth by little and little, they made one trauesse euen vnto the wall on two sides in all their batteries, the which they made thicke and strong with woolpacks, and other fagots, to assure themselves the better of our flankers.

When they had once possessed the ditch, that they could not be hurt of vs but by chance, they began forthwith to cast and digge out vndermines to undermine the Brey, the Turret of Santa Nappa, the Commander of Andruzzi, the Keepe of Campo Santo, the Coztaine, and the Turret of the Arsenall: so that being able no longer to serue our turne and inioy those fewe flankers, we threw downe wide-fire into our enemies campe, the which annoyed them very sore, because it fired their woolpacks, & also their fagots. And for the better encouragement of the souldiers, the right honorable Bragadino gaue to euery souldier one buckat, by which could gaine or recouter any of the former woolpackes, making countermines in all places. To the which charge Maggio the fortifier knight was appointed, who in all our businesse serued with such diligence and courage, as he was able, or was requisite. But the countermines met not, saving those of the Commander of S. Nappa, of Andruzzi, and that of Campo Santo, because they were open, and our men sallied out often both by day and night into the ditch to perceiue better the way of the mines, and to fire the sagots and wooll. For we ceased at any time through the unspeakable trauell of the Lord Baglione (who had the ouersight of all these matters) to trouble our enemies intents, by all manner of wit and policie, diuiding the companies for the batteries, ioyning and planting in all places a garrison of the * Albanois souldiours, who as well on foot as on horsebacke, shewed alwayes notable courage and manhood.

The first assault.

The one and twentieth day of June they put fire to the mine of the Turret of the Arsenall, whereas Giambelar Bey tooke charge, who with great ruine rent in sunder a most great and thicke wall, and so opened the same, that he threw downe more then halfe thereof, breaking also one part of the vaimure, made before to vpholde the assault. And suddenly a great number of the Turkes skipping vpon the ruines thereof, displayed their Ensignes, euen to the toppe of the same. Captaine Pietro Conte with his company was in that ward, the which was much shaken and terrified by that sudden ruine. With my company came first thither, so that they shortly tooke the repulse, and although they refreshed themselves with new supplies fire or fire times, yet they failed of their purpose. There fought personally the Lord Baglione: Bragadino and Querini being armed stood not farre off to refresh and comfort our Souldiours, and the Captaine of the Castell with the Ordinance, that was placed vpon the Butteries, destroyed many of our enemies, when they gaue y^e assault, the which endured five houres together: so that of Turkes were slaine very many, and of our side betwene them that were slaine and hurt one hundred: most part of the which number were cast away by a mischance of our wilde-fire, the which being vnadvisedly and negligently handled, burnt vp many of our owne company. There died at that present the Earle Gio. Francesco Goro, the Captaine Barnardino Agubio: and by the throwing of stones Hercole Malatesta, Captaine Pietro Conte, with other Captaines and Standerbearers, were very sore hurt.

Of this noble & painfull Venetian gentleman M. Gio. Antonio Querini (who was afterwards shewen in sunder by the commandement of Mustafa) I was entertained very courteously in my tranell at Corcyra, now called Corfu, he being then there Mag. Castellano or Capitaine of one of the castles.

In remitties me haue no regard to spare trifles.

Whosident & carefull gouernours of this gistrates seldome sleepe all the night at any time, much lesse in dangerous seasons.

The night following arriued in Cyprus a Pinnasse from Candia, which bringing netes of most certaine ayde, greatly increased both the mirth and courage of vs all, so that we made soone after, with the helpe of the Captaine Marco Criuellatore, and Maggio the knight, certaine recruits flankted to all the places beaten downe, and whereas they suspected that the enemy had digged by any mines, with Hogsheds, Chests, Tikes, and Sacks stuffed full of moist earth (the Grecians with all speed hauing already brought almost all that which they had) because they hauing dispatched their Canues about necessary uses, they brought their hangings, carpets, euen to their very sheets, to make and stuffe vp their forsayd sacks, a very good and ready way to make vp againe their vaimures, the which were throwen downe with the fury of the artillery, which neuer stinted, so that we made vp againe still that in the night, the which was throwen downe and broken in the day, sleeping very seldome: all the souldiers standing alwayes vpon the walles, visited continually of the Gouernours of the Citie, which slept at no time, but in the extreme heat of the day, hauing no other time to take their rest, because the enemy was at hand, giuing vs continually alarmes, not suffering vs long to breathe.

The second assault.

The nine and twentieth day of the same moneth they set the mine made towards the Brey on fire, the which mine was digged in stone, which brake and cleft all things in pieces, and caused great ruine, making an easie way for the enemy to assault vs, who with an outrageous fury came to the toppe, whereas Mustafa their Generall was alsogether present, which assault was reiectued, and stayed at the beginning of the Earle Hercole Martiningo with his garrison, and so were repulsed by our company, who fought without any aduantage of couert, the vaimure being throwen downe by the mine. There were slaine of our company Captaine Meani the Sergeant Maior of our armie, Captaine Celio de Fuochi, Captaine Erasmo da Fermo: and Captaine Soldatello, Antonio d'Ascoli, Captaine Gio. d'Istria, Standerbearers, with many other officers, were sore wounded, there died also 30 other of our common souldiers. At the Arsenall they were beaten backe with greater dammage of our enemies, and small hurt to vs.

A small thing at the beginning, or in due time done, helpeth much.

If oneely of our part being slaine there, whereas Captaine Giacomo de Fabriano also was killed, and I was wounded in my left legge with an harquebush shot. The which assault continued fire houres, the Bishop of Limisso standing by there, encouraging the Souldiours. Where also were found present at that women, who came thither with weapons, stones, and water, to helpe the Souldiours. Our enemies vnderstanding how great hinderance they had received at these two assaults, changed their mindes, and began againe with greater fury then euer they had before accustomed to lay batterry to all places, and into our retreats, so that they labouring more speedily then euer they did, made seuen other forts more, vnder the castle, and taking away the artillery from them which were farther off, planting of it somewhat neerer, to the number of fourescore, they battered the holde with so great rage, that on the eighth day of Iuly, with the same night also were mumbled fivethousand Canon shot, and after that fort they ouerthrew to the ground the baimures, that scarcely with great traicell and paine we could repaire them againe, because our men that laboured about them were continually slaine by their Ordnance, and by reason of the endlesse tempest of the shot of their Harquebuzers. And our men beganne to decrease. For the Turkes caused vs to retire from our Bzeys, by the violence of their artillery and mining, in such sort, that there being no more standing left for our Souldiours, because we making our baimures more thicke, our standing began to waie narrower, the which presently we of necessitie enlarged with boord as a scaffolde to the baimure, whereby we might haue more elbow roome to fight. Captaine Maggio also made one mine vnder the sayd Bzey, to the intent, that we being not able any longer to keepe it, the same might be left to our enemies to their great hinderance.

That certaine women in this hating this Island be vnto us, of making, a saw sufficient to tell at any last being there, in a city called Salina.

It is accounted a good warlike shift, to leane that to our enemies with hinderance, which we can not any longer keepe, and ble to our owne commodity.

The third assault.

The sayd Bzey the ninth day of Iuly they gaue the third assault, to the Turrion of Santa Nappa, to that of Andruzzi, to the Coztaine, to the Kreepe of the Arsenall: the which assault hauing continued more then fire houres, they were beaten backe in foure places, but we left the Bzey to their great losse, and ours also: because we being assaulted, our company being not able to mannage their Pikes in good order, by reason of the narrowness of the standing where they were, being willing to retire in that order, as the L. Baglione had prescribed vnto them, and could not, cast themselves at the last into a confuse order, and retired, they being mingled amongst the Turkes: so that fire being giuen to our mine, the same (with a terrible sight to beholde) slew presently of our enemies more then one thousand, and aboute one hundred of vs. There was slaine Roberto Maluezzi, and Captaine Marchetto de Fermo was grievously wounded. At the assault of the Arsenall was slaine Captaine Dauid Noce master of the Campe, & I my selfe was hurt by the rasing of a Cannon shot. This assault continued five houres, and the Citizens of Famagusta shewed great courage in euery place, with their women also, and poong striplings. The Bzey was so defaced by reason of this mine set on fire, that no body any more attempted to recover the same: because there was no apt place remaining to stay vpon. The left flanker onely remained still, whereas another mine was made, The gate of Limisso was ouer against this foresayd Bzey, and somewhat lower, which was alwayes open, hauing made to the same a Portall, with a Percollois annexed to it, the which Percollois by the cutting of a small cord, was a present defence to the gate, and our Souldiours gaue their attendance by that gate to bying in the battered earth, which fell in the ditches from the rampaire: and when they saw that their enemies in foure dayes came not thither, they beganne to entrench aboute the Bzey, and by the flankers aboute they suffered no person to passe out of the gate, the which thing brought great suspicion vnto our enemies, because they were often times assailed of our company.

The fourth assault.

Wherefore they came the foureteenth day of Iuly to assault the gate of Limisso, and laying their batterry to all other places, they came and planted their Ensignes euen before the gate, whereas the L. Baglione, and Sig. Luigi were in readinesse, who had taken vpon them to defend that gate of the Citie. Who alsoone as they had encouraged their Souldiours, sallying swiftly forth, killed, and put to flight the greater part of them, and at the last giuing fire to the mine of the flanker slew foure hundred Turkes, and Sig. Baglione at the same time woun an Ensigne of our enemies, wassing it violently out of one of the Ensigne beateers hands. The day following they gaue fire to the mine of the Coztaine, the which thing not falling out greatly to their purpose, they followed not their prepared assault. Wherefore they beganne to fortifie, and aduance higher their trauerses in the ditches, for their better assurance against they should giue the assault: and they had emptied and carried away all the earth neere vnto the counter-skarfe, where they lodged in their pavillions, so that we could not descrie them. They shot seuen pierces of artillery vpon the wall of the counterscharfe so couertly, that they were not scene: two from the Brey of the Turriou of Santa Nappa, one from Andruzzi, and two other all along the batterry of the Cortaine. And they came with certaine boozdes couered with rawe and greene hides, vnder which they brought their men to digge in the baimures, we being nothing behinde of forgetfull to cast wilde-fire amongst them, and sometime to issue forth of our sallies called Posternes, to offend their Pioners, although to our great hinderance. And we still repaired the baimures by all meanes possible, with Buffe skinnes, being moist and wet, throwing in also earth, threads, and cotton with water, being well bound together with cordes: all the women of Famagusta gathering themselves together into companies in euery street (being guided of one of their Honkes called Caloiero) resorted daily to a certaine place appointed, to labour, gathering and prouiding for the souldiers, stones and water, the which was kept for all assaults in halfe butts to quench the fire, which the Turks threw amongst them.

Having had no great successe in taking of the gate, they found out a newe way, neuer heard of before, in gathering together a great quantitie of certaine wood called Teglia, which easily burned, and smelt very euill, the which they throwing before the former gate of the Citie, and fagots fastened to the same, with certaine beames besmeered with Pitch, kindled suddenly to great a fire, as was not possible for vs to quench the same, although we threw vpon it whole Butts of water, which were throwen downe from an high Commander, which Butts presently brake in sunder.

This fire continued foure dayes, wherefore we were inforced by reason of the extreame heat and stinch, to withdraue our selues further inward, and they descending towards their lower flankers, beganne other mines, so that the gate was shut vp, because it could be no longer kept open, and suddenly (a thing maruellous to be spoken) the standing of the Brey being repaired, and made vp againe, they planted one pierce ouer against the gate, the which of vs with stones, earth and other things, was suddenly buried vp. By this time we were dzinen to an erigent, all our prouision within the Citie stooping very lowe, sauing onely hope, the noble courage of the Gouernours and Captaines, and the stout readinesse of the Souldiours: our wine, and flesh as well powdered as unpowdered was spent, nor there was any Cheese to be gotten, but vpon an vnreasonable price, our company hauing eaten vp their Horses, Asses, and Cats, for lacke of other victuals: there was nothing left to be eaten, but a small quantitie of Bread, and Beanes, and we dranke water and Vineger together, whereof was not much left. When that we perceiued that our enemies had digged and cast vp three mines in the Commander of the gate, they labouring in all places more diligently then euer they did before, bringing into the ditch, ouer against the batterry of the Cortaine, a hill of earth, as high as the wall: and already they came to the wall about the Counterscharfe ouer against the Turriou of the Arsenall, and had made one Commander complete, fenced with shares, like vnto plough shares, in proportion and height corresponding to ours.

Within the Citie were remaining but fine hundred Italian Souldiours, who were not hurt, yet very faint and weary by their long watching and paines in fighting in those feruent and burning heates, which are in those parts. And the greater and better part also of the Grecians were by this time slaine, whenas the chiefe of those Citizens remaining did fully resolve themselves (the which was about the twentieth day of July) to present a supplication in writing to that noble gentleman Bragadino Proueditore, desiring and beseeching him, that seeing their Citie and Fortresse was thus battered and brought to extremitie, without sufficient ayde to defend the same, without substance or sustenance, hauing no hope of succour, or any newe supply, they hauing spent and consumed not onely their goods, but also their liues for the defence of them, and in testifying of their dutifull seruice towards the noble and royal all State of the Segniorie of Venice, that it might nowe please him, and the rest of the honourable Gouernours, that were present, and put in trust, hauing a carefull eye vnto some trauelled wiues, and the safeguard of their poore childzen, which otherwise were shortly very like to be a pray to their bloudthirsting and rauening enemies. To the which letter of supplication speedy answer was made by the forenamed honourable Bragadino, comforting them, that they should by no meanes abate their courage, and that shortly he looked for succour from the Segniorie, diminishing as much as hee might, the feare which they had conceiued in their hearts.

hearts, dispatching and sending away suddenly from Cyprus into Candia, a Pinnelle to certifie the duke and gouernours there, in what extremitie they were. The Turkes by this time had ended their mines, and set them on fire, the 29. of Iuly: in the which space our men, according as they were wont to doe, renewed and made up againe the baimures ruined befoze by the Ordinance, and hauing no other stufte left to aduance them with, made sackes of Kerlie, vnto the which the noble Tiepolo dilligently looked. The three mines of the Commander did great damage to vs, hauing thzowen downe the greater part of the earth, whereas the gouernour Randacchi was slaine. The mine of the Arsenall ouerthrew all the rest of the Turcior, hauing smothered and choked one whole garrison of our souldiers, the two flankers onely still remaining.

It standeth with reason, the hope of launing the greater, to let the lesser go.

The fift Assault.

The enemies trauelled much to become masters of those foresayd flankers, and to sally forth by the other batteries, and this assault lasted from three of the clocke in the after noone vntill night, where, and at what time were slaine very many of our enemies. In this assault Sig. Giacomo Strambali, amongst the rest, shewed much worthinesse, as hee had done befoze in other conflicts,

The sixt and last assault.

The next morning following, at the breake of the day, they assailed all places, the which assault continued more then five houres, with very little hurt on our side, because our enemies fought more coldly then they were wont to doe, annoyng of vs continually on the Sea side with their Gallies, shooting in all their assaults and batteries continually Cannon shot in all parts of the Citie, as neere as they might. After we had defended and repulsed this assault, and perceived things brought to a narrower strait then they were wont to be at, wee hauing left in all the whole Citie but seuen barrells of powder, the gouernours of the Citie fully determined to peelee by themselves and the Citie, with honourable conditions. Wherefoze the first of August in the after noone, they tooke a truce, one being come for that purpose from Mustafa the Generall, with whom they concluded the next morning following to giue two hostages a piece, vntill such time as both armies were agreed. For our hostages (by the appointment of the right honourable Bragadino) were sent forth the earle Hercole Martinengo, and Signior Matteo Colli a Citizen of Famagusta, and from our enemies came into the Citie the Lieutenant of Mustafa, and the Aga of the Giannizzers, the which were met, euen vnto the gate of the Citie, of Signiour Baglione with two hundred harquebusers: ours also were met in like maner with great pompe with horsemen and harquebusers, with the sonne also of Mustafa in person, who made very much of them.

Necessitie oft times presseth vs in the end to that, which our will contriually spurneth against.

Giannizeri be the gard of the great Turke, so that Aga de Giannizeri is the capitaine of the Turkes gard.

The Lord Baglione imparid with these hostages, which were then come for that purpose of the articles of peace, requiring by them of their Generall, their liues, armour, and goods, five peeces of Ordinance, three of the best horses, and safe passage from thence vnto Candia accompanied with their Gallies, and last of all, that the Grecians inhabiting the Island, might dwell there still quietly, and enioy peaceably their owne goods and possessions, lining still Christians hereafter, as they had done befoze. All the which requests and articles were agreed vpon, granted, and subscribed vnto by the hand of Mustafa. Forthwith were sent Gallies, and other vessels into the haven, so that our souldiers immediately began to imbarke themselves, of the which the greater part were already gone aboord, the Nobilitie and our chiefe Captaines also being likewise very desirous to depart.

Just Turkish dealing, to speake and not to meane: so dauidly to promise, and neuer to performe the same.

The 15. of August in the morning, the worthy Bragadino sent me with a letter vnto Mustafa, by the which hee signified, that the same night hee would come vnto him to deliuer by the keyes of the Citie, and that he would leaue in the holde the honourable gentleman Tiepolo, praying him therefore, that whilest hee should haue iust cause thus to bee abroad, that there might be no harme done at home, and in the Citie. The Turkes from our truce taking vntill that time, practised with vs all familiarly, and without any suspicion of sinister or double dealing, they hauing shewed vs much courtesie both in word and deede. Mustafa himselfe by worde of mouth presently answered me to this letter, in this sort, that I should returne, and make relation to this noble man Bragadino, who had sent mee, that he should come ouer to him at his owne pleasure, for hee was very desirous both to see and know him, for his great worthinesse and prowesse, that hee had tried to be in him, and in the other of his Captaines and Souldiers, of whose manhood and courage he would honourably report, where soeuer he came, as occasion should serue thereunto: and to conclude, that hee should nothing doubt of any thing: because in no maner of condition hee would suffer suffer any violence to be done to those, which remained behind within the Citie. So I speedily returning, made true report of the same: and towards night about foure of the clocke, the right honourable Bragadino accompanied with the L. Baglioné, with Signior Aluigi Martinengo, with the right worshipfull Signior Gio. Antonio Querini, with the right worshipfull Signior Andrea Bragadino, with the knight of Haste, with the captaine Carlo Ragonasco, with captaine Francesco Straco, with captaine Hector of Brescia, with captaine Girolomo di Sacile, and with other gentlemen and fittie souldiours, the Gouvernours and Noble men with their swordes, and the souldiours with their harquebuzes came forth of their hold, and went vnto the pavillion of Mustafa, of whom, all they at the beginning were curteously receiued, and caused to sit downe by him, he reasoning and discourting with them of diuers things, a certaine time, and drawing them from one matter to another, at the last vpon a sudden picked a quarrell vnto them, especially burdning that noble Bragadino with an vntrueth, saying to his charge y he had caused certaine of his slaues in the time that the truce continued betweene the, to be put to death. The which thing was most false. So that hee being angry therewith, suddenly stept forth, and commaunded them to bee bound. Thus they being vnarmed (not suffered at that time to enter into his pavillion, with their former weapons) and bound, were led one by one into the market place, before his pavillion, being presently cut and heuen in sunder in his presence, and last of all from that woorthy and noble Bragadino (who being bound as the rest, and being commaunded twice or thise to stretch forth his necke, as though hee should haue bene beheaded, the which most boldly hee did without any sparke of feare) his eares were cut off, and causing him to bee stretched out most vitchly vpon the ground, Mustafa talked with him, and blasphemmed the holy name of our Sauour, demanding him, where is now thy Christ, that hee helpeth thee not? To all the which no answer at all was giuen of that honourable gentleman. The earle Hercole Martinengo, which was sent for one of the hostages, who was also bound, was hidden by one of Mustafas eunuches untill such time as his furie was past, afterward his life being graunted him, hee was made the eunuches slaue. Thre Grecians which were vnder his pavillion were left vntouched. All the souldiers which were found in the campe, and all sortes of Christians to the number of thre hundred, were suddenly slaine, they nothing mistrusting any such treason, or tirannie. The Christian souldiers which were embarked a litle before, were linked and fettered with iron chaines, made slaues, all things being taken from them, and stripped into their shirtes.

The second day after this murder was committed, which was the 17. of August, Mustafa entered the first time into the Citie, and caused the valiant and wise gouernour Tiepolo to bee hanged, who remained behind, waiting the returne of Signior Bragadino. I being in the citie at that present, when other of my countrey men were thus miserably slaine and made slaues, hid my selfe in certaine of the Grecians houses the space of five dayes, and they not being able to keepe mee in covert any longer for feare of the great penaltie, which was proclaimed agaynst such transgressors and concealers, I offered, and gaue my selfe slaue to one Sangiaccho del Bir, promising him five hundred * Zechins for my rancome, with whom I remained in the Campe. The Friday folowing (being the Turkes sabboth day) this woorthy and patient gentleman Bragadino was led still in the presence of that vnfaithfull tyrant Mustafa, to the batteries made vnto the Citie, whereas he being compelled to cary two baskets of earth, the one vpon his backe, the other in his hand slaue-like, to euery sundry battrie, being enforced also to kisse the ground as oft as he passed by him, was afterward brought vnto the sea side, where he being placed in a chaire to leane and stay vpon, was winched vp in that chaire, and fastened vnto the mainyard of a galley, and hoisted vp with a crane, to shew him to all the Christian souldiours and slaues (which were in the haven already shipped) hee being afterward let downe, and brought to the market place, the tormentors tooke of his clothes from him, and tacked him vnto the pillorie, whereas he was most cruelly staied quicke; with so great constancie and faith on his part, that he neuer lost or abated any jot of his stedfast courage, being so farre from any fainting, that hee at that present with most stout heart reproched them, and spake much shame of his most traiterous dealing in breaking of his faithfull promise. At the last without any kind of alteration of his constancie, he recommending his soule vnto almighty God, gaue vp the ghost. When hee had thus ended his life (thanks be to God) his skin being taken and filled with strawe, was commaunded forthwith to be hanged vpon the bowspyt of a * Foist, and to be caried alongst the coast of Syria by the sea side, that all the poore townes might see, and vnderstand who he was.

This is now so much as I am able to declare to your highnesse by that I sawe my selfe, and can remember whilst that I was in the Fortresse: that also which by true relation of others I could vnderstand, and sawe also my selfe in the campe, whilst I was slaue, I will likewise briefly utter vnto you. The enemies armie was in number two hundred thousand persons of all sorties and qualities. Of souldiers which tooke pay there were 80. thousand, besides the which number, there were 14. thousand of Giannizzers taken out from all the holdes of Syria, Caramania, Natolia, and part of them also which came from the *gate of the great Turke. The venturers with the sword were 60. thousand in number. The reason, why there were so many of this sort, was because Mustafa had dispersed a rumour through the Turkes dominion, that Famagusta was much more wealthy and rich, then the citie of Nicosia was: so for that cause, and by the commodious and easie passage from Syria ouer into Cyprus, these venturers were easly induced to come thither. In 75. dayes (all the which time the batterie still continued) 140. thousand iron pelles were shot of, numbred, and serued. The chiefe personages which were in their armie neere vnto Mustafa, were these following: the Bassa of Aleppo, the Bassa of Natolia, Mustafa Bassa of Nicosia, the Bassa of Caramania, the Aga of the Giannizzers, Giambelat *Bey, the Sangiaccho of Tripolis, the *Begliarbei of Grece, the Bassa of Sciassli and of Marasco, Ferca Framburaro, the *Sangiaccho of Antipo, Soliman Bey, three Sangiacchos of Arabia, Mustafa Bey generall of the Venturers, Fergat gouernour of Malachia, the Framburaro of Diuerie, the Sangiaccho of Arabia and other Sangiacchos of lesser credite, with the number of foure score thousand persons besides, as by the muster made by his Commission might well appeare.

The Framburaro which was at Rhodes, was appointed and left gouernour at Famagusta, and the report was that there should bee left in all the Island of Cyprus, twentie thousand persons, with two thousand horses, many of the which I saw, being very leane and euill appointed for seruice. It seemeth also a thing not impertinent to the matter, to signifie to you, how I, by the especiall grace of God, was deliuered out of their cruel hands, I hauing paid within two & fortie dayes (all the which time I was slaue) five hundred Zechins for my ransome to him, whose prisoner I was, by the meanes of the Consul for the French merchants, a lighter then at Tripolis, who a litle before came from Tripolis in Syria vnto Cyprus, into the Turkes campe. Yet for all that I had paid this summe of money to him, hee would not so let me at libertie, but fed mee by still with faire wordes, and promised mee that hee would first bring mee vnto his gouernement, which abutted vpon a piece of the famous riuier of Euphrates, and afterward dismiss me. The which malice and falsehood of his I perceiuing, determined with my selfe to giue him the slip, and to flie: so I waiting my time, and repairing often to the Citie, at length met with a small ffisher boate, of the which a pooze Grecian was Owner and master, with whom in one night with two onely oares and a small saile made of two shires, I passed ouer from Cyprus vnto Tripolis, being in very great danger of drowning, whereas I remained in couert in the house of certaine Christians, untill the five and twentie of September, at what time I departed from thence in a litle French shippe called Santa Victor, which came into these partes, and as wee rode, wee touched at a part of Cyprus Westward, called Capo delle Gatte, where as I came on land, and talking with certaine of the inhabitants of the Villages, who were then by chaine a Hauking, demanded of them, how they were intreated of the Turkes, and after what sort the Island was tilled: to the which they answered, that they could not possiblie bee in worse pickle then they were at that present, not enioying that quietly which was their owne, being made villaines and slaues, and almost alwayes carrying away the Bastonados, so that now (they sayd) they knew by triall too perfectly the pleasant and peaceable gouernment of the Christians, wishing and praying God that they might shortly returne. And concerning the tillage of the Island they made answer mozeouer, that no part of it was plowed or laboured, sauing onely that mountaine which was towards the West, and that because they were litle troubled with the crueltie of the Turkes, but as for the plaine and East part of the Island, there was small seede sown therein, but became in a maner desert, there being left but few inhabitants, and litle stoe of cattell there. Afterward wee departing from thence arrived in *Candia, I for my part being clothed in sackcloth, whereas soone after by the great curtesie of the right honourable Signior Latino Orsino, I was new apparellled accordingly, friendly welcommed, and my necessitie relieved. From whence I shortly after sayling in a Cypriotess ship (thanks be to almightie God) arrived in this Citie in health, and am safely come home now at the honorable seete of your highnesse.

The woorthy enterprise of John Foxe an English man in deliuering 266. Christians out of the captiuitie of the Turkes at Alexandria, the 3. of Ianuarie 1577.

Being our merchants here in England it is a common boiage to traffike into Spaine: whereunto a ship, being called The three halfe Moones, manned with 38. men, and well fensed with munitions, the better to encounter their enemies withall, and hauing wind & tide, set from Portsmouth, 1563.
and bended her iourney toward Siuill a citie in Spaine, intending there to traffique with them. And falling neere the Streights, they perceiued theselues to be beset round with eight gallies of the Turkes, in such wise, that there was no way for the escape away, but that either they must yeeld or els be sunke. Which the owner perceiuing, manfully encouraged his company, exhorting them valiantly to shew their manhood, shewing them that God was their God, and not their enemies, requelling them also not to faint in seeing such a heape of their enemies ready to deuour them; putting them in mind also, that if it were Gods pleasure to giue them into their enemies hands, it was not they ought to shew one displeasent looke or countenance thereagainst; but to take it patiently, & not to prescribe a day and time for their deliuerance, as the citizens of Bethulia did, but to put themselves vnder his mercy. And againe, if it were his mind and good will to shew his mighty power by the, if their enemies were ten times so many, they were not able to stand in their hands; putting them likewise in mind of the old and ancient woorthinesse of their countrey men, who in the hardest extremities haue alwayes most preuailed and gone away conquerors, yea, and where it hath bene almost impossible. Such (quoth he) hath bene the valiantnesse of our countrey men, and such hath bene the mightie power of our God.

With other like encouragements, exhorting them to behaue themselves manfully, they fell all on their knees making their prayers briefly vnto God: who being all risen vp againe perceiued their enemies by their signs and defiance bent to the spoyle, whose mercy was nothing els but cruelty, whereupon euery man tooke him to his weapon.

Then stood vp one Groue the master, being a comely man, with his sword and target, holding them vp in defiance against his enemies. So likewise stood vp the Owner, the Masters mate, Boateswaine, Purser, and euery man well appointed. Nowe likewise sounded vp the drums, trumpets and flutes, which would haue encouraged any man, had he neuer so litle heart or courage in him.

Then taketh him to his charge John Foxe the gunner in the disposing of his pieces in order to the best effect, and sending his bullets towards the Turkes, who likewise bestowed their pieces thuse as fast toward the Christians. But shortly they dyed neere, so that the bowmen fel to their charge in sending forth their arrowes so thicke amongst the Gallies, & also in doubling their shot so soze vpon the gallies, that there were twise so many of the Turkes slaine, as the number of the Christians were in all. But the Turks discharged twise as fast against the Christians, & so long, that the ship was very soze stricken & bruised vnder water. Which the Turkes perceiuing, made the moze haste to come aboard the Shippe: which ere they could doe, many a Turke bought it deerely with the losse of their liues. Yet was all in vaine, and booyed they were, where they found so hote a skirmish, that it had bene better they had not mingled with the feast. For the English men shewed themselves men in deed, in working manfully with their browne bills and halbardes:
where the owner, master, boateswaine, and their company stood to it so lustily, that the Turkes were halfe dismaied. But chiefly the boateswaine shewed himself valiant about the rest: for he fared amongst the Turkes like a wood Lion: for there was none of them that either could or durst stand in his face, till at the last there came a shot from the Turkes, which brake his whistle asunder, and smote him on the brest, so that he fell downe, bidding them farewell, & to be of good comfort, encouraging them likewise to winne praise by death, rather then to lue captiues in misery and shame. Which they hearing, in deed intended to haue done, as it appeared by their skirmish:
but the prease and store of the Turkes was so great, that they were not able long to endure, but were so ouerpressed, that they could not wield their weapons: by reason whereof, they must needs be

be taken, which none of them intended to haue bene, but rather to haue died: except onely the masters mate, who shunke from the skirmish, like a notable coward, esteeming neither the valure of his name, nor accounting of the present example of his fellowes, nor hauing respect to the miseries, whereunto he should be put. But in fine, so it was, that the Turkes were victors, whereof they had no great cause to reioyce, or triumph. Then would it haue grieved any hard heart to see these Infidels so violently intreating the Christians, not hauing any respect of their manhood which they had tasted of, nor yet respecting their owne state, how they might haue met with such a boote, as might haue giuen them the ouerthrow: but no remorse hereof, or any thing els doth bytelle their fierce and tyrannous dealing, but that the Christians must needs to the gallies, to serue in new offices: and they were no sooner in them, but their garments were pulled ouer their eares, and tozue from their backs, and they set to the oares.

I will make no mention of their miseries, being now vnder their enemies raging stripes. I thinke there is no man will iudge their fate good, or their bodies vnloaden of stripes, and not pestered with too much heate, and also with too much cold: but I will goe to my purpose, which is, to shew the ende of those, being in meere miserie, which continually doe call on God with a Redfall hope that he will deliuer them, and with a sure faith that he can doe it.

Nigh to the citie of Alexandria, being a hauen towne, and vnder the dominion of the Turkes, there is a roade, being made very sensible with strong wals, whereinto the Turkes doe customably bying their gallies on shoare euery yeere, in the winter season, and there doe trimme them, and lay them by against the spring time. In which roade there is a prison, wherein the captiues & such prisoners as serue in the gallies, are put for all that time, until the seas be calme and passable for the gallies, euery prisoner being most grievously laden with irons on their legges, to their great paine, and soze disabling of them to any labour taking. Into which prison were these Christians put, and fast warded all the Winter season. But ere it was long, the Easter and the Owner, by meanes of friends, were redeemed: the rest abiding still by the miserie, while that they were all (though reason of their ill vsage and worse fate, miserably starued) sauing one Iohn Fox, who (as some men can abide harder and more miserie, then other some can, so can some likewise make more shift, and worke more deuises to helpe their state and liuing, then other some can doe) being somewhat skilfull in the craft of a Barbour, by reason thereof made great stift in helping his fare now and then with a good meale. Inasomuch, til at the last, God sent him fauour in the sight of the keeper of the prison, so that he had leaue to goe in and out to the roade, at his pleasure, paying a certaine stipend vnto the keeper, and wearing a locke about his leg: which libertie likewise, fire more had vpon like sufferance: who by reason of their long imprisonment, not being feared or suspected to start aside, or that they would worke the Turkes any mischiefe, had libertie to go in and out at the sayd roade, in such maner, as this Iohn Fox did, with irons on their legs, and to returne againe at night.

In the yeere of our Lord 1577. in the Winter season, the gallies happily comming to their accustomed harborow, and being discharged of all their mases, sailes, and other such furnitures, as vnto gallies doe appertaine, and all the Masters and mariners of them being then nested in their owne homes: there remained in the prison of the said roade two hundred threescore and eight Christian prisoners, who had bene taken by the Turkes force, and were of sixteen sundry nations. Among which there were three Englishmen, whereof one was named Iohn Foxe of Woodbridge in Suffolke, the other William Wickney of Portsmouth, in the Countie of Southhampton, and the third Robert Moore of Harwich in the Countie of Essex. Which Iohn Fox hauing bene thirteene or foureteene yeres vnder their gentle entreatance, and being too too weary thereof, minding his escape, weighed with himselfe by what meanes it might be brought to passe: and continually pondering with himselfe thereof, tooke a good heart vnto him, in hope that God would not be not alwayes scourging his childezen, and neuer ceased to pray him to further his pretended enterpryse, if that it should rebound to his glory.

Not farre from the roade, and somewhat from thence, at one side of the Citie, there was a certaine victualling house, which one Peter Vnicaro had hired, paying also a certaine fee vnto the keeper of the roade. This Peter Vnicaro was a Spaniard bozne, and a Christian, and had bene prisoner about thirtie yeres, and neuer practised any meanes to escape, but kept himselfe quiet without touch or suspect of any conspiracie: vntill that nowe this Iohn Foxe vsing much thinner, they brake one to another their mindes, concerning the restraint of their libertie and imprisonment. So that this Iohn Fox at length opening vnto this Vnicaro the deuise which he would fauour put in practise, made priuie one more to this their intent. Which thre debated of this matter at such times as they could compass to meete together: insomuch, that at seven weekes ende they had sufficiently concluded how the matter should be, if it pleased God to farther them thereto: who making fure more priuite to this their deuise, whom they thought they might safely trust, determined in three nightes after to accomplish their deliberate purpose. Whereupon the same Iohn Fox, and Peter Vnticaro, and the other five appointed to meete all together in the prison the next day, being the last day of December: where this Iohn Fox certified the rest of the prisoners, what their intent and deuise was, and how and when they minded to bring their purpose to passe: who thereto perswaded them without much a doe to further their deuise. Which the same Iohn Fox seeing, deliuered vnto them a sort of files, which he had gathered together for this purpose, by the meanes of Peter Vnticaro, charging them that euery man should be readie discharged of his prons by eight of the clocke on the next day at night.
to:

The Englishmen called prisoners vnto an haueu nere Alexandria.

The last of December.

On the next day at night, this said Iohn Fox, and his five other companions, being all come to the house of Peter Vnticaro, passing the time away in mirth for feare of suspect, till the night came on, so that it was time for them to put in practise their deuise, sent Peter Vnticaro to the master of the roade, in the name of one of the Masters of the citie, with whom this keeper was acquainted, and at whose request he also would come at the first: who desired him to take the paines to meete him there, promising him, that he would bring him backe againe. The keeper agreed to goe with him, willing the warders not to barre the gate, saying, that he would not stay long, but would come againe with all speede.

Januarie.

In the meane season, the other seuen had prouided them of such weapons, as they could get in that house: and Iohn Fox tooke him to an olde rustie sword blade, without either hilt or pommel, which he made to serue his turne, in bending the hand ende of the sword, in steed of a pommel, and the other had got such spits and glauiues as they found in the house.

The keeper now being come vnto the house, and perceiving no light, nor hearing any noise, straight way suspected the matter: and returning backward, Iohn Fox standing behind the corner of the house, stepped forth vnto him: who perceiving it to be Iohn Fox, saide, O Fox, what haue I deserued of thee, that thou shouldest seeke my death? Thou villaine (quoth Fox) hast bene a bloodsucker of many a Christians blood, and now thou shalt know what thou hast deserued at my handes: wherewith he lift up his bright shining sword of true yeeres rust, and stroke him so maine a blowe, as there withall his head claued a sunder, so that he fell starke dead to the ground. Whereupon Peter Vnticaro went in, and certified the rest how the case stood with the keeper: who came presently forth, and some with their spits ranne him through, and the other with their glauiues hewed him in sunder, cut off his head, and mangled him so, that no man should discern what he was.

Then marched they toward the roade, whereinto they entered softly, where were six warders, whom one of them asked, saying, who was there: quoth Fox & his company, all friendes. Which when they were all within, prouided contray: for, quoth Fox, my masters, here is not to euery man a man, wherefore looke you play your parts. Who so behaued themselves in deede, that they had dispatched these five quickly. Then Iohn Fox intending not to be barred of his enterprize, and minding to worke surely in that which he went about, barred the gate surely, and planted a Canon against it.

Then entered they into the Gailers lodge, where they found the keyes of the fortress & prison by his bed side, and there had they all better weapons. In this chamber was a chest, wherein was a rich treasure, and all in buckats, which this Peter Vnticaro, & two more, opening, stuffed themselves so full as they could, betweene their shirts and their skinne: which Iohn Fox would not once touch, and sayde, that it was his and their libertie which he sought for, to the honour of his God, & not to make a marke of the wicked treasure of the Infidels. Yet did these words sinke nothing into their stomakes, they did it for a good intent: so did Saul saue the fattest Oxen, to offer vnto the Lord, and they to serue their owne turne. But neither did Saul scape the wrath of God therefore, neither had these that thing which they desired so, and did thirst after. Such is Gods iustice. Ye that they put their trust in, to deliuer them from the tyrannous hands of their enemies, he (I say) could supply their want of necessaries.

Nowe these eight being armed with such weapons as they thought well of, thinking themselves sufficient champions to encounter a stronger enemy, and coming vnto the prison, Fox opened the gates and doores thereof, and called forth all the prisoners, whom he set, some to ramming vp the gate, some to the dressing vp of a certame gallie, which was the best in all the roade, and was called the captaine of Alexandria, whereinto some caried masts, sailes, oares, and other such furniture as doth belong vnto a gallie.

At the prison were certaine warders, whom Iohn Fox and his company slew: in the killing of whom, there were eight more of the Turkes, which perceived them, and got them to the toppe of the prison: vnto whom Iohn Fox, and his company, were faine to come by ladders, where they they found a hot skirmish. For some of them were there slaine, some wounded, and some but scared, and not hurt. As John Fox was thise shot through his apparell, and not hurt, Peter Vnicaro, and the other two, that had armed them with the duckats, were slaine, as not able to weild themselves, being so pestered with the weight and breacic carping of the wicked and prophane treasure: and also diuerse Christians were aswell hurt about that skirmish, as Turkes slaine.

Amongst the Turkes was one thrust thozowe, who (let vs not say that it was ill fortune) fell off from the toppe of the prison wall, and made such a lowing, that the inhabitants thereabout (as here and there scattering stode a house or two) came and sawed him, so that they understood the case, how that the prisoners were paying their ransomes: where with they raised both Alexandria which lay on the west side of the roade, and a Castle which was at the Cities end, next to the roade, and also an other Fortresse which lay on the Northside of the roade: so that now they had no way to escape, but one, which by mans reason (the two holdes lying so vpon the mouth of the roade) might seeme impossible to be a way for them. So was the red sea impossible for the Israelites to passe through, the hills and rockes lay so on the one side, and their enemies compassed them on the other. So was it impossible, that the wals of Iericho should fall downe, being neither undermined, nor yet rammmed at with engines, nor yet any mans wilcdome, pollicie, or helpe set or put thereunto. Such impossibilities can our God make possible. We that helde the Lyons iawes from renting Daniel asunder, yea, or yet from once touching him to his hurt: can not he hold the roaring canons of this hellish force? We that kept the fiers rage in the hot burning Duen, from the three children, that praised his name, can not he keepe the fiers flaming blades from among his elect?

Now is the roade fraught with lustie souldiers, labozers, and mariners, who are faine to stand to their tackling, in setting to euery man his hand, some to the carping in of victuals, some munitions, some oares, and some one thing, some another, but most are keeping their enemy from the wall of the road. But to be short, there was no time mispent, no man idle, nor any mans labour ill bestowed, or in vaine. So that in short time, this gally was ready trimmed vp. Whereinto euery man leaped in all haste, hopping vp the sayles lustily, yelding themselves to his merrie and grace, in whose hands are both winde and weather.

Now is this gally on flore, and out of the safetie of the roade: now haue the two Castles full power vpon the gally, now is there no remedy but to sinke: how can it be auoided? The canons let lie from both sides, and the gally is euen in the midst, and betwene them both. What man can deuise to saue it? there is no man, but would thinke it must needs be sinke.

There was not one of them that feared the shotte, which went thundring round about their eares, nor yet were once scared or touched, with fure & forty shot, which came from the Castles. Here did God hold forth his buckler, he shilded them now this gally, and hath tried their faith to the vttermost. Now cometh his speciall helpe: yea, euen when man thinks them past all helpe, then cometh he himselfe downe from heauen with his mightie power, then is his present remedie most readie prest. For they saile away, being not once touched with the glaunce of a shot, and are quickly out of the Turkish canons reach. Then might they see them coming downe by heapes to the water side, in companies like vnto swarmes of bees, making them to come after them with gallies, in buikling themselves to dresse by the gallies, which would be a swift peece of worke for them to doe, for that they had neither oares, masts, sailes, gables, nor any thing else ready in any gally. But yet they are carping them into them, some into one gally, and some into another, so that, being such a confusion amongst them, without any certaine guide, it were a thing impossible to ouertake them: beside that, there was no man that would take charge of a gally, the weather was so rough, and there was such an amasednes amongst them. And verely I thinke their God was amased thereat: it could not be but he must blush for shame, he can speake neuer a word for vnlness, much lesse can he helpe them in such an extremitie. Well, howsoeuer it is, he is very much to blame, to suffer them to receiue such a gibe. But howsoeuer their God behaued himselfe, our God shewed himselfe a God indeede, and that he was the onely liuing God: for the seas were swift vnder his faithfull, which made the enemies agast to behold them, a skilfull Pilot leades them, and their mariners bestirre them lustily: but the Turkes had neither mariners, Pilot, nor any skilfull Matter, that was in a readinesse at this pinch.

When the Christians were safe out of the enemies coast, John Fox called to them all, willing them to be thankfull vnto almighty God for their deliuerie, and most humbly to fall downe vpon their knees, beseeching him to aide them vnto their friends land, and not to bring them into another daunger, sith hee had most mightily deliuered them from so great a chaldome and bondage.

Thus when euery man had made his petition, they fell straight way to their labour with the oates, sares, in helping one another, when they were wearied, and with great labour straining to come to some Chyistian land, as neere as they could gesse by the starres. But the windes were so diuers, one while dviuing them this way, another while that way, that they were now in a newe maze, thinking that God had forsaken them, and left them to a greater danger. And forasmuch as there were no victuals now left in the gally, it might haue bene a cause to them (if they had bene the Israelites) to haue murmured against their God: but they knew how that their God, who had deliuered them out of Egypt, was such a loving and mercifull God, as that hee would not suffer them to be confounded, in whom he had wrought so great a wonder: but what calamitie soeuer they sustained, they knew it was but for their further triall, and also (in putting them in mind of their farther miserie) to cause them not to triumph and glozy in themselves therefore. Having (I say) no victuals in the gally, it might seeme that one miserie continually fel vpon an others neck: but to be briefe, the famine grew to be so great, that in 28 dayes, wherein they were on the sea, there died eight persons, to the astonishment of all the rest.

famine.

So it fell out, that vpon the 29 day, after they set from Alexandria, they fell on the Isle of Candie, and landed at Gallipoli, where they were made much of by the Abbot and Monks there, who caused them to stay there, while they were well refreshed and eased. They kept there the sworde, wherewith Iohn Fox had killed the keeper, esteeming it as a most precious iewel, and hung it by for a monument.

sword kept as a monument in Gallipoli.

When they thought good, having leaue to depart from thence, they sayled along the coast, till they arrived at Tarento, where they solde their gally, and deuided it, euery man having a part thereof. The Turkes receiving so shamefull a foile at their hand, pursued the Chyistians, and scoured the seas, where they could imagine that they had bent their course. And the Chyistians had departed from thence on the one day in the morning, and seven gallies of the Turkes came thither that night, as it was certified by those who followed Fox, and his companie, fearing least they should haue bene met with. And then they came a foote to Naples, where they departed a sunder, euery man taking him to his next way home. From whence Iohn Fox tooke his iourney vnto Rome, where he was well entertayned of an Englishman, who presented his worthy deede vnto the Pope, who rewarded him liberally, and gaue him his letters vnto the king of Spaine, where he was very well entertained of him there, who for this his most worthy enterprise gaue him in fee twentie pence a day. From whence, being desirous to come into his owne countrie, he came thither at such time as he conueniently could, which was in the yeere of our Lorde God, 1579. Who being come into England, went vnto the Court, and shewed all his trauell vnto the Counsell: who considering of the state of this man, in that hee had spent and lost a great part of his youth in thraldome and bondage, extended to him their liberalitie, to helpe to maintaine him now in age, to their right honour, and to the encouragement of all true hearted Chyistians.

The copie of the certificate for Iohn Fox, and his companie, made by the Prior, and the brethren of Gallipoli, where they first landed.

VVe the Prior, and Fathers of the Couent of the Amerciates, of the city of Gallipoli, of the order of Preachers doe testifie, that vpon the 29 of Ianuary last past, 1577, there came in to the said citie a certaine gally from Alexandria, taken from the Turkes, with two hundredth fiftie and eight Chyistians, whereof was principal Master Iohn Fox, an Englishman, a gunner, and one of the chiefeft that did accomplish that great worke, whereby so many Chyistians haue recovered their liberties. In token and remembrance whereof, vpon our earnest request to the same Iohn Fox, he hath left here an olde sworde, wherewith he slewe the keeper of the prison: which sword we doe as a monument and memoriall of so worthy a deede, hang vp in the chiefe place of our Couent house. And for because all things aforesaid, are such as we will testifie to be true, as they are orderly passed, and haue therefore good credite, that so much as is aboue expressed is true, and for the more faith thereof, we the Prior, and Fathers aforesaide, haue ratified and subscribed these presents. Geuen in Gallipoly, the third of Februarie 1577.

The Bishop of Rome his letters in the behalfe of John Fox.

BE it knowen vnto all men, to whom this writing shall come, that the bringer hereof Iohn Fox Englishman, a Gunner, after he had serued captiue in the Turkes gallies, by the space of foureteene yeeres, at length, thorough God his helpe, taking good oportunitie, the third of Ianuarie last past, slew the keeper of the prison, (whom he first stroke on the face) together with foure and twentie other Turkes, by the assistance of his fellow prisoners: and with 266. Christians (of whose libertie he was the author) launched from Alexandria, and from thence arriued first at Gallipoly in Candie, and afterwarde at Tarento in Apulia: the written testimony and credite of which things, as also of others, the same Iohn Fox hath in publike tables from Naples.

Vpon Easter eue he came to Rome, and is now determined to take his iourney to the Spanish Court, hoping there to obtaine some reliefe toward his liuing: wherefore the poore distressed man humbly beseecheth, and we in his behalfe do in the bowels of Christ, desire you, that taking compassion of his former captiuitie, and present penurie, you doe not onely suffer him freely to passe throughout all your cities and townes, but also succour him with your charitable almes, the reward whereof you shall hereafter most assuredly receiue, which we hope you will afford to him, whom with tender affection of pitie wee commend vnto you. The King of Spaine his letters to the Lieutenant, for the placing of John Fox in the office of a Gunner.

TO the illustrious Prince, Vespasian Gonfaga Colonna, our Lieutenant and Captaine Generall of our Realme of Valencia. Hauing consideration, that Iohn Fox Englishman hath serued vs, and was one of the most principall, which tooke away from the Turkes a certaine gallie, which they haue brought to Tarento, wherein were two hundred, fiftie, and eight Christian captiues: we licence him to practise, and giue him the office of a Gunner, and haue ordained, that he goe to our said Realme, there to serue in the said office in the Gallies, which by our commandement are lately made, And we doe commaund, that you cause to be payed to him eight ducats pay a moneth, for the time that he shall serue in the saide Gallies as a Gunner, or till we can otherwise prouide for him, the saide eight duckats monethly of the money which is already of our prouision, present and to come, and to haue regarde of those which come with him, From Escuria all the tenth of August, 1577.

I the King.

And vnder that a confirmation of the Councell.

The renuing and increasing of an ancient and commodious trade vnto diuerse places in the Leuant seas, and to the chiefeest parres of all the great Turkes dominions, by the meanes of the Right worth. citizens Sir Edward Osborne Alderman, and M. Richard Staper marchant of London.

Lestrade into the Leuant (as is before mentioned, page 96 of this present volume, whereunto I referre the Reader) was very vsuall and much frequented from the yeere of our Lord 1511, till the yeere 1534, and after ward also, though not so commonly, vntill the yeere 1550, when as the barke Aucher vnder the conduct of M. Roger Bodenham made a prosperous voyage vnto Sicilia, Candia, Sio, and other places within the Leuant. Since which time the foresaid trade (notwithstanding the Grand Signiors ample priuilege granted to M. Anthony Ienkenson 1553, and the wrong strong and wrighty reasons of Gaspar Campion for that purpose) was utterly discontinued, and in maner quite forgotten, as if it had neuer bene, for the space of 20 yeares and more. Howbeit the discrete and worthy citizens Sir Edward Osborne and M^r. Richard Stapet seriously considering what benefite might grow to the common wealth by renewing of the foresaid discontinued trade, to the enlarging of her Maiesties customes, the furthering of nauigation, the venting of diuerse generall commodities of this Realme, and the enriching of the citie of London, determined to vse some effectuall meanes for the reestablishing and augmenting thereof.

Wherefore about the yere 1575 the foresaid R. W. marchants at their charges and expenses sent John Wight and Ioseph Clements by the way of Poland to Constantinople, where the said Ioseph remained 18 monethes to procure a safe conduct from the grand Signior, for M^r. William Harborne, then factor for Sir Edward Osborne, to haue free access into his Highnes dominions, and obtained the same.

The voyage of John Wight and Ioseph Clements to Constantinople.

Which businesse after two yeres chargeable trauell and suit being accomplished, the sayd M^r. Harborne the first of Iuly 1578 departed from London by the sea to Hamburg, and thence accompanied with Ioseph Clements his guide and a seruant, he traualled to Leopold in Poland, and then apparelling himselfe, his guide, and his seruant after the Turkish fashion (hauing first obteyned the king of Poland his safe conduct to passe at Camieniec the frontier towne of his dominions next vnto Turkey) by good means he obtained fauour of one Acmet Chaus the Turks ambassadour then in Poland, and readie to returne to Constantinople, to bee receiued into his companie and carouan. And so the fourth of September 1578 he departed with the said Acmet from Leopold in Poland, and trauellling throught Moldauia, Valachia, Bulgaria, and Romania, gratifying the Voiaudes with certaine courtesies, he arriued at Constantinople the 28 of October next ensuing. Where he behaued himselfe so wisely and discretely, that within few moneths after he obtained not onely the great Turkes large and ample priuiledge for himselfe, and the two worshipfull persons aforesaid, but also procured his honourable and friendly letters vnto her Maiestie in maner following.

The first voyage of M^r. William Harborne to Constantinople.

The letters sent from the Imperiall Musulmanlike highnesse of Zulfan Murad Can, to the sacred regall Maiestie of Elizabeth Queene of England, the fifteenth of March 1579, containing the grant of the first priuiledges.

A greatnes and gloyp most renowned Elizabeth, most sacred Queene, and noble prince of the most mightie worshippers of Iesus, most wise gouernor of the causes and affaires of the people and family of Nazareth, cloud of most pleasant raine, and sweetest fountaine of noblenesse and vertue, ladie & heire of the perpetuall happinesse & gloyp of the noble Realme of England (whom all forres seeke vnto and submit themselves) we with most prosperous successe and happie ends to all your actions, and do offer vnto you such pleasures and curtesies as are worthy of our mutuall and eternall familiaritie: thus ending (as best becometh vs) our former salutations.

In most friendly maner we giue you to vnderstand, that a certaine man hath come vnto vs in the name of your most excellent Regall Maiestie, commending vnto vs from you all kindnesse, curtesie and friendly offices on your part, and did humbly require that our Imperiall highnesse would vouchsafe to giue leaue and libertie to him and vnto two other merchants of your kingdom, to resort hither and returne againe, and that by way of traffike they might be suffered to trade hither with their goods and merchandizes to our Imperiall dominions, and in like sort to make their returne.

These two were Sir Edward Osborne and M^r. Richard Stapet.

Our statelly Court and Countrey hath bene euer open for the access both of our enemies and friends. But because we are informed that your most excellent Regall Maiestie doth abound with good will, humanitie, & all kind of louing affection towards vs, so much the rather shall the same our Countrey be alwayes open to such of your subiects, as by way of merchandize shall trade hither: and we will neuer faile to aide & succor any of them that are or shall be willing to cōsume of our friendship, fauour, & assistance: but will reckon it some part of our dutie to gratifie them by all good meanes. And soasmuch as our Imperiall highnesse is giuen to vnderstand that your most excellent Regall Maiestie doth excell in bountie & curtesie, we therfore haue sent out our Imperiall commandement to all our kings, iudges, and trauellers by sea, to all our Captaines and voluntarie seafaring men, all condemned persons, and officers of Ports and customes, straightly charging and commanding them, that such foresaid persons as shall resort hither by sea from the Realme of England, either with great or small vessels to trade by way of marchandize, may lawfully come to our imperiall Dominions, and freely returne home againe, and that no man shall dare to molest or trouble them. And if in like sort they shall come into our dominions by land, either on foot or on horsebacke, no man shall at any time withstand or hinder them: but as our familiars and confederates, the French, Venetians, Polonians, and the king of Germany, with diuers other our neighbours about vs, haue libertie to come hither, & to returne againe into their owne countreys, in like sort the marchants of your most excellent Regall Maiesties kingdome shall haue safe conduct and leaue to repaype hither to our Imperiall dominions, and so to returne againe into their owne Country: straightly charging that they be suffered to vse and trade all kind of marchandize as any other Christians doe, without let or disturbance of any.

Therefore when these our Imperiall letters shall be brought to your most excellent Regall Maiestie, it shall be meet, according to our beneuolence, humanity, and familiarity towards your most excellent Maiestie, that you likewise bethinke your selfe of your like beneuolence, humanitie and friendshippe towards vs, to open the gate thereof vnto vs, and to nourish by all good meanes this kindnesse and friendship: and that like libertie may be granted by your Highnesse to our subiects and merchants to come with their merchandizes to your dominions, either by sea with their ships, or by land with their wagons or horses, and to returne home againe: and that your most excellent Regall Maiestie do alwayes declare your humanitie, good will, and friendship towards vs, and alwayes keepe open the doore thereof vnto vs.

The same in English.

ELizabeth by the grace of the most mightie God, and onely Creatour of heauen and earth, of England, France and Ireland Queene, the most inuincible and most mighty defender of the Christian faith against all kinde of idolatries, of all that liue among the Christians, and falsly profess the Name of Christ, vnto the most Imperiall and most inuincible prince, Zuldā Murad Can, the most mightie ruler of the kingdome of Turkie, sole and aboue all, and most souereigne Monarch of the East Empire, greeting, and many happy and fortunate yeeres, with abundance of the best things.

Hōst Imperiall and most inuincible Emprour, wee haue receiued the letters of your mightie highnesse witten to vs from Cōstantinople the fifteneenth day of March this present yere, whereby we vnderstod how grationally, and how fauorably the humble petitions of one William Hareborne a subiect of ours, resident in the Imperiall citie of your highnesse presented vnto your Maiestie for the obtaining of accesse for him and two other Marchants moze of his company our subiects also, to come with marchandizes both by sea and land, to the countreys and territories subiect to your gouernment, and from thence againe to retorne home with good leaue and libertie, were accepted of your most inuincible Imperiall highnesse, and not that onely, but with an extraordinary speed and worthy your Imperiall grace, that which was craued by petition was granted to him, and his company in regard onely (as it seemeth) of that opinion which your highnesse conceiued of vs and our amitie: which singular benefite done to our aforesaid subiects, wee take so thankefully, and in so good part (yeelding for the same our greatest thanks to your highnesse) that we will neuer giue occasion to your said highnesse (according as time, and the respect of our affaires will permit) once to thinke so great a pleasure bestowed vpon an vngracefull Prince, For the Almighty God, by whom, and by whose grace we reigne, hath planted in vs this goodnesse of nature, that wee detest and abhorre the least suspicion of ingratitude, and hath taught vs not to suffer our selues to bee ouermatched with the good demerites of other Princes. And therefore at this time wee doe extende our good minde vnto your highnesse, by well conceiuing, and publishing also abroad, how much we repute our selfe bound in an euermlasting remembrance for this good pleasure to our Subiects, meaning to peebe a much more large and plentifull restitution of our thankfulness, when time conuenient shall fall out, and the same shall bee looked for at our handes.

But whereas that graunt which was giuen to a fewe of our Subiects, and at their onely request without any intercession of ours, standeth in as free a libertie of coming and going to and from all the lands and kingdoms subiect to your Maiestie, both by land & sea with marchandizes, as euer was granted to any of your Imperiall highnesse confederates, as namely to the French, the Polonians, the Venetians, as also to the subiects of the king of the Romanes, wee desire of your highnesse that the commendation of such singular courtlesie may not bee so narrowly restrained to two or three men onely, but may be enlarged to all our subiects in generall, that thereby your highnesse goodnesse may appeare the more notable, by reason of the graunting of the same to a greater number of persons. The bestowing of which so singular a benefit your highnesse shall so much the lesse repent you of, by howe much the more fit and necessary for the vse of man those commodities are, where with our kingdomes doe abound, and the kingdomes of other princes doe want, so y there is no nation that can be without them, but are glad to come by them, although by very long and difficult trauels: and when they haue them, they sell them much dearer to others, because euery man seeketh to make profite by his labour: so that in the getting of them there is profit, but in the buying of them from others there is losse. But this profite will be increased to the subiects of your highnesse by this free access of a few of our subiects to your dominions, as also the losse and burden will be eased, by the permission of generall access to all our people. And furthermore we will graunt as equall and as free a libertie to the subiects of your highnesse with vs for the vse of traffique, when they wil, and as often as they wil, to come, and go to and from vs and our kingdomes. Which libertie wee promise to your highnesse shalbe as ample, and as large as any was euer giuen or granted to your subiects by the aforesaide princes your confederates, as namely the king of the Romanes, of France, of Poland, and the common wealth of Venice. In which matter, if your most inuincible Imperiall highnesse shall vouchsafe to incline to our reasonable request, and shall giue order vpon these our letters, that wee may haue knowledge how the same is accepted of you, and whether it will be granted, with sufficient securitie for our subiects to go, and returne safe and secure from all violences and iniuries of your people, we on the other side wil giue order, that those commodities which Almighty God hath bestowed vpon our kingdomes (which are in deed so excellent, that by reason of them all princes are drawn to enter, and confirme leagues of amitie and good neighborhood with vs, by that meanes to enioy these so great blessings of God, which we haue, and they can in no case want) our subiects shall bring them so abundantly and plentifully to the kingdomes and dominions of your highnesse, that both the former inconueniences of necessitie, and losse, shall most sufficiently be taken away.

Moreover the signification and assurance of your highnesse great affection to vs and our nation, doeth cause vs also to intreat and vse mediation on the behalfe of certaine of our subiects, who are detained as slaves and captiues in your Gallies, for whom we craue, that soasmuch as they are fallen into that misery, not by any offence of theirs, by bearing of armes against your highnesse, or in behauing of themselves contrary to honestie, and to the law of nations, they may be deliuered from their bondage, and restored to libertie, for their seruice towards vs, according to their duetie: which thing shall peebe much more abundant cause to vs of commending your clemencie, and of beseeching that God (who onely is aboue all things, and all men, and is a most seuerer reuenger of all idolatry, and is ielous of his honour against the false gods of the nations) to adorne your most inuincible Imperiall highnesse with all the blessings of those gifts, which onely and deseruently are accounted most worthy of asking.

Giuen at our palace of Greenwich, neere to our Citie of London, the five and twentieth day of October, in the yeere of Iesus Christ our Saviour one thousand, five hundred, seuentie and nine, and of our reigne the one and twentieth.

- 1 Vt præfata Regine homines, & subditi eius quibus suis rebus & mercibus, oneribus & suppellectilibus per mare in magnis & paruis nauibus, per terram autem homines cum oneribus & pecoribus, securè & pacificè ad nostras ditiones Cæsareas veniant, & nemo illis noceat, sed securè & sine aliquo impedimento negocietur, & in suis statibus & conditionibus permaneant.
- 2 Item, si præfati homines & mercatores in suis rebus vijs & negociationibus aliquo modo caperentur, sine aliqua tergiversatione dimittantur, liberenturque.
- 3 Item, si naues eorum ad aliquos portus & loca venire voluerint, pacificè omni in tempore, & sine impedimento veniant, & discedant in sua loca.
- 4 Item, si in tempestatibus maris naues eorum essent in periculo & auxilio opus esset illis, naues nostræ Cæsareæ celsitudinis, earumque homines, & aliorum naues hominesque statim auxilium & opem ferant illis, mandamus.

Fœdus Turcici
Imperatoris cum
Regina initum.

Articuli huius priuilegij.

5 Item, si edulia suis pecunijs emere voluerint, nemo resistat illis, sed sine impedimento edulia emanant.

6 Item, si infortunium maris naues eorum in terram proiecerit, Begi & iudices, & ceteri nostri subditi sint auxilio illis, merces & res eorum que remanserint iterum reddantur illis, & nemo impediatur illos.

7 Item, si prefata regina homines, eorum interpretes, & mercatores, siue per terram, siue per mare mercandi gratia ad nostras ditiones venire velint, legitimo telonio, & vectigali reddito, pacifice vagentur, capitanei & reges maris & nauium, & aliud genus hominum per mare vagantium in personis, & rebus eorum, pecoribusque, ne noceant illis.

8 Item, si aliquis ex Anglis debitor, aut ex alieno esset obstrictus, inueniri que non possit, ratione debitorum alterius nullus nisi esset fideiussor capiatur aut impediatur.

9 Item, si Anglus testamentum fecerit, & sua bona cuiunque legauerit, illi dentur bona illius, & si sine testamento moreretur, consul eorum cuiunque sociorum mortui hominis dixerit debere dari, illi dentur bona mortui hominis.

10 Item, si Angli, & ad Angliam pertinentium locorum mercatores & interpretes, in vendendis & emendis mercibus fideiussionibus & rebus aliquid negocij habuerint, ad iudicem veniant, & in librum inscribi faciant negotium, & si voluerint, literas quoque acceptant a iudice, propterea quod si aliquid inciderit, videant librum & literas, & secundum tenorem eorum perficiantur negocia eorum suspecta: si autem neque in librum inscriberentur, neque literas haberent, iudex falsa testimonia non admittat, sed secundum iustitiam legem administrans non sinat illos impedi.

11 Item, si aliquis diceret, quod isti Christiani nostrae fidei Muzulmanicae maledixerint, & eam vituperijs affecerint, in hoc negotio etiam & alij, testes falsi minimè admittantur.

12 Item, si aliquis eorum aliquod facinus patraret, & fugiens non possit inueniri, nullus nisi esset fideiussor pro alterius facto retineatur.

13 Item, si aliquod mancipium Anglicum inueniretur, & consule eorum peteret illud, examinetur diligenter mancipium, & si inuentum fuerit Anglicum, accipiat, & reddatur Anglis.

14 Item, si aliquis ex Anglis huc venerit habitandi aut mercandi gratia, siue sit vxoratus, siue sit sine vxore, non soluat censum.

15 Item, si in Alexandria, in Damasco, in Samia, in Tunis, in Tripoli occidentali, in Aegypti portibus & in alijs omnibus locis, ubicunque voluerint facere Consules, faciant: Et iterum si voluerint eos mutare, & in loco priorum consulum alios locare, liberè faciant, & nemo illis resistat.

16 Item, si illorum interpres in arduis negotijs occupatus abesset, donec veniret interpres, expectetur, & interim nemo illos impediatur.

17 Item, si Angli inter se aliquam litem haberent & vellent ad suos consules ire, nemo resistat illis, sed liberè veniant ad Consules suos, ut secundum mores eorum finiatur lis orta.

18 Item, si post tempus aut datum huius priuilegij, pirata, aut alij aliqui liberi gubernatores nauium per mare vagantes, aliquem ex Anglis ceperint, & trans mare vel cis mare venderint, secundum iustitiam examinetur: & si Anglus inuentus fuerit, & religionem Muzulmanicam assumpserit, liberè dimittatur: si autem adhuc esset Christianus, Anglis reddatur, & emptores suam pecuniam ab illo petant, a quo emerant.

19 Item, si nostrae Caesaris Celsitudinis naues armatae exiuerint ad mare, & ibi inuenerint naues Anglicas merces portantes, nemo impediatur illas, imò amice tractentur, & nullum damnum faciant illis: Quemadmodum Gallis, Venetis, & ceteris nobiscum confederatis regibus, & principibus priuilegium, & articulos priuilegij dedimus, & concessimus, simili modo his quoque Anglis priuilegium & articulos priuilegij dedimus & concessimus, & contra legem diuinam, & hoc priuilegium, nemo vnquam aliquid audeat facere.

20 Item, si naues magnae, & paruae in itinere & loco ubi stant detinebuntur, nemo illos audeat impedi, sed potius auxilio sint illis.

21 Item, si latrones & fures vi raperent naues illorum, nauiumque merces, magna diligentia quarantur latrones & fures, & seuerissime puniantur.

22 Ad extremum, Beglerbegij, & Zanziaebegi, Capitanei nostri, Mancipia, & per mare nauigantes serui Capitaneorum, & Iudices, & Teloniatores, & Gubernatores nauium Reiz dicti, & liberi Reiz, omnes isti praefati, secundum tenorem huius priuilegij, tenoremue articulorum eius, omnia facere teneantur, & debeant. Et donec hoc in priuilegio descriptum fecerit, & pax illius Maiestatis ex parte sanctae seruabitur, & custoditur, ex parte etiam nostra Caesaris custodiri, & obseruari mandamus.

The interpretation of the letters, or priuilege of the most mightie and Musumanlike Emperour Zuldan Murad Can, granted at the request of Elizabeth by the grace of the most mightie God, and only Creator of heauen and earth, of England, France and Ireland Queene, confirming a peace and league betwixt both the said Princes and their subiects.

We most sacred Musulmanlike Emperour, by the infinite and exceeding great power, by the euerlasting and wonderfull clemencie, & by the vnspcakable helpe of the most mighty & most holy God, creator of all things, to be worshipped and feared with all purenesse of minde, and reuerence of speech, The prince of these present times, the onely Monarch of this age, able to giue scepters to the potentates of the whole world, the shadow of the diuine mercy and grace, the distributor of many kingdoms, prouinces, townes and cities, Prince, and most sacred Emperour of Mecca, that is to say, of Gods house, of Medina, of the most glorious and blessed Ierusalem, of the most fertile Egypt, Iemen and Iouan, Eden and Canaan, of Samos the peaceable, and of Hebes, of Iabza, and Pazra, of Zeruzub and Halepia, of Caramaria and Diabekiruan, of Dulkadiria, of Babylon, and of all the thre Arabias, of the Euzians and Georgians, of Cyprus the rich, and of the kingdomes of Asia, of Ozakior, of the tracts of the white and blacke Sea, of Grecia and Mesopotamia, of Africa and Goleta, of Alger, and of Tripolis in the West, of the most choise and principall Europe, of Buda and Temeswar, and of the kingdomes beyond the Alpes, and many others such like, most mightie Murad Can, the sonne of the Emperour Zelim Can, which was the sonne of Zoleiman Can, which was the sonne of Zelim Can, which was the sonne of Paizid Can, which was the sonne of Mehemed Can, &c.

The most mightie prince Murad Can, in token of our Imperiall friendship, doe signifie and declare, that now of late Elizabeth Queene of England, France and Ireland, the most honourable Queene of Christendom (to whose marchants we with happy successe) sent her letters by her worthy seruant William Hareborne vnto our stately and most magnificent Portch replenished with iustice, which is a refuge and Sanctuary to all the princes of the world, by which letters her Maiestie signified, that whereas heretofore certaine of her subiects had repaired to our saide stately Portche, and had shewed their obedience to the same, and for that cause had desired that leaue and libertie might also be granted vnto them, to come and goe for traffiques sake too and from our dominions, and that our Imperiall commandement might be giuen, that no man should presume to hurt or hinder them, in any of their abodes or passages by sea or land, and whereas shee requested that we would graunt to all her subiects in generall, this our fauour, which before wee had extended onely to a fewe of her people: therefore as wee haue entered into amitie, and most holy league with the most excellent kings and princes our confederats, shewing their deuotion, and obedience or seruices towards our stately Portch (as namely the French king, the Venetians, the king of Polonia and others) so also we haue contracted an inuolable amitie, peace and league with the aforesaid Queene. Therefore wee giue licence to all her people, and marchants, peaceably and safely to come vnto our Imperiall dominions, with all their marchandise and goods without any impeachment, to exercise their traffique, to vse their owne customes, and to buy and sell according to the fashions of their owne countrey.

And further her Maiestie signified vnto vs, that certaine of her people had heretofore bene taken prisoners, and were detained in captiuitie, and required that they might bee set at libertie, and that as we had graunted vnto other Princes our confederats, priuileges, and Imperiall decrees, concerning our most inuolable league with them, so it would please our Imperiall Maiesty to graunt and confirme the like priuileges, and princely decrees to the aforesaid Queene.

Wherefore according to our humanitie and gracious ingrafted disposition, the requests of her Maiestie were accepted of vs, and we haue granted vnto her Maiestie this priuilege of ours agreeable to reason & equitie. And we straightly command all our Beglerbeks, and Zauziabeks our seruants, and our Reyts, that is to say, our Iudges, and all our custoners in all places, hauens and passages, that as long as this league and amitie with the conditions, and articles thereof, are kept and obserued on the behalfe of the aforesaid Queene, Our Imperiall commandement and pleasure is, that the people and subiects of the same Queene, may safely and securely come to our princely dominions, with their goods and marchandise, and ladings, and other commodities by sea, in great and smal vessels, and by land with their carriages and cattels, and that no man shall hurt them, but they may buy and sell without any hinderance, and obserue the customes and orders of their owne countrey.

2 Item, if the aforesaid people and marchantes shalbe at any tyme in the course of their tourneys and dealings by any meanes taken, they shall be deliuered and enlarged, without any excuse or cauallation.

3 Item, if their ships purpose to arriue in any of our portes and hauens, it shalbe lawfull for them to do in peace, and from thence againe to depart, without any let or impediment.

4 Item, if it shall happen that any of their ships in tempestuous weather shall bee in danger of losse and perishing, and thereupon shall stand in need of our helpe, we will, and commaund that our men and ships be ready to helpe and succour them.

5 Item, if they shalbe willing to buy any victuals for their money, no person shall withstande them, but they shall buy the same without any disturbance to the contrary.

6 Item, if by any casualtie their shippes shall bee dzuen on shoare in perill of shipwracke, our Begs and Judges, and other our Subiects shall succour them, and such wares, and goods of theirs as shall bee recouered from the losse, shall bee restozed to them, and no man shall wrong them.

7 Item, if the people of the aforesayd Queene, their interpreters and marchants, shall for trafique sake, either by lande or Sea repaire to our dominions paying our lawfull toll and custome, they shall haue quiet passage, and none of our Captaines or gouernours of the Sea, and shippes, nor any kinde of persons, shall either in their bodies, or in their goods and cattels, any way molest them.

8 Item, if any Englishman shall grow in debt, and so owe money to any other man, and thereupon both absent himselfe that he can not be found, let no man be arrested or apprehended for any other mans debt, except he be the surty.

9 Item, if any Englishman shall make his will and testament, to whom soeuer by the same hee shall giue his goods, the partie shall haue them accordingly, and if hee die intestate, hee to whom the Consull or gouernour of the Societie shall say the goods of the dead are to bee giuen, hee shall haue the same.

10 Item, if the Englishmen or the marchants and interpreters of any places vnder the iurisdiction of England shall happen in the buying and selling of wares, by promises or otherwise to come in controuersie, let them go to the Iudge, and cause the matter to be entred into a booke, and if they wil, let them also take letters of the Iudge testifying the same, that men may see the booke and letters, whatsoeuer thing shall happen, and that according to the tenour thereof the matter in controuersie and in doubt may be ended: but if such things be neither entred in booke, nor yet the persons haue taken letters of the Iudge, yet he shall admit no false witnesse, but shall execute the Law according to iustice, and shall not suffer them to be abused.

11 Item, if any man shall say, that these being Christians haue spoken any thing to the derogation of our holy faith and religion, and haue slandered the same, in this matter as in all others, let no false witnesses in any case be admitted.

12 Item, if any one of them shall commit any great crime, and flying thereupon cannot bee found, let no man be arrested, or detained for another mans fact, except he be his surty.

13 Item, if any slaue shall be found to be an Englishman, and their Consull or gouernour shall sue for his libertie, let the same slaue be diligently examined, and if hee be found in deed to be English, let him be discharged and restozed to the Englishmen.

14 Item, if any Englishman shall come hither either to dwel or trafique, whether hee be married or unmarried, he shall pay no polle or head money.

15 Item, if either in Alexandria, Damasco, Samos, Tunis, Tripolis in y^e west, the port townes of Egypt, or in any other places, they purpose to choose to themselves Consuls or gouernours, let them doe so, and if they will alter them at any tyme, and in the roome of the former Consuls place others, let them do so also, and no man shall restraine them.

16 Item, if their interpreter shalbe at any tyme absent, being occupied in other serious matters, let the thing then in question bee stayed and differred till his coming, and in the meane time no man shall trouble them.

17 Item, if any variance or controuersie shall arise among the Englishmen, and thereupon they shall appeale to their Consuls or gouernours, let no man molest them, but let them freely doe so, that the controuersie beguine may be finished according to their owne customes.

18 Item, if after the time and date of this priuilege, any pirats or other free gouernours of ships trading the Sea shall take any Englishman, and shall make sale of him, either beyonde the Sea, or on this side of the Sea, the matter shalbe examined according to iustice, and if the partie shalbe found to be English, and shall receiue the holy religion, then let him freely be discharged, but if he wil still remaine a Christian, let him then be restozed to the Englishmen, and the buyers shall shall demand their money againe of them who solde the man.

19 Item, if the ships of warre of our Imperiall highnesse shal at any time goe forth to Sea, and shall finde any English ships laden with marchandise, no man shall hinder them, but rather shall vse them friendly, and doe them no wrong, euen as wee haue giuen and granted articles, and priuileges to the French, Venetians, and other Kings and princes our confederats, so also wee haue giuen the like to the English: and contrary to this our diuine lawe and priuilege, let no man presume to doe any thing.

20 Item, if either their great or small ships shall in the course of their voyage, or in any place to which they come, bee stayed or arrested, let no man continue the same arrest, but rather helpe and assist them.

21 Item, if any theues and robbers shall by force take away any of their ships, and marchandise, let the same theues and robbers be sought, and searched for with all diligence, and let them be punished most severely.

22 Last of all the Beglerbegs, and Zanziaebegs, our Captaines, our slaues and seruants of Captaines vsing the sea, and our Judges, customers and gouernours of ships called Reiz, and fete Reiz, all these, according to the tenor of this priuilege and articles, shalbe bound to doe accordingly: and, as long as the Queene of England on her part shall duely keepe and obserue this league and holy peace, expressed in this priuilege, we also for our Imperiall part, do charge and commaund the same so long to be straightly kept and obserued.

Her Maiesties letter to the Turke or Grand Signior 1581. promising redresse of the disorders of Peter Baker of Ratcliffe, committed in the Leuant.

Lizabeh by the diuine grace of the eternall God, of England, France and Ireland most sacred Queene, and of the most Chyristian faith, against all the prophanners of his most holy Name the zealous and mightie defendour, &c. To the most renowned and Emperious Cæsar, Sultan Murad Can, Emperour of all the dominions of Turkie, and of all the East Monarchie chiefe aboue all others whosoener, most fortunate yeeres with the successe of all true happinesse. As with very great desire we wish and embrace the loue and amitie of foereine Princes, and in the same by all good duties and meanes we seeke to be confirmed: so to vs there may bee nothing more grieuous and disliking, then that any thing should happen through the default of our Subiects, which any way might bring our faith and fidelitie into suspicion: Although wee are not ignorant how many good princes by the like misadventure be abused, where the doings of the Subiects are imputed to the want of good gouernment. But such matters of importance and so well approued we may not omit: such is to vs the sacred estimation of our honour, and of our Chyristian profession, as we would the same should appeare as well in the concluding of our promises and agreements, as in the faithfull performing of the same.

The matter which by these our letters wee specially beholde, is a most iniurious and grieuous wrong which of late came vnto our vnderstanding, that should be done vnto certaine of your subiects by certaine of our Subiects, as yet not apprehended: but with all seueritie vpon their apprehension they are to be awarded for the same. And as the deede in it selfe is most wicked, so is it much more intollerable, by how much it doeth infringe the credit of our faith, violate the force of our authoritie, and impeach the estimation of our word faithfully giuen vnto your Imperiall dignitie. In which so great a disorder if wee should not manifest our hatred to wardes so wicked and euil disposed persons, we might not onely most iustly be repproued in the iudgement of all such as truly fauour Iustice, but also of all Princes the patrones of right and equitie, might no lesse be condemned. That therefore considered, which of our parts is ordained in this cause which may be to the good liking of your highnesse, we are most especially to request of your Imperiall Maiestie, that through the default and disorder of a sort of euill and wicked disposed persons, you wil not withdraw your gracious fauour from vs, neither to hinder the traffique of our Subiects, which by vertue of your highnesse sufferance, and power of your licence are permitted to trade into your dominions & countreys, or that either in their persons or goods they be prejudiced in their traueyling by land or by water, promising vnto your greatnesse most faithfully, that the goods whereof your subiects by great wrong and violence haue bene spoyled, shall wholly againe be restored, if either by the lines or possessions of the robbers it may any way be brought to passe: And

This was Baker of Ratcliffe, who with the barke called the Roe, robbed certaine Grecians in the Leuant.

that hereafter (as now being taught by this euill example) wee will haue speciall care that none vnder the title of our authoritie shall be suffered to commit any the like wrongs or iniuries.

Neither they which haue committed these euill parts had any power vnder your highnesse safe-conduct graunted vnto our Subiects, but from some other safe-conduct, whether it were true or faigned, we knowe not, or whether they bought it of any person within the gouernment of Marseils: but vnder the colour thereof they haue done that, which the trueth of our dealing doeth vterly abhorre. Notwithstanding howsoeuer it be, wee will surely measure their euill proceedings with most sharpe and iust correction, and that it shall repent them of the impeachment of our honours, as also it shall be an example of our indignation, that others may dread at all times to commit the like offence. Wherefore that our amitie might be continued, as if this vnfortunate hap had neuer chanced, and that the singular affection of our Subiects towardes your Imperiall Maiestie be holwed, and dayly more and more desired, might be conserued and defended, we thereunto do make our humble suite vnto your greatnesse: And for so great goodnesse towardes vs and our people granted, doe most humbly pray vnto the Almighty creatour of heauen and earth, euer to maintaine and keepe your most renowned Maiestie in all happinesse and prosperitie.

Dated at our palace of Greenwich the 26. of June, Anno 1581.

The letters patents, or priuileges graunted by her Maiestie to Sir Edward Osborne, Master Richard Staper, and certaine other Marchants of London for their trade into the dominions of the great Turke, in the yeere 1581.

Lizabeth by the grace of God Queene of England, France and Ireland, Defender of the faith, &c. To all our Officers, ministers, and Subiects, and to all other people as well within this our Realme of England, as else where vnder our obedience, iurisdiction, or otherwise, vnto whom these our letters shall be serued, heued or read, greeting. Where our welbeloued Subiects Edward Osborne Alderman of our Citie of London, and Richard Staper of our sayde Citie Marchant, haue by great aduenture and industrie, with their great costes and charges, by the space of sundry late yeeres, trauailed, and caused trauaile to bee taken, as well by secret and good meanes, as by dangerous wayes and passages both by lande and Sea, to finde out and set open a trade of Marchandize and traffique into the Lands, Islands, dominions, and territories of the great Turke, commonly called the Grand Signior, nor heretofore in the memoery of any man now liuing knowne to be commonly vsed and frequented by way of marchandise, by any the Marchants or any Subiects of vs, or our progenitours; and also haue by their like good meanes and industrie, and great charges procured of the sayde Grand Signior (in our name,) amitie, safetie, and freedome, for trade and traffique of Marchandise to bee vsed, and continued by our Subiects within his sayde Dominions, whereby there is good and apparent hope and likelyhoode both that many good offices may bee done for the peace of Christendome, and reliefe of many Christians that bee or may happen to bee in thalboome or necessitie vnder the sayde Grand Signior, his vassals or Subiects, and also good and profitable bent and vtterance may be had of the commodities of our Realme, and sundry other great benefites to the aduancement of our honour, and dignitie Royall, the increase of the reuenues of our Crowne, and generall wealth of our Realme: Knowe ye, that hereupon wee greatly tendering the wealth of our people, and the incouragement of our Subiects in their good enterprises for the aduancement of the Common weale, haue of our speciall grace, certaine knowledge and meere motion, giuen and graunted, and by these presents for vs, our heires and successours, doe giue and graunt vnto our sayd trustie, and welbeloued Subiects Edward Osborne, and vnto Thomas Smith of London Esquier, Richard Staper, and William Garret of London Marchants, their executors, and administrators, and to the executors and administrators of them, and of euery of them, that they, and euery of them, and such other person and persons Englishmen borne, not exceeding the number of twelue, as they the sayde Edward, and Richard shall appoint, nominate, or admit to be parteners, aduenturers, or doers with them the sayde Edward, Thomas, Richard and William, in their societie by themselves, their seruants, factours or deputies, and to such others as shall bee nominated according to the tenour of these our letters Patents, shall and may during the terme of seuen yeeres from the date of these Patents, freely trade, traffique, and vse feates of Marchandise into, and from the dominions of the sayde Grand Signior, and euery of them, in such order, and maner, foyme, liberties and condition to all intents and purposes as shall be betwene them limited and agreed, and not otherwise, without any molestacion, impeachment, or disturbance, any Lawe, statute, vsage, diuersitie of religion or faith, or other cause or matter what soeuer to the contrary notwithstanding.

And that it shall be lawful to the said Edward and Richard their executors and administrators, (during the said terme) to appoint or admit to be partners and aduenturers with them the sayde Edward, Thomas, Richard and William, such persons not exceeding the number of twelue (as afoze is said) to traffique and vse the said trade & feate of marchandise according to our saide graunt. And that all and euery such person and persons, as shall hereafter fortune to bee appointed or admitted as parteners in the said trade or traffique according to these our letters patents, shall and may from the time of such appointment or admittance, haue and enioy the freetome and libertie of the said trade and traffique, during the residue of the said terme of seuen yeeres, according to such limitation and agreement as is afoze said, and that it shall and may be lawful to and for the saide Edward, Thomas, Richard and William, their executors and administrators, seruants, factours and deputies, and all such as shall be so appointed, nominated or admitted, to bee parteners or aduenturers in the saide trade, or so many of them as can and will, to assemble themselves for or about any the matters, causes, affaires or business of the saide trade in any place or places for the same conuenient, from time to time during the said terme of 7. yeeres, within our dominions or elsewhere, and to make, ordeine, and constitute reasonable lawes and ordinances, for the good gouernment of the said Company, and for the better aduancement and continuance of the said trade and traffique, not being contrary or repugnant to the lawes, estatutes or customes of our Realme, and the same lawes or ordinances so made to put in vse, and execute accordingly, and at their pleasures to reuoke the same lawes and ordinances, or any of them, as occasion shall require.

And in consideration that the said Edward Osborne hath bene the principall letter toozih and doer in the opening, & putting in vse of the said trade, we do therfore especially ordeine, constitute, and provide by these patents, that the saide Edward Osborne shall be gouernour of all such as by vertue of these our letters patents, shall be parteners, aduenturers, or traffiquers in the said trade, during the said terme of seuen yeeres, if hee so long liue: And that if the said Edward shall happen to decease during the saide terme, the saide Richard Scaper then liuing, then the sayd Richard Scaper shall likewise be gouernour during the residue of the said terme (if hee so long liue) and that if the said Edward and Richard shall both happen to decease during the said terme, then the parteners or aduenturers for the time being, or the greatest part of them, shall from time to time as necessity shall require, choole and elect a gouernour of the said Company.

Provided alwayes, that if there shall happen any great or vrgent occasion to remooue or displace any person that shall be gouernour of the saide fellowship, that then it shall, and may be lawful for vs, our heires and successors, to remooue, and displace euery such gouernour, and to place another of the said fellowship in the same office, during such time as such person should haue enioyed the same, according to this our graunt, if there had bene no cause to the contrary.

And we further for vs, our heires, and successors, of our especiall grace, certaine knowlege, and meere motion, do graunt to the said Edward Osborne, Thomas Smith, Richard Scaper, and William Garret, their executors and administrators, that nothing shall bee done to be of force or validitie touching the sayde trade or traffique, or the exercise thereof, without or against the consent of the said Edward, during such time as hee shall bee Gouernour as afoze is saide. And after that time without the consent of the Gouernour for the time being, and the moze part of the said Company.

And further, wee of our moze ample and abundant grace, meere motion and certaine knowlege, haue graunted, and by these patents for vs, our heires and successors, doe graunt to the saide Edward, Thomas, Richard and William, their executors and administrators, that they, the saide Edward, Thomas, Richard and William, their executors and administrators, and the said person and persons, by them the said Edward and Richard to be nominated, or appointed as afoze is said, together, with such two other persons, as wee our heires or successors from time to time during the sayd terme shall nominate, shall haue the whole trade and traffique, and the whole entire onely libertie, vse and priuilege of trading, and traffiquing, and vsing feate of marchandise, into, and from the said dominions of the said Grand Signior, and euery of them. And when there shall be no such persons so nominated or appointed by vs, our heires or successors, that then the said Edward Osborne, Thomas Smith, Richard Scaper, and William Garret, their executors and administrators, and such persons by them so to be appointed, shall haue the saide whole trade and traffique, and the whole entire, and onely libertie, vse, and priuilege of trading and traffiquing afoze said. And that they the said Edward, Thomas, Richard and William, their executors & administrators, and also all such as shall be so nominated or appointed to be parteners or aduenturers in the said trade, according to such agreement as is abouesaid, and euery of them, their seruants, factours and deputies, shall haue full and free authoritie, libertie, facultie, licence and power to trade and traffique into and from all and euery the saide dominions of the saide Grand Signior; and into, and from all places where, by occasion of the saide trade, they shall happen to arriue or come, whether they be Christians, Turkes, Gentiles or other, and into, and from all Seas, riuers, ports, regions, territories, dominions, coastes and places with their ships, barks, pinnesses and other vessels, and with such mariners and men, as they will lead with them or send for the saide trade, as they shall thinke good at their owne proper cost and expences, any law, statute, vsage, or matter whatsoeuer to the contrary notwithstanding. And that it shalbe lawful for the saide Edward, Thomas, Richard and William, and to the persons aforesaid, and to and for the mariners and seamen to bee vsed and employed in the saide trade and voyage to set and place in the tops of their ships and others vessels the armes of England with the red crosse ouer the same, as heretofore they haue vsed the red crosse, any matter or thing to the contrary notwithstanding.

And we of our further royal fauor, and of our especiall grace, certaine knowledge and meere motion haue graunted, and by these presents doe graunt to the saide Edward Osburne, Thomas Smith, Richard Staper, and William Garret, their executors and administrators by these presents, that the saide lands, territories, and dominions of the saide Grand Signior, or any of them, shall not be visited, frequented, nor haunted by way of merchandise by any other our subjects during the saide terme, contrary to the true meaning of these patents.

And by vertue of our high prerogative royall (which wee will not haue argued or brought in question) we straightly charge and commaund, and prohibite for vs, our heires, and successors, all our subjects (of what degree or qualitie soeuer they be) that none of them directly, or indirectly, do visite, haunt, frequen or trade, trafique, or aduenture by way of merchandise into, or from any of the Dominions of the sayde Grand Signior, or other places abouesayde by water or by lande (other then the saide Edward, Thomas, Richard and William, their executors or administrators, or such as shalbe admitted, and nominated as is aforesaid) without expresse licence, agreement, and consent of the saide Gouvernour, and company or the more part of them, whereof the saide Gouvernour alwayes to be one, vpon paine of our high indignation, and of forfeiture and losse, as well of the ship and shippes, with the furniture thereof, as also of the goods, merchandizes, and things whatsoeuer they be of those our Subjects which shall attempt, or presume to saile, trafique, or aduenture, to or from any the dominions, or places abouesaid, contrary to the prohibition aforesaid: the one halfe of the same forfeiture to be to the vse of vs, our heires & successors, and the other halfe to the vse of the saide Edward, Thomas, Richard and William, and the saide companie, and further to suffer imprisonment during our pleasure, and such other punishment as to vs, for so high contempt, shal seeme meete and conuenient.

And further of our grace speciall, certaine knowledge, and meere motion we haue condescended and graunted, and by these patents for vs our heires and successors, doe condescend and graunt to the saide Edward, Thomas, Richard & William, their executors and administrators, that we our heires & successors during the saide terme, will not grant liberty, licence or power to any person or persons whatsoever, contrary to the tenor of these our letters patents, to saile, passe, trade, or trafique into or from the saide dominions of the saide Grand Signior or any of them, without the consent of the saide Edward, Thomas, Richard & William, and such as shalbe named or appointed as aforesaid, or the most of them, And that if at any time hereafter during the saide terme, by saide Edward, Thomas, Richard and William, or the survivors of them, shal admit or nominate any of our subjects to be partners & aduenturers in the saide trade to the number of 12. or vnder as aforesaid, that then we our heires and successors at the instance and petition of the saide Edward, Thomas, Richard and William, or the survivors of them in our Chancery to be made, and vpon the sight of these presents, will grant and make to the saide Edward, Thomas, Richard and William, or to the survivors of them, and to such persons as so shall be nominated or appointed by their speciall names, surnames, & additions as is aforesaid, new letters patents vnder the great seale of England in due forme of law with like agreement, clauses, prohibitions, prouisoos and articles (mutatis mutandis) as in these our letters patents are contained, for, and during the residue of the saide terme of seuen yeres then remaining vnerpired. And that the sight of these presents shalbe sufficient warrant to the Lord Chancellour, or Lord keeper of the great seale for the time being, for the making, sealing and passing of such new letters patents, without further writ or warrant for the same to be required, had, or obtained.

And the saide Edward Osburne, Thomas Smith, and Richard Staper, and William Garret and such others as shalbe so nominated and appointed, as is aforesaid, to be of their trade or companie, shall yeerely during 6. of the last yeres of the saide 7. yeres, lade out of this our Realme, and bring home yeerely, for, and in the feate and trade of merchandizing aforesaid, so much goods and merchandizes, as the custome, and subsidie inwards and outwards, shall amount in the whole the summe summe of 500. li. yeerely. So that the said Edward Osborne, Thomas Smith, Richard Staper, and William Garret and the said persons so to be nominated as is aforesaid, or any of them, or their ship or shippes be not barred, stayed, restrained or let by any reasonable occasion from the sayde trade or traffique; and so that the said ship or shippes do not perish by any misfortune, or bee spoiled by the way in their voyage.

And further, the said Edward Osborne, Thomas Smith, Richard Staper, and William Garret, and such others as shall be appointed as aforesaid to be of their saide trade or Company, shall giue notice vnto the Lord Admirall of England, or to some of the principall officers of the Admiraltie for the time being, of such ship or shippes as they shall set forth in the same voyage, and of the number of Harmers appointed to goe in the same ship or shippes, by the space of fiftene dayes before the setting or going forth of the same ship or shippes. And also the said Edward Osborne, Thomas Smith, Richard Staper and William Garret, and such other as shall be by them the saide Edward and Richard, nominated to be of the said trade, shall and will at the setting forth of their ship, or shippes, for the same voyage, permit and suffer the Master of the Ordinance of vs, our heires and successors, or some others, our or their principall officers of the Ordinance, to take a view of the number and quantitie of such Ordinance, powder, and munition, as shall be caried in the said ship, or shippes, and shall also at the returne of the same ship, or shippes, suffer a view to be taken, and vpon request made, make an accompt to the saide officers of our Ordinance, of the expences, and waxes of the said Ordinance, powder, and munition, so to bee caried in the same ship, or shippes.

¶ Provided also, that if any of the said trade or Company, or their seruants, factors, or sailers, in any ship by them laden, shall commit any piracie or outrage vpon the seas, and that, if the said Company or societie shall not, or do not, within reasonable time, after complaint made, or notice giuen to the said Company, or to any of them, either satisfie or recompense the parties that so shall fortune to be robbed, or spoiled by any of the said Company, or sailers, in the said ships, or els shall not do their endeouour to the bittermost of their reasonable power, to haue the parties so offending punished for the same their offences, that then, and from thenceforth, their present letters patents shall be utterly voyd, cease, and determine.

¶ Provided likewise, that if it shall hereafter appeare vnto vs, our heires, or successors, that this grant, or the continuance thereof in the whole, or in any part thereof, shall not be profitable to vs, our heires, our successors, or to this our Realme, that then, and from thenceforth, vpon, and after one full yeeres warning, to be giuen vnto the said Company, or to the Gouernour thereof, by vs, our heires, or successors, this present grant shall cease, be voyd, and determine, so all intents, constructions, and purposes.

¶ Provided also, that we, our heires and successors, from time to time, during the said 7. yeeres, may lawfully nominate, appoint, and authorize two persons, being fit men, to be of the saide company, and for want of lacke of them, two others to be aduenturers in the said trade, for such stocke and summe of money, as they shall put in, so that the said persons to bee nominated, or authorized, shall be contributory to all charges of the said trade & aduenture indifferently, according to their stockes: and as other aduenturers of the said trade shall doe for their stockes, and so that likewise they doe obserue the orders of the said Company, allowable by this our graunt, and that such persons so to be appointed by vs, our heires or successors, shall, and may, with the saide Company, and fellowship, vse the trade and seate of marchandise aforesaid, and all the liberties and priuileges herein before granted, according to the meaning of these our letters patents, any thing in these our letters patents contained to the contrary notwithstanding.

And further of our speciall grace, certaine knowledge, and meere motion, we haue condescended and granted, and by these presents for vs, our heires and successors, doe condescend, and grant to the said Edward Osborne, Thomas Smith, Richard Staper, and William Garret, their executors, and administrators, that if at the ende of the said terme of seuen yeeres, it shall seeme meete, and conuenient vnto the said Edward Osborne, Thomas Smith, Richard Staper, and William Garret, or the suruiuer of them, that this present grant shall be continued: and if that also it shall appeare vnto vs, our heires, or successors, that the continuance thereof shall not be preiudiciall, or hurtfull to this our Realme, that then we, our heires, or successors, at the instance and petition of the said Edward Osborne, Thomas Smith, Richard Staper, and William Garret, or the suruiuer of them, to be made to vs, our heires, or successors, wil grant and make to the said Edward, Thomas, Richard and William, or the suruiuer of them, and to such other persons, as so shall be by the said Edward and Richard nominated and appointed, new letters patents, vnder the great seale of England, in due forme of lawe, with like covenants, grants, clauses, and articles, as in these presents are contained, or with addition of other necessary articles, or change of these in some part, for and during the full terme of seuen yeeres then next following. Willing, and straightly commanding, and charging all and singular our Admirals, Viceadmirals, Iudices, Maiors, Sheriffes, Escheaters, Constables, Bailiffes, and all and singular our other officers, ministers, liege men, and subiects whatsoeuer, to be aiding, fauouring, helping, and assisting vnto the said Gouvernour, and company, and their successors, and to their Deputies, officers, seruants, assignes, and ministers, and euery of them, in executing, and enjoying the premisses, as well on land as on sea, from time to time, and at all times when you, or any of you, shall be thereunto required, any statute, act, ordinance, pꝛouiso, pꝛoclamation, or restraint heretofore had, made, set forth, ordained, or pꝛouided, or any other matter, cause or thing to the contrary, in any wise notwithstanding.

In witnesse whereof we haue caused these our letters to be made patents, witnesse our selfe, at Westminster, the 11. day of September, in the 23. yeere of our raigne.

The first voyage or iourney, made by Master Laurence Aldersey, Marchant of London, to the Cities of Ierusalem, and Tripolis, &c. In the yeere 1581. Penned and set downe by himselfe.

He departed from London the first day of April, in the yeere of our Lord 1581, passing through the Nether-land and vꝑ the riuer Rhene by Colen, and other cities of Germanie. And vpon Thursday, the thirde day of May, I came to Augusta, where I deliuered the letter I had to Master Ienise, and Master Casler, whom I found very willing to pleasure me, in any thing that I could or would reasonably demand. He first furnished me with a horse to Venice, for my money, and then tooke me with him a walking, to shew me the Citie, for that I had a day to tary there, for him that was to be my guide. He shewed me first the Stare-house, which is very faire, and beautifull: then he brought mee to the finest garden, and orchard, that euer I sawe in my life: for there was in it a place for Canarie birdes, as large as a faire Chamber; trimmed with wier both aboue and beneath, with fine little branches of trees, for them to sit in, which was full of those Canarie birdes. There was such an other for Turtle dooues: also there were two pigeon houses ioyning to them, hauing in them store of Turtle dooues, and pigeons. In the same garden also were five or seuen fishponds, all railed about, and full of very good fish. Also, seuen or eight fine fountaines, or water springs, of diuers fashions: as for fruite, there wanted none of all sorts, as Oranges, figges, rasons, wallnuts, grapes, besides apples, peares, fillbirds, small nuts, and such other fruite, as wee haue in England.

The Description of Augusta in Germanie.

Then did hee bring mee to the water tower of the same Citie, that by a sleight and deuise hath the water brought vꝑ as high, as any Church in the towne, and to tel you the strange deuises of all, it passeth my capacitie. Then he brought me to another faire garden, called the Shooters hoole, where are butts for the long bowe, the crosse bowe, the stone bowe, the long peece, and for diuers other exercises more.

After this, we walked about the walles of the Citie, where is a great, boade, and deepe ditch, vpon one side of the towne, so full of fish, as euer I sawe any pond in my life, and it is reserued onely for the States of the Citie. And vpon the other side of the Citie is also a deepe place all greene, wherein Deere are kept, and when it pleaseth the States to hunt for their pleasure, thither they resort, and haue their courses with grayhounds, which are kept for that purpose.

Venice.

The fift of May, I departed from Augusta towards Venice, and came thither vpon Whitsunday, the thirteenth of the same moneth. It is needlesse to speake of the height of the mountaines that I passed ouer, and of the danger thereof, it is so well knowne already to the world: the height of them is marueilous, and I was the space of five dayes in passing them.

I came to Venice at the time of a Faire, which lasted foureteene dayes, wherein I sawe very many, and faire shewes of wares. I came thither too thort for the first passage, which went away from Venice about the seuenth or eight of May, and with them about thre score pilgrims, which shippe was cast away at a towne called Ekria, two miles from Venice, and all the men in her, sauing thirtie, or ther about, lost.

Within eight dayes after fell Corpus Christi day, which was a day amongst them of procession, in which was shewed the plate and treasure of Venice, which is esteemed to be worth two millions of pounds, but I do not accompt it woorth halfe a quarter of that money, except there be more then I sawe. To speake of the sumptuousnesse of the Copes, and Vestments of the Church, I leaue, but the trueth is, they bee very sumptuous, many of them set all ouer with pearle, and made of cloth of golde. And for the Iesuits, I thinke there be as many at Venice, as there be in Colen.

The number of Iewes is there thought to be 1000, who dwell in a certaine place of the Citie, and haue also a place, to which they resort to pray, which is called the Iewes Synagogue. They all, and their offspring vse to weare red caps, (for so they are commaunded) because they may thereby be knowne from other men. For my further knowledge of these people, I went into their Synagogue vpon a Saturday, which is their Sabbath day: and I found them in their seruice of prayers, very deuoute: they receiue the fine bookes of Moises, and honour them by carping them about their Church, as the Papists doe their crosse.

The number of Iewes in Venice.

Their Synagogue is in forme round, and the people sit round about it, and in the midst, there is a place for him that readeth to the rest: as for their apparell, all of them weare a large white lawne ouer their garments, which reacheth from their head, downe to the ground.

The Psalmes they sing as wee doe, hauing no image, nor vsing any maner of idolatrie: their error is, that they beleue not in Christ, nor yet receiue the New Testament. This Citie of Venice is very faire, and greatly to be commended, wherein is good order for all things: and also it is very strong and populous: it standeth vpon the maine Sea, and hath many Islands about it, that belong to it.

To tell you of the duke of Venice, and of the Seigniorie: there is one chosen that euer beareth the name of a duke, but in truenesse hee is but seruant to the Seigniorie, for of himselfe hee can doe little: it is no other wise with him, then with a Priest that is at Masse vpo a festiual day, which putting on his golden garment, seemeth to be a great man, but if any man come vnto him, and craue some friendship at his handes, hee will say, you must goe to the Pastors of the Parish, for I can not pleasure you, other wise then by preferring of your suite: and so it is with the duke of Venice, if any man hauing a suite, come to him, and make his complaint, and deliuer his supplication, it is not in him to helpe him, but hee will tell him, You must come this day, or that day, and then I will preferre your suite to the Seigniorie, and doe you the best friendship that I may. Furthermore, if any man bring a letter vnto him, hee may not open it, but in the presence of the Seigniorie, and they are to see it first, which being read, perhaps they will deliuer it to him, perhaps not. Of the Seigniorie there be about three hundred, and about fourtie of the priue Counsell of Venice, who vsually are arrayed in gownes of crimsen Satten, or crimsen Damaske, when they sit in Counsell.

In the Citie of Venice, no man may weare a weapon, except he be a souldier for the Seigniorie, or a souldier of Padua, or a gentleman of great countenance, and yet he may not do that without licence.

As for the women of Venice, they be rather monsters, then women. Curry Shoemakers or Taylors wife will haue a gowne of silke, and one to carie vpper traine, wearing their shooes very neere halfe a yard high from the ground: if a stranger meete one of them, he will surely thinke by the state that she goeth with, that he meeteth a Lady.

The excess of the women of Venice.

I departed from this Citie of Venice, vpon Midsummer day, being the foure and twentieth of Iune, and thinking that the ship would the next day depart, I stayed, and lay a shippeboord all night, and we were made beleuee from time to time, that we should this day, and that day depart, but we taried still, till the fourteenth of Iuly, and then with scant winde wee set sayle, and sayled that day and that night, not aboue fiftie Italian miles: and vpon the sixteene day at night, the winde turned flat contrary, so that the Master knewe not what to doe: and about the fift houre of the night, which we reckon to be about one of the clocke after midnight, the Pilot descried a saille, and at last perceiued it to be a Gallie of the Turkes, wherempon we were in great feare.

His embarking at Venice for Ierusalem.

The Master being a wise fellowe, and a good sayler, beganne to deuise howe to escape the danger, and to loose little of our way: and while both he, and all of vs were in our dinnis, God sent vs a merry gale of winde, that we ranne threescore and tenne leagues before it was twelue a clocke the next day, and in sixe dayes after we were seuen leagues past Zante. And vpon Sunday morning, being the three and twentieth of the same moneth, we came in the sight of Candia which day the winde came contrary, with great blasts, and stormes, vntill the eight and twentieth of the same moneth: in which time, the Mariners cried out vpon me, because I was an Englishman, & sayd, I was no good Christian, and wished that I were in the midst of the Sea, saying, that they, and the shippe, were the worse for me. I answered, truely it may well be, for I thinke my selfe the worst creature in the worlde, and consider you your selues also, as I doe my selfe, and then vse your discretion. The frier preached, and the sermon being done, I was demaunded whether I did vnderstand him: I answered, yea, and tolde the frier himselfe, thus you saide in your sermon, that we were not all good Christians, or else it were not possible for vs to haue such weather: to which I answered, be you well assured, that we are not indeede all

all good Christians, for there are in the ship some that hold very christian opinions: so for that time I satisfied him, although (they said) that I would not see, when they said the procession, and honoured their images, and prayed to our Lady, and S. Marke.

There was also a Gentleman, an Italian, which was a passenger in the ship, and he tolde me what they said of me, because I would not sing, Salve Regina, and Aue Maria, as they did: I told them, that they that praised to so many, or sought helpe of any other, then of God the Father, or of Iesus Christ his onely sonne, goe a wrong way to worke, and robbed God of his honour, and wrought their owne destructions.

All this was told the friers, but I heard nothing of it in three daies after: and then at eurning prayer, they sent the purser about with the image of our Lady to euey one to kisse, & I perceiving it went another way from him, and would not see it: yet at last he fetched his course about, so that he came to me, & offered it to me as he did to others, but I refused it: whereupon there was a great sicke: the patron and all the friers were told of it, and euey one saide I was a Lutheran, and so called me: but two of the friers that were of greatest authoritie, seemed to beare mee better good will then the rest, and travelled to the patron in my behalfe, and made all well againe.

The second day of August we arrived in Cyprus, at a towne called Missagh: the people there be very rude, and like beasts, and no better, they eat their meat sitting upon the ground, with their legges a crosse like cattpes, their beds for the most part be hard stoness, but yet some of them haue faire mattresses to lie vpon.

Upon thursdai the eight of August we came to Ioppa in a small barke, which we hired betwixt Missagh and Salina, and could not be suffered to come on land till noone the next day, and then we were permitted by the great Bascha, who late vpon the top of a hill to see vs sent away. Being come on land, we might not enter into any house for victuals, but were to content our selues with our owne prouision, and that which we bought to carie with vs was taken from vs. I had a paire of stirrups, which I bought at Venice to serue me in my iourney, and trying to make them fit for me, when the Bascha saw me vpon before the rest of the companie, he sent one to dismount me, and to strike me, whereupon I turned me to the Bascha, and made a long legge, saying, Grand mercie Signior: and after a while we were horsed vpon little asses, and sent away, with about fiftie light horsemen to be our conduct through the wilderness, called Deserta foelix, who made vs good sport by the way with their pikes, gunnes, and sauchins.

That day being S. Laurence day, we came to Rama, which is tenne Italian miles from Ioppa, and there we stayed that night, and payed to the captaine of the castell, euey man a chekin, which is seuen shillings and two pence sterling. So then we had a new gard of souldiers, and left the other.

The house we lodged in at Rama had a doore so low to enter into, that I was faine to creepe in, as it were vpon my knees, & within it are three roomes to lodge traouellers that come that way: there are no beds, except a man buy a mat, and lay it on the ground, that is all the prouision, without stooles or benches to sit vpon. Our victuals were brought vs out of the towne, as hennes, egges, bread, great store of fruite, as pomgranates, figges, grapes, oymes, and such like, and drinke we drue out of the well. The towne it selfe is so ruinated, that I take it rather to be a heape of stoness then a towne.

Then the next morning we thought to haue gone away, but we could not be permitted that day, so we stayed there till two of the clocke the next morning, and then with a fresh gard of souldiers we departed toward Ierusalem. We had not ridde fise English miles, but we were incountred with a great number of the Arabians, who stayed vs, and would not suffer vs to passe till they had somewhat, so it cost vs for all our gard aboue twentie shillings a man betwixt Ioppa and Ierusalem. These Arabians troubled vs oftentimes. Our Truchman that payed the money for vs was stricken downe, and had his head broken because he would not giue them as much as they asked: and they that should haue rescued both him and vs, stood still, and durst doe nothing, which was to our cost.

Being come within sight of Ierusalem, the maner is to kneele downe, and giue God thanks, that it hath pleased him to bring vs to that holy place where he himselfe had bene: and there we leaue our horses, and go on foote to the towne, and being come to the gates, there they tooke our names, and our fathers names, and so we were permitted to go to our lodgings.

The gouernoz of the house met vs a mile out of the towne, and very curteously bade vs all welcome, and brought vs to the monastrie. The gates of the citie are all couered with yron, the entrance into the house of the Christians is a very low & narrow doore, barred or plated with yron, and then come we into a very darke entrie: the place is a monastrie: there we lay, & dieted of free cost, we fared reasonable well, the bread and wine was excellent good, the chambers cleane, & all the the meat well serued in, with cleane linnen.

We lay at the monasterie two dayes, friday and saturday, and then we went to Bethlem with two of thre of the friers of the house with vs: in the way thither we saw many monuments, as:

The mountaine where the Angell tooke by Abacuck by the haire, and brought him to Daniel in the Lions denne.

The monuments in and about Ierusalem

The fountaine of the prophet Ieremie.

The place where the wise men met that went to Bechlem to worship Christ, where is a fountaine of stone.

Being come to Bethlem we sawe the place where Christ was bozne, which is now a chappell with two altars, whereupon they say masse: the place is built with gray marble, and hath bene beautifull, but now it is partly decayed.

Neere thereto is the sepulchre of the innocents slaine by Herod, the sepulchres of Paul, of Ierome, and of Eusebius.

Also a litle from this monasterie is a place vnder the ground, where the virgine Mary abode with Christ when Herod sought him to destroy him.

We stayed at Bethlem that night, and the next day we went from thence to the mountaines of Iudea, which are about eight miles from Ierusalem, where are the ruines of an olde monasterie. In the mid way from the monasterie to Ierusalem is the place where Iohn Baptist was bozne, being now an olde monasterie, and cattell kept in it. Also a mile from Ierusalem is a place called Inuentio sanctæ crucis, where the wood was found that made the crosse.

In the citie of Ierusalem we saw the hall where Pilat sate in iudgement when Christ was condemned, the staires whereof are at Rome, as they told vs. A litle from thence is the house where the virgin Mary was bozne.

There is also the piscina of fishpooles where the sicke folkes were healed, which is by the wals of Ierusalem. But the poole is now dry.

The mount of Caluarie is a great church, and within the dooze thereof, which is litle, and barred with yron, and fise great holes in it to looke in, like the holes of rauerne doozes in London, they sit that are appointed to receiue our money with a carpet vnder them vpon a banke of stone, & their legs a crosse like tailors: hauing paid our money, we are permitted to go into the church: right against the church dooze is the graue where Christ was buried, with a great long stone of white marble ouer it, and rayled about, the outside of the sepulchre is very foule, by meanes that euery man scrapes his name and marke vpon it, and is ill kept.

Within the sepulchre is a partition, & in the further part thereof is a place like an altar, where they say masse, and at the dooze thereof is the stone whereupon the Angell sate when he sayde to Marie, He is risen, which stone was also rowled to the dooze of the sepulchre.

The altar stone within the sepulchre is of white marble, the place able to containe but foure persons, right ouer the sepulchre is a deuise or lanterne for light, and ouer that a great loue, such as are in England in ancient houses. There is also the chappell of the sepulchre, and in the mids thereof is a canopie as it were of a bed, with a great sort of Estridge egges hanging at it, with tassels of silke and lampes.

Behind the sepulchre is a litle chappell for the Chaldeans and Syrians.

Vpon the right hand comming into the church is the tombe of Baldwine king of France, and of his sonne: and in the same place the tombe of Melchisedech.

There is a chappell also in the same church erected to S. Helen, through which we go vp to the place where Christ was crucified: the stayres are fiftie steps high, there are two altars in it: before the high altar is the place where the crosse stood, the hole whereof is trimmed about with silver, and the depth of it is halfe a mans arme deepe: the rent also of the mountaine is there to be seene in the creuis, wherein a man may put his arme.

S. Helens chappell.

Vpon the other side of the mount of Caluarie is the place where Abraham would haue sacrificed his sonne. There also is a chappell, and the place paved with stones of diuers colours.

There is also the house of Annas the high Priest, and the Oliue tree whereunto Christ was bound when he was whipt. Also the house of Caiphaz, and by it the prison where Christ was kept, which is but the roome of one man, and hath no light but the opening of the dooze.

Without Ierusalem in the vally of Iosaphat is a church vnder the ground, like to the shrouds in Pauls, where the sepulchre of the virgin Mary is: the staires be very broad, and vpon the staires going downe are two sepulchres: vpon the left hand lieth Iosaphat, and vpon the right hand lieth Ioachim and Anna, the father and mother of the virgin Mary.

Going out of the vally of Iosaphat we came to mount Oliuet, where Christ praied vnto his father before his death: and there is to be seene (as they tolde me) the water & blood that fell from the the eyes of Christ. A litle higher vpon the same mount is the place where the Apostles slept, and watched not. At the foot of the mount is the place where Christ was imprisoned.

Vpon the mountaine also is the place where Christ stood when he wept ouer Ierusalem, and where he ascended into heauen.

His departure from Ierusalem.

Now hauing seene all these monuments, I with my company set from Ierusalem, the 20 day of August, and came againe to Ioppa the 22 of the same moneth, where wee tooke shipping presently for Tripolis, and in foure dayes we came to Mecina the place where the ships lie that come for Tripolis.

Tripolis in Syria.

The citie of Tripolis is a mile and a halfe within the land, so that no ship can come further then Mecina: so that night I came thither, where I lay nine daies for passage, and at last we imbarked our selues in a good ship of Venice called the new Naue Ragafona. We entred the ship the second of September, the fourth we set saile, the seventh we came to Salina, which is 140 miles from Tripolis: there we stayed foure dayes to take in more lading, in which meane time I fell sicke of an ague, but recovered againe, I praise God.

Salina.

Salina is a ruinated citie, and was destroyed by the Turke ten yeeres past: there are in it now but seenteene persons, women and childzen. A litle from this citie of Salina is a salt piece of ground, where the water groweth salt that raineth vpon it.

Missagh a towne in Cyprus.

Thursday the 21 of September, we came to Missagh, & there we stayed eight dayes for our lading: the 18 of September before we came to Missagh, and within ten miles of the towne, as we lay at an anker, because the winde was contrary, there came a great boat full of men to boord vs, they made an excuse to seeke for fouce men which (they said) our ship had taken from theirs about Tripolis, but our captaine would not suffer any of them to come in to vs.

The next morning they came to vs againe with a great gally, manned with 500 men at y least, where vpon our captaine sent the boat to them with twelue men to know their pleasure: they said they sought for 4 men, and therfore would talke with our maister: so then the maisters mate was sent them, and him they kept, and went their way: the next morning they came againe with him, & with three other gallies, and then would needes speake with our captaine, who went to them in a gowne of crimson damaske, and other very bzauce apparell, and five or sixe other gentlemen richly apparelled also. They hauing the Turks safe conduct, they wed it to the captaine of the gallies, and laio it vpon his head, charging him to obey it: so with much adoe, and with the gift of 100 pieces of golde we were quit of them, and had our man againe.

Candie.

That day as aforesaid, we came to Missagh, and there stayed eight dayes, and at last departed towards Candie, with a scant winde.

The 11 day of October we were boorded with foure gallies, manned with 1200 men, which also made a sterueltesse arrant, and troubled vs very much, but our captaines passport, and the gift of 100 chekins discharged all.

Zante.

Istria.

The 27 of October we passed by Zante with a merrie winde, the 29 by Corfu, and the third of Nouember we arrived at Istria, and there we left our great ship, and tooke small boates to bring vs to Venice.

The 9 of Nouember I arrived again at Venice in good health, where I staid nine daies, and the 25 of the same moneth I came to Augusta, and staid there but one day.

The 27 of Nouember I set towards Nuremberg where I came the 29, and there staid till the 9 of December, and was very well interteined of the English marchants there: and the gouernors of the towne sent me and my company firtene gallons of excellent good wine.

From thence I went to Frankford, from Frankford to Collen, from Collen to Arnam, from Arnam to Vtreight, from Vtreight to Dort, from Dort to Antwerpe, from Antwerpe to Flushing, from Flushing to London, where I arrived vpon Twelfe eue in Iaserie, and gaue thanks to God, hauing finished my iourney to Ierusalem and home againe, in the space of nine moneths and five dayes.

Bere Hugo de Loubenx Verdala, Dei gratia sacrae domus hospitalis sancti Ioannis Hierosolymitani magister humilis, pauperumq; Iesu Christi custos, vniuersis & singulis principibus ecclesiasticis & secularibus, archiepiscopis, episcopis, ducibus, marchionibus, baronibus, nobilibus, capitaneis, vicedominis, praefectis, castellanis, admiralijs, & quibuscunque trinemum vel aliorum nauigiorum patronis, ac ciuitatum rectoribus, potestatibus ac magistratibus, ceterisque

Notum facimus & in verbo veritatis attestamus, come nel mese di Maggio proximo passato le nostre galere vennero dal viaggio di Barberia, doue hauendo mandato per soccorrere a vn galionetto de Christiani che hauea dato trauerso in quelle parti, essendo arrinati sopra questa isola alla parte de ponente trouarono vna naue Inglese, sopra cargo de essa il magnifico Giouanni Keale, & David Filly patrono, volendo la reconoscere che nane fosse, han visto, che se mettena in ordine per defenderli, dubitando che dette nostre galere fossero de inimici: & per che vn marinaio rinoltose contra la volonta de detti magnifico Giouanni Keale & David Filly, habbi tirato vn tiro di artiglieria verso vna de dette galere, & che non se amangnaua la vela de la Maiestra secondo la volonta de detti magnifico Giouanni Keale & David Filly patrono, furimensata detta naue nel presente general porto di Malta, secondo l'ordine del venerando Generale de dette galere, & essendo qua, monsignor Inquisitore ha impedita quella per conto del sancto officio, & si diede parte alla santita di nostro signor Gregorio papa xiiij. A la fin fu licenciata per andarsene al suo viaggio. Han donq, humilmentē supplicato detti magnifico Giouanni Keale & David Filly per nome & parte delli magnifici Edwardo Osborn senatore & Richardo Staper mercanti Inglese della nobile citta di Londra, & anco di Thomaso Wilkinson scriuano, piloti, nocheri, & marinari, gli volemmo dare le nostre lettere patente & saluo condotto, accio che potranno andare & ritornare quando gli parera commodato con alcuna roba & mercantia a loro bennista: si come noi, essendo cosa giusta & che retornera commodata a nostra religione & a questi ferrestiers, per tenor de li presenti se gli habbiamo concesse con le conditione per infra scritte, videlicet:

Che ogni volta che detti mercadanti con sopradetta naue o con altra non porteranno mercantie de contra bando, & che constara per fede autentica & con lettere patente de santita, poteran liberalmente victualiarise de tutte le victuarie necessarie, & praticare in questa isola & dominij, & poi partirsene & seguire suo viaggio per doue volessero in leuante o altroue, come tutti altri vasselli & specialmente de Francesi & altri nationi, & di vendere & comprare qual si voglia mercantia a loro bennista.

Item, che potera portare poluere de canone & di archibuso, salnitro, carboni di petra rosetta, platine de rame, stagno, acciale, ferro, carise commune, tela grossa bianca per far tende de galere, balle de ferro de calibro, petre de molino fine, arbore & antenne de galere, bastardi & altri. Et in conclusione, hauenda visto che loro per il tempo che restarano qua, si portorno da fideli & Catholici Christiani, & che sua sanctita habbia trouato bono il saluo condotto del gran Turko a loro concesso, per il timor della armata Turkesca & di altri vasselli de inimici, inherendo alla volonta di sua sanctita, & massime per che hanera de andare & passare per diuersi lochi & tanto lontani come Inghilterra, Flandra, & tutti parti di ponente, & in altroue, a noi ha parso farle le presente nostre lettere patente come fidele conuersatore nostro, accio piu securamente & senza obstaculo possa andare & ritornare quando li parera con detta naue o con alire, a loro bennista. Per tanto dunque tutti & ciascu di voi sudetti affettuosamente pregamo, che per qual si voglia de vostra iurisdictione, alla quale detto magnifico Giouanni Keale & David Filly a nome quo supra con la naue & marinari de detti loro principali o altri caschera, nauigare, passare, & venire sicuramente, alla libera, senza alcuno disturbo o altro impedimento li lasciate, & facciate lasciare stare, & passare, tornare, & quando li parera partire, talmente che per amore & contemplatione nostra il detto magnifico Giouanni Keale a nome quo supra con le naue, marinari, & mercantia non habbi difficulta, fastidio & ritenione alcuna, anzi se gli dia ogni agiuto & fanore, cosa degna di voi, giusta, & a noi gratissima, de recompensarula con vguale & maggior seruitto, quando dall'occasione ne saremo rechiesti. Et finalmente commandammo a tutti & qual si voglia religiosi & frati de nostra religione di qual si voglia conditione, grado & stato che siano, & a tutti riceuitori & procuratori nostri in tutti & qual si voglia priorati nostri deputati & deputandi in verunli santa obedientia, & a tutti nostri vassalli & alla giurisdictione di nostra religione soggetti, che in tale & per tale tenghino & reputino il detto magnifico Giouanni Keale a nome vi supra, nane, marinari, & mercantia, senza permettere, che nel detto suo viaggio, o in alcun altro luogo sia molestato, o in qual si voglia maniera impedito, anzi tutte le cose sue & negotij loro sian da voi agiontati & continuamente favoriti. In cuius rei testimonium Bulla nostra magistralis in cera nigra presentibus est impressa. Datis Melite in conuentu nostro die duodecimo Mensis Iuly, 1582.

Frier Hugo of Loubeux Verdal, by the grace of God, master of the holy house, the hospital of S. Iohn at Ierusalem, and an humble keeper of the poore of Iesus Chrit, to all & euery prince ecclesiastical & secular, archbishops, bishops, Dukes, Marqueses, Barons, Capteines, Vicelords, Baisors, Castellanes, Admirals, and whatsoeuer patrons of Gallies, or other greater shippes, and gouernors of cities, potentates and magistrates, and other officers and persons whatsoeuer, of what dignitie, degree, state and condition soeuer they be, dwelling in all places and landes, greeting.

We make it knowne, and in the word of truth do witnesse, that in the moneth of May last past, our gallies came on the voyage from Barbarie, where hauing comendement to succour a little ship of the Christians which was diuinen ouer into that part, being arriued vpon this Island on the West part they found one English ship vnder the charge of the worshipfull Iohn Keele, and Dauid Fillie master: and our men willing to know what ship it was, they seemed to put themselves in order for their defence, doubting that the said our gallies were of the enemies, & therefore one mariner attempted contrary to the will of the worshipfull Iohn Keele, and Dauid Fillie master, and had shot off a piece of artillerie against one of the said gallies, and because she would not strike amaine her sayle, according to the will of the saide worshipfull Iohn Keele and Dauid Fillie master, the said ship was brought backe againe vnto the present port of Malta, according to the order of the reuerend generall of the said gallies: and in being there, maister Inquisitor said it by authoritie of the holy office, and in that behalfe by the holinesse of our Lord pope Gregorie the thirteenth, in the end was licenced to depart on her voyage. They therefore the said worshipfull Iohn Keele and Dauid Fillie, in the name and behalfe of the worshipfull master Edward Osborne Alderman, and Richard Scaper, English marchants of the noble citie of London, haue humbly besought together with Thomas Wilkinson the purser, pilots, master and mariners, that we would giue our letters patents, and safe conducts, that they might goe and returne, when they shall see opportunitie, with their goods and merchandizes at their pleasure: whereupon the thing seeming vnto vs iust, and that it might be for the profite of our religion, and of these strangers, by the tenor of these presents we haue granted the same to them: yet, with the conditions hereunder writtten, viz.

That euery time the said marchants of the said ship, or with any other, shall not bring such marchandize as is forbidden, and that by sufficient prooffe and letters testimoniall it appeareth that they are free from the infections of the plague, they may victuall themselves with all necessarie victuals, and traffike with vs, and in this Island and dominion, and afterwarde may depart and follow their voyage whither they will into the Levant or else where, as all other vessels, and especially of France and other nations do, and sell and buy whatsoever marchandize they shall thinke good.

Item, that they may bring powder for cannon and harquebush, saltpetre, cole of Newcastle, plates of latten, tinne, Steele, yron, common harties white, course canuas to make saile for the gallies, balles of yron for shot, fine millstones, trees & masts for gallies, litle and others, and in conclusion, hauing seene that they for the time of their abode here, did behaue themselves like faithfull and catholike Christians, & that his holines hath allowed the safe conduct of the great Turke to them granted for feare of the Turkish armie, and other vessels of the enemy, submitting our selues to the pleasures of his holinesse, and especially because our people haue occasion to passe by diuers places so farre off, as England, Flanders, and all parts Westwards, and in other places, we haue vouchsafed to make these our letters patents, as our faithfull assistant, so as more surely, and without let they may go and returne when they shall thinke good, with the said ship or with others at their pleasure. We therefore pray all and euery of your subjects effectually that by what part soeuer of your iurisdiction, vnto the which the said worshipfull Iohn Keele and Dauid Fillie by name abovesaid, with the ship and mariners of the said principall place or other, shall haue access, saile, & passe, and come safely with libertie without any disturbance or other impediment, that you giue leaue, and cause leaue to be giuen that they may passe, stay and returne, and when they please, depart, in such sort, that for our loue & contentation the said worshipfull Iohn Keele, with the ship and mariners haue no let, hinderance, or retention, also that you giue all helpe and fauour, a thing worthy of your iustice, and to vs most acceptable, to be recompenced with equall and greater seruice, when vpon occasion it shall be required.

And finally, we command all, and whatsoeuer religious people, and brothers of our religion, of whatsoeuer condition, degree, and state they be, and all other receiuers and procurators, in all and whatsoeuer our priories deputed, and to be deputed by vertue of the holy obedience, and all our people, and all that are subiect to the iurisdiction of our religion, that in, and by the same they hold, and repute the said worshipfull Iohn Keele in the name as abovesaid, the ship, mariners, and marchandize, without let in the same their voyage, or in any other place, that they be not molested, nor in any wise hindered, but that in all their causes and businesse they be of you holpen, and furthered continually. In witnesse whereof, our seale of gouernment is impressed to these presents in blacke ware. Given at Malta in our Conuent, the twelfth of the moneth of July, in the yeere 1582.

Elizabeth, by the clemencie of the most good and most great God, the only creator and gouernour of all things, Queene of England, France, and Ireland, inuincible, and most mightie defender of the true faith, against all Idolaters falsly professing the name of Christ, to all and singular persons, to whose sight and view these our present letters may come, greeting. Whereas the most renowned, and most inuincible Prince Zultan Murad Can, the most mighty gouernour of the kingdom of Turkie, and Monarch of the East Empire, hath entered into league and friendship with vs, (which we for our part, as much as lieth in vs, doe purpose solemnly, and inuolablie to keepe in all times to come) and whereas for the better countenancing and authorizing of the same, the foresayd renowned Emperour hath graunted vnto our subiects free libertie of traffique, in all the partes of his sacred Empire, with as ample and large a grant of priuileges, as is giuen to other good Princes our neighbours and confederates: the grant of which priuileges, we taking very thankfully, and acceptably, are certainly, and thoroughly determined to keepe and maintaine, with the like goodnesse and curtesie of minde, desiring nothing more, then with an honourable respect to nourish, and deserue the beneuolent affections of good Princes toward vs: Know ye, that wee thinking well, and hauing good confidence in the singular trustinesse, obedience, wisdom, and disposition of our welbeloued seruant William Hareborne, one of the Esquiers of our body, towards vs, and our seruice, doe by these presents, make, ordaine and constitute him our true and vndoubted Orator, Messenger, Deputie, and Agent. Giuing and granting vnto him power and authoritie, in our name, and for vs, to confirme the foresaid league of friendship, to take into his hands, and to ratifie the grant of the priuileges, and to command, and enioyne by the authoritie of our Maiestie, all and singular our Subiects trading and dealing in any of the coastes and kingdomes of that Empire; that as long as they remaine in traffique with his subiects, they be obedient to the prescription and order of the foresaid priuileges, applying themselves in all things, and through all things, to such duties and seruices as appertaine to so great a league and friendship, and the offenders agaynst this our league to receiue iustice, and punishment accordingly. We further giue vnto him power and authoritie ouer all and singular our Subiects, dealing, and using traffique in any place or part whatsoever, subiect to the gouernement of that Empire, to appoint the places of their traffiques, in what Hauens or Cities it shall please him, and to prohibite them from all other places, and wheresoeuer their traffiques are appointed to bee kept, there to make and create Consuls or Gouernours, to enact lawes and statutes, by the vertue and tenor whereof all our foresaid subiects, and euery one of them, shall both publickly and priuately vse and behaue themselves, to correct and punish the breakers of those lawes: and last of all, to doe and fulfill all and singular things whatsoever, which shall seeme requisite and conuenient for the honest and orderly gouernment of our said subiects, and of the maner of their traffique in those parts. Promising assuredly, and in the word of a Prince, that whatsoever shall be done of our said Orator and Agent, in all, or in any of the premises, not repugnant and contrary to our lawes, shall be accepted, ratified, and confirmed by vs. In witnesse whereof, we haue caused these our letters to be made patents, and our seale thereunto to be appended. Given at our Castle of Windsoze, the 20. day of Nouember, in the yeere of Christ 1582. and of our raigne the 24.

LIZABETH &c. Augustissimo inuictissimoque principi, &c. Cum ad postulatam nostrum Cæsarea vestra Maiestas, anno saluatoris nostri Iesu 1580. pacis fœdus nobiscum pepigerit, coniunctum cum liberalissima priuilegiorum quorundam concessione, quorum beneficio subditi nostri cum omni securitate tutissimè liberissimeque ad vniuersas & singulas Musulmanici imperij vestri partes terra marique proficisci, inissequæque commercij exercendi gratia, negotiari, habitare, manere, exindeque ire & redire cum volent queant, ab ijs qui sub Cæsarea vestra Maiestate in magistratu sunt vbique locorum protegendis defendendisque sine vlla vel corporum, vel bonorum læsione: nos tantæ concessionis beneficium gratum acceptumque habentes, quantum in nobis est, approbamus confirmamusque: pollicentes in verbo regio, quod nos eandem pacem sine vlla violatione sarram testamque conferuabimus: faciemusque; vt subditi nostri priuilegiorum sibi indultorum concessione ita vtantur, vt Cæsaream vestram Maiestatem magnificentiissimæ suæ liberalitatis nunquam pœnitere queat. Quoniam autem concessionis huius virtus in vsu potius quàm verbis, Maiestatis viri usque nostrum sententiâ, ponenda videtur, volumus hunc mandatarium virum Guilielmum Hareborne, ex satellitibus quibus ad corporis nostri tutelam vimur vnum, virum compluribus virtutibus ornatum, ad Cæsaream vestram Maiestatem ablegare, qui tum nomine nostro vobis gratias ageret, tum vt eius opera vteremur ad eam subditorum nostrorum mercimoniorum rationem stabiliendam, tam in Imperiali vestra ciuitate Constantinopoli, quàm alijs imperij vestri Musulmanici locis, quæ ex præscripto priuilegiorum, Cæsareæ vestræ Maiestatis benignitate, conceditur, & ex vsu subditorum vtriusque nostrum erit. Ad quam rem quoniam opus illi erit Cæsareæ vestræ Maiestatis autoritate, summa contentione ab eadem rogamus, velut id agere apud omnes qui sub se in magistratu sunt, vt quibuscumque poterunt melioribus modis huic nostro mandatario in Cæsareæ vestræ Maiestatis placito exequendo, adiutores sint & esse velint. Ei enim hanc curam demandauimus, in qua quàm fidem suam sit honestè liberaturus erga Maiestatem vtriusque nostrum neuiquam dubitamus: cui etiam, vt in omnibus sint obtemperantes nostri subditi, quantum Cæsareæ vestræ Maiestatis concessio patitur, volumus. Præterea, cum præclarus vir Mustafa sacra Cæsareæ vestræ Maiestatis Musulmannorum interpres egregiam nauarit operam vt hoc inter nos fœdus fieret, rogamus summopere vt in nostram gratiam eum in Mustafaracatum rum ordinem Cætare vestra Maiestas recipere dignetur. Si in his aliisque omnibus honestis causis hic noster agens subditiq; nostri Imperatoris vestre sublimitatis æquanimitem sententia, florebit inter has gentes nobile commercium, & nos omnibus officiis huic vestre Maiestatis fauori & beneuolentiæ (si vlla ratione rebus vestris commodare poterimus) respondere libentissimè semper paratæ erimus. ELizabeth by the grace of the most mightie God and only creator of heauen and earth, of England, France, and Ireland Queene, the most inuincible and most mighty defender of the Christian faith against all kind of idolatries of all that liue among the Christians and faithfully profess the name of Christ, vnto the most Imperiall and most inuincible prince, Sultan Murad Can, the most mighty ruler of the kingdom of Turkie, sole aboue all, and most soueraigne Monarch of the East Empire, greeting.

Whereas at our request your Imperiall Maiestie in the yeere of our Sauour I 580. hath entered into a League of peace with vs, wherunto was vniued a most large & bountifull grant of certaine priuileges, by benefite whereof our subiects may with all securitie most safely and freely traueill by Sea and land into all and singular parts of your Musulmanlike Empire, and in the same exercising the trade of merchandise, may traffique, dwell, remaine, depart from thence, and returne thither at their pleasure, and in all places be maintained and defended from all damage of bodie and goods, by such as are in authoritie vnder your Imperiall Maiestie: we thankfully and graciously receiuing the benefite of so great a priuilege, as much as in vs lieth doe approue and confirme the same, promising in the worde of a Prince, that wee will keepe the said league perfect and inuiolable, and will cause our subiects so to vse the grant of the priuileges giuen vnto them, as your Imperiall Maiestie shall neuer haue occasion to repent you of your most princely liberalitie. And because the force of this grant, in the iudgement of both our maiesties, seemeth rather to consist in the vse thereof, then in the wordes, we thought good to send vnto your Imperiall maiestie this our ambassadour William Hareborne, one of the Esquiers of our body, which both on our behalfe should peele thanks vnto your maiestie, and also that we might vse his good indouour for the establishing of such order in our subiects trade of merchandise, as well in your Imperiall citie of Constantinople, as in other places of your Musulmanlike Empire, as according to the prescript of the priuileges is granted by your princely maiesties goodnesse, and shall be for the benefite of both our subiects. For performance whereof, because hee standeth in neede of your Imperiall Maiesties authoritie, wee earnestly beseech the same, that you would cause all those which bee in authoritie vnder your Highnesse, by all their best meanes to aide and assist this our Ambassadour in executing this your Imperiall Maiesties pleasure, for vnto him wee haue committed this charge: wherein how honestly hee will discharge his credite toward both our Maiesties, I no whit stand in doubt: to whom also our pleasure is, that all our subiects shall bee obedient, as farre as the grant of your Imperiall maiestie doeth permit. Moreover, whereas that woorthie personage Mustafa, your Imperiall maiesties Interpreter, hath taken speciall paines for the procuring of this league betweene vs, wee earnestly beseech you that for our takes your Imperiall Maiestie would vouchsafe to aduance him vnto the degree of the Ag-Qataraks or chiefe pensioners. If in these and in all other honest causes, our aforelaidde Agent and our subiectes shall finde your Imperiall Highnesse fauour, a noble traffique will flourish betweene these nations, and wee (if by any way wee may stand your State in steade) will alwayes most willingly be readie to requite this your Maiesties fauour and good will with all kinde of good offices. Almighty God the maker of the world preserve and keepe your Imperiall Maiestie, &c.

A Letter of the Queenes Maiestie to Alli Bassa the Turkes high Admirall, sent by her ambassadour M. William Hareborne, and deliuered vnto him aboard his gallee in the Arsenal.

ELIZABETHA, &c. Illustrissimo viro Alli Bassa, magni Musulmanici Cæsaris Admiralio, salutem & successus fortunatos. Non ignotum esse Excellentie vestre arbitramur, priuilegia quædam à potentissimo Cætare Musulmanico domino vestro clementissimo subditis nostris Anglicis concessa esse, vt illis liceat in omnibus imperij Musulmanici prouincijs tuto & secure manere ac negotiari: non aliter quàm hoc ipsum Francis, Polonis, Veneris, Germanis antea indultum est. Qua ex causa nos Gulielmum Hareborne nobis dilectum, & corporis custodibus vnū, ac multis nominibus ornatum ad inclytam Constantinopolis ciuitatem pro agente misimus: qui ex priuilegiorum prædictorum præscripto nostras & subditorum nostrorum res in illis locis constitueret. Facere igitur non potuimus, quin Excellentia vestra Gulielmum hunc, pro ea qua apud magnū Cæsarem polles autoritate, commendaremus: petentes summopere vt tutò in mari sine Classiariorum vestrorum violentia, & securè in portibus absque ministrorum rapinis & iniuria, tam ipse quàm omnes Angli subditi nostri possint versari: vti pro tenore literarum patentiū à magno Cæsare concessarum illis licere ex illarum conspectu perspicuum esse potest. Gratissimum ergo nobis excellentia vestra fecerit, si portuum omnium, aliorūque locorum, qui vestra iurisdictioni parent, custodibus, item classium & nauium præfectis omnibus mandare velit, vt Gulielmus iste, aliique Angli subditi nostri cum in illorum erunt potestate, amice & humaniter tractarentur. Quemadmodum nos vicissim omnes magni Cæsaris subditos omni humanitatis genere tractabimus, si in Oceani maria, aliāue loca venerint, quæ nostro parent imperio. Postremo excellentiam vestram pro eo quem in nostros extendet fauore ijs omnibus officijs prosequemur, quæ à gratissima principe in optime de se merentes debent proficisci. Bene & feliciter valeas. A briefe Remembrance of things to be indeuoured at Constantinople, and in other places in Turkie, touching our Clothing and our Dying, and things that bee incident to the same, and touching ample vent of our naturall commodities, & of the labour of our poore people withall, and of the generall entiching of this Realme: drawn by M. Richard Hakluyt of the middle Temple, and giuea to a friend that was sent into Turkie 1582.

1. Wise wherewith we colour Wiew to be brought into this realme by seed or roote.
2. And the Arte of compounding of the same.
3. And also all other herbes vsed in dying in like maner to bee brought in.
4. And all Trees, whose Leaues, Seedes, or Barkes, or Wood doe serue to that vse, to be brought into this realme by Seed or Roote.
5. All little Plants and Bulkes seruing to that vse to be brought in.
6. To learne to know all earths and minerals fozen vsed in dying, and their naturall places, for possible the like may here be found vpon sight.
7. Also with the materials vsed in dying, to bring in the excellencie of the arte of dying.
8. To procure from Muhaisira a citie in Egypt to Constantinople, the seed of Sesamum the herbe, and the same into this realme. Common trade is betwene Alexandria and Constanti- nople, and therefore you may easily procure the seeds. Of this seed much oyle is made, and many mills set on worke about the same in the sayd Muhaisira, and if this seebe may prosper in Eng- land, infinite benefite to our Clothing trade may rise by the same. This citie is situate vpon Nilus the riuer, and thence this is brought to Venice and to diuers other Cities of Italie, and to Antwerpe.
9. To note all kindes of clothing in Turkie, and all degrees of their labour in the same.
10. To endeour rather the vent of Kersies, then of other Clothes as a thing moze beneficiall to our people.
11. To endeour the sale of such our clothes as bee coloured with our owne naturall colours as much as you can, rather then such as be coloured with fozen colours.
12. To seeke out a vent for our Bonettos, a cap made for Barbarie, for that the poore people may reape great profit by the trade.
13. To endeour vent of knit Stocks made of Norwich yarne, & of other yarne, which brought to great trade, may turne our poore people to great benefite, besides the vent of the substance, of our colours, and of our diuers labour.
14. To endeour a vent of our Saffron for the benefit of our poore people: for a large vent found, it setteth many on worke.

Remembrances for master S. to giue him the better occasion to informe himselfe of some things in England, and after of some other things in Turkie, to the great profite of the Common weale of this Countrey. Written by the fore-sayd master Richard Hakluyt, for a principall English

Factor at Constantinople 1582.

Ince all men confesse (that be not barbarously bred) that men are bozne as well to seeke the common commoditie of their Countrey, as their owne priuate benefite, it may seeme follie to perswade that point, for each man meaneth so to doe. But wherein men should seeke the common commoditie, and what way, and by what meane that is to bee brought about, is the point of summe of the matter, since euery good man is ready to imploy his labour. This is to bee done by an infinite sort of meanes, as the number of things bee infinite that may bee done for common benefite of the Realme. And as the chiefe things so to bee done be diuers, so are they to bee done by diuers men, as they bee by wit and maner of education moze fit, or lesse fit, for this and for that. And for that of many things that tend to the common benefite of the State, some tend moze, and some lesse, I finde that no one thing, after one other, is greater then Clothing, and the things incident to the same. And vnderstanding that you are of right good capacitie, and become a factor at Constantinople, and in other partes in Turkie; I finde no man fitter of all the English Factors there, then you. And therefore I am so bold to put you in minde, and to tell you wherein with some indeuour you may chaunce to doe your Countrey much good, and giue an infinite sorte of the poore people occasion to pray for you here throughout the Realme: this that I meane is in matter of Cloth, &c.

- 1 First, you cannot denie but that this Realme yeeldeth the most fine Wooll, the most soft, the most strong Wooll, the most durable in Cloth, and most apte of nature of all other to receiue Dye, and that no Island or any one kingdome so small doeth yeild so great abundance of the same; and that no Wooll is lesse subiect to mothes, or to fretting in presse, then this, as the old Parliament robes of Kings, & of many noble Peeres to be shewed may plainly testifie.
- 2 There is no commoditie of this Realme that may set so many poore subjects on worke, as this doeth, that doeth bring in so much treasure, and so much enrich the merchant, and so much employ the Hauie of this Realme, as this commoditie of our Wooll doeth.

Ample and full Vent of this noble and rich commoditie is it that the common weale of this realme doeth require.

Spaine now aboundeth with Wools, and the same are Clothed. Turkie hath Wools, and so haue diuers prouinces of Chrysendome and of Heathenelle, and cloth is made of the same in diuers places.

1 But if England haue the most fine, and the most excellent Wools of the world in all respects (as it cannot bee denied, but it hath) 2 If there may bee added to the same, excellent artificiall, and true making, and excellent dying, 3 Then no doubt but that we shall haue vent for our Clothes, although the rest of the world did abound much moze with Wooll then it doeth, and although their workmanship and their dying were in euery degree equal with ours of England, vlesse the labour of our people employed that way, and the materials used in dying should be the cause of the contrary by dearth.

But if Foxen nations turne their Wools, inferiour to ours, into truer and moze excellent made cloth, and shall die the same in truer, surer, and moze excellent and moze delectable colours, then shall they sell and make ample vent of their Clothes, when the English cloth of better wooll shall rest vsold, to the spoyle of the Merchant, of the Clothier, and of the breeder of the wooll, and to the turning to bag and wallet of the infinite number of the poore people imployed in clothing in seuerall degrees of labour here in England.

Which things wayed, I am to tell you what things I wish you in this Realme, and after in Turkie, to indeuour from time to time, as your leisure may permit the same.

Before you goe out of the Realme, that you learne :

1 TO know wooll, all kind of clothes made in this realme, and all other employments of wooll, home or forren, be y same in felt clothes, felt hats, in the red knit cap for Barbarie, called Bonettos rugios colorados, or whatsoever, &c.

All the beceits in Clothmaking; as the sorting together of Wools of severall natures, some of nature to shynke, some to hold out, which causeth cloth to rockle and lie beneuen.

The cuill sorting of threed of good or bad wooll, some tootoo hard spun, some tootoo soft spun deliuered to be wouen.

The faults in Measuring.

The faults in Talking, Rowing, and Burling; and in Racking the Clothes about measure upon the Teintors: all which faults may be learned of honest men, which faults are to be knowne to the merchant, to be shunned and not to be vsed.

2 Then to learne of the Diers to discern all kind of colours; as which be good and sure, and which will not hold: which be faire, which not; which colours by the dearth of the substances bee deare, and which by reason of the cheapenesse of the Materials with which they be dyed, be cheape colours.

3 Then to take the names of all the materials and substances vsed in this Citie or in the realme, in dying of cloth or silke.

To learne to know them, as which be good, which bad.

And what colours they die.

And what prices they be of.

And of them which bee the Naturals of this Realme, and in what part of the Realme they are to be had.

And of all the forren materials vsed in dying to know the very naturall places of them, and the plenty or the scarcenesse of each of them.

These things superficially learned in the realme before you goe, you are the fitter in forren parts to serue your Countrey, for by this meanes you haue an enterie into the thing that I wish you to trauell in.

What you shall doe in Turkie, besides the businesse of your Factorship.

1 FOrasmuch as it is reported that the Woollen clothes dyed in Turkie bee most excellently dyed, you shall send home into this realme certaine Powsters or pierces of Shew to be brought to the Diers hall, there to be shewed, partly to remooue out of their heads, the tootoo great opinion they haue conceiued of their owne cunning, and partly to mouue them for shame to endeavour to learne more knowledge to the honour of their countrey of England, and to the vniuersall benefit of the realme.

2 You shall deuise to amend the Dying of England, by carying hence an apte yong man brought vp in the Arte, or by bringing one or other from thence of skill, or rather to deuise to bring one for Silkes, and another for Wooll and for Woollen cloth, and if you cannot worke this by ordinarie meanes, then to worke it by some great Bassas meane, or if your owne credite there be not sufficient by meane of your small abode in those parties, to worke it by the helpe of the French ambassadoe there resident, for which purpose you may insinuate your selfe into his acquaintance, and otherwise to leaue no meane vnseught that tendereth to this end, wherein you are to doe as circumstances may permit.

3 Then to learne to know all the materials and substances that the Turkes vse in dying, be they of Herbes, simple or compound, be they Plants, Barkes, Wood, Berries, Seedes, Graines, or Minerall matter, or whatsoever. But before all other, such things as yeeld those famous colours that carrie such speciall report of excellencie, that our Merchants may bring them to this realme by ordinarie trade, as a right meane for the better vent of our clothes.

4 To know the vse of those, and where the naturall place of them and of each of them is, I meane the place where each of them groweth or is bred.

5 And in any wise, if Anile that coloureth blew be a naturall commodity of these parts, and if it be compounded of an herbe, to send the same into this realme by seed or by root in barrell of earth, with all the whole order of sowing, setting, planting, replanting, and with the compounding of the same, that it may become a naturall commodity in this realme as Cload is, to this end that the high price of forreine Cload (which deuoureth yearly great treasure) may be brought

downe, So shall the marchant buy his cloth lesse deare, and so he shall be able to occupy with lesse stocke, be able to asoord cloth cheaper, make moze ample vent, and also become a greater gainer himselfe, and all this to the benefit of this realme.

6 To do the like with herbe & plant, or tree that in dying is of any excellent vse, as to send the same by seed, berry, root, &c: for by such meanes Saffron was brought first into this realme, which hath set many pooze on worke, and brought great wealth into this realme. Thus may Sumack, the plant wherewith the most excellent blacks be dyed in Spaine, be brought out of Spaine, and out of the Islands of the same, if it will grow in this moze colde climat. For this was first brought into this realme, and came to good perfection, to the great losse of the French our olde enemies. And it doth maruellously impoynt this realme to make naturall in this realme such things as be special in the dying of our clothes. And to speake of such things as colour blew, they are of greatest vse, and are grounds of the most excellent colours, and therefore of all other to be brought into this realme, be it Anile or any other materiall of that quality.

7 And because yellowes and greenes are colours of small prices in this realme, by reason that Dye and Greenwood wherewith they be dyed be naturall here, and in great plenty, therefore to bring our clothes so dyed to common sale in Turkie were to the great benefit of the marchant, and other pooze subjects of this realme, for in sale of such our owne naturall colours we consume not our treasure in foreign colours, and yet we sell our owne trifles dearely perhaps.

8 The woollens being naturall, and excellent colours for dying becoming by this meanes here also naturall, in all the arte of Clothing then we want but one onely speciall thing. For in this so temperate a climat our people may labor the yere thorowout, whereas in some regions of the world they cannot worke for extreme heat, as in some other regions they cannot worke for extreme colde a good part of the yere. And the people of this realme by the great and blessed abundance of victuall are cheaply fed, and therefore may asoord their labour cheap. And where the Clothiers in Flanders by the flatnesse of their riuers cannot make Walkmilles for their clothes, but are forced to thicken and dresse all their clothes by the foot and by the labour of men, wherby their clothes are raised to an higher price, we of England haue in all Shires store of milles vpon falling riuers. And these riuers being in temperate zones are not dyed vp in Summer with drought and heat as the riuers be in Spaine and in hotter regions, nor frozen vp in Winter as all the riuers be in all the North regions of the world: so as our milles may go and worke at all times, and dresse clothes cheaply. Then we haue also for scowring our clothes earths and claires, as Walkers clay, and the clay of Dorne little inferior to Sope in scowring and in thickening. Then also haue we some reasonable store of Alum and Coppoas here made for dying, and are like to haue increafe of the same. Then we haue many good waters apt for dying, and people to spin and to doe the rest of all the labours we want not. So as there wanteth, if colours might be brought in and made naturall, but onely Dye: the want whereof if any man could deuise to supply at the full with any thing that might become naturall in this realme, he whatsoeuer he were that could bring it about, might deserue immortall fame in this our Common wealth, and such a deuise was offered to the Parliament and refused, because they denied to endow him with a certaine liberty, some others hauing obtained the same before, that practised to worke that effect by Radish seed, which onely made a triall of small quantity, and that went no further, to make that Dye in plenty: and now he that offered this deuise was a marchant, and is dead, and withall the deuise is dead with him.

want of dye.

It is written by one that wrote of Afrike, that in Egypt in a city called Muhaisra there be many milles imployed in making of Dye of the seed of an herbe called Sesamum. Pena and Lobell, Physicians, write in our time, that this herbe is a coddled herbe full of oily seed, and that there is plenty of this seed brought out of Egypt to diuers Cities in Italy. If this herbe will prosper in this realme, our marchants may easilly bring of it, &c.

Leo Africanus
lib. 8.

9 Hauing herein thus troubled you by raising to your minde the consideration of certaine things, it shall not be impertinent to tell you that it shall not be amisse that you note all the order of the degrees of labour used in Turky, in the arte of Clothing, and to see if any way they excell in that profession our people of these parts, and to bring notice of the same into this realme.

10 And if you shall finde that they make any cloth of any kind not made in this realme, that is there of great vse, then to bring of the same into this realme some Howlers, that our people may fall into the trade, and prepare the same for Turkie: for the moze kinds of cloth we can deuise to make, the moze ample vent of our commoditie we shall haue, and the moze sale of the labour of our pooze subjects that els for lacke of labour become idle and burdenous to the common weale, and hurtfull to many: and in England we are in our clothing trade to frame our felices according to the desires of foreign nations, be it that they desire thicke or thinne, broad or narrow, long of hoze, white of blacke. 11 But with this prouiso alwayes, that our cloth passe out with as much labour of our people as may be, wherein great consideration ought to be had: for (if vent might so admit it) as it were the greatest madnesse in the world for vs to vent our wooll not clothed, so were it madnesse to vent our wooll in part or in the whole turned into broad cloth, if we might vent the same in Kersies: for there is great difference in profit to our people betweene the clothing of a sacke of wooll in the one, and the like sacke of wooll in the other, of which I wish the merchant of England to haue as great rare as he may for the vniuersall benefit of the pooze: and the turning of a sacke of wooll into Bonets is better then both &c. And also not to cary out of the realme any cloth white, but died if it may be, that the subiects of this realme may take as much benefit as is possible, and rather to seeke the vent of the clothes died with the naturall colours of England, then such as be died with forren colours.

12 And if of necessity we must be forced to receiue certaine colours from forren parts, for that this climat will not breed them, I wish that our marchants procure Anile and such other things to be planted in like climates where now it growes, in diuers other places, that this realme may haue that brought in for as bafe prices as is possible, and that falling out with one place we may receiue the same from another, and not buy the same at the second or the third hand &c. For if a commodity that is to be had of meere necessity, be in one hand, it is dearly purchased.

1 How many seuerall colours be died is to be learned of our Diers before you depart.

2 Then how many of those colours England doth die of her owne naturall home materials and substances, and how many not.

3 Then to bring into this realme herbs and plants to become naturall in our soiles, that may die the rest of the colours, that presently of our owne things here growing we can not yet die, and this from all forren places.

4 There is a wood called Logwood or Palo Campechio, it is cheape and yeeldeth a glorious blcw, but our workmen can not make it lute. This wood you must take with you, and see whether the Silke diers or Wooll diers in Turkey can doe it, with this one you may enrich your selfe very much, and therefore it is to be endeouored earnestly by you. It may bring downe the price of Wooll and of Anile.

Other some things to be remembred.

IF you can finde out at Tripoly in Syria or elsewhere a vent for the Cappes called in Barbarie, Bonettos colorados rugios, which is a red Scottish cap as it were without brims, you should do your countrey much good: for as a sacke of wooll turned into fine Devonshire kersies doth set many more people on worke then a sacke spunne for broad cloth in a grosser threed, so a sacke of wooll turned into those Bonets doth set many more pooze people on worke, then a sacke turned into Kersies, by reason of the knitting. And therefore if you can indeuour that, you worke great effect. And no doubt that a maruellous vent may be found out of them into Africke by the way of Alexandria, and by Alcayer Southeast and Southwesterthence.

2 And by the vent of our knit hose of Woollen yarne, Woollen yarne, and of Linnen thred, great benefit to our people may arise, and a great value in fine Kersies and in those knit wares may be touched in a small roome in the ship. And for these things our people are growen apt, and by indeuour may be drawn to great trade.

3 Saffron the best of the vniuersall world groweth in this realme, and forasmuch as it is a thing that requirerh much labour in diuers sorts, and setteth the people on worke so plentifully, I wish you to see whether you can finde out anyle vent for the same, since it is gone out of great vse in those parts. It is a spice that is cordiall, and may be vsed in meats, and that is excellent in dying of yellow silks. This commodity of Saffron groweth fifty miles from Tripoli in Syria, on an high hill called in those parts Garian, so as there you may learne at that port of Tripoli the value of the pound, the goodnesse of it, and the places of the vent. But it is sayd that from that hill there passeth yearly of that commodity fiftene moiles laden, and that those regions notwithstanding lacke sufficiencie of that commodity. But if a vent might be found, men would in Essex about Saffronwalden and in Cambridge shire reuiue the trade for the benefit of the setting of the pooze on worke. So would they doe in Hereford shire by Wales, where the best of all England is, in which place the soile yeelds the wilde Saffron commonly, which sheweth the naturall inclination of the same soile to the bearing of the right Saffron, if the soile be manured and that way employed.

4 There is a walled towne not farre from Barbarie, called Hubbed, toward the South from the famous towne Telenfin, about six miles: the inhabitants of which towne in effect be all Diers.

Diers. And it is sayd that thereabout they haue plenty of Anile, & that they occupy that, and also that they vse there in their dyings, of the Saffron aforesayd. The trueth whereof, in the Southerly ports of the Hewiter an sea, is easily learned in your passage to Tripoli, or in returne from thence homeward you may vnderstand it. It is reported at Saffronwalden that a Pilgrim purposing to do good to his countrey, stole an head of Saffron, and hid the same in his Walmers staffe, which he had made hollow befoze of purpose, and so he brought this root into this realme, with venture of his life: for if he had bene taken, by the law of the countrey from whence it came, he had died for the fact. If the like loue in this our age were in our people that now become great trauctellers, many knowledges, and many trades, and many herbes and plants might be brought into this realme that might doe the realme good. And the Romans hauing that care, brought from all coasts of the world into Italic all arts and sciences, and all kinds of beasts and fowles, and all herbes, trees, bulks and plants that might yeeld profit or pleasure to their countrey of Italic. And if this care had not bene heretofore in our ancessers, then had our life bene sauage now, for then we had not had Wheat nor Rie, Peaze nor Beanes, Barley nor Oats, Peare nor Apple, Vine nor many other profitable and pleasant plants, Bull nor Cow, Sheepe nor Swine, Horse nor Mare, Cocke nor Hen, nor a number of other things that we inioy, without which our life were to be sayd barbarous: for these things and a thousand that we vse moze the first inhabitants of this Island found not here. And in time of memozy things haue bene brought in that were not here befoze, as the Damask rose by Doctour Linaker king Henry the seuenth and king Henrie the eighth Physician, the Turky cocks and hennies about fifty yeres past, the Artichowe in time of king Henry the eighth, and of later time was procured out of Italy the Muske rose plant, the plumme called the Perdigwena, and two kinds moze by the Lord Cromwell after his trauell, and the Abycot by a French Priest one Wolfe Gardiner to king Henry the eighth: and now within these foure yeres there haue bene brought into England from Vienna in Austria diuers kinds of flowers called Tulipas, and those and other procured thither a litle befoze from Constantinople by an excellent man called M. Carolus Clusius. And it is sayd that since we traded to Zante that the plant that beareth the Cozen is also brought into this realme from thence; and although it bying not fruit to perfection, yet it may serue for pleasure and for some vse, like as our vines doe, which we cannot well spare, although the climat so colde will not permit vs to haue good wines of them. And many other things haue bene brought in, that haue degenerated by reason of the colde climat, some other things brought in haue by negligence bene lost. The Archbishop of Cantuerburie Edmund Grindall, after he returned out of Germany, brought into this realme the plant of Tamariske from thence, and this plant he hath so increased that there be here thousands of them: and many people haue receiued great health by this plant: and if of things brought in such care were had, then could not the first labour be lost. The seed of Tabacco hath bene brought hither out of the West Indies, it groweth heere, and with the herbe many haue bene eased of the reumes, &c. Each one of a great number of things were woorty of a tourney to be made into Spaine, Italy, Barbarie, Egypt, Zante, Constantinople, the West Indies, and to diuers other places neerer and further off then any of these, yea forasmuch as the poore are not able, and for that the rich settled at home in quiet will not, therefore we are to make sute to such as repaire to forren kingdomes, for other businesses, to haue some care heerein, and to set befoze their eyes the examples of these good men, and to endeuour to do for their parts the like, as their speciall businesses may permit the same. Thus giuing you occasion by way of a litle remembrance, to haue a desire to do your countrey good, you shall, if you haue any inclination to such good, do moze good to the poore ready to starue for reliefe, then euer any subiect did in this realme by building of Almeshouses, and by giuing of lauds and goods to the reliefe of the poore. Thus may you helpe to diuine idleness the mother of most mischiefs out of the realme, and winne you perpetuall fame, and the prayer of the poore, which is moze woorty then all the golde of Peru and of all the West Indies.
